PUBLISHERS' ANNOUNCEMENT.

The Publishers of "The Avon Shakespeare" are well aware of the many editions of Shakespeare that have already issued from the press of both England and America, but they have, nevertheless, been induced to undertake the publication of the present volume by the generally expressed desire for a book in large, clear type, the text of which should embody the latest revisions of the best Shakespearian scholars. As the readings of Messrs. Clark and Wright have been carefully followed, it is believed this result has been most fully achieved.

The graphically descriptive Life, by Dr. John S. Hart, is rich with new and varied information, gleaned by the accomplished hand of the author from the late discoveries made by Shakespearian antiquaries, who have been stimulated in their untiring researches after all relating to the great poet's life by the ever increasing, never flagging, public interest in one of whom his personal friend "Rare Ben Jonson" said, "Neither man nor muse can praise too much."

In the typographical arrangement of this work new features have been introduced,—each page being indexed at the page-head with the Scene and Act, while, through the printed text, by means of the dark displayed type, the eye catches without an effort, the main points or characters that appear on that page; an advantage the student cannot fail to heartily appreciate.

A Descriptive Analysis of the Plots of the Plays has been prepared with great care, and is presented as peculiar to this edition. By it the reader is enabled to gain, if so desired, a clear understanding of the story of the plot before reading the text of the play.

The Alphabetical Index to the Characters in Shakespeare's Plays, The Index to Familiar Passages, and the very complete Glossarial Index, are very valuable features, important or essential to the fullest understanding of Shakespeare's works by either the student or the general reader. The illustrations are from the sketches by Kenny Meadows, Frith, or other artists of nearly equal celebrity.

The publishers desire here to express their thanks to Mr. J. Parker Norris for much valuable information and assistance given during the progress of the work.

A SUMMARY OUTLINE
OF THE
LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE; WITH A
Description of His Most Authentic Portraits.

CHAPTER I

MARVELLOUS IGNORANCE OF THE ENGLISH NATION IN REGARD TO THE PERSONAL HISTORY OF THEIR GREATEST AUTHOR—DICTUM OF STEVENS ON THE SUBJECT, 1773—RECENT AWAKENING OF THE IMPORTANCE OF THE INQUIRY—OBSERVATIONS IN THE LAST FIFTY YEARS TO RESPECT THE LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE NOT ABSOLUTELY PERSISTED—SUCCESS TO THE RESEARCHERS.

To the English nation, who, under the reign of King James's, have been conscious of the current tongue, the very first period of the world, and is one proudly regarded as that of Cheops, the object of the Nilometer, is the great valley of the Nile, where the approach, is the ancient kingdom of Arabia, or from the quarter of the Sahara, from the year 1000 B.C. back to the 16th century, is the poet of Longfellow, Wordsworth, Byron, and Scott; Boccaccio, Dante, Petrarch, and Sidney; Aeschylus, Sophocles, Shakespeare, Sidney, and Plutarch; and towards the young century of Europe, Spain, Italy, or Germany, from the time of the Italian war to the time of the French war.

Towards the point indicated, one object stands proudly prominent, one name rises spontaneously on every tongue—the greatest name in all English, in all modern, perhaps, absolutely, in all literature. Shakespeare possibly may not be read as much, he certainly is not acted as much, as he once was. But he is studied more; he is better known; his fame is steadily on the ascendant. His star is confessedly higher and brighter than it was at the beginning of the present century; it has risen perceptibly within the last twenty-five years; it is even yet far from having reached its meridian.

Stevens, one of the most famous of the Shakespearean editors, said: 'over one hundred years ago: "All that is known with any degree of certainty that Shakespeare is that he was born at Stratford-upon-Avon, married and had children there, where he commenced acting, and wrote his plays; returned to Stratford and was buried."' This statement, at first, is substantially true. It is generally known that the English nation, half from the work of the author, knew less of his life than we now know; comparatively recent times; letters have been counted, and so on. But a battle, or negotiated a treaty, or was prominently connected with the civil or military administration.

THE date of Shakespeare's birth is not exactly known.

The nearest approach to it that we have is the date of his baptism, which is found in the parish register of Stratford. He was baptized April 26, 1564. As baptism in those days followed close upon birth, the probabilities are that Shakespeare was born within the few days of the date of his baptism; and as the 23rd of April is the day consecrated to St. George, a tutelary saint of England, Englishmen have been unwilling to assume that Shakespeare was born on that day. Moreover, an unvarying tradition—which must be allowed its weight of authority where historical evidence is wanting—has uniformly assigned the 21st day of April as the day on which the Great Poet was born; and accordingly that day is now, as it ever has been, celebrated as his natal day all over the world.

Shakespeare's parentage we now know seven

DREADFUL PARTICULARS, IMPORTANT, BECAUSE THEY CONTRADICT AND SET ASIDE SOME OF THE ABSURD TRADITIONS RESPECTING THE POET HIMSELF. To the intelligent comprehension of the problem of Shakespeare's authorship, it is necessary to know something of his original condition in life—whether he was of gentle blood or labouring stock. Were he the son of a merchant teacher of the word, he was educated or was merely sent to a grammar school, and his writings neither worse nor better. But the circumstances of his birth and education, his manner of living and his means of knowledge, do affect not only of the inferences which may be drawn from his works. They are essential conditions in the problem of his authorship.

John Shakespeare the father of the poet, was originally, according to the best information that has obtained, what would be called a "gentleman farmer." The description given by Harrison, in his introduction to Holinshed's Chronicle, published somewhere about 1580, of a certain class of Englishmen in the days of Elizabeth, might, it is believed, fit very well a character and world, circumstances of John Shake-spears. "This sort of people," says Harrison, "have a certain preeminence and more estimation than laborers and the common sort of artificers; and they commonly live wealthily, keep good houses, and have to get riches. They are also, for the most part, farmers to gentlemen, or at the leastwise artificers and with grazing, frequenting of markets, and keeping of servants (not idle servants as the gentlemen do) but such as get both their own and part of their master's living); and come to great wealth, insuthat many of them are able and do buy the of unthrifty gentlemen, and often settling vessels, to the universities, and to the Ins.

the Court. There is, however, a large whereupon they may live without labor, do them by those means to become gentlemen." John Shakespeare seems to have been, during a considerable portion of his life, an incipient gentleman, somewhat after the same sort.

It further appears that he resided originally in a small village (Sunderfield) three miles from Stratford, that he went to Stratford about the year 1551, and enlarged thereupon a kind of some kind of some property, and continued to reside there during all the minority, at least, of his son William.

The name Shakespeare was a familiar one in the county of Warwick, being found on record in that county in six different places in the fifteenth century, twenty-two places in the sixteenth century, and thirty-two places in the seventeenth century. The name has itself evidence of the occupation of its original holders.
Verstegan," the antiquarian, in a work published in 1605, says: "Breakspear, Shakespear, and the like, have been surnames imposed upon the first bearers of them for valor and feats of arms." Camden, under the same date, 1605, says that many ancient families are named "from that which they commonly carried; as, Palmer, that is, Pilgrim, for that the ancestor of that family descended from Hebron;
Long-sword, Broad-spear, Fortescue (that is, Strong-shield), and in some such respect, Break-spear, Shakes-spear, Shot-bolt, Wagstaff." Fuller, in his Works of England, 1662, refers to the "warlike sound of his (the poet's) surname, whence," says he, "some may conjecture him of a military extraction.—Hosti-tribus, or Shakesspeare." Hall further records, in his Chronicle, already quoted, that after the battle of Bosworth Field, 1485, which secured the kingdom to Henry VII., "the king began to remember his especial friends and factors, of whom some he advanced to honor and dignity, and some he enriched with possessions and goods, every man according to his desert and merit." This Bosworth field is only thirty miles from Stratford, and one of the Warwickshire Shakespeares, apparently an ancestor of Shakespeare, seems among those who fought in this battle, and who was thus enriched with possessions and goods. It is furthermore a matter of record that a grant of arms was made to "John Shakespeare, now of Stratford-upon-Avon, county of Warwick, gentleman," a grant first drafted in 1506, and afterwards confirmed in 1509, in which it is recited that "his great-grandfather, and late antecessor, for his faithful and approved service to the late most prudent Prince, Henry VII., of famous memory, was advanced and rewarded with lands and tenements, given to him in those parts of Warwickshire, where they have continued by some descents in good reputation and credit."

The coat-of-arms thus granted to the family contains a gold spear, headed with silver on a bend sable, on a field of gold, and also for its crest a falcon brandishing a spear. One passage generally believed to refer to Shakespeare, calls him action, a name formed apparently from the Greek akro, an eagle, and says, his Muse doth, like himself,
"heroically sound;" the poet's name, too, it is to be observed, was in that day sometimes printed as two words, connected by a hyphen, Shake-spear.

The poet's mother was of an ancient and somewhat wealthy family, of the name of Arden. Arden is or two later. From these two facts a fertile imagination has woven a narrative somewhat after this wise:—

Mary Arden! The very name breathes of poetry. But Mary is a mourner. Her father is dead, and she is now left without guidance, an heiress and an orphan. Mary lives, indeed, in a peaceful hamlet. But there are strange things around her,—things incomprehensible to a young woman. When she goes to the parish church on Sunday, there are many things which she did not see there in her father's time. She hears the mass sung and sees the beads hidden. Once, certainly, within those walls she had heard a very different form of worship. She recollects that in her childhood the rich religious houses of the vicinity had been suppressed, their property confiscated, and their buildings torn down or defaced. Now there is apparently a new power trying to restore these institutions. There are around her mutual persecutions and heart-burnings,—neighbor warring against neighbor, friend against friend, parents against children, husband against wife. Mary muses on many things with an anxious heart. The wealthier Ardens of Kingsbury and Hampton, of Rotley and Rodbourne and Park Hall, are her very good cousins; but bad roads and hard times keep them separate; and so she leads a somewhat lonely life. But village gossip tells of a young man, a yeoman of the neighboring town, an acquaintance of her father's, who often comes to sit upon those wooden benches in the old hall. He is a substantial and towerly young man, already a burgess in the village. From him she gathers useful suggestions as to the management of her little estate; and their son had, without the shadow of a doubt, all the advantages of breeding and education usually derived from growing up in such a family and attending the village school. What the latter was we shall presently inquire.

John Shakespeare and Mary Arden were married probably in 1557, some time, at all events, between November 24, 1556, the date of Robert Arden's will, and September 15, 1558, the date of the baptism of their first child. This first child died in infancy. Their second died before it was a year old. Their third, William, as before stated, was baptized April 26, and is commonly reputed to have been born April 23, 1564. He was therefore the oldest of the family, excepting those that died in infancy.

CHAPTER III.

THE SHAKESPEARE HOUSE, ITS IDENTIFICATION AND HISTORY—EVIDENCE IT AFFORDS IN REGARD TO THE CIRCUMSTANCES OF SHAKESPEARE'S BOYHOOD—BAPTISMAL REGISTER OF THE SHAKESPEARE FAMILY—EVIDENCE IT GIVES IN REGARD TO THE COMPANIONSHIP OF THE BOY WILL SHAKESPEARE.

THE house in which Shakespeare was born has been identified with sufficient certainty. It was situated in Henley Street, and was bought by John Shakespeare in 1556. He lived in this street, and most of the time in this house, from 1551, the time of his coming to Stratford, till 1601, the time of his death. The property passed, by inheritance or will, first to William Shakespeare, then to his eldest daughter, Susannah Hall, then to his granddaughter, Elizabeth Hall (afterwards Lady Barnard), and then to Thomas and George Hart, grandsons of Shakespeare's sister, Joan, who was married to William Hart, of Stratford. It remained in possession of the Hart family till about the year 1820, the last of that name who occupied it being the seventh in descent in a direct line from Joan Shakespeare, the sister of William. By special contributions, in 1849 this house was made the property of the nation. It has been restored as nearly as possible to its original condition three hundred years ago, has been filled with Shakespeare mementoes of every kind, and a fund has been set apart for the purpose of keeping it permanently in repair, and open to the inspection of visitors from all nations. Enough remains of the original structure to show that Shakespeare was born, and that he spent his boyhood and youth, in a home fully equal, in regard to the comforts and proprieties of life, to those common among the well-to-do, burgher class of England in the sixteenth century.

No one who wishes to trace the circumstances which have influenced, for good or evil, the growth of a great intellect, will overlook the companionship of childhood. Who were the youthful companions of William Shakespeare? The parish register of Stratford, after the date of William's baptism, contains among others the following entries of the Shakespeare family: Gilbert, baptized October 13, 1560; Joan, baptized April 15, 1569; Richard, baptized March 11, 1574; Edmund, baptized May 3, 1580.

Putting these dates together, and calling imagination once more to our aid, we find that when William was two and a half years old, Gilbert came to be his playmate; when William was five years old, that most precious gift to a loving boy, a sister, was granted, to grow up with him, and to find in him at once a playmate and a protector; at ten, he had another brother to lend out into the green fields; and at sixteen, the youngest was born, "the baby," whom William probably never regarded in any other light than as a plaything.

These things may be accounted mere fancies. I think they contain a doctrine. Selfishness and gloom are apt to be engendered by a solitary childhood. The baptismal register shows, in the childhood of Shakespeare, to cause at least for the existence of such moral affections, as his writings give no evidence that such feelings ever did exist in his healthy and cheerful mind.

Stratford-upon-Avon is a small town in Warwickshire, ninety-six miles north-west from London. Its population in the time of Shakespeare was about fifteen hundred. The municipal government consisted of a bailiff, aldermen, and burgesses. The alderman, once a fortnight held a court also a court-lee, which appointed "ale-tasters" of officers to prevent fraud in the quality, portent element in an Englishman's co. court-lee appointed also afforers, whose to punish citizens for various minor offence there was no express provision in the stat there was the constable, an officer of no little tion in such a town. John Shakespeare, the William, held successively all these offices. It the jury of the court-lee in 1556, an ale-taster a burgess in 1552, a constable in 1559, an after 1559 and again in 1561, an alderman in 1565, and bailiff or chief magistrate in 1568. William was fifth year when his father was at the height of municipal distinction.

One thing is noticeable in regard to this gradual vation of John Shakespeare in the social scale. In the registers where his name occurs prior to 1571, is recorded simply as John Shakespeare, in one pla

The Room where Shakespeare was Born in the House in Henley Street.

John Shakespeare, glover. But in a record on September 28, 1571, William being then in his eighth year, the father's name is entered as Magister Shakespeare; and ever after among his neighbors he is known, not as goodman Shakespeare, or plain John Shakespeare, but as Master Shakespeare. This title of Master or Mr. was then never used, as now that of M. D. is never used, except by virtue of some specific legal right.

This change of title in the history of John Shake- speare, it can hardly be doubted, was in consequence of his increasing wealth and his position in the village. It shows incontestably that he was about this time a leading man in the town, and consequently that his son, the poet, could not have been the illiterate butcher's boy that the early biographers represented him to be. We are left free to admire his transcendent genius without being called upon to believe the absurd tables of his clownish ignorance.

As further bearing upon the circumstances of the poet's childhood, the following ascertained facts may be cited, showing the probable occupation and the worldly condition of John Shakespeare. In 1556 he nument and garden adjacent, in Henley also a tenement with a garden and crofted field) in Grenehill Street, both in Stratford; also, by inheritance, some landed at Nutterfield, three and a half miles from Stratford. In 1570, he held, as tenant under Sir William, a meadow of fourteen acres, at an annual £8 (≈ $200 then). The inference from these unmistakable indications, John Shakespeare was at one living upon his own land, and renting the lands, and actively engaged in the business of cultivation in an age when tillage was profitable. When a little later in life, he came to the village and settled in Henley Street, he probably kept up his agricultural labors, and also kept a shop in his house, where sold the products of his farm,—butcher's meat, wool, hides, and other articles, such as gloves made from the skins of the animals slaughtered. Harrison says: "Men of great port and countenance are so far from suffering their farmers [tenants] to have any gain at all, that they become graziers, butchers, tanners, sheepmasters, woodmen, and denique quid non."

probably on this account, William was thrown upon his own resources somewhat earlier than he might otherwise have been. The boy evidently knew little either of a father's care or of a father's control after the age of fifteen.

Grammar School Attended by Shakespeare, Stratford.

This explains the mystery of the apparently contradictory traditions in regard to the occupation of John Shakespeare. We see how he was a "butcher," also a "wool-merchant," also a "glover," also a "farmer," also a "yeoman," how finally John Shakespeare, the woodman of Arden, sold timber to the corporation of Stratford. The evidence is tolerably complete that John Shakespeare, in his later years, for some cause not ascertained, fell into pecuniary difficulties and embarrassments. He was evidently in straitened circumstances in 1579; was turned out of the aldermanship in 1586; was arrested for debt in 1587; and finally, in 1592, was reported by the authorities as absenting himself from church for fear of being arrested for debt. But as these things occurred chiefly after the formative period in the life of his son William, and as these difficulties, even when greatest, did not seem to affect the social status of the family, it is hardly necessary to pursue the subject further, except to remark that,

CHAPTER IV.

Shakespeare's School and Schoolmasters — What is Known of His Course of Study — His Knowledge of Latin and Greek — Evidence in His Writings of His Being a Classical Scholar.

Stratford-upon-Avon was, as it still is, a quiet place, comparatively free from disturbance and excitement. Its ecclesiastical foundations were numerous and ample. With one of these, the Guild of the Holy Cross, was connected an endowed grammar school. It was founded in 1482, in the reign of Edward IV., by gift of Thomas Jolyffe, on condition that the authorities of the town and guild "should find a priest, fit and able in knowledge, to teach grammar freely to all scholars coming to the school, . . . taking nothing of the scholars for their teaching." The school was afterwards enriched by Sir Hugh Clpton, the great benefactor of Stratford, and finally was reorganized by Edward VI., in his royal charter to the town, which requires, among other things, "that the free grammar school for the instruction and education of boys and youth there, should be hereafter kept up and maintained as theretofore it used to be."

There is no register, or document of any kind, to show that Shakespeare actually attended this school. That he did so attend, however, is morally certain, from the fact of its existence, and from his father's position and standing in the village. We have no record that the showers fell or the sun shone upon the little garden and croft in Henley Street, yet we make no question of the fact. We have an almost equal certainty that the boy Shakespeare, "with his satchel and shining morning face," found his way regularly to the grammar school in Chapel Street.

A grammar school in England in those days meant a school for teaching mainly Latin and Greek, corresponding in some respects to the old-fashioned academy once so common in this country. It was always taught by men of the clerical profession, graduates of the universities. The teacher of this particular school from 1572, when Shakespeare was eight years old, to 1589, when he was sixteen, was a graduate of Cambridge, the Rev. Thomas Hant, who was at the same time curate of the adjoining parish of Luddington. In this school, and under this teacher, without a shadow of doubt, Shakespeare was instructed in the knowledge of the ancient tongues. As to the extent of this knowledge, an unfair presumption has been created by the oft-quoted expression of Ben Jonson on the subject. Jonson, who knew Shakespeare intimately, speaks of his having "small Latin and less Greek." This was said in Ben's usual style, more to point an antithesis than to state exact truth. Jonson, himself the pupil of the great Camden, was eminent for classical scholarship, and gloried in the fact. Statements by him on this subject, therefore, are to be received with some degree of allowance. What seemed to him a small modicum of Latin and Greek may have been after all a very fair possession. But taking his expression literally, it shows that Shakespeare had certainly some considerable knowledge of the classics, and with equal certainty that he had in his youth attended the public grammar school, where only in Stratford this knowledge could have been acquired by him. Now the course of studies in these old endowed grammar schools is a matter of public record. It included instruction always in Latin and Greek, often in French, and sometimes in Italian. The classics usually read were Caesar, Sallust, Cicero, Terence, Virgil, Horace, and Ovid, in Latin; Lucian, Xenophon, Homer, and Aristophanes, in Greek.

The pupil, furthermore, was obliged to read a goodly portion of this Latin before beginning Greek. It is doubtful whether, in any public grammar school then, a boy would have been able to begin Greek without a familiar acquaintance with at least
Cesar, Cicero, Virgil, and Ovid; and after beginning Greek, the Latin, be it remembered, would be still continued; be it remembered too that the Greek itself was studied through the medium of the Latin, the only grammar and the only dictionary of the Greek at the pupil's command being written in Latin. As indeed it was, as the Greek was not a classical language, the dictionary was concerned, Shakespeare then could not have had even the little Greek that the critical Ben was willing to allow him, without having known a good deal of Latin. In all probability he knew as much of both as would be learned by a bright boy who attended the grammar school until he was fifteen or sixteen, but who did not go thence to the university.
There is nothing in his history, and still less in his writings, to make it necessary to suppose, as has been too generally done, that for his knowledge of Roman affairs he was dependent entirely upon the very imperfect translations then extant of the Roman writers.
The signs, too, are unmistakable that in the use of words he was thoroughly at home in the classic element of the language, to an extent utterly unattainable by one who had never studied Latin and Greek.

There is perhaps no more decisive test of scholarship,—meaning by that term acquaintance with languages,—than the extent of a man's vocabulary. The number of different words that common uneducated people use is surprisingly small. A thousand or two, sometimes only a few hundred, are all the words at their command. Educated men of genius, like Bunyan, have of course a larger stock at command, but even in their case the number of different words they use is comparatively small. The words they do use are forcible and are used with great vigor, but the range is limited. Men acquire a wide range of words in two ways, namely, 1st, by becoming acquaintated with numerous and varying subjects through study and observation, and, 2d, by the study of languages, and by the latter chiefly. Hence it is noticeable that writers who have studied foreign languages, ancient or modern, or others in the range of their vocabulary, Milton, for instance, who was eminent as a scholar, uses in his poetic works no less than eight thousand different words. But Shakespeare, in his poetry, nearly doubles the amount, using more than fifteen thousand—a vocabulary larger, so far as known, than that of any other English writer. A more convincing proof of scholarship could not well be con-cieved.

It may not be amiss to dwell a moment longer upon this point, as it is an essential fact in any theory that undertakes to explain intelligibly the problem of Shakespeare's authorship. "A young author's first work," as Coleridge well observes, "almost always bespeaks his recent pursuits." The earliest productions of Shakespeare, accordingly, those written soon after he had left school, betray unmistakably the classical scholar. Compare them with those of any untaught genius, say Bunyan, and see the difference.
Venus and Adonis, "the first heir of his invention,” and the Rape of Lucrece, published only one year later, are both on classical subjects; and while treated with originality of conception, the author using freely old materials to construct an edifice of his own contrivance, are yet thoroughly and consistently classical in all their ideas and devices. They show a mind steeped and saturated with a knowledge of Greek and Latin fable. Would an unlettered village youth have ventured on such subjects, in addressing a nobleman like Pompey, and one unfitted for his own scholas-tship and for his patronage of scholars? All of Shakes-pear's earlier plays, such as Love's Labour's Lost, The Comedy of Errors, and the three parts of Henry VI, abound in classical allusions, classical quotations, and Latinisms both of diction and construction, almost to the verge of pedantry;—not indeed the direct pedantry of his contemporaries, Marlowe, Greene, and Felde, who made open play of their learning, and who stole bodily from the ancients; Shakespeare, even in these earlier days of his authorship, when still fresh from his school studies, and infected to some extent with the spirit of his times, yet used his classical knowledge as a master, not as a servile copyist. As he proceeded in his work, and acquired maturity of power and of art, his mastery appears both in his less frequent use of classical allusions and in the wonderful ninety with which words of convenient use are wrought into the substance of his own thought. In the Latin constructions sometimes used in these later plays, and in the Latin-English words which he sometimes coins, he shows not only singular facility of invention, but unerring correctness. Milton himself does not walk with more assured tread than does Shakespeare, whenever he has occasion to resort to classic lore. And then how wonderfully steeped in beauty are these classical words and ideas, after having passed through his subtle brain! How purely classical, yet with a grace which entirely his own, is that exquisite image in Hamlet:

"A station like the herald Mercury,
New lighted on a heaven-kissing hill.

Observe, too, the new use to which this master of language here puts the word "station"—a mode of standing—a use of the word how purely Latin, and yet how thoroughly Shakespearean. Perhaps, however, there is not in all his works a finer instance of his absolute dominion in the world of words than in that singular expression in Macbeth:

"This my hand will rather
The multitudinous seas incarnadine,"

Not only by words and phrases, however, does he show knowledge of classical lore, but by the comple-etness with which he enters into the life of the ancestors, as in the Roman plays, where he seems to be actually co-existent with Cesar and Pompey, with Brutus and Cassius, with Antony and Cleopatra. It is not possible to believe that this intimate knowledge of the "very form and pressure of the time" in those old Roman days came from their own school grammars and lexicons, and reading the wretched translations of Thomas Pheer and Arthur Golding. The foundation of this classical knowledge, assuredly, was laid in that public grammar school at Stratford, where, during all his boyhood, to the age beyond that at which youth then went to the universities, he had the continued instruction of a learned clergyman, himself a graduate of Cambridge.
and then, beyond question, Shakespeare became acquainted with the classical tongues, and with some of the masterpieces of classical composition; and this familiarity with the ancients, thus begun in youth, was there can be as little doubt continued in later life, while seeking materials for his own great works. No other theory seems possible. No other satisfies the conditions of the problem of his authorship. Assuredly, he was an intelligent, educated artist, not an inspired idiot.

CHAPTER V.

OTHER EDUCATIONAL INFLUENCES ACTING UPON HIS YOUTHFUL MIND—(a) RELIGIOUS TRAINING AND ASSOCIATIONS, THE QUESTION WHETHER JOHN SHAKESPEARE, THE FATHER, WAS A CATHOLIC, STRONGLY PROTESTANT CHARACTER OF THE STRATFORD PARISH CHURCH, LIST OF THE SERVICE BOOKS USED IN THAT CHURCH, CATHER-CHURCH OR PROTESTANT CHURCH; (b) STORIES WHICH SHAKESPEARE IN HIS BOYHOOD WAS DRILLED; (c) CHRONICLES AND LEGENDS WHICH FORMED A PART OF HIS YOUTHFUL READING, A LIST OF THESE BOOKS GIVEN; (c) LOCAL ASSOCIATIONS TO WHICH HIS YOUTHFUL MIND WAS SUBJECTED, REMARKABLE SERIES OF FACTS ON THIS POINT.

But education is more than learning. Education is growth, and whatever contributes to the growth of a great intellect, whether it be the religious associations of church and home, the story books devoured, the local usages and traditions by which one is surrounded and inspired, whatever thus acts upon the growth of a great intellect, is a part of its means of education. Let us glance at some of these outside the "schools and schoolmasters" of the boy Shakespeare.

And first of religious associations. On this point I propose to dwell a little, as the subject is one not so generally understood as it should be, and the facts that bear upon it are not matters of conjecture, but of record — clear, positive, and well defined; and they throw a strong light upon one of the most marked features of the author's works. More than a century and a half after his death, the theory was broached that John Shakespeare, the father of William, was a Catholic. The facts in regard to this matter are briefly, as follows: The Hart who, in 1770, occupied the Shakespeare tenement in Henley Street, had the roof new tiled. The bricklayer employed for this purpose professed to have found between the rafters and the old tiling a manuscript, which on examination purported to be the confession of faith of John Shakespeare, and which contained ample avowals of his being a Roman Catholic. The authenticity of this document, like the notorious Ireland forgeries, is now entirely discarded by Shakespearean experts and critics. John Shakespeare was of course born a Catholic, as were the great body of other Englishmen born prior to the breach between Henry VIII. and the Pope, in 1531. But the fact that he held various civil offices in Stratford, and especially that of chief burgess or mayor, shows incontestably that John Shakespeare was, outwardly at least, a Protestant during all the time of William's boyhood, for by the statute of Elizabeth, 1558-9, known as the oath of supremacy, every civil magistrate in the realm was bound under penalties of forfeiture and imprisonment to conform to the established reformed religion. John Shakespeare in his old age is indeed officially reported, among others of his neighbors, for "not coming monthly to the church," as required by statute, but at the same time it is significantly added that he was thought "to forbear church for debt or fear of process;" in other words, he stayed away from church to escape arrest for debt, not out of disaffection for the reformed religion.

Then we have the fact, from which there is no escaping, that William and all his brothers and sisters were regularly baptized in the Stratford parish church, which was not only Protestant but Puritan, the vicar, Richard Bifield, being one of the most zealous of the Puritan divines. Shakespeare himself, his wife, his daughter, his son-in-law, all lie buried in the most conspicuous position in the chancel, — the strongest possible attestation that this Protestant church was the religious home of the Shakespeare family.

The services of that church, then, were, beyond question, among the educational influences under which the intellect of Shakespeare grew. Let us see for a moment what these services were, and how far they were of a kind likely to influence such a mind. The Psalter in use there, the only one in fact then in use in England, was the Book of common prayer, or, as it was called, the English Psalter. Two old tombstones of old Sterndale and Hopkins; these were the Psalms to which without doubt his boyish ears were accustomed. The Book of Common Prayer, adopted in the reign of Edward VI., 1549, and reaffirmed by Elizabeth, 1559, was then in use in all the churches, and was, with all its wealth of purest English, perfectly familiar to the youthful Shakespeare. The portions of Scripture which he read from the Psalter Book on the Sabbath were, as they still are, from Cranmer's version, 1540, known as The Great Bible, a huge folio for the use of the churches. But the householder Bible of that day, the only one printed in small volume, was the Geneva version, executed by the Presbyterian refugees at Geneva, Switzerland, in 1560. This Geneva Bible, it can hardly be doubted, was the one used in the household of John Shakespeare and of his son William. It was indeed for half a century, that is, until the appearance of our present version, in 1611, the common household Bible of the great majority of the English people. That Shakespeare was familiar with this Geneva Bible is further proved by a critical examination of the Scripture words and phrases which he uses in such abundance, and which are clearly those of the Geneva version.

In this connection, it is proper to notice certain manuals of religious instruction in which all young persons were then drilled. Shakespeare, in King John (I. i.), mentions one of these, the Absey Book. This Absey Book, so called from A B C, is the name of a little manual for the instruction of young children, put forth in the first year of the reign of Edward VI. It contains "the A B C, the Pater Noster, Ave, Creed, and Ten Commandments." It contained also, in some of the subsequent editions, a few short lessons for reading and spelling, and a brief catechism of religious instruction. Besides this Absey Book, Edward, before the close of his reign, put forth a new edition of the old English Primer, being "a short catechism of plain instruction, containing the sum of Christian learning." These two manuals, the Absey Book and the Primer, covering substantially the same ground, and that almost half a century later by the New England Primer put forth by the "great John Cotton" of Boston, were made obligatory. Every schoolmaster of the realm was required, by royal command, and under severe penalties, to teach these manuscripts to his puffs. It is morally certain then that Shakespeare conned them and committed them to memory.

* Various little incidents show the Puritan character of the village. In 1564, 2s. are paid by the corporation for defacing the image in the chapel. In 1600, a man is fined by the authorities for trading on the Sabbath. The inscriptions on the tombstones of the Shakespeare family in the church all speak deep religious feeling of the John Bunyan order.
THE LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE.

To recapitulate: From the plain old Psalter of Sternhold and Hopkins, in use in the parish church, from the weekly services of the Book of Common Prayer, from the daily use at his, mother’s knee of the last edition of the old book the Geneva Bible, from the careful training which good Master Hunt gave him in the Abbey Book and the Primer, it is easy to understand how a mind so susceptible to external influences as was that of Shakespeare became so imbued and saturated, as we find it, with Scripture language and doctrine.

Another educational influence needs to be mentioned. Shakespeare’s plays show him to have been early familiar with the old English chronicles and other legendary lore which formed a part of the popular reading of that day. A mind such as his would naturally revel in this kind of reading, as did Walter Scott’s in the old border ballads of Scotland. Some of the books of this kind at the command of the youthful Shakespeare, which he has used so largely in his works, and which evidently helped to mould and fashion his King Lear, is it worth while to mention. They were “the books, the academees,” (Love’s Lab. Lost, IV. iii.) from which his soul drank nourishment, just as truly as it did from Master Hunt and Lily’s grammar and the volume of Greek and Latin lore over which he pored in the famous Chapel Street grammar school. Among the books thus devoured by the imaginative boy we may reckon, with scarcely a possibility of mistake, the following:

1. The Palace of Pleasure by William Painter, 1566. This was a collection of stories and novels, from various languages, translated into English. In this collection we find among others the pitiful Italian story of Romeo and Juliet, as translated from the French of Boistean.

2. Fabyan’s Chronicle of the old British history, 1516. This contains among its many wild legends the “story of Leir and his three daughters”—a story peculiarly interesting to a Warwickshire man, as “Leir” is reputed to have founded the neighboring town of “Caerlel,” now called Leicester.

3. Hall’s Chronicle, 1548. This was devoted to a narrative of the wars of the houses of York and Lancaster, a large part of the battle-fields of which were within a day’s walk of Stratford-upon-Avon. That this book had been well thumbed by the youthful bard may be inferred from the fact that three-fourths of all his great historical plays were founded on materials gathered from this field.

4. Holinshed’s Chronicle of England, Scotland, and Ireland, 1577. This is another fascinating book of the same sort. Shakespeare follows it in all his plays on English history. He doubtless devoured it when a boy, just as Walter Scott devoured the old Scotch ballads and legends.

5. Gesta Romanorum, translated into English by Robinson, 1593. This was a famous story-book of those days. It was a vast storehouse of monkish and mediaeval legends, full of fascination for an imaginative mind, and containing among other things the two stories which form the groundwork of the Merchant of Venice, also the story of the Emperor Theodosius and his three daughters, which is another form of the old fabliau of King Lear.

6. Reginald Scott’s Discovery of Witchcraft, 1584. This work, with its infinite details and wild stories of witches, fairies, hobgoblins, and other uncanny folk, must have had a strange fascination for the mind that has given us the weird sisters of Macbeth, Aricel and Caliban of The Tempest, and all the long list of Puck, Peaseblossom, Titania, Queen Mab, and their fellows.

Many other books might be mentioned as forming very probably a part of the library of the boy Shakespeare. But of these six which have been named, Palace of Pleasure, Fabyan’s Chronicle, Hall’s Chronicle, Holinshed’s Chronicle, Gesta Romanorum, and Reginald Scott’s Discovery of Witchcraft, there can be no doubt more than we could if we saw the very books themselves with his autograph upon them, the very dog’s-ears telling us where to turn for the well-thumbed passages which have formed the staple of so many of his most glorious creations.

We are considering, remember, the educational influences that gave shape and color to the character of this wonderful man. I have spoken thus far, first, of his school and the studies which he pursued there; secondly, of his church and his religious instruction and associations; thirdly, of the story books and legends which were within his reach, and with which his works show him to have been entirely familiar. All these things are strictly educational; by grouping them together thus in one view, we are able to realize to some extent the kind of atmosphere in which the mind of Shakespeare grew, and what received such a healthy development. But there was still one other educational influence, not inferior to any of these. I refer to the powerful influence of the local associations that were around him on every side, and on this point I shall make no apology for entering a little into particulars. The subject, you will find, is in the highest degree suggestive.

The childhood of Shakespeare, it can hardly be doubted, was one of great physical activity. The Stratford butt, which, with all its faults as a work of art, is perhaps the best authenticated likeness of him, tells unmistakably the same story. In his writings, too, he displays a minute familiarity with out-door sports of every kind, an acquaintance with external nature and country scenes, such as is never gained except by those whose childhood and youth are spent largely in the open air, among the green fields and by the hedge-rows and lanes of the country. The free, harum-scarum country boy speaks out from his page in places innumerable. In this, as in many other points, there is a striking resemblance between Shakespeare and Sir Walter Scott,—the same healthy robustness of thought, the same joyousness of temperament, the same fondness for out-door life and out-door sports, the same close observation of nature, the same love for legendary lore, written or unwritten. The story of Scott’s early life fortunately is on record; and, by analogy, it tells us plainly how, in corresponding circumstances, the Stratford boy with his great exuberance of life deported himself among the stirring associations by which he was surrounded. Let us look for a moment at some of these local transactions and associations, which were likely to act upon the imagination in a thoughtful way in that spring-time of life when the quick-coming fancies of the brain are just beginning to take root.

We have all read Walter Scott’s description of Kenilworth Castle, and of the gorgeous pageants exhibited there by the Earl of Leicester to Queen Elizabeth. All mid-England was there by thousands, three hundred and twenty heads of the drain on the occasion testifying to the extent of the gathering. Is it likely, can we conceive it possible, that a boy of active habits and ardent imagination, then in the twelfth year of his age, and living only thirteen miles away, would be absent from such an exhibition? The dramatic cast of many parts of that superb entertainment must have been especially suggestive to the mind of the young villager. When, on that occasion, the great Earl welcomed his sovereign with a more than regal magnificence, it is not hard to believe that his ambition looked higher than the part of favorite counsellor and minister. The Stratford boy would not be slow to take up the pleasing surprise, as it passed from mouth to mouth among the gaping multitude, nor would he soon forget the pageant itself, or the gay throngs surging in and out through the lordly portals. The only passage in the plays in which Shakespeare appears distinctly to allude to Queen Elizabeth is one the hint of which seems to have been caught on this occasion. Bear in mind that in these shows at Kenilworth, the mythology of lakes and seas abounds. "Arion appears bearing on a dolphin's back," "Triston, in likeness of a mermaid, comes towards her majesty." With these things in mind, let us see if we do not get some new light on the origin of that exquisite passage in the speech of Oberon, in _A Midsummer Night's Dream_, already referred to (II. i).

Obe. My gentle Puck, come hither. Thou rememberest
Since once I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid on a dolphin's back
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath
That the rude sea grew civil at her song
And certain stars shot madly from their spheres,
To hear the sea-maid's music.

Puck. I remember.

Obe. That very time I saw, but thou couldst not,
Flying between the cold moon and the earth,
Cupid all arm'd: a certain aim he took
At a fair vestal's thrown by the west,
And loosed his love-shaft smartly from his bow,
As if it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts;
But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft
Quench'd in the chaste beams of the watery moon,
And the imperial votaress passed on,
In maiden meditation, fancy-free,

Let us look at some of the other local associations: Only ten miles from Stratford was Warwick Castle, the seat of the great Earl, the king-maker, with its huge piles of masonry and its rich historical associations. Many an old servitor of the house would be there, only too glad to pour into the ear of the curious boy the tales of tragic interest which had been enacted within and around its walls.

A mile from Warwick, at Blacklow-hill, was the scene of another startling tragedy. There, in 1312, the favorite of Edward II., Piers Gaveston, was beheaded by the barons. Conspicuous among the objects that would here rivet the attention was the ancient statue of Guy at Guy's Cliff, the famous "Black Dog of Arden," by whose hand the butchery was perpetrated.

Only twelve miles away was the scene of the great battle of Evesham, where, in 1265, Edward I. defeated the barons under Simon de Montfort. The tomb of King John was at Worcester, only twenty miles away. Coventry, eighteen miles away, was the seat of the famous Black Prince. There were the famous lists where, according to Shakespeare's own description (_Richard II._ I. iii), the quarrel first began between the houses of York and Lancaster. There, too, was something still more attractive to a young poet. The Coventry Mysteries, the most famous of their kind in England, were then in full activity, and the people of the rural counties were hardly less attracted to them than are the people of Germany now to the Passion Plays of the Oberammergau. All mid-England thronged to see these remarkable open air theatricals,—the germ from which in less than twenty years Shakespeare's own theatre was to spring.

A two days' walk would bring one from Stratford to Shrewsbury, where the Hotspur Percy was slain, and the Scotch Earl Douglas taken, and minute touches in Shakespeare's description of the battle show that his eye was thoroughly familiar with the scenery of this great battle-field.

One day's walk down the Avon brings you to the scene of the great battle of Tewksbury,—the crowning struggle of a terrible sixteen years' war. In that battle, as Margaret so piteously says to Richard, "Thou sluest Edward, my poor son, at Tewksbury." (Richard II., I. iii.).

The battle of Bosworth Field was fought within thirty miles of Stratford. Burton, writing in 1624, says the inhabitants then living around the plains of Bosworth Field "have many occurrences and passages [of the battle] yet fresh in memory, by reason that some persons thenceabout, which saw the battle fought, were living within less than forty years." Forty years from Burton's date takes us back to the sixteenth year of William Shakespeare. Why should not he, the boy-dramatist, like Scott, the boy-novelist, have gathered knowledge and caught inspiration from the lips of these old narrators? The battle of Bosworth Field was, in Shakespeare's day, the Waterloo of English history. Burton again, in another place, speaking of this battle, identifies the spot "by a little mount cast up, where the common report is, that at the first beginning of the battle Henry Est [Eustace, nicknamed Paille,] God's servant, did make his pararmetrical ordonnance to his army (Richard III., V. iii.); (also) by divers pieces of armor, weapons, and other warlike accouterments, and by many arrow-heads new found, whereof about twenty years since [1604] great store were dug up, of which some I have now in my custody, being of a long, large, and great proportion, far greater than any now in use; as also by relation of the inhabitants, who have many occurrences and passages yet fresh in memory." Let it be remembered in this connection that the ten historical plays, no less than eight are associated in many of their battle-fields with the localities which have been named, and with which Shakespeare was from boyhood perfectly familiar. Of these plays, four, namely, Richard II., Henry IV., Part I., Henry IV., Part II., and Henry V., constitute a connected tetralogy, showing the rise of the House of Lancaster; of the remaining four, namely, Henry VI., Part I., Henry VI., Part II., Henry VI., Part III., and Richard III., constitute a second tetralogy, showing the rise of the House of York. The wars described in these eight plays agitated the English nation for full a century. The memory of them was still fresh in the minds of the English people at the time when Shakespeare's boyhood began, being about as far removed from him as the events of the American Revolution are from us. The battle-fields of these fierce wars and the monuments of them on every side of him were a part of the educational forces to which his young mind was subjected.

No one who has read Romeo and Juliet is likely to forget the amiable Friar Lawrence. The picture of this kind-hearted old man has all the marks of a portrait, the original of which may be traced with no difficulty. Shakespeare and Sidney and some of his Stratford, at Evesham, were the ruins of the famous Abbey of the Benedictines, which had been robbed and dismantled by Henry VIII., in 1539. More than one hundred and fifty inmates of this monastery were turned loose upon the world. Many of these men doubtless were still living, sheltered in the cottages of old servants and retainers of the monastery, and meeting more likely than that young Shakespeare came in contact with more than one of these meek and peaceful old men. "The Infirmarist of a monastic house, who had charge of the sick brethren, was often in the early days of medical science their only physician. The book knowledge and the experience of such a valuable member of the conventual body would still allow him to exercise these useful functions when thrust out into the world; and the young poet may have known some such kindly old man, full of axiomatic wisdom," who unconsciously sat for his portrait of Friar Lawrence. It is observable of all Shakespeare's pictures of monks, that they are drawn in the spirit of charity, and show the benevolent and kindly side of their character. The expelled Benedictines of Evesham, living in a serene and peaceful old age before his eyes, would naturally prompt to such a view.

Shakespeare's knowledge of archery and other field sports often comes out in his writings. In the Venus and Adonis, for instance, the practised huntsman appears as unmistakably as in Scott's Lady of the Lake. The painting of the hare-hunt, in the Venus and Adonis, is, for minute accuracy unequalled in all English literature. So in the Merchant of Venice, he shows his familiarity with archery. (I. l.)

In my school-days, when I had lost one shaft, I shot his fellow of the self-same flight
The self-same way with more advised watch,
To find the other forth, and by adventuring both
I oft found both.

The ancient sport of archery was revived in England with much ceremony in 1560, Shakespeare being then sixteen years old. A short distance from Stratford, about a mile from the little village of Bidford, was still standing twenty-five years ago an old crab-tree, known as Shakespeare's Crab-Tree, and celebrated partly by the tradition that he was one of a party who accepted a challenge from some Bidford toppers to try which party could drink the most ale, but more certainly by the tradition that under this tree were many games of archery, in which Shakespeare and other Stratford boys took part.

CHAPTER VI.

THE STORY OF HIS DEED-STEALING, HOW FAR IT IS TO BE CREDITED.

There is another somewhat circumstantial tradition of Shakespeare's youth, which may be exaggerated in many of its details, and yet must have had some foundation in truth,—enough at least to add to the conviction that when a boy he was addicted to boyish sports and boon companions. "He had," says Rowe, one of the earliest of the biographers, 1709, "by a misfortune common enough to young fellows, fallen into ill company, and amongst them, some that made a frequent practice of deer-stealing engaged him more than once in robbing a park that belonged to Sir Thomas Lucy of Charlecote near Stratford. For this he was prosecuted by that gentleman, as he thought, somewhat too severely; and, in order to avenge that ill usage, he made a ballad upon him; and though this probably the first essay of his poetry, he lost, yet it is said to have been so very bitter that it redoubled the prosecution against him to that degree that he was obliged to leave his business and his family in Warwickshire for some time, and shelter in London." Rowe speaks of the ballad as being lost, but some later antiquaries succeeded in gathering fragments of it from the lips of two or three extremely aged persons who had portions of it in memory. The first stanza, at least, has been clearly made out from two independent sources. The ballad may possibly not have been Shakespeare's, but there is no doubt of its having come down to us by direct oral tradition, reaching back very nearly to Shakespeare's day.

To understand the malicious poem upon Sir Thomas's name, it should be remembered that in the language of heraldry the word "lucie" (Lat. lucius, O. Fr. lus) meant a pike, a kind of fish, and that three white hues or pike, interlaced, were in the quarterings of the coat-of-arms of the Lucy family. The balladist, whoever he was, quibbles upon the rustic pronunciation of the word "l-o-u-s-e," which was also sounded "lucie," and thus brings out the provoking idea which so nettled the provincial dignitary. The stanza is as follows:

A Parishion member, a justice of peace,
At home a poor scare-crow, at London an ass;
If lowse is Lucy, as some volk miscall it,
Then Lucy is lowse, whatever befell it,
He thinks himself great,
Yet an ass in his state.
We allow by his ears but with asses to mate.
If Lucy is lowse, as some volk miscall it,
Sing lowse Lucy, whatever befell it.

Shakespeare certainly at no period of his life was above this sort of quibble, and in his "Merry Wives of Windsor" (I. ii.) he uses almost exactly the same expression, so that readers have very generally believed that Sir Thomas sat for the picture when the dramatist gave us his immortal portrait of Justice Shallow:

Seton. All his ancestors that come after him . . .
May give the dozen white hues in their coat.

Shal. It is an old coat.

Sans. The dozen white hues do become an old coat well;
It agrees well, passant; it is a familiar beast to man.

Charlecote, with its ample parks and its noble mansion and its worthy surroundings of every kind, was in the immediate vicinity of Stratford, and doubtless was one of the objects that helped to fill the mind of the young bard with images of beauty, whether the story of his youthful escapade there be true or not.

CHAPTER VII.

His marriage—painful surmises raised in regard to it by recent discoveries—questionable character of the transaction—happiness or unhappiness of his married life, the arguments pro and con—The romance connected with the name and memory of Anne Hathaway.

WHAT I have given thus far in regard to the personal history of Shakespeare is, I am constrained to say, though extremely probable, yet, with one single exception, devoid of absolute certainty. Truth to say, from the register of his baptism to his nineteenth year, we have not one fact strictly personal to himself which we can affirm on direct and positive evidence. The second fact of his life for which we have authentic documentary evidence is his marriage. The date of his marriage is involved in the same difficulty as the date of his birth. The reason of the uncertainty as to the exact date is that the marriage register has not been found; but not many years ago a legal document was brought to light which fixes the date within a day or two. In the year 1836, there was discovered in the Consistorial Court of Worcester, the county adjoining to Warwickshire, a document relating to Shakespeare, which on examination proved to be his marriage license. In this document, bonds are given by two of his neighbors to indemnify the Bishop for licensing the marriage with only once pub-brother-in-law; furthermore, Jack Sandells and John Richardson, Shakespeare's bondsman, on the marriage license, were neighbors and friends of the Hathaways; and finally, the Shakespeares and the Hathaways seem from various circumstances to have lived on the most neighborly terms.

As to the omissions of the will, it is to be remarked that the "best bed" in such a family was usually an heirloom, and went, according to English custom, to the heir-at-law; that the "second-best bed" was doubtless the one connected with the bridal ceremony and the married life of the parties; and finally, that by English law the wife had her widow's portion, and was thus annually provided for without any special legacy in the will. Still, the one awkward fact remains, and the union, it is feared by many, was an ill-assorted one, and as such was a misfortune, even though not a crime.

In this connection, too, it must be added that a portion of the sonnets seem to reveal to us some dark passages in Shakespeare's London life, and from this the inference has been made that he was driven to seek in forbidden ways the companionship and solace that he did not find by his own hearth-stone. That he did not, however, by the fascinations of the capital, become seriously alienated from his Stratford home is as clear as day, and is among the important facts bearing upon this vexed question. He never became a Londoner, as did Jonson and the other dramatists of the day. All the pet names given him by his contemporaries connect him with his country home. He is ever "the sweet swan of Avon," "the bard of Avon," not of the Thames. Every year, during his long sojourn in London, he made his annual visit to Stratford. His children are baptized, married, and buried there. His earnings, year by year, are invested there. It has even come to light that among his investments was a purchase of land at Shottery, the seat of the Hathaway Cottage, which certainly does not look as though the place had become distasteful to him. Everything in fact that we certainly know of the history of the man shows that Stratford and its surroundings, the residence of his wife and the scene of his youthful love, continued to be the home of his affections. Had there been any such alienation as has been imputed, there would not have been on the part of the injured wife that strong desire, which we know her to have expressed, to be buried in the same grave with him.

Anne Hathaway, the name of the young woman who so early gained such an ascendency over the youthful poet, was, according to a very general tradition, possessed of great personal beauty. There is indeed no direct contemporary record to this effect. But the tradition is at least an innocent one, and is not contradicted by any adverse testimony.

Of the sonnets, there are two or three at least that are redolent of this spring-time of life, and which I for one can hardly help believing were written by him before leaving Stratford, and were inspired by this Stratford beauty. One of these, in a half playful, half passionate vein, is a continued parody or pun on his own name of "Will."

Whoever hath her wish, then hast thy "Will,"
And "Will" to boot, and "Will" in overplus;
More than enough am I that vex thee still,
To thy sweet will making addition thus:
Wilt thou, whose will is large and versatile,
Not once vouchsafe to hide thy will in shine?

Another sonnet, in like youthful vein, differing so widely from the deep tragedy that pervades others of his sonnets, is addressed to some one playing on the virginal, an instrument of music then in use, the keys, called "Jacks," being of wood.

Shall will in others seem right gracious,
And in my lord no fair acceptance shine?
The sea, all water, yet receives rain, still
And in abundance addeth to his store;
So thou, being rich in 'Will,' said to thy 'Will'
One will of mine, to make thy large 'Will' more
Let no unkind, no fair beseechers kill;
Think all but one, and me in that one 'Will,'
Sonnet CXXXV.

Another sonnet, on many who have been called 'Jacks,'

How oft, when thou, my music, music play'st,
Upon that blessed instrument, which增
With thy sweet fingers, when thou gently sway'st
The wavy concord that mine ear confounds,
Do I envy those jacks that mingle leap
To kiss the tender inward of thy hand,
Whilest my poor lips, which should that harvest reap,
At the wood's boldness by the blushing stand?
To be so tickled, they would change their state
And situation with those dancing chips.
O'er whom (which) thy fingers walk with gentle gait,
Making dead wood more blust than living lips,
Since saucy Jacks so happy are in thine
Give them thy fingers, me thy lips to kiss.
Sonnet CXXVIII.
THE LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE.

This sonnet, whether addressed to Anne Hathaway or not, is at least a refutation of the theory that all the sonnets were inspired by a male friend. The sentiments here expressed are surely not those of man towards man, but of a man towards a woman.

Anne Hathaway's cottage, at the little village of Shottery, a mile and a half across the green fields from Stratford, still remains, and in it the "second best bed with the furniture," bequeathed by her husband. Nothing more picturesque is to be seen in all the country round.

The next entry in the Stratford register with which this story is concerned is the following: Baptized, February 2, 1555, Hamnet and Judith, son and daughter of William Shakespeare. Shakespeare's wife bore him only these three children. Hamnet, the only son, died at the age of twelve. The daughters, Susannah and Judith, were both married. Judith was married to a Stratford man, Thomas Quiney, and had three sons, who however all died without issue. Susannah, the oldest daughter, and the chief inheritor, was married to Dr. Hall, an eminent physician of Stratford. She had one daughter, Elizabeth, who was twice married, the last time to Sir John Barnard, but she likewise died without issue. No lineal descendant of Shakespeare, therefore, now exists.

CHAPTER VIII.
WHAT LED SHAKESPEARE TO THE PLAYERS AND TO LONDON.

Many conjectures and surmises have been given as to the cause of Shakespeare's leaving Stratford for the metropolis. The real cause I take to be that stated briefly by Aubrey, the earliest of all the biographers (1670). "This William," says Aubrey, "being naturally inclined to poetry and acting, came to London." Let us see if some light cannot be thrown upon this brief paragraph.

Among the fiscal accounts of Stratford have been several entries which may be serviceable in this matter. These entries are charges of public money expended by the authorities for certain theatrical performances at different times, from 1609 to 1580, that is, from the fifth to the seventeenth year of William Shakespeare. In 1580, when his father John Shakespeare was chief magistrate or Bailiff, there was a payment of £9 to the Queen's Players, and of 12s. to the Earl of Worcest-ter's Players. In 1573, the Earl of Leicester's Players received 5s. 8d. In 1576, my Lord of Warwick's Players had a gratuity of 17s., and the Earl of Worcester's Players one of 5s. 8d. In 1577, my Lord of Leicester's Players received 15s., and my Lord of Worcest-ter's Players 5s. 4d. In 1579, my Lord Strange's men, at the commandment of the Bailiff, 5s., and the Countess of Essex's Players 14s. 8d. In 1580, the Earl of Derby's Players, at the commandment of the Bailiff, 8s. 4d.

These entries are explained by the following passage in a book by R. Witte, 1639, who gives his own age at that time as seventy-five, and who must therefore have been born in the same year with Shakespeare. Witte is describing what he had seen in a country town near Stratford when he was a boy. His description, in connection with the foregoing entries, is almost as satisfactory as if it had been said in express terms that the same thing was seen by Will Shakespeare, another boy, in another town of merry England, "all in the olden time." The title is:

"UPON A STAGE-PLAY WHICH I SAW WHEN I WAS A CHILD."

"In the city of Gloucester, the manner is (as I think it is in other like corporations) that when Players of Interludes come to town, they first attend the Mayor, to inform him what nobleman's servants they are, and so to get license for their playing; and if the Mayor like the actors, or would show respect to their lord and master, he appoints them to play their first play before himself and the aldermen and common council of the city; and that is called the Mayor's Play, when every one that will come in without money, the Mayor giving the players a reward as he thinks fit, to show respect unto them. At such a play my father took me with him, and made me stand between his legs, as he sat upon one of the benches, where we saw and heard very well. The play was called 'The Cradle of Security,' wherein was personated a king or some great prince, with his courtiers of several kinds, amongst which three ladies were in special grace with him; and they, keeping him in delights and pleasures, drew him from his graver counsellors, hearing of sermons, and listening to good counsel and admonitions, that in the end they got him to lie down in a cradle upon the stage, where these three ladies, joining in a sweet song, rod again asleep, that he snorted and waked, and in the mean time closely conveyed under the clothes wherewithal he was covered a vizard like unto a swine's snout upon his face, with three wire chains fastened thereunto, the other end whereof being severally held by these three ladies, who fell to singing again, and then discovered his face, that the spectators might see that they had transformed him, going on with their singing. Whilst all this was acting, there came forth of another door, at the farthest end of the stage, two old men, the one in blue, with a sergeant of arms, his mace upon his shoulder, the other in red, with a drawn sword in his hand, and leaning with the other hand upon the other's shoulder; and so they two went along in a soft pace, round about by the skirt of the stage, till at last they came to the cradle, where all the Court was in the greatest jollity; and then the foremost man with his mace struck a blow upon the cradle, whereat all the courtiers, with the three ladies and the vizard, all vanished; and the desolate prince, starting up barefaced, and finding himself thus sent for to judgment, made a lamentable complaint of his miserable case, and so was carried away by wicked spirits.

"This prince did personate in the geast the wicked of the world; the three ladies, Pride, Covetousness, and Luxury; the two old men, the End of the World and the Last Judgment. This sight took such impression in me that when I came towards man's estate, it was as fresh in my memory as if I had seen it newly acted."

Now if R. Wiltes, born in 1584, saw when a child this exhibition in the town of Gloucester, I do not find it at all difficult to believe that when, in 1590, John Shakespeare, Bailiff of Stratford-upon-Avon, ordered the payment of 9s. to the Queen's Players for the exhibition of a Merry Interlude, his son Will, then five years old, stood in like manner between his father's legs, as he sat upon one of the benches, and there saw a like notable "gest;" and that he continued to witness the other exhibitions of a like kind which occurred from time to time in his native town during the whole period of his boyhood.

The inference which these records suggest is strengthened by others of a later date. The first direct evidence that we have of Shakespeare's being in London is a list of certain persons in that city, engaged as players and as proprietors of the Play House. In this company, of which Shakespeare is one, occur the names of several other actors from the same county of Warwick, and one other at least from Stratford itself. Thus, then, it was. The great dramatist found, even in these rude exhibitions, something congenial. He found in these wandering and clumsy theatricals the elements of his own glorious day-dreams. His soul was touched, rudely it may be, but on that choral which yielded its deepest and sweetest music. To join his fellow-townsmen who had already embarked in this business, and to seek by it in the great metropolis the means of living and of fame, was certainly one of the most natural and probable of all possible results. It was instructive. His leaving Stratford for London at the time he did needs no further explanation. It requires no fable of deer-stealing and prosecution, no interposition of paternal misfortunes, no fiction of domestic disquietudes and treasons. Shakespeare found himself among the players for the same reason that the birds in spring-time find themselves among the branches. He became a dramatist under a law as generic as that which draws sweetness from the Æolian harp when kissed by Zephyrus, or that which opens the throats of the feathered tribes when vernal airs and genial skies warm them into melody. It was nature herself prompting her favorite son to his proper work. The strolling players and the merry interludes, at the little town of Stratford-upon-Avon, were to Shakespeare the mirror of Merlin, revealing to himself the secret of his own wonderful powers. The powers were there. They needed only an occasion to put them in motion.

CHAPTER IX.

ONE of the riddles of literature is that so little should be known of the man who is beyond question the greatest genius that literature has to boast of; and the riddle is all the more perplexing from the fact that this man lived in the very focus of English civilization, at one of its most illustrious epochs, and that he has been dead only about two centuries and a half.

The exact date of Shakespeare's going to London is not known. The probability is that he went about the year 1598, four years after his marriage, he being then twenty-two years old, and his youngest child not yet two years old. He died in 1616, and the last four or five years of his life are known to have been spent in his native village, after his retirement from the metropolis. This would make his London career cover a period of about a quarter of a century.

The first notices we have of Shakespeare in London are in connection with the company of actors known, first as the Lord Chamberlain's men, and afterwards as the King's Players. Some account of this company therefore is the first thing in order. Strolling actors were at that time liable to be taken up as vagrants. To relieve them from this penalty the better class of actors attached themselves to the service of some nobleman, and, as his servants, they were by law free from arrest. One company, known as the Earl of Leicester's Players, early acquired special distinction, and in 1574, through his influence, obtained a special charter from the Queen. The leading proprietor in this company was James Burbage, a Warwickshire man. This James Burbage was, in Shakespeare's boyhood, the man of greatest mark in the theatrical world. He was the pioneer in the building of play-houses, the first house ever built in England specially erected for theatrical purposes being that put up by him in 1577, in Shoreditch, on ground formerly belonging to Holywell Priory. It was in the open fields on the north side of London, and just outside the city limits. This building was known simply as the Theatre. After occupying it more than twenty years as a play-house, Burbage pulled it down, carried the materials to the other side of London, on the south bank of the Thames, and there, in 1599, with these materials, built the play-house known as the Globe. He had also, some three or four years before, near the north bank of the Thames, opposite Southwark, erected still another play-house, known as the Blackfriars, being built upon a part of the foundation of the old monastery of the Black Friars, which had been demolished in the reign of Henry VIII.

This James Burbage had a son Richard, who was confessedly the greatest actor of his day, and one of the greatest of all time. He was about the same age as Shakespeare, and was the leading man in the company of players to which Shakespeare belonged. They played chiefly in the buildings just described, put up by the elder Burbage, namely, the Theatre, the Blackfriars, the Globe. The principal actors in this company were Richard Burbage, William Shakespeare, Lawrence Fletcher, Augustine Phillips, John Heminge,
Hence it play-houses and the theatrical profession were brought out by this company. The Burbages, father and son, were in particular intimately associated with Shakespeare all through his theatrical career, and the younger of them is one of those affectionately remembered by Shakespeare in his will. Another man for a time of this company, though he appears afterward to have gone over to a rival company, was Thomas Greene, of great celebrity as a comic actor. He is generally believed to have been a Stratford man, and to have been directly instrumental in introducing Shakespeare to the company. Still another member of this company, John Heminge, is said to have been from Shottery, the residence of Anne Hathaway, near Stratford. He remained with the company to the last, and was one of the editors of the first Folio.

To understand the theatrical history of this period, it must be borne in mind that while both Elizabeth and James, and the court generally, looked with favor upon actors and acting, the city of London, under the influence of the Puritan element in the church, disapproved stage playing, and did everything in their power to suppress it. Hence nearly all the early play-houses were built in places contiguous to the population, but outside the limits of the corporation and beyond its jurisdiction. There were three such play-houses on the north side of the city, in what was then open country, in the neighborhood of Shoreditch. These three were: 1. The Theatre (Burbage's already buried), 2. The Curtain, and 3. The Fortune.

Two others, already mentioned, and belonging to the Burbages, were The Blackfriars, on the north bank of the Thames, and within the corporation limits, and The Globe, on the south side of the Thames, in the suburb known as Southwark, and sometimes as the Bankside. The Blackfriars, according to documents first brought to light by Mr. Halliwell, in 1874, was built in 1596, and the Globe in 1599. Shakespeare's theatrical career began at the old theatre in Shoreditch, outside of the city on the north, and continued there for the first ten or twelve years; it was then divided for a time between that theatre and the Blackfriars; and finally, for the last twelve or fifteen years, was divided between the Blackfriars and the Globe.

CHAPTER X.

The evidence is conclusive that Shakespeare began his theatrical career as an actor, and that he took parts both in his own plays and in others. Some of the parts taken by him, as that of the Ghost in his own Hamlet, and that of the old man Adam in As You Like It, are pretty well ascertained. It is also known that he played in Ben Jonson's Every Man in His Humor.

The earliest authentic mention of Shakespeare as a player is in March, 1594, four years earlier than any authentic mention of him in this capacity hitherto supposed to exist. In the document just unearthed by Halliwell, and published in 1874, of the authenticity of which there has been thus far no question, Shakespeare is named as one of the Lord Chamberlain's servants who had acted two comedies before her majesty Queen Elizabeth during the preceding Christmas season, that is, in December, 1593. This document, then, shows Shakespeare, at the end of seven years from the time of his supposed advent in London, to have already risen to such consideration in the theatrical world as to be one of the three most eminent actors of the day, specially invited to play before her majesty on that occasion. Kempe and Burbage, the two others associated with him, being the acknowledged sovereigns of the stage. The document is interesting also as showing the exact amount paid for their services, viz., £20 equal to £100, or £500 now. The whole entry is worth quoting. It is in these words: "To William Kempe, William Shakespeare, and Richard Burbage, servants to the Lord Chamberlain, upon the Council's warrant, dated at Whitehall, 15 March, 1594, for two several comedies or interludes showed by them before her Majesty in Christmas time last past, namely, upon St. Stephen's day and Innocent's day, £13 6s. 8d., and by way of her Majesty's reward £50 13s. 4d., in all £20."

In regard to his ability as an actor, Chettle, writing while Shakespeare was still on the boards, 1592, testifies that "he is excellent in the quality which he professeth," and Aubrey, writing half a century after Shakespeare's death (1670), says "he did act exceedingly well." If in this respect he did not come up to the consummate ability of his friend, the younger Burbage, who was indeed the Garrick of his day, he yet evidently was an actor of no mean ability, and his practical experience on the stage contributed largely, without doubt, to that masterly knowledge of stage-effect which is so conspicuous in his plays.

There is a well-authenticated tradition that Taylor, one of the Blackfriars' company, who acted Hamlet, was instructed in the part by Shakespeare himself; also, that Lowke, who acted Henry VIII., was likewise instructed in it by Shakespeare; and, finally, that Betterton, who, half a century later, became famous as a personator of these two parts, was aided therein by the stage traditions in regard to the manner of presenting them introduced by Shakespeare himself.

The evidence, furthermore, is conclusive that for many years Shakespeare was engaged both as a writer for the stage and as an actor. All his predecessors and most of his contemporaries were at once players and writers. Such was the case with Marlowe, Greene, Lodge, Peele, Nash, Munday, Wilson, Field, Heywood, Webster, and Ben Jonson. It was not until some time later in the history of the drama that the business of author and actor became distinct. All the early dramatists were actors, and took part in acting their own plays.

It is further probable that Shakespeare began the business of dramatist in the same manner as his predecessors, namely, as a "playwright." That is, he began, not by composing original plays, but by tinkering with plays of others extant. The drama, about the time that he began authorship, seems hardly to have been considered a part of literature. The person who prepared a play for the stage was not looked upon as an author. It was all one to the audience whether that which pleased them was original or borrowed. The actor sometimes came in for a share of personal regard, but no one ever thought of the writer. It can hardly be doubted that Shakespeare, while enjoying his theatrical success, felt keenly the humiliating social position to which his profession at this time subjected him. It is absurd to suppose that such a genius as Shakespeare's, did not know its own value. Read the fifty-fifth sonnet:

Not marble, nor the gilded monuments
Of princes, shall outlive this powerful rhyme;
But you shall shine more bright in these contents
Than unswept sand-beaches with unshut time.
When wasteful war shall waste war's wasted word,
Nor Mars his sword nor war's quick fire shall burn
The living record of your memory.
Great men's decease adds not to my disasters,
But rather makes me happy in yourjlourly;
Shall you pace forth; your praise shall still find room
For my eyes and for my tongue; and when my eyes
Shall be outwent by death's unviewing power,
This ditty, or like to this, shall watch for you.

Bearing in mind thus his sublime consciousness of his own greatness and of the assured eternity of his lines, how infinitely touching is the pathos with which, in another sonnet (111th), he refers to the social humiliations to which his profession subjected him.

O, for my sake do you with Fortune chide,
That she of all the world so cruelly
Stole from me all the gold-balls of my bedhead,
That did not better for my life provide
Than public means which public manners breed.
Thence comes it that my name receives a brand,
And almost thence my nature is subdied
To what it works in, like the dyer's hand.

The feeling thus experienced, as he looked upon the great and noble who came to his play-house merely to be amused, is not at all in conflict with the fact that he enjoyed heartily his life, such as it was, though it did not give him social intercourse with the titled ones about him. We can well believe the tradition of the merry-making at the Falcon and the Mermaid, and of the wit-combats of which Fuller speaks, 1662, between Shakespeare and Ben Jonson. "Many," says Fuller, "were the wit-combats betwixt him and Ben Jonson; which two I beheld like a Spanish great galleon and an English man-of-war." Master Jonson, the former, was built for war, but slow in his performances. Shakespeare, with the early dramatists, prepared a piece for the stage purely as a matter of business. They took, or they made, whatever was likely to gain the end—to draw an audience. Shakespeare doubtless soon found that the less he took and the more he made, the more acceptable the preparation became to the public. Hence he proceeded farther by an adaptation of a manner technically called a "playwright," to a writer of original plays. Another thing also is probable, and indeed is evident from recorded facts, that his plays became gradually so important to the company to which he belonged, that he dropped entirely the office of actor, and confined his attention exclusively to writing. At what time precisely this change took place has not been ascertained. All that we know certainly is that during the early part of his theatrical career he was an actor, afterwards he was both actor and writer, while for many years before his death he was connected with the stage only as a writer. The story of his having begun by holding the horses of those attending the theatre is now generally discredited. If the thing did occur, it must have been at the theatre, in Shoreditch, to which Shakespeare was first attached. As plays were then engaged to him in the autumn of the year, the play-goers coming from the city would read the place on horse-back, and so the holding of the horses would become a considerable business.

The date of the composition of the several plays is involved in great obscurity. A discussion of the subject would involve many dry details quite unsuited to a sketch like this. One general remark, however, may be made, bearing upon this point. It is doubtful whether any one of the plays was published under the author's own inspection and authority. It was to the interest of Shakespeare and his company to keep the plays in manuscript in the theatre, as the main part of their stock in trade. The printing of them for persons to read lessened their value as a means of attracting people to the play-house. The fact, therefore, of the plays not coming out during the author's lifetime and under his own direction, is proof rather of his thrift, than of the neglect and reckless indifference to which it has been generally ascribed. In 1632, seven years after his death, two of his friends and fellow-actors published his plays in a largefolio volume, from the original copies then in the theatre. This publication is regarded as the true Edito Princeps, and as the chief authority in determining the text. A considerable number of the plays were published separately during his life. These were printed in small 4to pamphlets, and are known as the Early Quartos. Their publication, however, is generally believed to have been surreptitious, without the supervision or consent of the author.

The fact that the plays were kept in the theatre as a part of the theatrical property has had the additional effect of making it next to impossible to fix a definite time for the composition of certain plays. We know from a comparison of styles, as well as from contemporary records, that certain of the plays were written earlier, and others were written later. But even when a play had been once produced in the theatre, there is no proof that Shakespeare did not continue to alter and amend it from year to year. The proof indeed is just the other way, and the general conclusion now is, that all the plays were touched up from time to time, and that many of them, particularly those first written, were rewritten again and again.
CHAPTER XI.

RELATIONS OF SHAKESPEARE TO THE EARL OF SOUTHAMPTON—CHARACTER OF THIS NOBLEMAN—TRADITION OF THE GIFT OF £1,000—CONNECTION OF THE DAVENANTS WITH THE STORY—THEIR SPECIAL MEANS OF KNOWLEDGE ON THE SUBJECT.

THE first works of Shakespeare published, and the only ones certainly known to have been published under his own supervision and authority, were the Venus and Adonis, 1593, and the Lucrece, 1594. Shakespeare's birthplace being thirty years older. Both poems are dedicated to a youthful admirer of Shakespeare's, the young earl of Southampton, then in his twenty-first year. The earl is described by his contemporaries as a man of brilliant parts, possessed of great learning and accomplishments, and a munificent patron of letters. Testimonies to this effect in the shape of dedicatory odes and epistles are found scattered all through the literature of the period. The jets of the day locked up to him as the English Maccenas. Brathwayt, in the dedication of the Scholar's Medley, calls him "learning's best favorite." Florio, in his World of Words, speaks of him as one "in whose pay and patronage I have lived some years;" "To me and many more, the glorious and gracious sunshine of your honor hath infused light and life." The form of literature to which he was especially devoted was the drama. This we know from a contemporaneous record by Rowland Whyte, who says of Southampton and his companion Lord Rutland, "They pass away the time in London merely in going to plays every day." In connection with this, we may observe that his mother by a second marriage became the wife of Sir Thomas Henrage, Treasurer of the Chamber. This office brought Sir Thomas, and through him his stepson, the young earl, into intimate association with actors and dramatists. Some brief reference to the affection of this brilliant nobleman for men of letters seems necessary to explain the intimate relations which grew up between him and Shakespeare. In the dedication of the Venus and Adonis, the language is that of distant but respectful compliment. The dedication of the Lucrece, only a year later, speaks unbounded admiration and affection. This change in the tone of the two dedications is remarkable, and is supposed to have been caused by an extraordinary act of generosity on the part of the young nobleman. The tradition is that the earl at one time paid the poet a gift of £1,000 (equivalent to £5,000 now) to enable him to complete a "purchase which he had a mind to." There is no inherent impossibility, and no very great improbability, in such a piece of generosity, and the tradition is clear and precise. If this thing ever did take place, its occurrence in the interval between the publication of these two documents gives special meaning and emphasis to both—the first dedication being that which prompted the mind of the generous young nobleman to make the gift, the second being the natural outpouring of affection for so great an act of kindness.

All this, probable as it is, we must still remember is pure conjecture. The tradition is given by Rowe, and Rowe gives it on the authority of Sir William Davenant, 1670, about half a century after Shakespeare's death. Shakespeare was intimate with the Davenants, and was godfather to their son, William, the celebrated Sir William Davenant of the next generation. Shakespeare used to stop at their house, the Crown Inn, in Oxford, in his annual journeys between Stratford and London. The elder Davenant, who was an innkeeper and vintner, being a great admirer and friend of the poet. These facts are expressly affirmed by Anthony A. Wood, the careful antiquarian of Oxford, who himself knew the Davenants personally. Wood says, the "mother [of Sir William] was a very beautiful woman, of a good wit and conversation," "the father was a very good and discreet citizen, yet an admirer and lover of plays and playmakers, especially Shakespeare, who frequented his house in his journeys between Warwickshire and London." The Davenants then must have been well acquainted with Shakespeare's affairs, and are competent witnesses to any important facts in his history. Rowe's statement is as follows: "There is one instance so singular in the munificence of this patron of Shakespeare's, that if I had not been assured that the story was handed down by Sir William Davenant, who was probably very well acquainted with his [Shakespeare's] affairs, I should not have ventured to have inserted; [to wit,] that my Lord Southampton at one time gave him a thousand pounds to enable him to go through with a purchase which he heard he had a mind to."

CHAPTER XII.

SHAKESPEARE'S GENIUS FULLY RECOGNIZED BY HIS CONTEMPORARIES—EVIDENCES ON THIS POINT: (a) EXTRAORDINARY NUMBER OF EDITIONS OF HIS WORKS PUBLISHED DURING HIS LIFE-TIME; (b) NUMBER OF QUOTATIONS FROM HIM IN CONTEMPORARY WORKS OF ELEGANT EXTRACTS; (c) NUMBER AND EXTRAORDINARY CHARACTER OF NOTICES OF HIM BY CONTEMPORARY WRITERS—HOW THE CURRENT NOTION ORIGINATED ABOUT HIS NOT BEING KNOWN OR RECOGNIZED BY HIS CONTEMPORARIES.

It has been a common opinion that Shakespeare's genius was not recognized by his own generation; in fact, that he lived and died comparatively unknown. That his genius is now better understood and appreciated than it was two hundred and fifty years ago, I admit. It is also true that he is no longer thought to have been, as the wits of Queen Anne's day thought him, a sort of inspired idiot, babbling in genius, but wanting in art. Yet, while a broader criticism and a more extensive research have undoubtedly added to our knowledge of him, it would be a great mistake to suppose that he was not both well known and highly appreciated in his own day.

And, first, let us see what was done in the actual publication of his works while he was still living. From 1595, when the Venus and Adonis first appeared, to 1616, the time of his death, scarcely a year passed without the appearance in print of one or more of his works, some of them reaching as high as six editions within twenty-one years. The whole number of editions of separate works, copies or records of which have come down to us, was at the time of his death no less than sixty-five. Now even in this day of cheap publications and of universal rushing into print, an edition in fifty-two years would be a matter of interest to the printer's house. It is, however, in the bookseller's catalogues more than sixty editions of one or another of them, might surely seem to be not altogether a stranger to the public. It is hardly an exaggeration to say that Tenison and Longfellow are not better known to the book-trade than was Shakespeare, antiquatus futundis, at the time of his death. Secondly, in the books of elegant extracts published at that time, and containing selections from standard poets, Shakespeare is even thus early quoted. Thus, England's Parnassus, or, The Choicest Flowers of our Modern Poets, 1590, has no less than ninety extracts from Shakespeare, and Bel-Vertire, or Garden of the Muses, also in 1590, has several extracts from Shakespeare. Love's Martyr, in a new edition, 1601, has an appendix of new poems, "done by the best and chiefest of our modern writers." - the same being chiefly Chapman, Marston, Ben Jonson, and Shakespeare. England's Helicon, a Collection of Pastoral Poems (1614) contains three extracts from Shakespeare. This kind of incidental testimony it is impossible to gainsay. It is hard to conceive of a contemporary popularity more unmistakable.

Thirdly, although it was not the custom then, as it is now, for everybody to gossip on paper about authors, yet let us see whether Shakespeare and his works are not in point of fact mentioned in every variety of way by those who lived at the same time with him, who were conversant with his writings, and who knew the man himself personally. I will mention only a few of the very earliest, from 1591 to 1598.

The earliest of all is a passage in Spenser, not indeed naming Shakespeare, yet so evidently referring to him as to deserve citation. It is, I am aware, a matter of dispute whether the passage referred to was meant for Shakespeare, and many Shakespearians, those too of the very highest authority, reject the passage altogether. Yet, after considering carefully the arguments, for and against, I cannot resist the conviction that in penning these lines Spenser did have Shakespeare in his mind. The passage occurs in Spenser's poem, The Tears of the Muses, 1591, Shakespeare having then been five years in London. Spenser, who during that same period had been living at Kilkcolm Castle, Ireland, came in 1590 to London to attend to the printing of the first three books of the Faerie Queene, and while there was likely to learn something of the new poet, and perhaps to make his acquaintance. Nothing certainly could be more probable than that Spenser, during this temporary sojourn in the metropolis, should embrace the opportunity of frequenting the play-house, where all the wits of the day and all his friends among the nobility made daily resort. On his return to Ireland, this poem, the Tears of the Muses, was published, suggested apparently by what he had seen in London during his late visit, and bewailing what he considered the low estate of literature and the arts. In the poem, each of the Nine Muses in turn makes lament over the low condition of that particular art over which she presides. Among the rest, Thalia, the Muse of Comedy, bewails the degenerate state of her branch. In this lament occur the lines referred to:

And he, the man whom Nature self had made
To mock herself and Truth to imitate,
With kindly counter under Mimick shade,
Our pleasant Willy, ah! is dead of late:
With whom all joy and jolly mirth
Is also dead, and in doleful dree.

After a few more lines, expressing her scorn for the baser sort of dramatists who were flooding the stage with their vile productions, she goes on to say:

But that same gentle spirit, from whose pen
Large streams of honnie and sweete Nectar flowe,
Scouring the bouldnes of such base borne men,
Which dare their folies forth to rashly throwe,
Dost rather choose to sit in Cell
Than so himselfe to mockery to sell.

Here Thalia speaks of some dramatic writer who had raised high the expectations of the public, but who is "dead of late," that is, who is so vexed at the scurrility and ribaldry prevailing that he ceases writing for the stage, resolving to sit idle for the time, rather than be mixed up with such base-born men. As there was no other dramatic writer in 1591 to whom these lines could possibly apply, and as the phrase "our pleasant Willy" points so clearly to William Shakespeare, it is hard to resist the conclusion that Shakespeare was meant, that he had thus, as early as even his twenty-seventh year, won emphatic recognition from the author of this Faerie Queene. Among the plays known to have been written prior to 1591, are Love's Labour's Lost, Comedy of Errors, and Two Gentlemen of Verona, all in the comic vein, and all therefore suited to bring their author under the notice of Thalia, the Muse of Comedy.

Three years later, that is, in 1594, Spenser again visited London, and on returning to Ireland wrote another poem, Colin Clout's Come Home Again, celebrating in pastoral verse, and, as was his wont, under assumed names, the various persons he had met in and near the court. Astrophel is Sir Philip Sidney, the Shepherd of the Ocean is Sir Walter Raleigh, and so on. Among these descriptions is one generally supposed to refer to Shakespeare, though the reference is by no means so clear as in the former passage. The lines are the following:

And there, though last not least, is Artron:
A gentler shepherd may no where be found,
Whose Muse, full of high thoughts invention,
Doth like himselfe heresely sound.

Edward Spenser.

Poets have in all ages been regarded as genus irritable,—a waspish race. All the accounts, however, which we have of Shakespeare, concur in representing him as, on the contrary, a man of amiable disposition and conciliatory manners. It is not a little remarkable that all his contemporaries and those of the age immediately following (except one little outpouring of spleen which I shall notice presently), speak of him, when they refer to him at all, in terms not merely of admiration, but of tender affection,—a man not only to be reverenced, but to be loved. Milton, whose epithets are never given at random, speaks of "sweetest Shakespeare" and "my Shakespeare," Leonard Diggles speaks of "our Shakespeare." His fellow-actors, Hensinge and Condell, in bringing out the first Folio, speak of "our Shakespeare." Ben Jonson says "Sweet xxix Swan of Avon," "my Shakespeare," "my gentle Shakespeare." Spenser, in the passage first quoted, speaks of "our pleasant Willy," and "that same gentle spirit." So here, when in speaking of Action, a "gentler shepheard may no where be found," it seems but natural to infer that he means the same genial, love-inspiring spirit.

Another expression deserves notice. The Muse of Action, it is said, does "like himself heretically sound." This seems to carry a plain reference to Shakespeare's name, which in that day was often printed as two words joined by a hyphen, as Shakes-peare, and as such considered significant and played upon, according to the fancy of his friends. Thus Ben Jonson translates the name into "Shake-a-Lance" and "Shake-a-Stage." Greene calls him a "Shake-scene." Fuller refers to the "warlike sound of his surname, whence some may conjecture him of a military extraction.—Hasti-vibrans, or Shake-speare;" and finally the coat-of-arms devised for him by the Herald's office bears the crest of a falcon brandishing a spear. These things look certainly as if Spenser was aiming at the same mark when he speaks of a poet whose Muse does like himself heretically sound. Notice further the difference between the kind of praise now bestowed and that given three years before. Then the qualities spoken of were the "honey" and the "nectar," the "joy" and the "jolly merriment." Now, his Muse is "full of high thoughts" and "invention." Thus, two very divergent ages are explained by a comparison of dates. In 1591, Shakespeare had written little, if any thing, but comedy, with possibly the Venus and Adonis, and some of his sugred sonnets among his friends. But now, in 1594, three at least of his great tragedies had been put upon the stage, namely, Richard II., Richard III., and Romeo and Juliet. Well then might Spenser speak of the heroic sound of his name and of his high thoughts' invention.

Shakespear's own admiration for the poet-lauréat, found expression in a remarkable sonnet, published in the Passionate Pilgrimage, and addressed to a friend who was equally an admirer of Dowland, a famous English musician of that day:

If music and sweet poetry agree,
And music and the sister and the brother,
Then must the love be great 'twixt thee and me,
Because thou lov'est the one, and I the other.
Dowland is dear, whose hands are never touch'd.
Upon the lute doth ravish human sense;
Spenser to me, whose deep conceit is such
As, passing all conceit, needs no defence.
Thou lovesst to hear the sweet melodious sound
That Phoebus' lute, the queen of music, makes;
And I in deep delight am chiefly drowned
When he himself to singing he betakes.
One god is god of both, as to us reason;
One knight loves both, and both in thee remain.

After Spenser, the next writer, chronologically, who refers to Shakespeare is Robert Greene. This occurs in a tract published in 1592. Greene was quite notorious in his day. He wrote chiefly for the stage, and was charged with various excesses in private life. In a fit of repentance, near the close of his life, he wrote a tract called A Groats' Worth of Wit; Bought with a Million of Repentance. It was addressed to "those gentlemen his quondam acquaintance who spend their wits in writing plays, and more particularly to Marlowe, Lodge, and Peele." He urges these writers to cease writing for the stage; to take warning from his experience; and, if nothing else would move them to be assured that the actors and the public were very unstable in their likes and their dislikes, and would soon abandon them for some new favorite. His words are: "Base-winded men, all three of you, if by my misery ye be not warned; for unto none of you, like [unto me, sought those burrs to cleave; those puppets [the actors] I mean, that speak from our mouths, there are additions; and when garnished in our colors. Is it not strange that I, to whom they all have been holding; is it not like you, to whom they all have been holding, shall [were ye in that case that I am now] be both at one of them forsaken? Yes, trust them not; for there is an upstart crow, beautified with our feathers, that with his Tyger's heart wrought in a Player's hide, supposes he is as well able to bombard out as the blanket of you; and being an absolute Johannes Factotum, is in his own conceit the only Shake-scene in a country."

Here Greene is in ill temper with some young upstart, who, at first only a player, has presumed to write also for the stage, and who is obviously supplanting Marlowe, Lodge, and Peele. From the date, 1592, and from what we know of the other dramatic writers then living, the new "upstart" could have been none other than Shakespeare, and this inference derives additional strength from the epithet which Greene gives him, "the only Shake-scene in a country."

Thus the great dramatist, now only twenty-eight years old, and only six years in London, is already beginning to supersede his predecessors and contemporaries, and to excite in consequence their jealousy and hatred. One of the epithets applied to him is especially justly and truly characterized by John do-everything, or, in good English idiom, a Jack-at-all-trades. Now the whole tenor of Shakespeare's writings, as well as all the traditions concerning his life, go to establish the conclusion that he was remarkable for his common sense and his practical talents. His transcendent genius did not prevent his attending to ordinary business in an ordinary way—did not hinder him from being shrewd at a bargain and thrifty in the management of affairs. It is easy to see that these qualities, in connection with his genius as a writer, would naturally give him in a short time the chief control of the theatre to which he was attached. The disparaging epithets of Greene mark the precise time (a critical point in the history of any rising man) when, from superior business talents as well as from superior genius, the actual management of affairs had gone into his hands, but his superiority had not yet been fully recognized. He was still one who could be taunted by his declining rivals as an "upstart,—one who imagined himself able to write as good blank verse as any of his contemporaries—one who was "in his own conceit the only Shake-scene in a country"—one who thought he could be writer, player, manager, and what not—in fact, a very "absolute Johannes Factotum."

Greene's Groats' Worth of Wit led incidentally this same year to a notice of Shakespeare by Henry Chettle, another dramatic writer of the period. Chettle had been instrumental in the publication of Greene's pamphlet, and finding that injustice had been done therein to some of the parties attacked, he published a tract of his own, called Kind-Hart's Dream, intended to make reparation. In it occurs the following passage, referring to Shakespeare: "Myself have seen his demeanor no less civil than he excellent in the quality [which] he professes; besides, divers of worship have reported his uprightness of dealing, which argues his honesty, and his facetious grace in writing, that approves his art." The character which Chettle here gives of Shakespeare is precisely that already suggested, namely, that he has a manly genius, possessed of good temper, thrust, and common sense.

I have dwelt a little upon these four passages, Spenser 1591, Greene and Chettle 1592, and Spenser again
1594, because they are the first of all, and because, obscure as they are in some respects, they yet show how early Shakespeare became a man of mark. The other instances will be quoted more briefly.

This same Henry Cheke a little later refers to Shakespeare again, under the name of Melicert, taking him to task for not sounding the praises of Elizabeth, at the time of her death.

Nor doth the silver-tongued Melicert
Drop from his honied cause one sable teare,
To morn her death that grace his deserted,
And to her lves open'd and her royal rest:
Shepherd, remember our Elizabeth,
And sing her rape, done by that Tarquin, Death.

Henry Williboe, an Oxford man, in a volume called Willobie, His Arise, published in 1594, the very year that the Lucrece was published, thus mentions the new poem:

Though Colliine have dearly brought
To high renowne, a lasting life,
And found—that most in vaine here sought
To have—a fair and constant wife,
Yet Terogynce plucked his glisterning grape,
And Shakespeare paints poore Lucrece rape.

Gabriel Harvey, who figured largely in those days as a literary critic, and who was much mixed up with the affairs of Spenser and Sidney, published in 1592 four letters “especially touching Robert Greene and other parties by him abused.” In the third letter is a paragraph addressed to one of the parties thus abused by Greene. The circumstances of the publication make it wellnigh certain that the person thus addressed was Shakespeare. The passage is so accepted by Dr. Ingleby, one of the most careful and exact of Shakespearean scholars. Harvey’s words are: “Good sweete Oraiture, be a devine poet indeede; and use heavenly eloquence indeede; and employ thy golden talent with amounting usance indeede; and with herculeall cantoes honour right vertue, and have brave valour indeede; as noble Sir Philip Sidney, and gentle Master Spenser have done, with immortal Fame; and I will bestow more complements of rare amplifications upon thee then ever any bestowed uppon thee; or this Tounge ever afforded.”

Six years later, 1598, Harvey wrote: “The younger sort take much delight in Shakespeare’s Venus and Adonis; but his Lucrece, and his tragedy of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, have it in them to please the wiser sort.”

Drayton, in his Matilda, also of 1594, gives the following allusion to the new poem:

Lucrece, of whom proud Rome hath boasted long,
Lately reviv’d to live another age,
And here arriv’d, and told of Tarquin’s wrong,
Her chaste denial, and the tyrant’s rage,
Arresting her passions on a sately stage,
She is remember’d, all forgetting me,
Yet I as fair and chaste as e’er was she.

In a work called Polimantia, 1595, the following expression occurs: “All praise the Lucrece of sweet Shakespeare.”

The Return from Parnassus, a play acted by the students of Cambridge, 1600, contains remarks on several contemporary poets—Spenser, Constable, Lodge, Daniel, Waton, Drayton, Davis, Marston, Marlowe, Shakespeare, and Churcyard. Of Shakespeare the following is said:

Who loves Adonis’ love or Lucrece’ ape.
Himself have seen her heart, all loving life;
Could but a graver subject him content.
Without love’s foolish, lazy languishment.

In the prose part of the play, the following dialogue occurs between the actors, Kemp and Burbage.

“Kemp. Why, here’s our fellow Shakespeare puts them all downe—aye, and Ben Jonson, too. O! that Ben Jonson is a pestilent fellow; he brought up Horace, giving the poets a pill; but our fellow Shake- speare hath given him a purge that made him bery his credit.

“Barbage. Its a shrewd fellow, indeed.”

John Weever, in his Book of Epigrams, composed in 1595, has a sonnet addressed

At Guilellum Shakespeare.

Hon-tong’d Shakespeare, when I saw thine issue,
Lascivious Venus to adopt them, and none other
Their rose-tainted features cloth’d in tissue,
Some heaven-born goddess said to be their mother.
Their rose-tainted goddess with his under-tress;
Faire fire-hot Venus charming him to love her;
With Lucretia, virgin like her dyes.
Froide just-stang Tarquinie, seeking still to prove her;
Romae, Richard, more whose names I know not.
Their sacred tongues and power-attractive beauty
Say they are saints, although that at they shew not.
For thousands vowe to them subjunctive duite:
They burn in love, thy children, Shakespeare bat the.
Go, wo thy Muse! more Nympheast brood beget them.

These various extracts, I may remark in passing, are quoted, not for their value as poetry, but for their value as evidence, and in this respect there seems no possibility of gainsaying their force.

In 1598, Richard Bawdfield writes:

“And Shakespeare, thou whose hony-flowing Vaine (‘Flesing the world, thy praises doth obtaine;
Whose Venus and whose Lucrece sweete and chaste
Thy name in fame’s immortal Booke have plac’d, Live ever you, at least in Fame live ever;
Well may the loodie dye, but Fame dies never.”

In this same year are other incidental notices, either of Shakespeare himself, or of some of his writings. But I must omit these notices in order to dwell more at length upon the most important of all, the testimony of Francis Meres. Meres was a clergyman, “Master of Arts in both universities,” “an approved good scholar,” and a compiler of school-books. His testimony is the more valuable both because of its fullness and explicitness, and because, from his very occlusion as a compiler, he would be more likely than almost any other kind of writer to be a reflector and representative of public opinion. Meres’s book, called Palladia Tamia, or Wit’s Treasury, was published in 1598. It was a copy of a school book, giving a brief account of the chief English poets, comparing them with the corresponding Greek, Latin, and Italian poets. In this work, after enumerating the great tragic poets of Greece and Rome, Meres says we have in English Marlowe, Peele, Watson, Kyd, Shakespeare, Drayton, Decker, Ben Jonson (the names are given in chronological order). Again, in like manner, our writers of comedy are given—Lodge, Gascoyne, Greene, Shakespeare, Nash, Heywood, etc. After quoting the Greek and Latin poets who had excelled in lyric poetry, he says, the best among our lyric poets are Spenser, Daniel, Drayton, Shakespeare, etc. In like manner, those famous for elegy are Surrey, Wyatt, Sidney, Raleigh, Dryer, Spenser, Daniel, Drayton, Shakespeare, and so on. Referring to the eepi monumentum of Horace, he says we live in English like enduring monuments in the works of Sidney, Daniel, Drayton, Shakespeare. He even quotes Shakespeare as one of those by whom the language had been improved: “The English tongue is mightily enriched and gorgeous incribed in rare ornaments and resplendent habiliments by sir Philip Sidney, Spenser, Daniel, Drayton, Warner, Shakespeare, Marlow, and Chapman.” Some of Meres’s particular expressions are remarkable. “As the rule of Euclid was thought to live in Pythagoras, so the sweete, wittie soul of Ovid lives in mellifluous and honey-tongued Shakespeare; witness his Venus and Adonis, his Lucrece, his sugred Sonnets among his private friends, &c."

"As Epicus Stolo said, that the Muses would speak with Plautus' tongue, if they would speak Latin; so I say, that the Muses would speak with Shakespeare's fine-filed phrase, if they would speak English."

"As Plautus and Seneca are accounted the best for Comedy and Tragedy among the Latins, so Shakespeare among ye English is the most excellent in both kinds for the stage; for Comedy, witness his Gittlena of Verona, his Errors, his Love's labour's lost, his Love's labour's wonne, his Malamnmer'-night dreams, and his Merchant of Venice; for Tragedy, his Richard the 2, Richard the 3, Henry the 4, King John, Titus Andronicus, and his Romeo and Juliet."

Here, then, in 1598, we have Shakespeare, after a career of only twelve years in the metropolis, quoted publicly in a text-book as among the great English authors whose works alone are a monument "are perpetnias;" his name placed conspicuously in four successive lists of writers who have distinguished themselves severally in Comic, Tragic, Lyric, and Elegiac poetry, and in still another list of those who by the did this Francis Meres in 1598? All this, too, be it remembered, when he was, as it were, only at the beginning of his career, and with eighteen years of the most productive and most conspicuous part of his life still before him. Was either Longfellow or Tennyson, with all the prestige of university honors and influence, and with all the machinery of modern book-making and advertising, better known or more fully recognized at the age of thirty-eight than was Shakespeare at that age? Could either of them at that age have been ranked as best of English writers, in each of the four classes of Lyric, Elegiac, Comic, and Tragic verse—or, in each of these styles, have been safely placed in comparison with the greatest of the Virgilian and Roman writers? Ben Jonson, who was as competent to speak of Shakespeare as would be Longfellow to speak of Tennyson, —even more competent, for Jonson and Shakespeare were intimately acquainted personally, wrote for the same stage, lived in the same city, dined at the same tavern, where they had those famous "wit-combats" of which Fuller speaks—Jonson, in the lines prefixed to the first Folio, speaks of Shakespeare in terms so proudly affectionate, that it is the most exalted eulogy,—speaks not only of his unparalleled genius, but of his consummate art; and extols him as surpassing, not only Chaucer, Spencer, Marlowe, and all other English writers, but even the ancients whom Ben worshipped,—surpassing even Aristophanes, Terence, and Plautus in comedy, Archilochus, Euripides, and Sophocles in tragedy.

The strange hallucination that Shakespeare was unknown among his contemporaries may have come in this way. Soon after his death, all stage-plays were at a discount under the sway of the Puritans. On the overthrow of the Commonwealth and the incoming of the Stuarts, French notions of taste were in the ascendant. The stage was indeed revived, but it was that of France, not the good old English drama. Then again with William of Orange and Queen Anne came the reign of Classicism. And so, for one cause and another, for a full century after the close of the great Elizabethan period, Shakespeare, it is admitted, was under a cloud. Even so late as 1793, Stevens, one of the great Shakespearean editors of the last century, could write of the Sacred Sonnets, whose praises the men of Shakespeare's own day could never tire of sounding, that it was not within the omnipotence of an Act of Parliament to compel people to read them, and he actually refused to print them in his extended edition of Shakespeare's works, regarding those wonderful lyrics as so much worthless rubbish. "We have not reprinted the Sonnets, etc., because the strongest Act of Parliament that could be framed would fail to compel readers into their service."

In his own day, however, Shakespeare was the acknowledged sun of the literary firmament. We of the present century have but revived and raised somewhat the estimate in which the English people held him two hundred and fifty years ago.

Before dismissing this topic, it is worth while to notice, in these many references to Shakespeare by his contemporaries, how unhappily he is mentioned in terms of affection. This would seem, as before observed, to indicate the possession on his part of an amiable and obliging disposition, and gives plausibility to the tradition handed down by Aubrey, showing the origin of the friendship between Shakespeare and Ben Jonson. "His acquaintance with Ben Jonson," says Aubrey, "began with a remarkable piece of humanity and good nature. Mr. Jonson, who was at that time altogether unknown to the world, had offer'd one of his plays to the players, in order to have it acted; and the persons into whose hands it was put, after having turn'd it by the solemn assent of the players, were just upon returning it to him with an ill-natur'd answer, that it would be of no service to their company, when Shakespeare luckily cast his eye upon it, and found something so well in it, as to engage him first to read it through, and afterwards to recommend Mr. Jonson and his writings to the publick.

We no longer "damn him with faint praise," after the fashion of the time of Alex. Pope, nor give him half-hearted, patronizing commendations, after the fashion of the time of Dr. Sam. Johnson, but rather, like the renowned scholar and dramatist of Shakespeare's own day, look up to him with admiring, almost adoring wonder, as the most exalted of the Dil Majores of the dramatic art, the very Jupiter Olympus of the poetic pantheon, in whose presence the greatest even of the great Greek and Roman masters are content to stand at a respectful distance! Such was the trumpet-note of praise sounded by Bare Bon Jonson in Shakespeare's own day, two centuries and a half ago. Have we even at this day gone much beyond it?

I have not thus far referred to the Shakespeare-Bacon theory. The whole question seems to me to be contained in a nutshell. Stripped of verbiage, it is simply this: could the Creator who gave the world Dante and Homer have made a man of equal or even greater genius in Stratford-upon-Avon? Granted the genius, and all the other conditions of the problem are easy enough. Whoever had the genius to conceive these plays, would, in Shakespeare's surroundings, have had all the needed opportunities for education and acquired knowledge exhibited in the plays. The advocates of the Bacon theory quietly assume, in the face of all the accumulated evidence to the contrary, that Shakespeare was without education and without the means of acquiring knowledge.

They go back to the old exploded notion of Queen Anne's day, that Shakespeare was a man of clownish ignorance, and that the plays, if by him, were the product of an inspired idiot. I could understand the argument, if applied to a man in the condition of John Bunyan. But Shakespeare was a man of letters. He had ample means of being such, and he was accepted as such by the men of letters with whom he lived in familiar, daily intercourse. Besides, it is little less than monstrous to suppose that the greatest poetry of all time, and such an immense body of it, was the product of one whose acknowledged writings, enormous likewise in quantity, show no evidence of especial poetic gifts. Bacon's genius lay in the domain of science and philosophy, not of song, the few poor specimens of verse he has given only showing how much he was out of his element in that species of composition. We might as well suppose Aristotle capable of writing the Iliad, Wickliffe the Canterbury Tales, John Hampden the Paradise Lost, or John Stuart Mill the Idylls of the King, as suspect the author of the Novum Organum capable of the Midsummer-Night's Dream, Lear, Hamlet, Romeo and Juliet, and Macbeth.

If these wondrous creations were not by the Bard of Avon, assuredly they were not by the author of Insectorum Magna and De Augmentis Scientiarum. William Shakespeare Shakespeare's Signature.

CHAPTER XIII.

RELATIONS OF SHAKESPEARE AND HIS COMPANY TO QUEEN ELIZABETH AND KING JAMES.

The company to which Shakespeare belonged was under the patronage of Hunsdon, the Lord Chamberlain, a kinsman and favorite of Queen Elizabeth, who had given the Lord Chamberlain use of the splendid palace of Somerset House, in which palace, it can hardly be doubted, the Chamberlain's company often played for the amusement of the Queen and Court. Shakespeare's plays, and Shakespeare himself, were well known to Queen Elizabeth. Indeed, one of the best authenticated traditions in regard to him is that the comedy of the Merry Wives of Windsor was written at her express suggestion. The refraining of Shakespeare from adulation, considering how grateful it was to the ears of the royal maids, speaks also trumpet-tongued for his manly independence. Blue eyes, blonde complexion, and golden hair, all predicable of Elizabeth herself, had become, by a sort of legal presumption, the only types of female loveliness. Yet in the face of this, the dramatist has the courage, perhaps, considering the imperious temper of the Queen, we might call it the audacity, to admire a regular brunette: He thus writes to some sweetheart:

Thine eyes I love, and they, as pitying me, Knowing thy heart torment's me with disdain, Have put on black, and loving mourners be, Looking with pretty ruth upon my pain. And truly not the morning sun of heaven Better becomes the grey cheeks of the East, Nor that full star that ushers in the even. Both hate the gory cloud in solace blue. As these two mourning eyes become thy face: O let it then as well bewear thy heart. To mourn for me, since mourning doth thee grace, And suit thy pity like in every part. Then will I swear beauty herself is black And all they feel that thy complexion lack.

Sonnet cxxxii.

Spenser, or Sidney, or Raleigh, would as soon have cut off his right hand as to express admiration for such a woman.

Shakespeare, in this as in many other matters, was wiser than his time; he well knew that in the age to come his one dedicated alliance to the Maiden Queen, in the passage of the Midsummer-Night's Dream, already quoted, would be counted of greater worth than all the open flatteries poured out by his contemporaries with such lavish profusion.

Elizabeth was fond of theatrical exhibitions, and it was probably in consequence of this inclination of hers that the play-houses, which at different times, under the influence of the Puritan party, were ordered to be closed by the authorities of the city of London, were yet enabled to continue their performances, with little interruption, to the close of her reign.

On the accession of James, the Puritan party renewed their efforts to suppress the play-houses, and at first met with some success; but soon after reaching London, the new monarch changed his mind and took the Lord Chamberlain's Players (Shakespeare's company) under his own protection, allowing them henceforth to be called the King's Players, and giving them a royal license with special privileges. The date of this license is 1603, and the name of the players, as given in it, are Fletcher, Shakespeare, Burbage, Philips, Heninge, Condell, Sly, Armin, Cowley,—nine, Shakespeare being second on the list. We note also, that in a list of the comedians who represented the dramatis persona at the performance of Ben Jonson's Every Man in His Humor, at the Blackfriars, in 1600, Shakespeare's name heads the list.
CHAPTER XIV.

SHAKESPEARE'S PECUNIARY AFFAIRS — HIS EXTRAORDINARY BUSINESS THRIFT — ACCUMULATION OF PROPERTY AT STRATFORD — AMBITION TO BE A RETIRED COUNTRY GENTLEMAN — EVIDENCES OF HIS TACT IN BUSINESS MANAGEMENT — EVIDENCES OF HIS KINDLY DISPOSITION AND CONSOLATORY MANNERS.

THERE are other evidences of Shakespeare's prosperity besides those drawn from the annals of the Blackfriars and the Globe. In 1596, John Shakespeare and wife recovered by law, evidently by the aid of money received from London, the estate of Ashiab, the marriage portion of William's mother, which had been alienated during the period of the father's pecuniary misfortunes. In 1596, again, the grant of arms to John Shakespeare by the herald's office was consummated evidently through influence put forth in London. In 1597, the poet bought the principal dwelling-house in Stratford, an old mansion formerly belonging to the Clotop family, and called the Great House, Shakespeare, on acquiring this property, fitted it up for his own residence, and changed its name to the New Place.

The first occasion, apparently, on which this company played before King James was when the Earl of Pembroke, Dec. 2d, 1603, gave, at his seat at Wilton, a great entertainment to the King. An entry of the fiscal accounts of that date show that £30 (== £150) was paid on that occasion to John Heminge, "on behalf of his Majesty's Players of the Globe," to perform at the festival before the King; and we know from another source that both Pembroke, who gave the entertainment, and his brother, the Earl of Montgomery, were great admirers and favorers of Shakespeare.

Ben Jonson speaks expressly of the favor with which both Elizabeth and James regarded Shakespeare:

"Those flights upon the banks of Thames, \[That so did take Eliza and our James.\"

There are two traditions on this subject which it may be well to notice here. The first is that on one occasion, during the progress of the play, her Majesty purposely dropped her glove in such a way as to oblige the poet to stop his acting and pick it up,—which he did, saying (as a king, in character),

"And though now bent on this high embassy, yet steep we to take up our cousin's glove."

The other tradition, pretty well authenticated, is that "King James I. was pleased with his own hand to write an amicable letter to Mr. Shakespeare." John Davies, of Hereford, a contemporary poet, seems to have thought the dramatist not unworthy of such royal companionship. In a poem, The Source of Folly, 1607, Davies says:

To our English Terence, Mr. Will. Shakespeare.

Some say, good Will, which I, in sport, do sing,
Hadst thou not plaid some kingly parts in sport? Thou hadst bin a companion for a king.
And been a king among the meaner sort:
Some others raile; but, raile as they think fit,
Thou hast no raying, but a raying will:
And honestly thou sow'st, which they do reape.
So, to increase their stocke, which they do keep.

From a document dated 24 Jan., 1597-8, we learn that Shakespeare's influence with Lord Treasurer Burleigh is invoked by the Stratford burgesses, to aid them in getting from the government some abatement of taxes, as well as a portion of the government grant for the relief of certain cities and towns that had been injured by the plague. In the same document we learn that "he is willing to disburse some money on some odd yard land or other at Shottery," the birthplace and early home of his youthful sweetheart, Anne Hathaway. In Feb., 1598, in an inventory of corn and malt in Stratford, taken in apprehension of scarcity, William Shakespeare is entered as possessing ten quarters, being the third largest holder in his ward. In this year also we find him selling a load of stone to the corporation of Stratford. In October of the same year he is assessed in the parish of St. Helen's, Bishopsgate, showing him to be a property holder in London, his rates being 13s. 4d. In this same month, too, Richard Quiney of Stratford, [father of the Quiney who afterwards married Shakespeare's youngest daughter,] writes to his "loving good friend and countryman, Mr. William Shakspeare," in asking the loan of £30,—shows that the poet was not only a property holder but a money-lender. Four years later, 1602, Shakespeare, for and in consideration of the sum of £320 of current English money, purchased 107 acres of arable land in the parish of old Stratford, the negotiation being conducted by his brother Gilbert. Later in the same year he bought a house in Walker Street, near New Place, Stratford; and later still, for the sum of £60 (£1500), "one messuage, two orchards, two gardens, and two barns, with their appurtenances." Three years later, 1605, he made his largest purchase, buying the unexpired lease of a portion of the tithes of Stratford, Old Stratford, Bischopton, and Welcombe, for the sum of £410. Shakespeare's annual income from these tithes, as we learn from another document, was £130 (£6900 now). Later still, 1612, he bought a house, with ground attached, near the Blackfriars Theatre, London, for the sum of £140. We find him also, 1604, bringing an action against Philip Rogers, in the Court of Stratford, for £1 15s. 10d., being the price of malt sold to him at different times; and, again, 1609, instituting process for £50 debt and 24s. damages and costs, against John Addenbrock of Stratford,—all these things showing clearly that "poetry and action did make the man of genius negligent in matters of business.

Now, putting together these various facts, we find that the dramatist was steadily advancing in fortune as well as in fame, and that, at the end of twenty years from the time of his going to London, he had, by a steady pursuit of his profession, risen to be a man of mark in the theatrical world. Every step in his history, so far as we are able to trace it, shows that he gained his success, not by sudden and capricious flights of genius, but by hard work and persevering industry. As his writings show him to have been one of the greatest of geniuses, so his life shows him to have been one of the most industrious and methodical of workers. He chose one profession; he pursued it without intermission for a period of thirty years; he pursued it with the connection with the same company; he pursued it in the same place. He rose, not by a bound, in consequence of some particular performance dashed off in a heat and a hurry, which is the vulgar idea of genius, but step by step, year by year, slowly, steadily, surely, triumphantly. He produced, in the twenty-five years devoted mainly to authorship, no less than thirty-seven great plays, or an average of one and a half plays a year; the latest plays over the best, each succeeding year showing a higher style of workmanship, an ever-growing productiveness and power. He is another proof, if any were needed, that one would not go far astray in defining genius to be an enormous capacity for labor, or, as Longfellow puts it, “the infinite capacity of taking trouble.”

CHAPTER XV.
PROBABLE PERIOD OF HIS WITHDRAWAL FROM THE STAGE AND FROM LONDON—STATE OF HIS AFFAIRS AND OF HIS FAMILY AT THE TIME OF HIS RETIREMENT.

It is not certainly known at what time Shakespeare ceased to appear on the stage as an actor. The year 1604, however, is generally regarded as the probable time. The growing importance and popularity of his plays and his continued increase in wealth make it improbable that he continued to act later than the date named. The last record of his name in the company of the King’s Players is on April 9, 1604, when he stands second on the list, the only one above him being Burbage, who had for a long time stood at the head of his profession as an actor. The general belief is that Shakespeare ceased to appear as a player soon after this, in other words, when he was forty years old, and had been eighteen years in London. This may be considered as the culminating point in his personal history.

I have already expressed the opinion that Shakespeare possessed an unusual degree of common sense, that he was amiable, condolatory, and prudent; in short, that he had that class of qualities which fit a man for business, while they are vulgarly thought to be incompatible with genius. This is a class of qualities which it is difficult to show. Of indiscretion the proofs are generally positive and tangible. But prudence and discretion in the management of affairs must be established by negative evidence. It is certainly, however, no unmeaning circumstance that during the whole period that Shakespeare exercised a controlling influence in the theatrical company, its affairs were managed, not only with thrift, but without those quarrels and jars for which the profession in all ages has been notorious, and also without those causes of offence which the other theatres were perpetually giving to particular individuals or classes, civil, political, or religious. It is noticable also that almost immediately after Shakespeare’s withdrawal from the management, the company were beset with difficulties, and numerous complaints were lodged against them for offences against morals, manners, or taste. Thus, December, 1604, John Chamberlain writes of a certain tragedy by the King’s Players, in which kings and princes are brought upon the stage, “I hear that some great counsellors are much displeased with it, and so it is thought it shall be forbidden.” Again, 1606, the Mayor of London complains that “Kenape, Arany, and others, at the Blackfriars, have not forborne to bring upon their stage one or more of the worshipful Aldermen of the City of London, to their great scandal, and the lessening of their authority.” Again, in 1606, it is complained that they brought upon the stage the Queen of France in a manner very offensive to the French ambassador; also, “They brought forward their own king [James] and all his favorites in a very strange fashion; they made him curse and swear, because he had been robbed of a bird, and beat a gentleman because he had called off the hounds from the scent. They represent him as drunk every day.” In consequence of these irregularities, three of the players were arrested, and the performances were prohibited. These indiscretions and difficulties among the King’s Players, occurring in quick succession after Shakespeare had ceased to be of the company, speak trumpet-tongued to those which did not occur during the eighteen years that he was in the management.

After ceasing to be an actor, Shakespeare’s connection with the stage was that only of a writer of plays, and this connection he continued to the end of his life. This, however, did not necessarily require his residence in London. Even while living in London, he was wont, according to Aubrey, “to go to his native county once a year.” Various documents show that he early contemplated the project, which he finally executed, of retiring from London, to spend the close of life in his native village. We have already seen how regularly, from year to year, he invested in and around Stratford the money accumulated from his professional labors. At least seven years before he ceased being an actor, and fifteen years before retiring from London, he had become a property-holder in his native town. The village tradition, in the generation after his death, was that Shakespeare, “in his elder days, lived at Stratford, and supplied the stage with two plays every year, and for it had an allowance so large that he spent at the rate of £1,000 a year.” This, doubtless, is an exaggeration, certainly as to the amount of money spent. At the same time, the tradition obviously had some foundation in truth. He had already, some years before, bought the largest and finest residence in Stratford, that built by Sir Hugh Clopton in the reign of Henry VII. and Known as “The Great House,” and afterwards as “The New Place;” and there is good reason for believing that his style of living there was that of a “fine old English gentleman, all of the olden time.”

The time when Shakespeare retired entirely from London is not known. The most probable conjecture is that which places it in 1612, when he was forty-eight years old, and after a city life of twenty-six years. His father, mother, and two younger brothers were now dead. Gilbert, however, the brother next younger than William, was still living. His sister Joan had been married to a Mr. Hart, of Stratford, and was also still living, as were also her husband and several children. His wife also, now fifty-six years old, was still living. His oldest daughter, Susanna, had been married some five years before to an eminent physician of Stratford, Dr. John Hall, and had one child four years old. His youngest daughter, not long after to be married to Thomas Quinney, vintner and wine merchant of Stratford, was still at home. It is not at all unlikely that both daughters, with the son-in-law and the grandchild, all lived together in the Great House, and that the other house belonging to him in the village was occupied by his brother Gilbert, who had looked after the poet's property during his absence in London.

When, therefore, the great dramatist retired from the metropolis, crowned with honor and laden with wealth, he was not in the condition of most even successful adventurers, who after a life of distant toil and struggle seek to spend its close among the green fields which had gladdened their eyes in childhood. They return ordinarily too late, when their own faculties of enjoyment are exhausted, and most of the friends of childhood are gone. Shakespeare, in 1612, was still in the prime of life and in the full vigor of his faculties. He had about him a large family circle, and children and children's children were around his hearth-stone. The popular tradition, minute documentary evidence, his whole recorded career, his whole character, go to show that his last days were eminently peaceful and serene. The thought contained in the 146th Sonnet, the nearest approach we have in any of his writings to an expression of his own personal feelings on the subject of religion, might well befit this period of his life, though written some years earlier:

Poor soul, the centre of my sinful earth,
Legg'd with these powers that thee array
With doleful countenance, and heavy lay
Painting thy outward walls so costly gay?

Why so large cost, having so short a lease?

Dead thou upon thy fading mansion spend?

Shall worms inheritors of this excess?

Eat up thy charge? Is this thy body's end?

CHAPTER XVI.

A SERENE SUNSET—THE PORTRAITS OF SHAKESPEARE.

SHAKESPEARE died, after a short illness, April 23, 1616, aged exactly fifty-two. During the quarter of a century that he had been embarked upon the great ocean of metropolitan life, his fame had been so vexed and agitated. His profession was one peculiarly fitted to produce disquiet and perturbation. But agitation, while it upturns and dislodges the feeble plant, makes the hardy to send its roots more deeply and firmly into the soil. The soul that is well balanced acquires only additional composure and self-possession from conflict. The conflict of life in which Shakespeare had been engaged had not only been eminently successful as to all external circumstances and relations, but had left him calm, contented, and peaceful within. From a meridian of intense activity and splendor, he went, like Chaucer before him, gracefully and composedly to his long repose:

So fades a summer's cloud away,

Thus sinks the star when storms are o'er,

So gently shuts the evening day,

So dies a wave along the shore.

Of the portraits of Shakespeare there are three at least which have good evidence of being taken from life. These are the Stratford bust, the Droeshout engraving, and the oil painting known as the Chandos portrait.

The bust was made apparently from a cast of the features taken after death, and was executed soon after that event; how soon we do not know, but certainly before 1623, for it is referred to in the First Folio, published in that year. Shakespeare is buried in the church of Stratford-upon-Avon, near the west end of the chancel, and there is a slab over his tomb, with the quaint inscription so often referred to, and said to have been written by Shakespeare himself:

Good friend for Jesus sake forbeare

To dig the dust enclosed here:

Blesse, be ye then ye sparest the stones,

And cant ye he bey moves my bones.

To the right and left of him in the chancel, are the tombs of several other members of his family: his wife, his oldest daughter Susanna, his son-in-law, Dr. Hall, and Thomas Nash, who married his grand-daughter Elizabeth. On the north wall of the chancel, and facing these tombs, and at an elevation of a little more than five feet, is an ornamental niche or frame-work of stone, containing the bust already mentioned, nearly lifesize and extending down to the middle of the person. The poet is represented sitting, as if in the act of composition, his hands resting on a cushion, one holding a pen, the other a sheet of paper, while his eyes are looking not at his work but straight forward towards the spectator. The hands and face are of flesh color, the eyes a light hazel, the hair and beard auburn; the doublet or cloak was scarlet, and covered with a loose black gown without sleeves; the upper part of the cushion was green, the under part crimson, and the tassels gilt. This Stratford bust is of great value, as having been made so early, and as having in all its features a sufficient and authentic likeness.

As a work of art, however, it is open to obvious criticisms. The skull has the smoothness and roundness of a boy’s marble, and about as much individuality of expression. The eyes and eyebrows are undesirably contracted, the nose has evidently been shortened by an accident of the chisel, the cheeks are puffy and spiritless, the moustaches are curled up in a manner never found except in some city naughty, the collar looks like two pieces of block-tin bent over, and finally the expression of the eyes, so far as they have any expression, is simply that of easy, well-conditioned good nature, not overburdened with sense or intellect.

In conjunction with this bust should be taken the portrait lately discovered, and known as the Stratford portrait. It is the property of the town, and is exhibited among the other curiosities at the Shakespeare House. No one who has seen the bust can look upon the picture without being satisfied at the first glance that the two are connected. But was the picture made from the bust, or the bust from the picture? Stratford people strongly insist on the latter, believing firmly that the picture was taken from life, and was the original of the bust. Critics and scholars outside of Stratford take, for the most part, the opposite view. Whichever theory is true, the picture without doubt is of great value, and is wisely placed for perpetual keeping in the same place as the bust to which it is so closely connected.

Next to the Stratford bust in the matter of authenticity as a portrait of Shakespeare, is the engraving by Martin Droeshout prefixed to the first folio edition of the plays, that of 1623, generally known as the Droeshout portrait. What portrait was used by him in making this engraving of Shakespeare is entirely a matter of conjecture. The probability is that it was some coarse daub by the actor Burbage, who had some pretensions as a painter, and who would be very likely to make a picture of his distinguished fellow-actor. If such a picture were hanging somewhere about the theatre, nothing would be more natural than for the actors, Heminges and Condell, in bringing out an edition of their friends’ plays, to use for the engraving this picture with which they were familiar. All this, however, is pure conjecture. What more concerns us is to know that Ben Jonson has testified in the strongest manner to the correctness of the likeness. His words, printed on the page facing the engraving, are as follows:

This Figure, that thou here seest put,
It was for gentle Shakespeare cut;
Wherein the Grauer had a strife
With Nature, to out-do the life;
O, could he but have drawn his wit
As well in Brass as he hath hit
His face; the Print would then surpass
All, that ever writ in brass.
But, since he cannot, Reader, looks
Not on his Picture, but his Bookes.

That the original from which the engraving was made must have been poor and bald as a work of art is manifest on the slightest inspection. This, however, is by no means incompatible with its having been a faithful likeness. The work of the engraver corresponds in this respect to the work of the painter. The engraving is to the last degree hard and stiff; it evidently is the work of one whose aim was to make a likeness rather than a work of art.

In comparing the face and head thus presented with those of the bust, we observe that while there are great differences, both in detail and in the general impression, it is easy to see the same man underlying both. There is the great distance between the eyes and the amplitude of forehead, so noticeable in all the likenesses. The flesh of the face is not so full and puffy as in the bust. The nose, not chopped off as in the bust, is however as straight as a stick, instead of having that delicate aquiline formation observable in one portrait which I shall show you. The beard is shaved from the chin, but a few hairs are sprouting on the under lip, and there is a very light moustache. The forehead is high and bold, as in all the portraits, and the hair hangs in long, smooth locks over the ears and the back of the head. The costume is evidently some theatrical display put on for the occasion and snacking very much of the stage-tailor. There is a doublet buttoned up to the chin, and a plated lawn ruff standing out all round in a most uncomfortable and un graceful position, and apparently stiffened in the edges and elsewhere with wire. One feature, the most noticeable of all, is the projection of the forehead. In all the other likenesses, without exception, the forehead, with its noble expanse, recoils gradually and evenly. But in the Droeshout engraving, the forehead is like some jutting cliff, projecting over, almost overhanging, the brow, in a way that is hardly less than monstrous. This misshapen character of the forehead may without difficulty be accepted, not as a part of the likeness of the poet, but as part of the engraver’s etching of the engraver. It certainly looks not unlike a huge goitre transferred from the throat to the brow.

Of the painted likenesses of Shakespeare none ranks so high as that known as the Chandos portrait. The history of the picture is tolerably complete. It belonged originally to John Taylor, painter, brother of Joseph Taylor, a player in Shakespeare’s company. It was left by will to Taylor by Sir William Davenant. From Davenant it passed in 1668 to John Otway, from him to Betterton the actor, from Betterton to Mrs. Barry, from Mrs. Barry, through two other hands, to the Duke of Chandos, from whom it takes its name. It was finally bought in 1848, at public sale, by the Earl of Ellesmere, and by him presented in 1856 to the Na-breadth of forehead, that is to be seen in the Droeshout, though the forehead is still ample and strikingly noble. There is more general softness than in any of the other portraits. The picture is decidedly artistic, and the artist apparently, to some extent, sacrificed literal likeness to artistic effect. The complexion is dark; there is a pinkishness of color about the eyelids; the lips are inclined to be full and sensual; the ear that is visible is tricked out with a ring; the hair, a dark auburn, that in the Droeshout is plaited and smoothed down, hangs here in easy, unstudied profusion on the sides and back of the head, while most of the lower part of the face is covered with a soft beard of the same color. No lines of deep thought are in the face, no furrows on the brow. There is an equal show of softness, almost of effeminacy, in the costume. The dress, so far as it can be made out, is of black satin, and the collar is of fine plain lawn, folding over easily but simply.

At the first glance, on looking at the Chandos portrait and then at the Droeshout, one can hardly believe them to be representations of the same person. Yet, on placing them side by side, and deliberately tracing the lines of each, after the other, the substantial identity of the two is clearly established.

In addition to the three portraits which I have named, to wit, the Stratford bust, the Droeshout engraving, and the Chandos painting, there are many others of varying authority and celebrity. Of these I shall mention but two, the Terra-Cotta bust, and the German Death-Mask.

In 1845, in tearing down an old tea-warehouse in London, the foundations were laid bare of the famous Duke's theatre, built by Sir William Davenant, in 1662, in Lincoln's Inn Fields. Among the curious articles thus brought to light was a beautiful terra-cotta bust, which on examination proved to be beyond question a likeness of Shakespeare, yet having a character of its own quite independent of all the other acknowledged likenesses, and carrying us back to within at least forty-six years from the time of his death. This bust, after having been for some years in possession of its finders, Mr. Clift and his distinguished son-in-law, Prof. Owen, of the British Museum, was finally bought by the Duke of Devonshire, and by him presented to the Garrick Club of London, in whose possession it now is. The work is highly artistic in its style, and in the position of the head and person, and in the character and arrangement of the costume. It has the refinement of the Chandos painting without its effeminacy, and bears intellectual traces in the lines of the face, but not so massive or robust as the Droeshout engraving. It remains to say a few words of the German Death-Mask. The history of its discovery, which is somewhat curious, will be given as briefly as possible.

Count Francis von Kesselstadt, who died at Mayence, in 1649, the last of his line, had a valuable collection of curiosities and works of art, which had been for several generations in possession of the family, and which at his death were sold at auction in Mayence. Among the articles then sold was a small oil painting, which is known to have been in the possession of the family for more than a century, and which in the family traditions was invariably regarded as a portrait of Shakespeare. It bore indeed an inscription to that effect, Den Traditionen nach, Shakespeare. The picture came, in 1847, into the possession of Ludwig Becker, court painter of Dartmouth, and after his death into the hands of his brother, the present possessor, Dr. Ernst Becker, private secretary of the Princess Alice of Dartmouth. It represents its subject as lying in state after death, on a bier, with a wreath round the head, covering in part the baldness of the crown, and with a candlestick, and the date 1637, dimly seen in the background. From certain peculiarities in its appearance, Mr. Becker and other artists and antiquaries who were consulted, came to the conclusion that it had been painted from a death-mask, and he accordingly wrote about making inquiries on the subject. He first found that a plaster of Paris cast of some kind had been in the possession of the Kesselstadt family, but that on account of its melancholy appearance, it had received little consideration, and what had become of it no one seemed to know. After two years of fruitless search, he at length, in 1849, found the lost relic in a broker's shop in Mayence, among rags and articles of the meanest description. A comparison of this cast with the picture convinced Mr. Becker, on artistic grounds, that the two were related to each other, and were representations of the same person. On the back of the cast is an inscription, the letters and figures being in the style common to two centuries and a half ago, and the inscription having in all respects the appearance of being contemporary with the cast. An examination of the cast, while in England, by experts at the British Museum, showed that the inscription had been cut at the time the cast was made. A microscopic examination by Prof. Owen showed also that the hairs still adhering in the plaster were human hairs. The inscription on the back of the cast, in deeply cut letters, is as follows:

† A° Dn 1616

The cross is the usual mark in such inscriptions to signify "died." The letters A° Dn are the familiar abbreviations for Anno Domini. It is then clearly a cast of some one who died in 1616, the year of Shakespeare's death; it is also clear that it is not clearly connected with the Kesselstadt picture. This cast, then, of 1616, it is claimed, is the original from which was painted the picture of 1637, which picture is, according to the Kesselstadt tradition, a portrait of Shakespeare, and has in fact a very strong likeness to him.

Further, it is known that the Stratford bust, which
THE LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE.

Another impression, that one can hardly fail to receive from the mask, is the absence of any marked nationality in the features. The same thing is true of the well-known mask of Dante, in Florence; there is nothing Italian about it. So there is nothing distinctively English in this cast which claims to be the death-mask of Shakespeare. It gives us, as do his writings, the idea of a generic man,—a representative of the human race rather than of any distinct nationality. Another characteristic of the mask, equally marked, is the exceeding fineness and delicacy of the lines which make up the countenance. Grimm notices this peculiarity. No one, in fact, can fail to observe it who looks upon the mask.

While the mask differs, in one respect or another, from every recognized likeness of Shakespeare, there is no marked feature in any one of them which cannot be found in the mask. The variation in each case being easily explainable by the personal peculiarity, caprice, or unskilfulness of the particular artist. Thus the bust represents a round, full-faced man, decidedly puffy in the cheeks, while in the mask the face is thin and spare, and wears a thoughtful and rather melancholy look. Now it is well known that the flesh after death always falls away, giving this character to the face. So universal is this result that artists, in moulding a bust or painting a picture, from a death-mask, always make allowance for the falling away of the flesh, and fill it out to the supposed fulness of life, either from conjecture, or from some photograph, or other evidence of the ordinary condition of the face in health. Gerard Johnson, in undertaking to supply...
THE LIFE OF SHAKESPEARE.

This supposed falling off in the flesh, simply overdid the matter, and gave us a portly, jovial Englishman, instead of the thoughtful author of Hamlet and Lear. Underlying the superabundant fulness of flesh, however, the eye can easily trace in the bust all the essential lines of grace and thought to be seen in the mask.

The bust, as compared with the mask, is noticeable for the shortness of the nose, and for the extraordinary distance (one and a quarter inches) between the nose and the mouth. John Bell, the sculptor, asserted on anatomical grounds, that the maker of the bust had met with an accident at the point of the nose, and then, instead of doing his work over again, he had cut away enough of the lower part of the nose to give the feature the requisite amount of nostril. The bust certainly has the appearance of having undergone some such manipulation.

Another point, in which the mask and the bust differ, is the distance between the eyes, and also between the eyebrows. The unoccupied space in the centre of the forehead, between the beginning of the ridge of hair on one side and the beginning on the other, is larger than I recollect to have seen in any human being. A corresponding width exists between the two eyes, the distance from the centre of one eye to the centre of the other being two and three-quarter inches. This feature gives to the face, as seen in the mask, an amplitude of forehead that is truly majestic, and one, when looking at it, cannot help feeling, that he understands better than he did before, where those great creations of genius came from, that have so long filled him with amazement. The bust-maker, on the contrary, through inadvertence, or possibly mistaking certain accidental irregularities of the plaster for a continuation of the hair, has run the brows more closely together, and then, to maintain consistency, has in like manner brought the eyes more closely to each other, to make them correspond with the brows. The effect of the narrowing of the forehead is further heightened by the fulness and plumpness of the cheeks already described; and the result of the whole is to give us the impression of a merry, good-natured farmer, instead of the majestic thinker that looks at us from the mask. And yet we can see how, through inadvertence, misconception, and unskilfulness, the one might have grown out of the other.

The mask has met with a slight accident, the tip of the nose on one side having crumbled, or having been broken, marring a little the nostril on that side. The features as revealed by the mask have a manly beauty, of the intellectual type, that is very noticeable, and that has called forth spontaneous admiration from all who have looked upon it. There is also an indescribable expression of sadness that no one fails to notice. Mrs. Kemble, on seeing it, burst into tears. Grimm suggests in this connection another idea, namely, that in the first moments after death the disguises of life disappear, and the real character comes out in the countenance. "Though life," he says, "may prove deceptive on this point, not so death. It is as if, in the first moments after death had laid his sovereign and soothing hand upon man, the features res-anumed before our eyes, as final imprint, that which they enclosed as the actual gift of creative nature, namely, the very sum and substance of life. Strange resemblances, wonderful confirmations of character, reappear in these first moments after the last moments."

Some of the hairs of the moustache, eye-lashes, and beard are seen in the mask, having adhered to the original concave shell and been thence transferred to the convex mask. These hairs, on examination with a glass, are found to be of a reddish brown, or auburn, corresponding in this respect with what we know historically to have been the actual color of Shakespeare's hair. If the mask be what is claimed for it, we have here literally a bit of Shakespeare himself.

The eyes are closed, and the left eye shows a slight defect from some cause. The moustache is rather full, and in the shape now frequently worn, the ends hanging down diagonally to the right and left, so as to cover the corners of the mouth. The "tooth-maker," in the Stratford bust, has curled them up in a way which alters the whole expression of the face, giving it a gay and jaunty air. The rest of the beard is shaven, except a small tuft under the chin, of the cut now called an "imperial." The nose is thin, delicate, slightly aquiline, and the profile altogether is extraordinarily beautiful. The boldness of the outline, as one looks at the mask in profile, raises the expectation of a narrow face and head; instead of the broad, commanding face and forehead which meet the eye on turning the mask, and looking at it full in front.

The impression which these various likenesses make upon the mind of the observer, especially the impression made by the mask, is that of majesty and force: what a noble face this man had! how worthy of the noble thoughts to which he has given utterance! We feel instinctively like applying to him the words which he has himself put into the mouth of Hamlet, when addressing his father's portrait:

See what a grace was seated on this brow;
Hyperion's curls; the front of Jove himself;
An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;
A station like the herald Mercury,
New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;
A combination and a form indeed,
Where every god did seem to set his seal,
To give the world assurance of a man!
THE TEMPEST.

See Page 1.

In this comedy, Shakespeare is thought by able critics to have given us his most finished literary composition, and one in which the great poet has expressed his highest and serenest vein of life. One of his latest productions, first published in 1623, no source of the story of the play can with any certainty be pointed out. Malone supposed it to have been written in the year 1611, and probably produced in the latter part of 1612 for the first time. Shakespeare, who was fond of magic, makes admirable use of this art in The Tempest. Indeed, the serious parts of the drama are well suited for an opera.

SCENE.—The sea with a ship, afterwards an uninhabited isle.

In a cave hewn out of the solid rock lived the aged Prospero and his good and beautiful daughter, Miranda. This home was on an island, and thither Miranda had come with her father when she was hardly three years old. The cave in which they resided was divided into several cells, one of which, serving as Prospero's study, was provided with a number of books on astrology and magic, the knowledge of which Prospero had made exceedingly useful since his arrival on this island, which had been enchanted by the witch Sycorax, who died there shortly before his coming. Prospero by his art released many good spirits which the sorceress had imprisoned in the trunks of giant trees, because the spirits had refused to obey the wicked behests of the old enchantress. These liberated spirits were, after his coming, the instruments of the obedient will of Prospero. Ariel was the most prominent, who, gentle as he otherwise was, bore a deep-seated grudge towards the monster Caliban, the son of Sycorax. Caliban was found by Prospero during one of his excursions through the island, and was brought by him to the cave, where Caliban was taught to speak, but, owing to his perverted nature, little good and useful could he learn, and therefore was employed to do the more menial work, such as carrying wood and water. Ariel's duty was to compel the monster to perform these services. Ariel, invisible to all other eyes but those of Prospero, would often torment and harass Caliban. By the aid of these powerful spirits, Prospero ruled the winds and the waves of the sea. Thus he raised a violent storm, in the midst of which he showed his daughter a large ship, which he told her was full of human beings like themselves. Miranda begs her father to have mercy on their lives. The father soothes her agitation, and informs her that no person of the ship's company shall be hurt, that all transpiring would be done on behalf of his dear child. He now relates to her the cause of their inhabiting this island. "I was Prince of Milan," said he, "and you a Princess and only heir. My younger brother, whose name was Antonio, I intrusted with all my affairs of state, and devoted myself in retirement to profound study. My brother, deeming himself the duke, with the aid of the King of Naples, a powerful prince and deadly foe of mine, effected my downfall. Knowing that they durst not destroy us because of the strong love of my people, they carried us on board a ship, and when some storm out at sea Antonio forced both of us into a small boat without sail or mast. But a faithful lord of my court, named Gonzalo, had secretly hidden water and provisions on board, and also some invaluable books. Our food lasted until we landed on this island, and ever since my pleasure has been to instruct my darling child. This tempest I have raised so that by this accident the King of Naples and your treacherous uncle might be brought to this shore." Prospero having concluded his narrative touched Miranda with his magic wand, and she fell fast asleep. At this instant Ariel appears and gives a vivid account of the tempest to his master. Of the ship's crew not one soul has perished, and the vessel, invisible to them, is safely moored in the harbor. Mean time Ferdinand, the duke's son, reaching the island, meets Miranda. They mutually express surprise, and fall in love. Ariel, hidden by his master, now brings the king, Antonio, and the noble Gonzalo before Prospero, who embraces his brother and forgives him his past treachery. Prospero then dismisses Ariel from his service, buries his wand and books in the earth, vowing never henceforth to make use of the magic art. He then returns with the king, his brother, Gonzalo, Ferdinand, and Miranda to his native land, where, soon after their arrival, the mutinies of the hero and heroine, Ferdinand and Miranda, are celebrated, and "honor, riches, marriage-blessing" await them.

The characters in this play, while real and living, are conceived in a more abstract way, more as types, than in any other work of Shakespeare. Prospero is the embodiment of the highest wisdom and moral attainment; he is the great enchanter, and altogether the opposite of the vulgar magician. With the command over the elemental powers which study has brought to him, he possesses moral grandeur and command over himself. He sees through life, but does not refuse to take part in it. Gonzalo is human common sense incarnated. All that is meanness and most desirable appears in the wretched conspirators. Miranda is framed in the purest and simplest type of womanhood, while Ariel is a being of life and joy knowing no human affection; Caliban is his opposite, a creature of the passions and appetites. There is a beautiful spirit of reconciliation and forgiveness presiding over all, like a providence.
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.

See Page 16.

There was no edition of this comedy until 1623, but according to Malone as well as Chalmers, it was written in 1595. Though this play furnishes fewer occasions for music than some others, yet musicians are employed in the plot, as well as in the musical passages of Shakespeare in this play introduces all the musical terms in use in his time; as, a tune, a note, sing out, too sharp, too flat, harsh descant, the mean base, etc.

SCENE.—At times in the cities of Verona and Milan, or on the frontiers of Mantua.

Valentine and Proteus were two young gentlemen, who lived in the city of Verona, between whom a firm friendship subsisted. They pursued their studies together, and passed their leisure hours in each other's company, except when Proteus visited a lady whom he loved; and these visits to Julia and his passion for her, were the only points on which the two gentlemen differed. Valentine, who was not in love, often weared to hear his friend so incessantly talking of his Julia, and occasionally would taunt Proteus for his passion at her; but Valentine, on meeting Proteus, and informed him that they must separate for a time, as he was going to Milan. Proteus, however, tried to induce his friend not to leave him; but without avail. The two friends parted with vows of unalterable friendship. After his companion had left, Proteus wrote a letter to Julia, which he intrusted her maid Lucetta to deliver to her mistress. Julia, though loving Proteus as much as he did her, acts most inconsistently, refuses to accept the letter, and orders her maid to leave the room; but being curious to know the contents of the missive, calls Lucetta in again, and asks her what o'clock it is. Lucetta, who knew that her mistress rather desired to see the letter, without heeding the question, again presents the rejected epistle. Julia, incensed at this presumption on the part of her servant, tore the missive in pieces and threw them on the floor, ordering Lucetta out of the room.

When Julia found herself alone, she gathered the fragments up and began to piece them together, and made out the words, "love-wounded Proteus," but she could not make out the whole, and mortified at her own perversity in destroying such sweet and loving words, she pens a much kinder letter to Proteus than she had ever done before. While Proteus was in raptures over his letter, he was interrupted by the appearance of Antonio his father, who asks him what letter he was reading, and is told that it is one he received from his friend Valentine, at Milan. His father desires to read the news, but the son, greatly alarmed, assures him that there is nothing new, further than Valentine is well beloved by the Duke of Milan, who greatly benefits him with favors, and desires his friend Proteus to be the partner of his fortune. Antonio, deeming the advice of Valentine very worthy of attention, resolves to send the son at once to Milan, to spend some time there in the Duke of Milan's court. Proteus, knowing how peremptory was the will of his father, bid Julia a mournful farewell. They exchanged rings, and mutually promised to keep each other forever in remembrance. Proteus set out on his journey, and, arriving at Milan, found his friend Valentine really in favor with the duke; and moreover Valentine had become as ardent a lover as Proteus ever was. The lady of his love was Silvia, daughter of the duke, and his love was returned, though they concealed their affections from the duke, who intended his daughter should marry the count Thurio, whom Silvia despised. While these two rivals were, one day, on a visit to Silvia, the duke himself entered the room, and informed them of the arrival of Proteus, who soon thereafter made his entrance, and was introduced by his friend to the fair Silvia. Valentine imparted to him in confidence the whole history of his love, how carefully they had concealed it from the duke, even to using the name of Proteus for his father's consent, he had urged Silvia to leave the palace that very night and go with him to Mantua. Then he showed Proteus a ladder of ropes, by help of which he intended to aid Silvia to get out of one of the windows at dark. Upon hearing this confidential recital, strange to say, Proteus resolved to go and disclose the plan to the duke. The duke, after hearing the intelligence, resolved to frustrate Valentine's intentions, and by artifices makes Valentine betray the secret himself, and after upbraiding him for his ingratitude, banished him from the court and city of Milan. While Proteus was thus treacherously betraying his friend, Julia, who is inconsolable over the absence of her lover, resolved to dress herself and her maid Lucetta in men's clothes, and thus set out for Milan. Here she was hired by Proteus as a page, who, not knowing that she was Julia, sent her with letters and presents to Silvia—even sending her the very ring she gave him as a parting gift at Verona. Silvia, utterly amazed at this, rejects the suit of Proteus and refuses the ring, and Julia (disguised as the page Sebastian) praises Silvia and confides to her that Proteus had a love in Verona, who, as she knew, fondly loved him. Valentine, who hardly knew which course to pursue after his banishment, was set upon by robbers, who prevailed on him to become their servant, if they refused their offer, they would kill him. Valentine expected of them a promise never to outrage women or to rob the poor. Silvia, to avoid a marriage to Thurio, at last resolved to follow Valentine to Mantua, where she presumed him to have fled, and in company with Glamour, an old courtier, sets out on her journey, but on reaching the forest where Valentine and the banditti dwelt, was seized by one of the robbers, who intended to take her before their captain. Proteus, who had heard of Silvia's flight, pursued her to the forest, and still accompanied by Julia, his page in disguise, appears at this moment. While Proteus was rudely pressing Silvia to marry him, all were amazed by the sudden appearance of Valentine.

Julia, having thus proved, by her disguise of the page, the insincerity of her lover Proteus, produces in an affected manner the rings he has made presents of to herself and Silvia, and at the same time discovering her sex, exposes his duplicity to his second mistress. Proteus, who now realizes that the page Sebastian is no other than Julia, and thrilled with this proof of her constancy and true love for him, took again his own dear mistress and joyfully resigns all pretensions to Silvia to Valentine, who so well deserved her. Proteus and Valentine, enjoying that happy reconciliation, were surprised by the appearance of the Duke of Milan and Thurio, who came there in pursuit of Silvia. Thurio, when sternly rejected by Silvia, drew back in trepidation, leaving Valentine, his rival, in full possession of lady Silvia. The lovers and the duke return to Milan, where the nuptials are conducted with all due pomp and ceremony.

Shakespeare has in this play settled down in the field of Italian story, which is to bethe hereafter the scene of his greatest triumphs. The Two Gentlemen of Verona and its incidents were great favorites with Shake

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

See Page 35.

This is the only Shakespearean comedy which is entirely without serious characters and situations; nevertheless, it shows a masterful intention and demonstration — although jocously carried out — to prove the sacredness of wedlock. Queen Elizabeth, whose ear was perpetually assailed by fulsome panegyric, and who encouraged all sorts of silly shows, May games, and buffooneries, was not insensible to Shakespeare's talent; and having been much delighted with the character of Falstaff, as delineated in the first and second parts of Henry the Fourth, advised, or, perhaps we may rather say, commanded, the hard to portray the fat knight in love. Such is the tradition of the origin of the play, some incidents of which may have pleased the dauntless of Henry VIII., although they are somewhat repulsive to modern taste and delicacy. According to Chalmers, this comedy was written in 1596, while Malone assigns 1601 as the proper date.

SCENE.—At Windsor, or near to it.

Falstaff, the droll hero of the trilogy of Henry IV., and V., is unable, on account of his limited income, to defray the costs of his extravagant tastes. He hits upon the old idea, which is doubly amusing from his age and physical defects, of trying his luck in love, and thus replenish his empty purse. He writes love-letters to Mrs. Page and to Mrs. Ford simultaneously. His former wife, Anne, being angry at Falstaff, resolve to instigate the husbands of this shameful conduct. Both ladies having received letters of the same import, show them to each other, and mutually agree to retaliate upon Falstaff. As a mediator, they choose their talented friend Mrs. Quickly, who informs Falstaff that both ladies accept his suit, and expect to see him. Page has implicit confidence in his wife's fidelity, but Ford does not trust his wife, and disguising himself, assumes the name of Brook, asking Falstaff's assistance in his designs upon Mrs. Ford. He learns from Falstaff that this lady had promised to meet him. Just as the knight is about to enjoy the company of Mrs. Ford, Mrs. Page informs him that the injured husband is on his way hither, having half the inhabitants of Windsor at his back. The unlucky lover is hastily thrown into a clothes-basket and covered with a quantity of thirty lines. He is carried to a beech-tree and there thrust into a shallow ditch. But, despite this involuntary bath, Falstaff is not yet the wiser, and runs again into the trap set for him. In Ford's house he is found again by the jealous husband. The ladies this time dress him up in the garb of an old woman, who is known as the disputable sorceress, or old witch of Brentford. Ford, who had forbidden this bag to enter his threshold, drives Falstaff, after giving him a severe thrashing, from his abode. Mrs. Ford now imparts to her husband the whole affair, cares him of his jealousy, and, in company with Mr. and Mrs. Page, prepares the third practical joke at Falstaff's expense. A rendezvous is arranged in the oak of the fabulous hunter, Horne, where, according to a popular superstition, fairies and elves carry on their revels at midnight. Mrs. Ford and Mrs. Page, in pursuance of their plan to revenge on Falstaff his attempt on their chastity, decoy him, under pretence of an amorous meeting, into Windsor Park at midnight, where he is attacked by Evans and all the kin and kindred of the family. Ford and Page, who are dressed as soldiers, are in the meantime orders to Falstaff in various other ways. Falstaff is represented ludicrously disguised, having a buck's head forced on his head, and seated beneath the oak with his mistresses, who affect surprise at their being discovered.

In juxtaposition, and yet distant from the story of seduction and deception, a case of elopement is enacted in the play, as a counterpart of the former in its subplot. Falstaff and Mrs. Page have a marriagable daughter, Anne Page, for whose hand and heart three lovers woo—Squire Fenton, whose love is good and true, is responded to by Anne; and Slender, the cousin of the country Justice Shallow, a dunce with an annual rent of £300, who is the favorite of Anne's father, and last, the dandified French Doctor Costard, who is favored by Mrs. Page. Under Horne's oak, where Anne is enacting the queen of the fairies, Slender, according to the father's plan, is to elope with the daughter; but the mother, having planned a like affair, wants her to elope with Dr. Caius. The shrewd Anne apparently accedes to each plan, but on her part plots and prepares with her lover a different understanding, in consequence of which Slender indeed elopes, according to the plan of the father, with a fairy dressed in white; Dr. Caius, after the plan of the mother, with one in a green garb; but neither of the two have Anne Page, nor even another girl, but only disguised boys. Fenton and Anne, however, gain their purpose, and reach the church, from which they return husband and wife. The parents yield, with great resignation and heartiness, to the inevitable, and after a general reconciliation, from which even the fat and guilty Falstaff is not excluded, the comedy closes.

In Falstaff, bubbling over with humor combined with that consummate conceit which makes his character so inefably droll, we have a picture that only Shakespeare could draw. Falstaff is the representative, in his idleness and self-indulgence, of the debauched professional soldier of the day. But this lewd court hanger-on, whose wit always mastered men, is outwitted and routed by the Windsor Wives. "Wives Page have a marriagable daughter, Anne Page,..." the healthy moral. The play has no pathos about it; it is only merry; but, nevertheless, it is admirably constructed. The double plot works through it without a hitch; and the situations are conically first-rate, though we confess the tone is lower than in both Shakespeare's earlier and later works. There are no grandees in the play; it seems a play of contemporary manners and a direct sketch of English middle-class life. The sardonicness of "sweet Annie Page" runs all through it. She is the young English girl of Shakespeare's admiration — not seventeen, pretty, brown-haired, small-voiced, whose words are few, but whose presence is everywhere felt. True to her love, she is ready-witted, and dutiful to her parents, only disobeying them for the higher law of love. Her real value is shown by the efforts of those three lovers to get her. Fenton is a...

The Menace of Plautus have furnished our poet the matter for this lively, entertaining, and ingeniously executed play, which is so full of a witty spirit. It is one of his earliest dramatic efforts, and perhaps was written before the year 1591, though Malone fixes the date at 1593. In The Comedy of Errors music has no mention.

SCENE.—Ephesus.

Various and prolix disputes and contentions between the cities of Syracuse and Ephesus caused, in retal-tion for the precedent set by the former city, the enactment of a cruel law, according to which all intercourse between these two places was abolished, and any inhabitant of Syracuse seen in Ephesus was punished with death and confiscation of his estate if he were not able to pay a ransom of one thousand marks. Ignorant of this law, Egeon, an aged merchant of Syracuse, is found in the streets of Ephesus, arrested, and by the duke condemned to be executed. Upon the question, what has induced him to visit Ephesus, he relates that his wife had borne him twins, who had so extraordinary a resemblance to each other that he had purchased of their poor parents two twin brothers, whom he had brought up to attend upon his own sons. Suffering shipwreck, Egeon had been separated from his wife, with their older son and his comrade. The younger son, who, after he had grown to manhood, had been afflicted with an irrepressible longing to go in search of his lost mother and brother, was still engaged in this search; both sons he now deemed lost to him, since for seven years he had sought for them on all seas, but in vain, and it was thus he had come to Ephesus. The duke, influenced by a feeling of pity, grants Egeon one day to procure the thousand marks for his ransom. Egeon's sons, of exact form and size and bearing the same name—that of Antipholus—were at this time in Ephesus with their servants the Dromios, who are also as alike as other. The younger Antipholus had just arrived with his Dromios, the older brother, however, had already lived twenty years in the city, having, as a courageous soldier, once saved the duke's life, and had in the course of time become a rich and highly respected merchant. He married a rich heiress of Ephesus named Adriana, whose beautiful and wise sister Luciana resided with them. The twins and their followers, who bear such striking resemblance to each other, cause many vexations and entangling mistakes, and thus, quite naturally, many very comically amusing scenes are enacted, and errors upon errors follow. One bewitching mistake confounds the other. The errors which are occasioned by confounding the two gentlemen and their servants with each other, cause the Antipholus of Syracuse to believe that he is under the influence of magic, and therefore seeks refuge in a cloister, whose abbess, Emilia, charitably grants to him a place of refuge. Adriana, who presumed the fugitive to be her husband, complains to the duke of the conduct of the abbess, who refuses to give up the fugitive, who is deemed insane, before his cure is effected. One word draws another, until it becomes finally apparent that the jealous Adriana is the wife of the Ephesian Antipholus, whom she had often tortured with her silly suspicions. After confessing her behaviour to the abbess, the latter seriously expostulates with her. Meanwhile, evening comes and Egeon is to be executed, when opportunely at this juncture the twin pairs, and those with whom they have been confounded, all meet in the vicinity of the convenl. The penetration of the duke at once solves this mystery of errors. The excellent abbess is none other than Emilia, the long lost wife of Egeon, and the loving mother of one of the Antipholus. The duke now pardons Egeon, without the payment of ransom; Adriana is permanently cured of her jealousies, while Antipholus of Syracuse marries her sister the good and fair Luciana.

In the Comedy of Errors, which commentators believe to be either the first or the second part of the dramas of Shakespeare, he has exquisitely brought in the pathetic element in Egeon's story and threatened death, the mother's love and suffering, and the ruing of the family at the end of the play. He has also presented the beautiful element of the affection of Antipholus of Syracuse for Luciana—the first introduction of that seriousness and tender love which is never after absent in Shakespeare's plays. The sweetness of Luciana in dissuading her sister from jealousy, in her advice to Antipholus of Syracuse, her sister's supposed husband, in Scene 2 of Act III., before she consents to her suitor's love, is very beautiful in its tender thoughtfulness. Adriana, though jealous and cruel, really does not mean to be, and truly urges that her love is the cause. The contrast between the two brothers of Syracuse and of Ephesus is finely marked. The Antipholus of Ephesus was a man without a father's or a mother's training, and with no purpose in life like his brother. He is a brave soldier, but has no true view of love and marriage; he has taken a wife, yet consorts with a collier. Antipholus of Syracuse, brought up under a father's watchful care, is a far better type of a man. The search for his lost twin brother has given him a purpose in life; and although his temper is somewhat too unrestrained and he beats his servant too often, yet he reverences women, and declines the opportunity to avail himself of the mistake of his unknown brother's wife. Of the two Dromios, the Syracusan seems to have been the better. He is more humorous and cool and takes his troubles easier than his master. The noble and pathetic figure of Egeon forms a fine background to the play, his long search for his wife appealing to all hearts. This drama forms a fine acting play, the humor being brought out most comically.

The more serious part of the material on which this comedy is founded, were known to the reading public of England, at the time of our poet, through various works, such as the episode of Arriodant and Gencova, in Ariosto's Orlando Furioso, which already then existed in two English translations. The nearest resemblance to this play is a novel of Bandello, entitled, "Timbro di Carolinia, and Felicia Leonata." The other comical parts of the play, and the persons represented therein, seem to be altogether Shakespeare's own creation. According to Malone, the play was written in 1600; while Chalmers reports it a year earlier, that it was printed in quarto, and was entered at Stationers' Hall, August 29, 1600, under the name of Benedick and Beatrice. There is much music in the play, especially in the masquerade, Act II., Scene 2, and several songs are introduced. In the last Act, Scene 8, the epitaph and song are beautiful, and well calculated for music.

SCENE.—Messina.

Leonato, the Governor of Messina, has an only daughter, named Hero, who lives with his niece, Beatrice, in her father's palace. Beatrice is a lively, mirthful, and witty girl, the very counterpart of the sedate Hero. Returning from a happily ended war, appear as the guests of Leonato, Don Pedro, Prince of Arragon, with his favorites, Claudio and Benedick, all old friends and acquaintances of the governor and his family. Claudio sues for the quiet Hero, wins her love and, through the mediation of the Prince, obtains the consent of her father. Benedick and Beatrice, both animated by a spirit of thoroughly inexhaustible honor, begin a real contest of wits, incessantly teasing each other, and both to all appearances utterly forsaking love and matrimony. By an amusing plot, however, both, while deeming themselves unobserved, are made witnesses to pre-arranged conversations, from the purport of which it is intended to convince them that Beatrice is inspired with love for Benedick, and Benedick is madly in love with Beatrice. Both are deceived by the trap set for them; but nothing novel is acquired thereby; we only better our knowledge how their affairs are situated. The Prince of Arragon had also brought with him to Messina his bastard brother, Don John, a man discontented with himself and all the world, full of venom and rancour, who seeks pleasure in making mischief. He stands the pure, innocent, and chaste Hero, as being a common ...

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

See Page 112.

A ROMANCE or a drama from which our poet might have gleaned the material for this play, is thus far not known. The argument on which this comedy rests is the important contrast between the fresh and youthful, ever new blooming reality of life and the abstract, dry, and dead study of the strictly pedantic life. Shakespeare wrote the play, according to Malone, in 1594; according to Chalmers, in 1592.

SCENE.—Laid in Navarre.

The young and kind-hearted Ferdinand of Navarre conceived the somewhat fantastic idea of spending, in company with three knightly followers, Biron, Longaville, and Dumain, three years in strict seclusion from the outer world. In pursuance of this aim, they have sworn a sacred oath, especially binding themselves to abstain from all social intercourse with women, and to devote themselves to the study of wisdom and learning. Their plan, however, is forthwith defeated by the arrival of the fair Princess of France, with her attending ladies — Rosaline, Maria, and Katharine. This party, on account of pressing affairs of state, request an immediate audience, which cannot be denied. All these knights of wisdom and abstinence fall in love with these ladies, who are just as amiable as they are good and subtle. A quick encounter of contending wits ensues, during which the gentlemen tense and deride each other for breaking their vow, each at the same time trying to justify himself, but allaiming to win the hearts of the fair French ladies. The latter, on their part, try to cleverly defend themselves by vying with one another in witty retorts, and by cleverly ridiculing the courtiers for their foolishly conceived but quickly violated plan of affected struggle with wisdom. Intermingled in the play, as the most amusing and diverting contrasts, are the comic episodes between two bombastic and learned pedants, Holofernes and Nathaniel, as well as the pranks of the arrant knight and braggadocio, Armado, a youthful and haughty page, who acts the part of a privileged fool. The entire plot of the story and of the actors is suddenly interrupted by the announcement of the death of the sick and aged father of the Princess of France; and the drama closes with a very earnest lesson, and that, though expressed by the king in a jesting mood, is exacted by the ladies (though in another shape) as an expiration and for repentance. A duet between Spring and Winter (Cuckoo and Owl) makes a charming epilogue, which in a poetic form sheds a light over the sense and meaning of the whole. The finale of the comedy thus reverts back to the beginning.

The London wits of the day, with their assumed consequence and abounding conceit, naturally amused the Stratford-bred Shakespeare, and parts of this, his first written play, were designed to give them a covert reproof, and to show them they could be beaten at their own weapons, by a country lad, too, and that all their city cleverness, on which they so much prided themselves, was as nothing beside good heart and work. The best speech in the play is, of course, Biron's, on the effect of love in opening men's eyes and making the world new to them. How true this is every lover since can bear witness. But still there is a "chaffiness" about it very different from the humility and earnestness of the lovers who figure in most of Shakespeare's other plays, except, perhaps, that of the worthy Benedick. The fair Rosaline, too, in her witty passages, reminds us of Beatrice.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

See Page 133.

The comedy of Midsummer-Night's Dream is the most extravagant, yet the most artistic, the most amusing, and withal the most thoughtful, the most poetical, and nevertheless the liveliest, which the phantasy of a poet ever created for the glorification of phantasy itself. The greatness of the author's genius reveals nowhere so much as here, where he gives his imagination full play, and raises his fancy to a flight above mankind, and beyond the limits of the visible world. Two songs alluded to in the last scene of this play are lost. Malone asserts that this drama was written in 1592, while Chalmers has reasons for stating 1598 as the date.

SCENE.—Athens, and a wood not far from it.

Oberon, king of the fairies, beseeches his wife, Titania, to grant to him her beautiful adopted boy as a page; and upon Titania refusing this request, he seeks to revenge himself by wetting her eyes with the sap of a flower while she is sleeping. This lotion has the magical power of causing her to become exceedingly enamored with the first being she beholds on awakening. The person whom her eyes first observe is a weaver of Athens, named Bottom, a rough and entirely illiterate man, and who has, at this time, come, with several other mechanics, to the grove, where Oberon and Titania were holding their fairy court. These artisans had entered the wood to have a rehearsal for the play of Pyramus and Thisbe, which they design to act at the nuptial festivities of Duke Theseus of Athens, who was soon to be married to Hippolyta. But before Titania's awakening, Puck, a serving spirit to Oberon, who was ever ready for fun or frolic, had, by magic, adorned the weaver, Bottom, with the head of an ass. At the time this is taking place, a young pair, Lysander and Hermia, in love with each other, had likewise lied themselves to this enchanted grove, having fled from Athens on account of the cruelty of the father of Hermia, and the strictness of the laws of Athens, which forbade their union. They are overtaken at night by Demetrius, a lover, whose suit for Hermia the father of this lady favors, and by Helena, a youthful friend of Hermia, who loves Demetrius, but finds her love rejected. Oberon, the fairy king, feels pity for fond Helena, and commands Puck to wet the eyes of the flint-hearted Demetrius with the same magic fluid which had already proved so efficacious on his queen, Titania. Puck, by some mistake, enchants instead Lysander, but finding out his error, also enchants Demetrius. The consequence is, that both Lysander and Demetrius, on awakening, fall in love with Helena, whom they both perceive at the same moment. As a result, Helena now thinks the declarations of both these suitors malicious mockery, while Hermia, who, meantime, had arrived upon the scene, is inconsolable to discover herself thus so suddenly deserted by the hitherto faithful Lysander.

Meantime Titania has yielded to the wish of Oberon, and the latter, joyful over the reconciliation with his wife, removes the magic spells from Lysander and Bottom; only Demetrius' spell will not leave him, or rather the spell she supplied by the magic which the devoted fidelity of Helena imparts to him, whose love he now rewards in turn with his love. The Duke Theseus, of Athens, whose marriage is also about to be celebrated, obtains the consent of Hermia's father to her union with Lysander, and thus it happens that three marriage ceremonies take place, on which occasion the artisans enact their very jovial and grotesque play of Pyramus and Thisbe, which they have so faithfully and amusingly rehearsed. Congratulations and fairy dances conclude the nuptial feasts and the drama.

The finest character in the play is undoubtedly Theseus, and in his noble words about the artisans' play, the true gentleman is shown. Theseus is Shakespeare's early ideal of a heroic warrior and man of action. His life is one of splendid achievement and joy; his love is a kind of happy victory; his marriage a triumph. But his wife's character is poor beside his. There is not much marked difference of character between the lovers Demetrius and Lysander, nor is there much distinction between Helena and Hermia, except that in person Helena is the taller of the two and the gentler in disposition. Though the story is Greek, yet the play is full of English life. It is Stratford that has given Shakespeare his outdoor woodland life, his clowns' play, and the clowns themselves—Bottom, with his inimitable conceit, and his fellows, Snug, Quince, etc. It is Stratford that has given him all Puck's fairy lore—the pictures of the sweet country school-girls, seemingly parted and yet with a union in partition. There is exquisite imagery running through the play—a wonderful adumbration, though it be, of delicate and aerial fancy beside the broadest and coarsest comedy.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

See Page 150.

In this play our bard celebrates the idea of a universal philanthropy, in the first place, as a Christian charity, but more especially in its tenderest and most gentle emanations, as friendship, comunal love, as well as grace and mercy, in opposition to the strict tenet of the law. George Chalermes fixes 1597 as the date of this comedy, while Malone reports 1598 as the exact time of its appearance. The musical elements of this interesting drama are beautiful, numerous, and celebrated. In it is found the initial of a well-known and now proverbial eulogium on modulated sounds: "The man who has no music in his soul," etc.

SCENE.—Partly in Venice and at Belmont.

her father, prohibited from marrying, except the suitor who comes to woo should correctly choose one of three caskets — one of them gold, one of silver, and one of lead. The latter contains the portrait of the fair lady; and the suitor fortunate enough to choose the casket containing Portia's picture, is to be Portia's husband. Bassanio, a young nobleman of Venice, is so fortunate, and carries off the prize. But he is scarcely betrothed to his love, when he receives news from Venice telling him that his noble-hearted friend Antonio, whose generous means furnished him for his successful journey to Belmont, is completely ruined by the wreck of ships at sea, and that the bond which Antonio, in over confidence, had given to the Jew Shylock on Bassanio's account for a sum of money, could not be met when due. Shylock now insists literally on the cruel penalty provided as a forfeit — a pound of Antonio's flesh to be cut from any part the Jew pleased to take it. Bassanio, supplied by his bride with ample means, and presented with a ring which he vowed to her he never would part with, hastens towards Venice to the rescue of his friend. Portia, his spirited lady love, meanwhile, procures for herself, by the aid of a renowned lawyer, who is a friend of her family, letters of introduction, and thus fortified, and in the disguise of a Doctor of Laws, is introduced to the Duke of Venice as a lawyer who would be able, even in such a difficult case as that now pending between the merchant of Venice and the Jew Shylock, to decide in strict accord with the laws of Venice, and yet, withal, in the interest of human equity. By virtue of Portia's ingenuous sagacity, Antonio, the unfortunate merchant who had become security for her husband Bassanio, is rescued from his cruel persecutor. In her disguise as an advocate of law, Portia refuses every offer of reward, but requests and finally obtains from the unwilling Bassanio that ring which she had given to him on his departure from her, under the most solemn vows never to part with it. The same scene is likewise enacted by her waiting-maid Nerissa, who is in the disguise of an attending clerk, and who is betrothed to Bassanio's friend and companion Gratiano. Portia and her waiting maid now hasten to their home. They arrived at Belmont before their husbands, whose embarrassment on account of their having parted with their rings, the pledges of their love, causes great railing and merriment, until finally the entire intrigue is explained. Through the play is interspersed the suit, elopement, and marriage of Jaquenetta and Oliver, who are converted by Christianity, becomes the wife of Lorenzo, a young Venetian for whom Portia, in her role as counsellor of law, obtains the legal right to inherit the fortune of his unwilling father-in-law, Shylock. Cruel and repulsive as the character of the latter appears in the story, the thoughtful reader cannot help but sometimes pity him as one of the persecuted Jewish race, a revelation of hatred and prejudice, as well as the remorseless cruelty practised towards them by the remorseless and laws of the Middle Ages.

To understand the plot of this play, which is complicated, by three points, we have, first the main point in the history of the forlorned bond; then a secondary plot, the affair of the three caskets, and, as a final episode, the elopement of Jessica and Lorenzo.

A true and noble woman the poet portrays in Portia. In the language of Jessica, "the rude world has not her fellow," and to this all who have studied the play will agree, echoing the words of Mrs. Fanny Kemble, when she says, "Shakespeare's Portia, then, as now, is my ideal of a perfect woman." She is one of those women that the poet shows us first in gloom and then brings into the sunshine of love. She is gloomy, naturally, at the momentous chance that her fate hangs on, until it gives her the man she loves. She has wit and humor, and good judgment, too. She is unfeigned, for she allows her husband to leave her so soon to save his friend. Note her quick insight and wit on the call for action, her self-reliance; the admirable handling of her case in court; the reserving of her power to the last, hoping to raise Shylock to the nobleness she would have him reach. See how the essence of all the virtues of woman is in her speech for mercy, which will echo through all time. In the trial scene she keeps her happy, roughish humor, chaffing her husband about giving her up, and insisting on his ring (this latter scene is remarkably effective on the stage). No words can praise Portia too highly. Jessica, "the most beautiful pagan and most sweet Jew," is romantic and impulsive. Love is her ruling passion, as greed is that of her father's.

Antonio is a noble gentleman. There is a beautiful and touching unselfishness about him, as note his message to Bassanio, who was a fine enough fellow, but far inferior in character to the woman whose love he won. In Shylock, we have the embittered hate of ages of cruelty and oppression flaring up to strike when chance allowed it.

THE material of this play the poet gleaned from the story entitled "Rosalinde, Euphues Golden Legacie, etc.,” which its author, Thomas Lodge, wrote at sea, on a voyage to the Canary Islands. The drama was written in 1600, when Shakespeare was thirty-six years old. There are various remarks on music and several songs embodied in this comedy.

SCENE.—Is laid first near Oliver's house; afterwards in the usurper's court, and in the forest of Arden.

A French duke, who had been deposed and banished by his younger brother Frederick, with drew with a few faithful followers to the forest of Arden, leaving his only daughter Rosalind at the court of the usurper as a companion of the latter's only daughter Celia; these ladies love each other like sisters. This affection which subsisted between them was not in the least interrupted by the disagreement between the fathers, and becomes not less tender when Rosalind falls in love with the brave Orlando, who, in a wrestling match with a hitherto unexcelled athlete, wins the victory in the presence of the assembled court; but Orlando has lost his lease of his estate, and by the execution of the deadly enmity of his older brother Oliver, seeks safety in flight. Adam affectionately accompanies him, and proffers Orlando the money he has saved. But the faithful servant, through infirmity and fatigue, is unable to proceed far on the journey. Orlando, cheers his drooping spirits and urges him to go forward. The older brother, Oliver, was charged by the usurping duke with having advised the flight of Orlando, and the duke orders him to arrest and bring back the fugitives. Rosalind, having been banished from her uncle's court, left it clad in the disguise of a page, and chanced her towards the forest of Arden. Celia, the usurping duke's daughter, loving Rosalind tenderly, accompanied her in her flight in the garb of a shepherdess. More for the purpose of pastime and sport than for protection, the two ladies entreat the clown Touchstone to flee with them. Arrived at the forest of Arden, they purchase from a shepherd his estate with house and herd, and still disguised live there for a time as a brother and sister, when they are agreeably surprised by the arrival of Orlando, who has joined the followers of the banished duke. Rosalind then becomes Rosalind, her brother Orlando being wounded, and, seeing the bloody handkerchief which he has sent her as a proof of his attachment, faints in the arms of Celia. Rosalind, after having assured herself of the love and constancy of the knightly Orlando, fully bestows her affections on him, and with the consent of her father, to whom she has made herself known, is welded to him. The courtier, Oliver, who owes his life to the valor and courage of his brother Orlando (who rescued him twice, while travelling through the country, from the fangs of a serpent, and again from a lion while asleep in the forest of Arden), marries the fair Celia, with whom he has fallen in love at first sight. Meantime, DuCru d'Escurel, becoming alarmed at the large number of his subjects who are leaving for his brother's support, marches at the head of an army to the Arden forest to annexe the followers of the deposed duke. At the outskirts of the forest, however, the usurper is met by a pious hermit, who beseeches him to desist from his cruel undertaking. Stung by his conscience, he voluntarily restores the dukedom to his brother, and resolves to spend the remainder of his life in a religious house. A messenger proclaiming this resolve is sent by the now penitent duke to his brother, who again ascends his throne, while all the banished courtiers return to the city and are restored to their former dignities—all but the melancholy Jaques, who, disgusted with worldly show, goes into retirement.

This story goes back to the old Robin Hood spirit of England, to the love of country, of forest, and of adventure. Rosalind's rippling laughter comes to us from the far-off woodland glades, and the wedded couple's sweet content reaches us as a strain of distant melody. Miss Baillie says of Rosalind: "The way in which she delights in teasing Orlando is essentially womanly. There are many women who take unaccountable pleasure in causing pain to those they love, for the sake of healing it afterwards." Rosalind is fair, pink-checked, and impulsive; what she thinks she must speak out, true woman as she is. There is a great want in her life; but she meets Orlando, and the want is filled by love. It was she who planned this country expedition, and, though she could find it in her heart to cry like a woman, she feels she must comfort poor Celia as the weaker vessel. But sad as she is, she needs only the news of Orlando's nearness to throw off her melancholy instantly, and to jump into the liveliest of gay humor; and the deliciously sprightly fun of her chaff of Orlando is unsurpassable. Orlando is a fine young fellow with whom we all must sympathize; there is such a charm in his manliness, and there is, too, a freshness about him and the energy of a healthy, active life. Oliver is a poor creature; but whitewashed, and reformed, we believe he made a good husband to Celia "the tender and true." The melancholy Jaques gets off some immortal worthy things of the philosophizing kind, as note his exquisite words on the "Seven Ages of Man." Touchstone's fun with Corin the shepherd and William is most amusing; to quote Miss Baillie again: "He is undoubtedly slightly cracked; but then the very craks in his brain are chinks which let in the light."
wield, and takes formal lessons from Petruchio in the art of Taming the Shrew. Petruchio's young wife, the fiery Katharina, carries finally the prize away as the most submissive wife of the three, and, because of her amiability and goodness, receives from her father a largely increased dowry.

The fair Kate, the shrew, stands boldly out in marked individuality. She has been brought up a spoiled child, strong-willed, and overindulged by her father's weakness and her sister's gentleness. Then she may be said to have a grievance, for she is not to be married, while her mild sister is. She is soured by neglect, and batters her sister from on high. Petruchio comedy, he adores her, and she likes him, too, as the first man who has had the nerve to overrule and attempt to control her. She is bewitched by his assurance and coolness, while consciences that she has forfeited, by her childish bad temper, a woman's right to chivalrous courtesy, and she feels she has no right to complain of her lover's roughness. As a woman, too, she likes the promise of money, and decides to marry him; even has learned, by this time, to love him, as not how she cries when he comes late. Having got him, she is baulked of the wedding feast (cruelest of all blows for a bride). Under the influence of the wedding, she is so tender, at first, that we almost regret that Petruchio had not taken advantage of this tenderness, and tried taming by love; but then, if he had, we should have lost some of the very best scenes of the play. However, Kate decides to stand up for her rights, and how she is defeated and humbled, and finally gives up the effort, becoming the model wife, the story relates.

Petruchio really makes himself, for effect, worse than he is. He is one of those determined men that like the spice of temper in a woman, knowing the power in him to subdue. He teases and tantalizes Kate in such a pleasant, made-up fashion, that we like him, although, probably, he tries her too far and too severely. No doubt they proved a happy couple. Kate could obey Petruchio with a will, for he had fairly beaten her at her own game, and won her respect. Gruccio is an excellent comic character, one of the best of the kind from Shakespeare's pen.

Encouraged by the countess, to whom she had confided her love, she journeys to Paris, and succeeds in inducing the king to confide in her method of curing him. She agrees to suffer condign punishment in case she shall not succeed in restoring the king's health; on the other hand, should she cure the monarch, he promises that she shall be married to the man of her choice, and besides receive a rich dowry. Under her ministering care the king recovers entirely, and chooses the young Count of Rousillon for her spouse, who, despite all unwillingness and resistance at first, finally yields to the behests of his sovereign, and is married to Helena. Bertram has no affinity for his young wife, and moreover considers their marriage a misalliance, flees from Helena soon after the marriage ceremony is over, and lies himself to Florence, where he orders the service as a soldier—meanwhile informing Helena by letter that she should never again see him in France, nor greet him as her husband, until she could wear on her finger the ring which he claims to have inherited from his ancestors as a family relic, and could nurture a child of his paternity on her breast. Despite these two seemingly impossible conditions, Helena does not yield to his threats. With the aid of her husband's knowledge, she follows her truant lord, reaching Florence in disguise, where, with the assistance of the chaste daughter of an honest widow named Diana, she is soon in a condition to demand the fulfillment of her husband's strange conditions, and returns to France simultaneously with Bertram, where she has been announced as dead. As soon as the count is convinced of the truth of her assertions, he is thrilled with many emotion at such enduring love, and, in rapture over her high-spirited devotion, clasps Helena in his arms, henceforth bestowing all his affection on her. The unmasking and punishment of a villain named Parolles, a follower of Bertram, forms a diverting entertainment and an embellishment to the scenes, an episode of which calls to mind some of the parts of Falstaff's experience.

In this play the object of Shakespeare was no doubt, covertly, to teach a lesson to the English people on the pride of birth, in the poor, lowly-born Helena, richest and highest in the noblest qualities, and proving also how much true love could take a woman through unspotted and unimpaired. Coleridge calls Helena 'Shakespeare's loveliest character besides the great Mrs. Jordan.' He says: "There never was, perhaps, a more beautiful picture of a woman's love, cherished in secret, not self-consuming in silent languishment, not desponding over its idol, but patient and hopeful, strong in its own intensity, and sustained by its own faith. Her love is like a religion—pure, holy, deep. The faith of her affection combining with the natural energy of her character, believing all things possible makes them so."" The same as she says of Parolles, the count is brought through Bertram, for love blinds his eyes. How beautiful is the confession of her love to Bertram's mother; and what a fool Bertram appears in leaving his sweet, unselfish young wife, and how his brutal letter only brings out by contrast her truth and nobleness. How earnestly she wants to save him! She knows the urgency of his "important blood," and takes advantage of it to work a helpful means in a lawful act, without disgrace, fulfills the condition her husband's business has made precedent to her reunion with him. Shakespeare has, indeed, proved in the character of Bertram (one who prides himself on his noble birth) its worthlessness, unless beneath a noble name rested a noble soul. Bertram, to speak mildly, is a snob, a liar, and a sneak, and it requires all the love of the lower-born lady, of God's own make, to lift him to a level that obtains any of our regard. He has physical courage, but of moral courage he has none, and is unable to judge men.

TWELFTH NIGHT; or, WHAT YOU WILL.

See Page 232.

The sources which our poet made use of for this comedy are found in the novel entitled "Apollo-nius and Silvia." According to some, he is said to have probably used two Italian comedies of similar name, namely, "Gli'inganni" and "Gli'ingannate." Twelfth Night was written in 1600; but there is no edition of an earlier date than the first folio, in 1623. This comedy opens with a beautiful eulogion on music, which prevails throughout. The use of Euripides, in the same manner as at present, seems to have been well known at this time, as appears in Act I.

SCENE.—Laid in a city in Illyria, and the sea-coast near it.

Sebastian and his sister Viola were twins of the most remarkable resemblance to one another. Having both escaped the danger of perishing by shipwreck, Viola is rescued by the captain and taken to the coast of Illyria. Through the aid of her benefactor, the maiden, dressed in male attire, enters into the service of Duke Orsino. Intimate acquaintance with this handsome and excellent man inflames the susceptible heart of Viola with the fire of a first love. But the duke loves Olivia, a rich and fair young countess. Viola, in her disguise as a page, introduces herself to Olivia, on behalf of her master, Orsino, who passionately loves Olivia, who is, however, in mourning for her brother; and, unable to return the duke's affection, refuses at first even to listen to Viola's message, but no sooner sees her than, ignorant of her sex, she falls in love with the page; forgetful of the vow of entire seclusion from the world, Olivia unvels herself before Viola (Cesario), confessing her feelings, which, of course, are not returned. Viola, now perceiving the danger of her disguise, hastens from the presence of Olivia, with the emphatic declaration that she would never love a woman. Meantime her brother, who too had been saved by the captain of a vessel, arrives likewise in Illyria. His benefactor, who had at a former time during a naval engagement inflicted great damage on the Illyrians (habit even caused the death of their duke), is of course in imminent peril among these people. His liberty, his property, yes, even his life, are in jeopardy, and nothing but the love for his protégé could have caused him to land. A ruffian who courts Olivia, and is jealous of the supposed rival Cesario, whom he deems the favorite of the countess, attacks Viola, and Antonio, confounding her with Sebastian, hastens to her relief. Officers of the law appear upon the scene of the tangle, and, recognizing Antonio from his taking part in the naval combat, take him off to prison. After Viola's departure from the scene of the trouble, Sebastian, who is in search of Antonio, appears, and is himself attacked by Viola's adversary. The countess, who having now interceded with the duke, mistakes Sebastian for Orsino's page, and as such loads him with caresses. Sebastian, astonished at his good fortune and struck with her beauty, falls in love at first sight. A priest at hand solemnizes the marriage ceremony without delay. Viola, who makes herself known as Sebastian's sister, by her womanly charm, spirit, and faithful love, wins the heart of the duke, and on the same day she is made "the mistress of her lord" and Illyria's duchess.

Viola is the true heroine of the play. She is sad for her brother's supposed death; but she is thankful for her own escape, and looks disaster full in the face, taking practical steps for her future life. The duke wants sympathy, and she gives it to him; she knows the duke loves music, and she gives it to him to cheer him in his love-born state. Note the real love that Viola describes, and the fancied love the duke feels for Olivia. That is a touching scene between Viola and the duke, where the music makes her speak in so masterly a way of love; and where Viola, in answer to the duke's fancied greatness of his love, gives him such hints of her own far greater affection for him, that no man not blinded by phantasm could have failed to catch the meaning of her words. Then comes that scene when the man she adores threatens her with death, and she will take it joyfully from him whom she declares then she loves more than life, and finally the reciprocation of her love by the duke. The duke has a fanciful nature; he is a dreamy, musical man. Still, he is not to be despised. He is a rich, beautiful, artistic nature, fond of music and flowers, and his love once obtained makes him a husband tender and true. The comic characters of this play are Shakespeare's own. The self-convicted of Malvolio is refreshing.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

See Page 251.

The plot is taken from the "History of Dorastus and Fawnia," by Thomas Green, and was written, according to Chalmers, in 1601, and according to Malone in 1604; and first appeared in the folio of 1623. Schlegel, the great German translator and Shakespearean scholar, says that the title of this comedy answers admirably to its subject. It is one of those histories which appear framed to delight the idleness of a long evening. There are two somewhat absurd songs, some other musical illusions, and a pedler's song woven into this drama.

SCENE.—Sometimes in Sicilia and at times in Bohemia.

Polixenes, King of Bohemia (a country we must imagine in this play to extend to the sea-coast), is on a visit to the court of his lifelong friend Leontes, King of Sicilia, and after a sojourn of nine months at last resolves to depart. The urgency of Leontes to induce his friend to continue his visit somewhat longer being without avail, he requests his queen Hermione to try her fortune in accomplishing that end; and the queen really succeeds in persuading the guest to defer the return to his own country for another week. But suddenly in the king's heart a suspicion now arose by reason of this success wrought by the persuasive eloquence of his wife, and he became at once inflamed by such a violent fit of jealousy that he even seeks to take his noble friend's life. By an honorable confidential friend, whom he sought to employ as a tool to carry out his revenge, Polixenes is prevented from further designs upon the King of Bohemia. But Leontes is still jealous of his wife, and with Polixenes enters her apartment and demands the delivery of his only son, Mamillius, Hermione demonstrates, and is ordered to prison; while there she is delivered of a daughter, Perdita. The infant is brought by Paulina, wife of Antigonus, a lord of his court, to its father, but is ordered out of his sight. The oracle to whose decision the case is submitted, declares the queen innocent, and prophecies that Sicilia's crown will remain without an heir until the abandoned child is found again. At the same time the death of the crown prince is announced, upon which news the queen faints and is taken away for dead. Thus ends the first three acts in the drama.

The fourth act is ushered in by a prologue, and is laid sixteen years later in Bohemia. The ship in which Antigonus, the Sicilian lord, carried the infant princes out to sea, had been driven by a storm upon the coast of Bohemia, where the child was left by him, dressed in rich clothes and jewels, with a paper pinned to its mantle with the name Perdita written thereon. Antigonus never returned to Sicily; for he was torn to pieces by a bear as he was going back to the vessel. The deserted baby was found by an old shepherd, who took it home to his wife, who nursed it carefully. Perdita, the banana infant of Leontes, brought up to womanhood as the shepherd's daughter, gains the affections of Florizel, the son of the King of Bohemia. The king Polixenes attends the sheep-shearing (a rustic festival) in disguise, at which the loving pair and both present, discovers himself, and forbids their intimacy.

Camilto, a courtier of Sicily, who had been sojourning at Polixenes's court, proposes to Florizel and Perdita that they shall go with him to the Sicilian court. To this proposal they joyfully agreed, taking with them the old shepherd, the reputed father of Perdita, who has still preserved Perdita's jewels, baby-clothes, and the paper which he had found pinned to her garments. They all arrive at the court of Leontes in safety, who receives them with great cordiality. The king had bitterly repented of his former jealous-frenzy, and is now entirely satisfied at having found his long-lost child. Polixenes, King of Bohemia, in pursuit of his son, arrives also in Sicily, and now everything that was obscure is cleared up, and Queen Hermione, believed to be dead, returns from her place of seclusion, and the play ends in transports of joy and happiness.

In the Winter's Tale, we see the contrast between town and country. The play is fragrant with Perdita, with her primroses and violets, so happy in the reconciliation of her father and mother, so bright with the sunshine of her and Florizel's young love. So long as men can think, Perdita shall brighten and sweeten their minds and lives. There is something so ineffably touching in the lost and injured daughter meeting the injurious father and forgiving him. Above all rises the figure of the noble, long-suffering wife, Hermione, forgiving the cruel and unjust, though now deeply repentant, husband who has so cruelly injured her. She is among the noblest and most magnanimous of Shakespeare's women; without a fault, she suffers, and for sixteen years, of a though guilty of the greatest fault. If we contrast her noble characterlessness on her honor with that of other heroines in like case—the swooning of Hero, the ill-starred sentences of Desdemona, the pathetic appeal, and yet submission of Imogen—we will see how splendidly Shakespeare developed this one of his finest creations.

When Camillo's happy suggestion that Florizel should take Perdita to Sicily and Leontes has borne fruit, and Shakespeare brings the father and daughter together, and then brings both into union before us with the mother, though so long dead, the climax of pathos and delight is reached; art can no further go. Paulina is a true lover of her mistress, and a lovely character in her earnestness and courage. Although the story is told of Sicily, we see all through that the great poet has English scenes in his mind's eye. The lovely country around Stratford is always before him as he writes.

THE LIFF AND DEATH OF KING JOHN.

See Page 275.

IN more than one respect this tragedy is not only the prologue, but the basis of the entire dramas of Shakespeare which treat upon the history of England. It appears to have been written in 1596, but not published till 1623. It was founded on the old play entitled The Troublesome Reign of King John. The action of this present tragedy occupies a space of about seventeen years, beginning at the thirty-fourth year of King John's life. There is no music in this play but trumpets and the din of war.

SCENE.—Sometimes in England and France.

After the demise of Richard, surnamed Cœur de Lion, John wrung the English crown from the weak hands of his nephew, Arthur, whose claim was supported by King Philip of France. But in the hope of incorporating England with his kingdom by the plan, the French monarch is prevailed to sanction a marriage between the dauphin and a niece of John, and is about to withdraw his aid from Arthur, when the arrival of the Cardinal Pandulp, the pope's legate, prevents him consummating the agreement, and the dogs of war are again unloosed. Constance, mother of Arthur, having in vain endeavored to interest the French king and the legate in behalf of her son's claim to the crown, appeals in paroxysms of despair to heaven, and denounces Arthur's uncle, John, the usurper of the throne and his son's rights.

Philip of France in a decisive engagement is defeated, and the captured Arthur is handed over by his uncle to the keeping of a certain Hubert, chamberlain to the king. John, feeling insecure from the superior force of his enemies, orders Hubert to put out his prisoner. Hubert, moved to pity by the youth and innocence of the victim, spares him. But on quitting him, the prince, in dread of another attempt, leaps from the ramparts, and is found dead by Pembroke. A number of discontented barons resolve to free themselves from the yoke of the tyrant, and to this end invite the Dauphin of France to assume the English crown, with the sanction of the pope. On the arrival of the dauphin, John is compelled to yield an ignominious abdication by actually placing his royalty at the disposal of the cardinal, who then endeavors to stay the advance of the dauphin. His intercession proves, however, unsuccessful; and hostilities are about to be resumed, when the news of the loss of a French transport having a large number of troops on board, together with the news of the capture of an English reserve force, causes the author of the French prince to cool, and inclines him to make peace. Meantime, King John is poisoned by a monk, and his son Prince Henry succeeds to the throne. The departures from history which Shakespeare in this play introduces, are all designed in the interest of dramatic art, and not with the pretext of adhering to strict historical truth.

The character which stands foremost in King John is Constance, with that most touching expression of grief for the son she has lost. Deserted and betrayed, she stands alone in her despair, amid false friends and ruthless enemies — an eagle wounded, but defiant.
THE PLOTS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS.

Considered as a dramatic picture, the grouping is wonderfully fine. On one hand, the virtue-like ambition of the mean-souled and cowardly tyrant John; on the other, the selfish, calculating policy of Philip; between them, balancing their passions in his hand, is Cardinal Pandolph, the cold, subtle, heartlesslegate; the fiery, reckless Falstaff; the prudently Lewis; the still unconquered spirit of old Queen Elinor; the bridal levendness and modesty of Blanche; the bawdy craft and innocence of young Arthur; the noble Constance, helpless and yet desperate — form an assemblage of figures that, taken altogether, cannot be surpassed in variety, force, and splendor of dramatic and picturesque effect.

THE TRAGEDY OF KING RICHARD II.
See Page 295.

The principal source from which Shakespeare drew the argument of this play was Holinshed's History of England, and he has here adhered to this information. Without detriment to this its practical source, he has followed history literallly, with an almost perfect fidelity. Inasmuch as the first edition of this tragedy appeared in 1597, there is good reason to believe that it was written in 1596. Here we have music in abundance. Military instruments are admirably described. All instruments played with the bow, in Shakespeare's time, were fretted except violins, and this is made obvious in this historical drama.

SCENE.—Dispersedly in England and Wales.

Henry Bolingbroke, Duke of Hereford, eldest son to John of Gaunt, the Duke of Lancaster, denounces Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, as a traitor, and, among other accusations, charges him with abetting the murder of the Duke of Gloucester, the king's uncle. Norfolk, the accused duke, denies the charge, and offers to prove his innocence by single combat. The king consents to this, and orders the adversaries to appear on a certain day at Coventry. They arrive there, punctually ready for the encounter; but just at the moment when the signal for commencement is to be given, King Richard protests. Knowing that his own skirts are not clear of the taint of his uncle's death, hence afraid of the consequences of the duel, whatever the result of the latter may be, and also secretly dreading the adversaries, he banishes both nobles, having first assembled the lords of his realm and received their assent. Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk, is sentenced to perpetual banishment, while the Duke of Hereford is exiled for ten years, which term the king reduces, out of regard for the aged John of Gaunt, to six years. The king also commands them while abroad never to have verbal intercourse with each other, as he is afraid of their mutual explanations. Soon after Bolingbroke's departure, his father, the Duke of York, dies, and the king perpetuates the injustice of confiscating the estate of the deceased duke, thus cheating the banished Henry Bolingbroke out of his inheritance. Enraged over this undeserved robbery, Bolingbroke awaits a good opportunity to return to England for the purpose of dethroning King Richard. He knew how to ingratiate himself with the army and the English people, being either related by blood with all the great families, or connected by the bonds of friendship with them. Richard meanwhile is living in great luxury, surrounded by worthless favorites, and influenced by them to tyrannize over his people, who grow bitterly discontented. Richard having gone to Ireland to avenge the death of the viceroy, Count Le Marche, who had been slain by the Irish during an insurrection, Bolingbroke makes good use of his absence, having heard of it previously; and, taking the name of Duke of Lancaster, returns to England, landing near Ravenspurgh, in Yorkshire. The Duke of Northumberland and his valiant son Henry Percy (Hotspur), having been insulted by Richard, at once join Bolingbroke's forces. During this time, news comes in from all quarters, and soon swell the forces of Lancaster to an army of 60,000 soldiers. Even Langley, Duke of York, who had been left by Richard as regent in London, offers no resistance, being himself too weak, and, moreover, having been deceived by Bolingbroke, who represents that he had merely returned to have his banishment and the wrongful sequestration of his estates annulled. Bolingbroke, emboldened by continued additions to his army, now enters London at the head of his troops, where he is hailed by the people as their deliverer from a justly hated tyranny. Other cities follow the example of the metropolis. Richard, having heard of Bolingbroke's return from banishment and his attempt to usurp the crown, lands on the coast of Wales, from his Irish expedition, and receives the news of his rival's progress and the danger to which himself and his followers are now exposed. But he can learn nothing but misfortune: for his favorites, Busby, Green, and Earl of Wiltshire, had already been executed, the Earl of Salisbury's army is scattered, his own troops are weak and inclined to desert, the people embittered, and the regent, York, though thus far a neutral, "neither as friend nor foe," had gone over to Bolingbroke. In this desperate dilemma, Richard appeals to the vices and invites the enmity of the Duke of Northumberland and the Archbishop of Canterbury, to visit him at Flint, near Chester. The duke receives Richard, who with humbled face appears. Seated upon two miserable horses, Richard and Salisbury accompany Bolingbroke to London. Richard is dethroned and condemned to perpetual imprisonment. Bolingbroke ascends the throne under the name of King Henry IV. The old Duke of York becomes his firm friend to the king; the Duke of Anmerle, son of the Duke of York, continuing the firm friend of Richard, notwithstanding his deposition, comes to visit the old duke, his father, with a paper so carelessly concealed on his person, that York, doubting his loyalty to Bolingbroke, seizes it, and finds a treasonable plot to restore Richard to the throne. The father vows to immediately inform the king, but the son himself and his mother intercede and obtain the king's pardon. Richard dies in the fortress of Pontefret by the hands of assassins, whose leader, Sir Pierce of Exton, without equivocation, asserts that he had been induced by Henry IV. to commit the murder. This charge is afterwards denied by the king. Nevertheless, King Henry resolves, in atonement of the bloody deed, to take a pilgrimage to the Holy Land, and with this vow, uttered at the coffin of his predecessor, ends the tragedy.

No doubt one of the motives which induced the great poet,—a sincere patriot, a lover of his country, and a keen observer of the times,—to take up the role of the historical plays, of which Richard II. is one, was to point out the great dangers to the state, and to the sovereign, of unworthy favorites. The degenerate son of the Black Prince, the flower of warriors, is pictured by Shakespeare as a mere royal sham—a king in words only—for act effectively he cannot. His nobles quarrel in his very presence; and the contemptible meanness of his nature is shown in his inability to take the reproof of the noble, dying Gaunt.
It is not until his death that we feel any pity for the weak and dethroned king. In Bolingbroke, the poet has drawn the wily and astute leader, prompt to seize and turn to his own advantage the errors of his rivals.

THE FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.
See Page 316.

THE author that Shakespeare follows in this historical drama is the chronologist Holinshed. So far as the comical scenes with Falstaff and his followers go, the play was perhaps already known in 1588 as a favorite, though weak and rude popular play, under the title of The Famous Victories of Henry the Fifth. The tragedy, however, was written in 1597, and printed in quarto form in the following year. Falstaff furnishes the funniest music in this play.

SCENE.—Entirely in England.

The first part of the play covers a period of but ten months, viz., from the battle of Holmedon, on September 14, 1402, until that near Shrewsbury, which was fought July 21, 1403. After the deposition and death of the unfortunate Richard, we find Henry IV.'s attention drawn to the invasion of the Scots, who, under his heroic leader, Archibald, Earl of Douglas, threaten the borders of England, but are defeated and beaten back by the celebrated Henry Percy, surnamed Hotspur. The report of this victory has scarcely reached the ears of the king, when he, despite all the customs and usages of the times, insists upon the delivery of some of the prisoners made by his victorious general, Percy, and especially insists on having the body of the gallant Douglas. Enraged at this claim, Hotspur liberates all his captured prisoners without a ransom, and, in conjunction with his relations and followers, plans an insurrection against his new lord, whose ascent to the throne they had so recently effected. After a treaty with the Scotch and Welsh leaders, the insurgents march on Shrewsbury, where the king, leading his men in person, advances on them. A decisive battle ensues, in which Hotspur is slain by the hands of Prince Henry, and the insurgents suffer a total defeat, all their leaders being taken captive. Worcester and Vernon suffer execution, but Douglas is set free without ransom and permitted to return to Scotland. The earnest and tragic scenes of the play are in bright contrast with the comical parts, and these latter are interspersed on the following basis. Henry IV. is apprehensive of his son Henry, Prince of Wales, because the latter is a young man of remarkable talents; but the suspicion is entirely ill-founded, since the prince has never acted in conflict with the duties and love due from child to parent. The prince is not fond altogether at ease at court, and, perhaps for prudential reasons, seeks to avoid meeting his cold-hearted father. Desirous of becoming acquainted with the life and doings of the people, even of the lowest orders, he surrounds himself with a band of jovial, careless characters, who underrun the leader of their princely leader perpetrate the wildest tricks and follies, even going so far as to commit criminal acts. The principal scapegrace, both as physical appearance and merriment, in this company, is Sir John Falstaff, the most amusingly entertaining character that author has ever described. Among the funny scenes, Falstaff, having joined the royal army, in a skirmish with Douglas pretends to be slain. Prince Henry, recognizing his jolly old companion seemingly among the dead, ludicrously avows his intention to have him embowelled, but is no sooner gone than the knight jumps to his feet, and, congratulating himself on his narrow escape, insures his safety by immediate flight.

In this drama we have the headlong valor of Hotspur, the wonderful wit of Falstaff, the noble rivalry of Henry Percy and Henry, Prince of Wales. Kingsdoms are striven for; rebels are subdued. Through every scene beats the full strong pulse of vigorous manhood and life. The whole play is instinct with action. Every character lives, and what magnificent creations they are. Hotspur, Glendower, Henry and his son Prince Hal, Douglas, Poins, Lady Percy, and Mrs. Quickly. In some parts, though, Shakespeare calculations in Falstaff, and who can say enough of him? He is the very incarnation of humor and lies, of wit and self-indulgence, of shrewdness and immorality, of self-possession and vice, without a spark of conscience or of reverence, without self-respect—a adventurer preying on the weaknesses of other men! Yet we all enjoy him, and so did Shakespeare himself. Falstaff's most striking power is seen when that doughty knight is cornered. Look at the cases of Poins; of Prince Hal's exposure of his robbery; of his false accusation of Mrs. Quickly; his behavior in the fight with Douglas, and his claiming to have killed Hotspur. His affrontery is imitable. He is neither a coward nor courageous. Like a true soldier of fortune, he only asks which will pay best—fighting or running away—and acts accordingly. He evidently had a sort of reputation as a soldier, and was a professed one, obtaining a commission at the outbreak of the war. The power of the barons was at that time too great, and turbulence consequently followed. But a strong king is now on the throne—no fine sentiments followed by nothingness, no pious weak moralizing with him. What Henry has won will he keep, let who will say nay. Henry acts generously, for he offers peace even to the arch-rebel Worcester, his bitterest foe. It is refused, and then having doffed his easy robes of peace, and crushed his old limbs in ungentle steel, he orders only Worcester and Vernon to execution. "Other offenders he will pass upon." His real character, his astuteness and foresight, are shown in his talk with Harry, when he contrasts himself with Richard the Second. No wonder such a king regretted the heir he feared to leave behind him, little then knowing the stuff his son was made of. This son, Prince Hal, Henry of Ardenworth, is Shakespeare's hero in English history. See how he draws him by the mouth of his enemy Vernon; how modestly he makes him challenge Hotspur; how generously treat that rival when he dies; gives Douglas his freedom, and gives to Falstaff the credit of Hotspur's death. And Hotspur we cannot help liking, with all his hot-headedness and petulance. But he believes too much in himself, and all must give way to his purposes. He is too aggressive.

THE SECOND PART OF KING HENRY IV.
See Page 339.

HOLINSHED'S Chronicles has also been the source from which the poet delineated this second part of Henry IV. The time covered by this historical drama extends over the last nine years of this king's reign. This part was probably written immediately after the first part of the play had been finished, that is in 1598. It was entered at Stationers' Hall, August 23, 1600.
THE PLOTS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS.

Scene.—Wholly in England.

After the death of the ardent and heroic Percy (Hotspur), the insurgents lose all energy; and although Scroop, Archbishop of York, uses his clerical influence for the success of their cause and thus effect an increase of their numerical strength, yet all the leaders of the insurgents, with the exception of Mowbray, are more inclined to seek redress for their wrongs by a capitulation, than to hazard further their fortunes in battle. On the other hand, the leaders of the king's army, Prince John of Lancaster and the Earl of Westmoreland, do not incline to risk a decisive battle, and hence they invite the ring-leaders of the insurgents, when both armies are confronting each other near Gaultree forest, to hold a conference. This leads to a compromise, according to which the insurgent vassals, by authority of the king, receive the assurance that their troubles shall be redressed, and at the same time a disbandment of the troops is stipulated for both sides. The royal troops, however, receive secret orders of a treacherous import, not only to keep together, but to pursue the disbanded insurgent army, and to annihilate it. This they do, and Archbishop Scroop and his fellow-conspirators are without delay led off to execution.

Meantime the king's strength is failing him, and even the news of the destruction of his enemies does not tend to restore him. Feeling the approach of death, Henry orders the crown to be placed on his pillow. Prince Henry, during one of the king's fainting spells, supposing him dead, takes the crown to try it on; but the king recovers, and commands the diadem to be restored to its place, upbraiding the son for his precipitancy; although the dying king is so well satisfied with the innocence of his motives for the action, that he fully excuses the prince. The king soon after this incident died, and the son having succeeded to the throne, on his return from his coronation was rudely saluted by Falstaff, who presumed on the former intimacy. Falstaff, however, was sternly reproved by the new monarch and discarded.

There is a quieter tone pervading this second part: it hardly has the freshness and vigor of the first. Indeed, it would be difficult to keep up the first impressions of Falstaff and the impetuous valor of Hotspur. Even Shallow cannot make up for them. The king is dying, the king and his army, but in his quiet progress to the grave. The most striking speech in the play is that of Henry the Fourth's on sleep. The lower rank of the people come more to the front in this play; and we have more prominence given than before to the low tavern life and the country squire and his servants. Though the hand of sickness is on the king, yet "Ready, aye ready," is still his word; and as soon as Hotspur is beaten, another army marches against Northumberland. Thus the archbishop and whose two separate rebellions Shakespeare has put into one. How strong is the wish of the old king for the redemption of his son, Prince Hal, from the slough in which he is wallowing. And in the king's last speech to his gallant heir we see the man's whole nature—wily to win, strong to hold, a purpose in all he did. For Prince Hal we have one unworthy scene, two creditible ones. The shadow of his father's death is sickness on him, and he goes in half self-disgust to his old, loose companions; but there is not much enjoyment in his forced mirth; he feels ashamed of himself, and soon leaves Falstaff and his old life forever. He now deeply feels the degradation of being Falstaff's friend. On hearing of the war again, the prince changes at a touch and is himself. The next time we see him in his true self is at his father's sick bed, where again he wins to him his father's heart. When Prince Hal becomes king, his treatment of his brothers, the Chief Justice, and Falstaff, is surely wise and right in all three cases. One does feel, though, for Falstaff; but certainly what he ought to have had, he got—the chance of reformation. What other reception could Henry, in the midst of his new state, give in public to the slowly and debauched old rascal who thrust himself upon him, than the rebuke he so well administered. In the second part, Falstaff has his old wit and humor, and his slipperiness when caught; but we have him now as more of the sharper, the cheat, and the player on others. The scenes with Shallow and Silence, and the choice of soldiers, are beyond all praise. We cannot help noting the use the old rascal intended to make of his power over the young king. Justice now overthrows the rogues. Falstaff dies in obscurity and poverty; Nym and Bardolph are hung in France; Pistol is stripped of his braggart honor. Poins alone, the best of the set, vanishes silently, so that the whole wild set breaks up and disappears, leaving the world to laugh over them and their leader forever.

THE LIFE OF KING HENRY V.

See Page 361.

On the writings of the chronologist Holinshed this drama is also founded. Shakespeare truthfully celebrates this, his favorite hero, as the ideal king and warrior; and history itself grants to the master of dramatic art that in this opinion he is entirely justified. The year of the composition of this history is alluded to in the prologue to Act V. of the play, viz., 1599. One cannot mention the year without the thought of that great contemporary of Shakespeare, Edmund Spenser, burnt out of the Irish house he has lovingly described, losing there one of his children, and dying miserably in a tavern in King Street, Westminster, on January 13, 1599, leaving behind him these last lines of his unfinished Faerie Queene as the subject of his last thoughts, as his last prayer on earth:

"For all that moveth doth in Change delight:
But thenceforth, all shall rest eternally.
With him that is the God of Saboth's light.
O! that great Saboth's God grant my Saboth's right!"

Book VII., Canto VIII., stanza II.

One likes to think of the two poets knowing, honoring, and loving one another, of Shakespeare's following Spenser to his grave in the Abbey, near Chaucer. There is manifest allusion to the different parts of music in the first act.

Scene.—In England and France.

The incidents represented in this drama reach from the first year of Henry V.'s ascension to the throne to his marriage with Katharine, and are spread over a period of six years. Henry had scarcely come into possession of the English crown, when he prepared ways and means to carry out and fulfil his dying father's injunctions, and by conquests abroad seeks to obliterate the stain which tarnishes his title to the crown on account of his father's ne'er-do-well son. In pursuance of this plan, he renews an old and outlawed claim to the crown of France, and, for the purpose of enforcing his right, makes preparation by gathering and equipping a large army. The French court, intimidated by such a claim and warlike demonstration, basely attempted the capture and assassination of the English monarch.
through bribing three powerful noblemen who are intimately connected with Henry. This plot is discovered, and the conspirators are executed. Henry, having invaded France on her breach of treaty, marches with his troops to Harlebe, summoning that city by herald to surrender, but being answered with contempt and defiance, he determines to take the town by storm, in which he succeeds. Afterwards, at the great battle of Agincourt, King Henry encounters the French army, which outnumbers him six to one, and gains a splendid victory, which breaks the power of the French, although the culmination was not really reached until the capture of Rouen, Jan. 16, 1419. The King of France is now compelled to yield to the severe conditions which the victor imposes, namely, to acknowledge Henry as heir to the French crown, and to give him his daughter, the Princess Katherine, for his wife. In this play Sir John Falstaff does not appear in action, but, according to Mrs. Quickly's description, meets a quiet and gentle death, after a prolonged illness.

There is but brief play of the tender passion in this drama, which is fairly resonant with the clash of contending armies, of fierce alarms, wounds, and death. There are some exceedingly fine scenes, as mark the touching picture of the dying York and Suffolk, and the humility with which King Henry after the battle of Agincourt, on bended knees, ascribes the credit of the victory alone to God.

Henry is the true warrior; Shakespeare's ideal king, evidently. See the good humor and self control with which the king receives the dauphin's insolent message (sting him though it does), and his strong resolve to win or die; and see the devotion of all his thoughts and energies to carry out this resolve. See how he convicts traitors out of their own mouths, and sends them to death, not for his personal wrong, but for seeking England's ruin. Note Henry as the soldier; the splendid patriotism and rhetoric of his speeches drives the warm blood to our cheeks as we read. How humble he is when victory is his, and how well he merits it by his foresight, skill, and valor. As a lover, the character of the king comes out well — no grand words, no pretence, but just a plain, blunt soldier, with a good heart. We can hardly realize that such a man was the father of that miserably weak creature, Henry the Sixth.

THE FIRST PART OF KING HENRY VI.

See Page 390.

Shakespeare, in producing this work, was perhaps indebted only to the Unfinished Chronicles, which, however, was handled with poetical freedom, without binding himself to dates regarding the historical facts. It was written in 1597, as Malone informs us, but according to Chawners in 1593. The play is ushered in with solemn music.

SCENE.—Partly in England and France.

The drama opens with the scene of Henry V.'s body lying in state previous to being solemnly buried at Westminster. The crown of England has scarcely been transferred from the head of the conqueror of France to that of his son, yet a tender child, when the French, animated by the spirited courage and valor of the maid Joan of Arc, seize the favorable opportunity to reconquer their old possessions and to take the oath of allegiance to Charles, their hereditary prince.

Meantime, the quarrels of the dukes of York and Somerset, disputing the claims of the rival houses of York and Lancaster, appeal to Warwick, Suffolk, and their followers, then present, in confirmation of their respective claims. The lords thus appealed to declining to answer, Plantagenet, Duke of York, bids those who agree with him to approve it by plucking a white rose. Beaufort, Earl of Somerset, adopts for the same purpose, as his emblem, the red rose, that the partisans of each might be known. These troubles form the embryo of that interminable series of fierce internecine wars which shortly thereafter drenched the kingdom in blood. The hero Talbot, Earl of Shrewsbury and his son, John Talbot, near Bordeaux, with their little army of soldiers, were by the united armies of the enemy overpowered and sacrificed to the personal jealousies of the English nobility, who failed to send reinforcements. The extraordinary success which attended the French armies under Joan of Arc, surnamed the Pucelle, in raising the siege of Orleans and everywhere repulsing the English, made the latter at last yield to victories too many to recall. On being outlawed by the English under the Duke of York, she was, with a cruelty that marked the ferocity of the age, burned as a witch. Meantime, King Henry VI. is induced, by the artful suggestions of the Earl of Suffolk, to ask for the hand of Margaret, daughter of Reignier, Duke of Anjou. An alliance is formed quickly with her father, and the duke is sent to France to accompany the princess to England. With the consummation of this fatal marriage for England concludes the drama.

In the play of Henry the Sixth, Shakespeare deals in three parts with a weak king, Henry the Sixth; in one part with a strong king, Richard the Third. The subject is a splendid one for the dramatist. On the one side is the narrative of individual love; on the other, the overthrow of a kingdom and a throne. The love of Guinevere and Lancclot of old is reproduced in the guilty love of Margaret and Suffolk, leading to the bloody wars of York and Lancaster, which filled England with civil war and lost her the realm of France. The fair Margaret was turned by ambition into "the she-wolf of France." Her pride was so overweening, that it caused her to level the noble Humphrey, the sole support of her husband's throne, and thus to open room for all the angry turmoil of the nobles and the design of the base and crafty Gloucester to work their way.

And then the ruined queen, bereft of husband, love, child, throne, has nothing left to console her, but waits grimly for the overthrow of her enemies, clutching over the villanies of Richard and the storm that is gathering to overwhelm him at Bosworth Field. The characters of the far-seeling Exeter, the noble Talbot, that splendid soldier, the gallant Salisbury and the generous Bedford, stand out among a host of traitors, or worse, that figure on the scene. The cruelty of the English and the indifference of the French to that splendid woman, Joan of Arc, appear in bold and sad relief. There is noble material for tragic poetry here. On the side of Lancaster the chief personal interest is that of Queen Margaret. The great Duke of York dies, but his place is filled by the portentous figure of Gloucester, so terrible by his energy, his disregard of moral restraint, and his remorseless hatred to all who are opposed to him. Henry VI. is the feeblest of Shakespeare's English kings. Possessed of that negative kind of sanctity which shuns evil, but shunning courageous effort also, he becomes the cause or occasion of almost as much evil as if he were actively criminal.
THE SECOND PART OF KING HENRY VI.

See Page 410.

SCENE.—In various parts of England.

The second part of this tragedy, considered by itself, comprises the period intervening between the marriage of the king to Margaret and the first battle of the St. Albans, covering a period of ten years. Scarcely have the nuptial ceremonies between King Henry and Margaret of Anjou been celebrated, when the new queen develops a plan to obtain unlimited control over her husband, and by the aid of several powerful nobles, especially by that of her lover Suffolk and of Cardinal Beaufort, Bishop of Winchester, to force the Duke of Gloucester from his position of Regent. Their first attack is aimed at the wife of Gloucester, the ambitious Eleanor Cobham, who is accused of witchcraft, sentenced to recant in public and to endure an imprisonment for life. Immediately upon this, the virtuous Duke of Gloucester himself is taken in custody, and charged with high treason. All this is done against the will and desire of the king, who entertains no suspicion against the Regent, whose accusers, becoming aware that their evidence of guilt is insufficient, cause the Regent's assassination, and on the day set for his trial he is found dead in his bed. The Duke of Suffolk is accused by the popular voice of having murdered the Regent, which oblige the king to send Suffolk into banishment. He was afterwards taken at sea by pirates, and in a little cockpit beheaded. Meanwhile, Salisbury and Warwick, who, from the first dispute in the Temple-garden, became convinced of Plantagenet's claim to the crown, having had first removed from him the "attaint of blood," reinstated in the dukedom of York, now salute him as king. The scene of the terrible end of Cardinal Beaufort, uncle to Henry VI., is graphically delineated in the third act. A prey to the keenest remorse, the wretched prelate is represented on his death-bed. The king, with his nobles, pay him a visit; but the cardinal, disregarding all, raves incoherently about his crimes. At the moment of his death, the king demands a sign of his hope; but instead of giving it, he grins, grashes his teeth, and expires, leaving Henry horror-struck. Meanwhile, the government of Ireland is intrusted to the Duke of York, who, before his departure, in order to test the feelings of the populace, induces an Irishman, a bold commoner, named Cade, to announce himself as a descendant of Edmund Mortimer, and to aspire to the latter's pretensions to the crown.

is cruelly treated by the revengeful Queen Margaret, who places a paper crown upon his head and taunts him, and while offering a handkerchief dipped in the blood of his recently murdered son, asks the duke to dry his tears with it. Soon after this scene the Duke of York is murdered. The powerful assistance rendered by the Earl of Warwick, surnamed the "King-Maker," now gives the vanquished hosts of York strength to turn the tide of war and to defeat their adversaries near Tewton, in Yorkshire, and Duke Edward is raised to the throne. King Henry flees to Scotland, but is afterwards captured and placed in the Tower. Queen Margaret and her son go to Paris to obtain possible aid from the King of France, whose willingness to aid them is much weakened by the presence of Warwick. The latter had received from his liege lord orders to sue for the hand of the Princess Bona, King Lewis's sister. Suddenly a messenger arrives from England, bearing the news of Edward's marriage to the beautiful widow, Lady Elizabeth Grey. Enraged at this insult, Warwick concludes a treaty with Margaret and Lewis, and dethrones Edward, who escapes to Burgundy. Here he obtains troops, which enable him soon to effect a landing at Ravenspurgh. The people of England flock to the support of King Edward, who, from his social and kindly manners, has always been favored by the populace, and look upon Warwick and his allies as favoring the cause of the nobles. The city of London, too, espouses the side of Edward, and furnishes men to swell his constantly increasing army. Finally, in the decisive battle of Barnet, Warwick suffers complete defeat, and dies on the field. Prince Edward and his mother, Queen Margaret, being taken prisoners in the still more conclusive battle of Tewksbury, where the remnant of the Lancastrian power is really annihilated, are brought before the victorious Edward, who roughly charges the prince with rebellion, but is so forcibly answered by the royal youth, that Gloucester, Clarence, and their followers assassinate the prince almost in the king's presence. The imprisoned king, Henry VI., is afterwards murdered in the Tower by the duke, Richard of Gloucester (afterwards Richard III.). With an expression of Gloucester's inspired villany upon the offspring of Edward, and the banishment of Queen Margaret by Edward IV., the tragedy is concluded.

Those deep mines of historical wealth, the Chronicles of Hall and Holinshed, furnished Shakespeare with the data for this play, which was entered at Stationers' Hall, by Andrew Wise, October 20, 1597, and published in a quarto volume the same year, though it was probably written in 1593. The length of time comprised in this drama is about fourteen years, covering the last six years of King Richard's life—beginning with Clarence's imprisonment, 1477, and ending with Richard's death at Bosworth Field, 1485.

SCENE.—England.

The threatened extinction of the house of Lancaster, as well as the falling health of King Edward, staped the ambitious Richard, Duke of Gloucester, to begin his struggle for the throne by threatening while the Duke of Clarence, his older brother, whom he causes to be murdered in the Tower. King Edward died soon after this event, after having seemingly reconciled his blood-relations and followers with the brothers and cousins of his wife, the Queen Elizabeth, and having appointed his only living brother, Richard, Duke of York, as guardian over his minor children, first conferring on him, during the minority of the Prince of Wales, the office of Protector and Regent. Richard, however, upon the death of his royal brother, immediately takes the two young sons of Edward — the Prince of Wales and the Duke of York — away from the control of the relations on their mother's side, Rivers, Grey, and Vaughan, and has these unhappy noblemen, under the charge of high treason, executed. A like fate meets Lord Hastings, whom, having proved himself utterly averse to Gloucester's plans of usurpation, he denounces as guilty of treason and sorcery at the Council table, and procures an immediate condemnation and execution. Through the powerful assistance and connivance of the Duke of Buckingham, who insidiously spreads a report of the illegitimate birth of the late King Edward, as well as of his two sons, Richard succeeds in having the crown formally offered to him, which offer he accepts, and with hypocritical reluctance. The sons of Edward, having been placed in the Tower, are, soon after the coronation of Richard, and by his order, murdered by his creatures, Drigton and Forrest, to execute their cruel task at midnight by suffocating the royal boys.

The king's next crime was the poisoning of his wife, so that he might be free to marry the oldest daughter of his brother Edward, Princess Elizabeth. Buckingham having opposed the murder of the sons of Edward, soon becomes a thorn in Richard's side, and he punishes that nobleman by a refusal to fulfil the promises that had been made him prior to Richard's ascending to the English throne. This duplicity on the part of the king causes Buckingham's defection, for which he is arrested and at last executed.

Richard III. is interrupted in his schemes of violence and murder. Henry, Duke of Richmond, lands with a large army near Milford-haven, and is marching towards London, when on the way thither he meets the army of Richard III., who, with their hands are death-dealing hands of a warrior in the battle of Bosworth Field. The crown now comes to the victor, who rules under the name of Henry VII., and by his marriage to Elizabeth, daughter of Edward IV., unite in firm and enduring amity the houses of York and Lancaster, and thus forever settles the fierce quarrels and bloody conflicts between the rival races of the White and of the Red Rose.

It may be here stated that the ancestors of Shakespeare are said to have fought at the battle of Bosworth Field, and derived their warlike name from military services rendered to the cause of Richmond in that famous action.

Shakespeare has most powerfully depicted the contending motives and feelings in the character of Richard III. His depressing and insulting his victims with the zest of grim humor, and his delight in galling fools and in his own villany, are admirably and frequently brought out. Villain as he is, he has the villain's coolness, too, He never loses temper, except when he strikes the third messenger. Richard is a skilful general, looking to things himself, and prompt to take precautions against all that may endanger his own safety. The Duke of York — a soldier's death, and in the last and effective battle-scene, where, unhorsed, he so gallantly fights on, we almost admire him. The action of the play covers fourteen years — from Henry VI.'s murder, May 21, 1471, to Richard III.'s death, August 22, 1485.

THE LIFE OF KING HENRY VIII.

See Page 486.

NOT published until 1643, when it appeared in folio form. It is the Epilogue to the historical cycle of the bard's dramas, and was probably written in 1601.

SCENE.—Chiefly in London and Westminster; once at Kimbolton.

This historical drama comprises a period of twelve years, commencing in the twelfth year of King Henry's reign (1521), and ending with the christening of Elizabeth in 1533. The Duke of Buckingham (son of the same duke who had been executed by order of the tyrant, Richard III.) becomes unfortunately entangled in personal disputes with Cardinal Wolsey, who, under the reign of Henry VII., had obtained great influence and power, and now finds means and ways to lure several intimate attendants of his rival, and thus to convict the duke of treason. Soon after this, Henry meets, at a grand masquerade given by Wolsey, Lady Anne Boleyn, and, struck with her beauty, immediately singled her out from all the ladies present, and falls violently in love with her. Anne Boleyn's charms enhance the scruples he had long pretended to feel as to the legality of his marriage to Queen Katharine, his deceased brother's widow. Cardinal Wolsey fears the connection of his monarch with an Englishwoman, who is suspected, moreover, to favor the doctrines of the Reformation; considering this affair also as prejudicial to his own dignity and that of the Pope, he sends a message to the Pope, to whom Queen Katharine had appealed, to delay the decree of divorce. This letter, and a statement of the immense possessions and wealth of the Cardinal, by a singular mistake, fall into the hands of the king, who, enraged at this treachery, immediately divests Wolsey of all his worldly pomp and offices, and the fallen favorite is only saved from being found guilty of treason by his sudden death. The new queen, Anne Boleyn, is now crowned with great state and ceremony, while Queen Katharine dies heart-broken at her divorce from the king. Meantime, a conspiracy is planned against Archbishop Cranmer, to whom the king is indebted for the ecclesiastical consent to the divorce. Cranmer meets his royal master, to whom he had been accused by enemies who had been eagerly plotting his destruction for favoring the doctrines of the Reformation. The prelate, glad of the opportunity, kneels, pleads his cause, and so well satisfies the king of his innocence, that he raises him, and restores him to more than his former share of favor. The play closes with the ceremony of christening Princess Elizabeth, the afterwards famed Queen Elizabeth of England.

Written, as this play was, at a period treading close upon Shakespeare's life,—in the reign of the great, but at times irascible daughter of Henry VIII., Queen Elizabeth,—we can well understand how Shakespeare was obliged to temporize and sacrifice the opinions and unities largely to policy. The strongest sympathies which have been awakened in us by the play run opposite to the course of its action. Our sympathy is for the grief and goodness of Queen Katharine, while the course of the actor requires us to entertain, as a theme of joy and compensatory satisfaction, the coronation of Anne Boleyn, and the birth of her daughter, which are in fact a part of Katharine's injury, and would seem to amount to little less than the triumph of the wrong. This defect mars the effect of the play as a whole. The scenes in the gallery and council-chamber are full of life and vigor, and are, besides, picturesque and historical. Note that scene between Gardiner and Cranmer. Cardinal Wolsey is drawn with superb power. Ambition, fraud, and vindictiveness have made him their own, yet cannot quite ruin a nature possessed of noble qualities. In the fate of Cardinal Wolsey our second interest centres; and his soliloquy upon his downfall from power is among the finest the poet ever wrote. The opening of the play—the conversation between Buckingham, Norfolk, and Abergavenny—has the full stamp of Shakespeare's genius upon it, and is full of life, reality, and freshness.

TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

See Page 510.

A TRAGICO comedy, founded on Chancer's "Epos Troilus and Cressida." The play was written in 1602, and entered in Stationers' Hall, February 3, 1603, but not printed till 1609.

SCENE.—Troy, and the camp of the Greeks in front of that city.

Calchas, a Trojan priest, treacherously leaving the cause of his country, is taking part with the Greeks, to whom he becomes of great service. As a reward for these services, he demands the exchange of an eminent Trojan, named Antenor, for his daughter Cressida, who lives under the protection of her uncle Pandarus, in Troy, where her beauty and charms have made a deep impression on the heart of Prince Troilus, a son of Priam the king. Cressida has already accepted the suit of her lover, and was betrothed to him, when her happiness is interrupted by the arrival of Diomedes, who is ordered by her father to have her exchanged, and brought back to him. The lovers, on parting, swear eternal fidelity, and Troilus soon finds an opportunity to reach the camp of the Greeks. Here he learns the sad news of the unfaithfulness of his betrothed, who had already transferred her love to Diomedes, and convinces himself, by obvious proof, of her defection. Meantime, Andromache and Cassandra, the wife and sister of Hector, alarmed at the prophecies they have had of his fate, write, entreating him not to go to battle, Andromache making his infant join in their prayers to dissuade him. But affirming his vow to the gods, his honor, and his fame, he resists, rushes to combat, and is slain by Achilles. Troilus now vows to avenge the death of his brother Hector on the Greeks, and by such vengeance to stifle his grief. With a terrible curse against the panderer Pandarus, the drama is concluded.

This is the most paradoxical and variously interpreted of all the dramas of Shakespeare. This heroic comedy, tragic-comedy, or parody, as some have termed it, is not merely written as a pleasant satire on ancient knighthood and heroism, but is perchance worked out to serve a counterpart to Falstaffianism, with the intent of quieting, or soothing the noble breasts of the 16th century with the dubious consolation that knighthood among the ancients was of no finer quality. The principal idea is rather intended to show the deeply founded and effective contrast existing between the spiritual and intellectual formation of the ancient Greeks, as compared with the modern aim of Christianity. The play points to the fact that the Trojan war—as extolled by Homer—in so far as its real issue was concerned, turned simply upon the recapturing of an adulterous woman who had eloped with her paramour, and whose immoral conduct can by no means be excused on account of Paris's ideal beauty. In this play the moral is rendered prominent, that the kidnaping of Helen did not deserve the great Greek war of retaliation, since the honor of the people had not been more impugned by the action of Paris than by that of Helen. Thus the play causes the moral conviction of the reader to revolt against such an aim, and this effect of the drama becomes the lasting impression. The love-story of the faithful Troilus, and the false and lustful Cressida, which gives its name to the play (albeit it is not its real turning-point), serves only as a modified repetition of the history of Menelaus and his faithless spouse, Helen, and hence presents as all the more conspicuously glaring the crime that led to the famed Trojan war.

CORIOLANUS.

See Page 536.

SHAKESPEARE derived his material from Plutarch's "Life of Coriolanus," which he read in North's translation. This tragedy was neither entered at Stationers' Hall nor printed till 1623, but probably written in 1609 or 1610.

SCENE.—In the city of Rome and the territories of the Volscians.

Caio Marcius, a scion of one of the oldest and noblest families of Rome, who, after his father's early death, is educated by his mother, Volumnia, had already while a youth shown his valor as a warrior in the battles against banished Tarquin. Every war brought him fresh public acknowledgments of his merit and honor. Thus he had attained great dignity and renown, when a dispute between the senate and the people occurred, caused by the severe oppressions of the patricians and wealthy citizens, which the senate sustained. Owing to the humorous eloquence of Menenius Agrippa, however, the people were quieted, after granting them five tribunes and representatives in the senate-chamber. The people are now willing to surrender a duty they had hitherto refused. But the patricians are at first discontented with the innovation, which is especially very violently opposed by Marcius. A war with the Volscians gives him occasion to renew his valorous deeds. The general, Cominius, who praises the greatness of his military exploits before the soldiers, gives him the name Corio-lans, for the victories he attained near Corioli. Soon after this occurrence, he is at once elected a candidate for the consulate, but, against all precedent, he imprudently, in a speech, derides the people, and they withdraw their votes from him. Highly incensed at this defection, he assails the populace in an oration before the senate, demanding the abolishment of the tribunal. The people, embittered and enraged at this, threaten to throw him from the Tarquin rock, but he is rescued by the patricians. Failing to consolidate the plebeian faction, he is banished from Rome, and, burning with rage, vows the destruction of the city. He joins the Volscian forces, and by their prince, Aufidius, is made commander-in-chief of their army, then about to be led against his own countrymen. His mother, urged by the imperilled Romans, is prevailed upon to go with her kinsmen to the camp of the Volscians, to pacify, lix if possible, her son. Listening to her entreaties, Coriolanus resolves to retreat, and thus Rome is spared. But the Volscians, fired by Tullus, are now dispersed with Coriolanus, and call him to account for his action. He is about to defend himself in public, when Tullus, fearing the impression of his eloquence, under the taint of traitors, assassimates him. His corpse is buried by the Volscians with all the honors due to his noble memory.

Coriolanus is among the finest of the group of Shakespeare's Roman plays. The hero lived in the early days of Rome, in those pure, old, austere times when the great city had driven Tarquin from his lustful throne; for it was against that monarch that Coriolanus had won his first garland of oak by overwhelmingly defeating him. Now nobly the pure white figure of Volания rises, clad in all the virtues that made the noble Roman lady. See how she overcomes her mother's righteous indignation against her townsman's injustice to her gallant son; and how with happy victory won she returns to Rome to give the proud city its first blood.

Coriolanus is in many respects a noble character and among the "flower of warriors;" but his pride is overweening, and that flaws and ruins the jewel of his renown. Treated with ingratitude, base and outrageous though in his case it was, he cannot put his country above himself. His grip is on her throat, when his wife, Virgilia, stirs his mother to appeal to him, and in that scene in the Volscian camp, Coriolanus, who has thought himself above nature, cannot resist their appeals. His wife, mother, and boy prevail. Coriolanus is himself again, and takes death, as he should, at the hands of his country's foes.

TITUS ANDRONICUS.

See Page 564.

THIS play is the tragedy represented by human depravity in its most vindictive form—a thirst for revenge. Whence the poet gleaned the material for this play has not been accurately ascertained. It was one of his first attempts at a drama, and was written as early as 1587, though some say 1589, when Shakespeare was followed by twenty-five years of age. A great many editors and critics have supposed the play spurious, for the color of style is wholly different from that of Shakespeare's other plays, but nevertheless the evidence is now strong in favor of its genuineness.

SCENE.—Rome and the adjoining country.

Titus Andronicus, a noble Roman general, victorious in the war against the Goths, returns, crowned with honors, to Rome, bringing back with him, as captives, Tamora, the queen of the Goths, with her sons, Alarbus, Chiron, and Demetrius. Of his own twenty-four sons, but four were left to him; the rest suffered death for their country on the battle-field. Through Andronicus's valor, Saturninus is raised to the vacant throne of the Empire. The emperor marries the captive queen of the Goths, and is by her goaded to bloody deeds of revenge against Titus, who had ordered the slaying of her son Alarbus as a sacrifice for the fallen sons of Rome. Tamora now instigates her wicked sons, Demetrius and Chiron, to murder Bassianus, brother to the emperor and husband of Lavinia, daughter of Titus Andronicus, whose dead body they remove; and still further urged on to diabolical deeds by Aaron, a Moor (who is beloved by Tamora), they deprive Lavinia of her chastity, cut off her tongue and both her hands. Thus mangled, the widowed Lavinia alarms her young nephew by following him and being unable to speak. The miscreants themselves report the cruel deed to the emperor, and charge two sons of Titus with the crime of having murdered Lavinia's husband. Titus, in the anxiety to save his sons, is insidiously advised by Aaron to cut off his own hand, which he sends as an expiatory sacrifice to the emperor. The latter returns his hand, accompanied by the heads of his already executed sons. The great afflictions suffered by Titus weaken his reason. By means of a staff held in the stump of his arm, Lavinia writes the names of the murderers of her husband in the sand, and causes thus the forming of a plan of revenge between her father, her uncle Marcus, and her now only brother, Lucius. Meantime, the empress bears a child. This illegal issue of the Moor, Aaron, by the empress, is, to avoid detection by her husband, the emperor, sent by his mother to be murdered. Demetrius and Chiron, the ready instruments of her crime, profess immediate compliance, and draw their weapons to dispatch it, but Aaron calls them to task. Marcus, urges them to revenge, and vows vengeance to any one that touches it. To further conceal the foul deed, the Moor kills the nurse, and hastens with his child to the Goths. This same course is taken by Lucius, who now, like a second Coriolanus, advances against Rome at the head of a Gothic army. Dire punishment overtakes Saturninus and Tamora, who are slain; the latter had, however, before her execution, a thymelic meal set before her—that is, the flesh of her own slain sons were served up for the repast. Aaron is buried alive; Titus (a second Virginius) stab his own outraged daughter, and is himself slain by the hands of Saturninus. Lucius, the son, and Marcus, the brother of Titus Andronicus, press a kiss of love upon the pale lips of the murdered hero. Lucius, the favorite of the people, is proclaimed Emperor of Rome, and rules wisely and well the lately terribly disturbed empire.

ROMEO AND JULIET.

See Page 581.

ONE of the earlier productions of our poet, and one of the most celebrated of his dramas, this play appeared first in print in 1597, and had, up to the year 1609, been published in four editions, each issue with improvements and additions. It was written, without doubt, in 1592.

SCENE.—For the greater portion of the play, in Verona; in the Fifth Act, once at Mantua.

Between two patrician houses of Verona, the Capulets and Montagues, existed from time immemorial a deadly feud. The family of Montague had an only son, named Romeo; that of Capulet but one daughter, named Juliet. Romeo's outward demeanor and education were all the model of noble manhood, while Juliet's form and features were in unison with the purity of her mind, the ideal of noble womanhood. They did not know each other, when it happened that the old Capulet prepared a festival for his friends, and Romeo, the young heir of the Montagues, introduces himself, disguised, with some gay friends, his cousins Benvolio and Mercutio, who are also in disguise, to this grand entertainment of their enemies. Here obtaining a sight of Juliet, Romeo falls at once in love with her.
An interesting dialogue takes place between the lovers, which is interrupted by Juliet's nurse. Tybalt, a fierykinsman of Juliet's, having discovered Romeo, vows revenge on the intruder. The interview, however, has succeeded in producing the most ardent passion between Romeo and Juliet, and the latter endeavors to secure the interest of her nurse, of whom she makes careful notations. She is also in love with her nurse and is provoked by Tybalt, the fierce cousin of Juliet, with Mercutio, the gallant kinsman of Romeo. Mercutio is slain; and Romeo, who had endeavored to prevent this duel, allows himself, by his momentary passion, to be drawn into a conflict with Tybalt, in which he kills the latter. A tumult ensues, the heads of the Capulets and Montagues, with the prince, arrive at the scene, and the latter, not fully aware of the provocation, orders the banishment of Tybalt. He, with a final speech, leaves the window, holds a stolen interview, and swearing eternal constancy, prepares to depart by the way he came. During this scene between the lovers, the nurse calls Juliet, who alternately answers her, and tenderly takes leave of her lover. Romeo, by the advice of the good Friar Laurence, lies to Mantua. Juliet, inconsolable over this separation, weeps bitterly. Her parents think that the death of her cousin Tybalt is the cause of her tears, and resolve to marry her to the kinsman of the prince, Count Paris, who now suea for her hand. Juliet, to avoid marrying Count Paris, and to preserve her faithfulness to Romeo, swallows an opiate furnished her by Friar Laurence, the effect of which is to produce the temporary semblance of death, and is found by her nurse and others in this trance on the morning of the intended nuptials. Universal grief follows, and Friar Laurence, with a view to moderate it, and to prove his friendship for Romeo, recommends the immediate interment of Juliet's body. Meantime, the messenger sent by Friar Laurence is not admitted, because he had tarried in a post-house, and returns home without seeing Romeo, while Balthasar, Romeo's servant, although enabled to communicate with his master, only informs him of Juliet's death and burial, not her true state of life. Romeo, in his despair, procures a deadly potion, returns to Verona, where the friar visits Juliet's tomb at midnight, unwatched, from the misrepresentation of the friar's note, with her reported death being but a trance. Count Paris, the intended husband selected by Juliet's parents, meets Romeo; they quarrel, fight, and Paris falls. Romeo takes a final leave of his seemingly dead mistress, and swallows the poison. At this moment, Friar Laurence sails to await Juliet's awakening. She, on learning the melancholy catastrophe, kills herself, and dies in the arms of Romeo. The friar previously requests her to follow him into a convent, but is frightened off by approaching footsteps. Juliet, imprinting an affectionate farewell kiss on the lips of the dead Romeo, takes his dagger and stabs herself. Meanwhile, Paris's page has summoned the guards, who, on seeing what has happened, call the prince, the Capulets and the Montague families to the scene, while the other attendants bring Laurence and Romeo's servant thither. The prince investigates the tragedy, and Friar Laurence rehearsesthe details of the melancholy story. His statement is corroborated by the page and Balthasar, and also by a letter from Rome to his father. Over the bodies of their unhappy children, the deadly enmity of the Capulet and Montague families ceases, and they are finally and effectively reconciled by the great grief that has overwhelmed them.

This drama is among the most powerful of the great poet in strong delineation of passion and richness of fancy. In Juliet we have the first striking figure of Shakespeare's youthful conception of womanhood. The glorious figure of girlhood, clad in the beauty of the southern spring, stepping out for scarce two days from the winter of her grand but loveless home into the sunshine and warmth of love, and then sinking back into the horrors of the charmed-house and the grave, is one that ever will be the student of Shakespeare. The deeper and richer note of love which the great bard has struck becomes deeper and richer still in Romeo and Juliet. Fierce Tybalt; gay, fiery Mercutio; gallant Benvolio; tender, chivalrous Romeo— we see them all in fancy as they move under the intense blue of the Italian sky. The day is hot; the Capulets are abroad; Mercutio's laugh rings down the street; his jewelled cap flames in the sunlight. Such sights and sounds as these crowd on the mind's eye as we read and think. "Passion lends the lovers power," as the old song says. It is the time of the affections and warm youthful blood. But these violent delights have violent ends, and Juliet, "ill-divining soul," prepares us for the end that awaits the delicious, passionate love of the garden scene. Far above anything Shakespeare had yet written stands this and the lovers' subsequent meeting and parting. The character of Juliet, too, is the grudging star of the play—far above Romeo, whose sentimental weeping for Rosaline, and grief when he hears of the order for his banishment, call forth a well-deserved reproach from Friar Laurence. The Nurse, so thoroughly a character, is the first and only figure of the kind in Shakespeare (except, perhaps, Mrs. Quickly). The fussy, bustling, hot-tempered old Capulet is a capital figure, too. The play is "young" all through, not only in its passions, but in its conceits and its excess of fancy. The time of the action of the play is five and a half days. The ball is on Sunday night; the lovers are married on Monday, and pass the night together. Juliet drinks the sleeping draught on Tuesday night, and on Wednesday, instead of marrying Paris, is found seemingly dead and entombed. She sleeps more than forty-two hours. On Thursday Romeo returns, and on his way to the tomb he discovereth the body of Friday. She stabs herself, and the families are roused from their sleep to come to the tomb, as previously related.

It has not yet been decided as conclusive what Shakespeare obtained his basis for this tract from North's English translation of Plutarch, or from Payne's older work, entitled "Palace of Pleasa-nor is the date of its composition stated as certain was probably written in 1605.

SCENE.—Athens and the contiguous woods.

Timon, a noble citizen of Athens, equally renowned for his patriotic love for the cause of his fatherland, as on account of his immense wealth, is charitable beyond prudence, without aim or measure. Surrounded by a crowd of parasites, he is distributing to one of them a rich jewel, nearly the last remains of his wealth. His friend, Apemantus, the cynical philosopher, warns him of the consequences of such prodigality, but his advice is not listened to. When reduced in fortune, he knocks at the door of his friends, who formerly had been his daily guests, but finds, as might be expected, closed doors and deaf ears. Filled with bitter rage, he once before invited these false friends for the last time to his place before them, in covered dishes, nothing but lukewarm water, a fitting symbol of their friendship, and, with terrible curses, throws the vessels at their heads. Abandoned and treated with the blackest ingratitude by those he had enriched and benefited, Timon spurs the hated city of his residence, and, renouncing human society, seeks the shelter of the forest, where he becomes an inveterate misanthrope. All invitations for a return to Athens he rejects; neither Flavius, his honest steward, who offers to divide his savings with him; nor Alcibiades, his general, who offers to revenge him; nor the senators of Athens, who offer him the highest office of honor, were able to change him. In this seclusion from the busy world, he draws from his bitter experience the motives of the people who come thus to meet him—not moved by pity or even curiosity, not for the purpose of consolation or atonement, but for the selfish and covetous reasons of thrift for gold, for it was rumored in Athens that, while digging roots, he had found a treasure which a miserly fellow had once buried. Still a prodigal with his gold, not for charitable purposes, but animated by evil intentions, Timon meets all who visit his retreat only to bide and excite, and so lead to the destruction of the hated human race. A warrior under Alcibiades at last finds Timon's grave, and reports the inscription, written by himself, witness to the lowness he felt for mankind until death.

JULIUS CAESAR.

See Page 627.

Among the materials used by Shakespeare in this play were North's translation of the biographies of Julius Caesar, Marcus Antonius, and Brutus, by Plutarch; perhaps Appian and Dio Cassius were not unknown to him. It was probably written in 1602, soon after the completion of Hamlet.

The political moral of the tragedy is, that the most unstatesmanlike and politically immoral policy is that which is not in keeping with the strictest requirements of the laws of right and equity. A treacherous or cruel deed, even carried out from noile or patriotic motives, cannot escape the Nemesis of retribution.

SCENE.—In the city of Rome; afterwards at Sardis, and near Philippus.

Julius Caesar, renowned for many gallant deeds, and for his brilliant victories loved by the Roman nobility as well as by the people, after vanquishing the younger Pompey in Spain, thought that the time had now come to carry out the ambitious desire, so long entertained, of making himself the absolute ruler of the Roman Empire. On his return to Rome, contention was caused by the display made of the vanquished prisoners—an ostentation which had not been previously attempted—and the magnificence of this triumphal march could not altogether drown the displeasure; nevertheless, the Romans vied in showing Caesar honors, which almost amounted to adoration. In fact, Caesar was already a monarch, and his admirers urged him now to assume the name and the crown of an emperor. As Caesar was now on the eve of his departure for the war against the Parthians, his partisans endeavored to spread the rumor that, according to a prophecy contained in the book of Sibyl, only a king or emperor could be victorious over that people. At the Lupercal festival, Antonius, approaching Caesar, offers him the crown, which is three times rejected by Caesar, and, amid deafening applause of the people, the crown is returned to the capitol. Caesar, however, in opposition to this act, displaces the two tribunes who had, in different parts of the city, deprived the columns erected in his honor of their royal mantle, and imprisoned several citizens who had called him king; this strange conduct at last awakened the anger and suspicion of some of the prominent Romans against Octavius and Augustus. At the instigation of Cassius, a conspiracy was formed. All was soon ready for execution, and it was resolved that Brutus should be the leader, because his mere presence would, so to say, sanctify and strengthen the justice of any action. Brutus was a true Roman in that luxurious and corrupt epoch of Roman history. Even the love and honor which Caesar had once bestowed on him he forgot, in his patriotic hope to redeem Rome, and by his leadership to make it the first among the noblest Romans. Without any offering of sacrifice or vow, the sacred league was formed, that Caesar at the festival of the Ides of March (the 15th) should be slain. Of the Roman ladies, Portia, the wife of Brutus and Cato's spirited daughter, was the only one who had knowledge of the conspiracy. On the fatal day, the assassination of Caesar was enacted in the senate-chamber, Caesar giving the first thrust. After having received twenty-three wounds, the last of which Brutus inflicted, Caesar falls. Cassius had urged that Mark Antony should also be slain, but the humane policy of Brutus saves him. Mark Antony weeps over Caesar's fall; and having obtained permission to make a funeral oration over the dead body, seizes the opportunity to so artfully work on the passions of his auditors, the turbulents Roman populace, as to cause a riot, leading at length to a civil war, in which he gains supreme power. His further attempts, however, to follow the example of Julius Caesar are frustrated, and he is compelled, against his will, to acknowledge Octavius Caesar and the influential Lepidus as triumvirs in the government, whose first act was that bloody proscription, from which even Cicero the great orator is not exempted, but falls a victim. After being present at the execution of those of their enemies who had lingers on the Roman people to embark for Macedonia to pursue Brutus and Cassius, who, after the news had been imparted to them that Portia had committed suicide by swallowing burning coals, venture, on the day of Cassius's birthday, the decisive battle of Philippi. Mark Antony seems on the point of gaining the last great battle against the conspirators, and dismays the day; Brutus, their great leader, to avoid falling into the victors' hands, and impressed with the fear denounced against him by Caesar's ghost, which had appeared to him the preceding night in his tent, commands his page Strato to let him fall on his sword, and thus dies. His corpse receives an honorable burial at the hands of his victorious enemies.

Julius Caesar is not the real hero of this play, but Brutus is; yet Caesar's spirit rules, as Cassius and Brutus before their deaths acknowledge. Caesar's murder is the centre and hinge of the play. The death of the great soldier overcomes his conquerors; for though his bodily presence is weak, his spirit rises, arms his avengers, and his assassins proclaim his might.
THE PLOTS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS.

Shakespeare has made the Caesar of his play not the brave and vigorous subdue of Britain and the Goths, but Caesar old, decaying, falling both in mind and body; his long success had ruined his character and turned his head. The character of Brutus is that of one of the noblest of men the poet has drawn,—not the noblest. Brutus believes himself the man to act the times right; but as honor calls him he must act. He is no judge of men; he cannot see that Cassius is playing on him as on a pipe; he misjudges Antony, and allows him to make that most effective appeal at Caesar's funeral to the passions of the fierce Roman mob; he always takes the wrong steps in action; he has his faults, too, as see his ungenerous upbraiding of Cassius about getting gold wrongfully, when he, Brutus, had previously asked for some of it: and how his vanity gives way to Cassius's appeal to him in the scene after Caesar's death. That is a glorious scene between Brutus and his wife — pure soul to soul; no thought of earthly dallying between them.

MACBETH.

See Page 647.

Holinshed's Chronicles, formed on the "History of Scotland" by the Scotch chronicler, Hector Boethius, forms the basis to the plot of this tragedy, which was written in 1606.

SCENE.—Principally in Scotland. At the end of the Fourth Act, in England.

The throne of Duncan, king of Scotland, is threatened by one of his vassals, who is aided by the Norwegians. But this danger is averted by the intransigent valor of his co-conspirators, Macbeth and Banquo, generals of the army. On their return from the last decisive victory, these officers meet, upon a lonesome heath, three witches; the first greets Macbeth as Thane of Glamis, the second as Thane of Cawdor, while the third banishes him with the prophetic announcement: "All hail, king that shall be hereafter!" * Nor does Banquo go away without a prophecy, for the witches say that his sons after him shall be kings in Scotland. The early fulfilment of the first two prophecies excite in Macbeth's breast the hope that the other will be fulfilled, and that he will ascend the throne of Scotland. Macbeth, without delay, had informed his wife of all that had been said, who with him set about the ambitious work, but withal an umbling and unscrupulous one, and consequently a person ever ready to do anything, however wrong, to accomplish her designs. Lady Macbeth is told by her husband that King Duncan is about to visit the castle, and she at once resolves to murder the king. Duncan, who on his journey is accompanied by Malcolm and Donalbain, his sons, and a numerous train of nobles and attendants, comes to the castle, where Macbeth, his wife, and Macduff, are met on the road by Macbeth, who has hastened to welcome him. The king's arrival causes great rejoicing; he makes valuable presents to the attendants and also to Lady Macbeth, his kind hostess, whom he presents with a valuable diamond. Being tired with his day's travels, Duncan retires early to sleep. At midnight the murderers lie to their terrible work. Macbeth wavers; but his wife knows how to banish all his scruples, and taunts him bitterly until he nerves himself for the bloody deed, and kills the sleeping king with the dagger of one of the king's officers on guard, in order to draw the suspicion on them. At morning dawn the bloody deed of the previous night is discovered. Although Macbeth and his lady are pretending the deepest sorrow and distress, and the former, in feigned rage, rushes to King Duncan's room and stabs the two officers on whom he endeavored to cast suspicion, all doubt who the real perpetrators are. Malcolm and Donalbain flee; Macbeth is crowned king, and thus the prediction of the weird sisters is literally fulfilled. Macbeth, after usurping the crown, to secure himself in the possession of it, caused Banquo to be assassinated by the hands of hired murderers, and celebrates his success by a grand banquet. He is alarmed in the midst of it by the appearance of Banquo's ghost! The queen and nobles, to whom the spectre is invisible, express amazement, and vainly strive to soothe him. Macduff, the Thane of Fife, hastens away and seeks refuge in England with Malcolm; but Macbeth storms his castle and murders pitilessly Lady Macduff and her children. Remorse and the dangers that menace her husband's throne having thrown Lady Macbeth into a dangerous condition, rest becomes a stranger to her harrowed mind; she walks in her sleep, and in that state discloses the secret of the king's murder to her physician and her attendant, and at last kills herself. The entire country is in revolution; one after another the Macbeths' friends, the Macduffs, are avenging their deaths, and Macbeth is driven finally, by their mischievous oracles, into a state bordering on insanity. They tell him he need not fear any harm to his person until Birnam wood should come to Dunkinane; nor could any one born of a woman cause danger to him. But in the attack upon Macbeth's stronghold the wood really advances towards Macbeth's castle. The English soldiers, while on their march, passed through these woods of Birnam, and, in order to conceal their numbers, carried green boughs and twigs in leaf before them. This is the significance of the prediction of the weird sisters; and a foe not born of woman arises indeed against him—in Macduff, who was not born of woman, in the ordinary manner of man, but was prematurely taken from his mother. The finale is reached when Macbeth falls in a struggle with the avenging Macduff; and Duncan's oldest son, Malcolm, ascends the throne as legal heir and king of Scotland.

Macbeth is a play of conscience, though the workings of that conscience are seen far more in Lady Macbeth than in her husband. The play is designed to show, too, the separation from man as well as God, the miserable, trustless isolation that sin brings in its train. Before the play opens there must have been consultations between the guilty pair on Duncan's murder, and when the play opens, the pall of fiendish witchcraft is over us from the first. The fall of the tempted is terribly sudden. Lady Macbeth has a finer and more delicate nature than Macbeth, but having fixed her eyes on the attainment by her husband of Duncan's throne, she accepts the inevitable means; yet she cannot strike the sleeping king, who would stab her as she did him. She, therefore, till her thread of life suddenly snaps under its load of remorse. The real climax of the play is in the second act rather than the fifth, and no repentance is mixed with the vengeance at its close. The only relief is the gallantry of Macbeth, the gratitude of Duncan, and the picture of Macbeth's castle, so pleasantly put into Duncan's and Banquo's mouths. Macbeth had the wrong nature for a murderer—he was too imaginative. The more blood he shed, which he thought would make him safe and hardened, did but increase his terrors. But he resolves to know the worst, and after his second visit to the witches, the courage of desperation takes the place of the feebleness of the guilty soul, and finally he faces and meets his own death with a coolness almost admirable.
HAMLET, PRINCE OF DENMARK.

See Page 666.

Many books and essays have been written concerning this tragedy of all the tragedies of Shakespeare; some of the critics, in their analysis of the play, vary materially, especially in the understanding of the principal character. According to the general acceptance of modern critics, Shakespeare designed to delineate his religious, moral, artistic, and dramatic acknowledgment of faith, and wrote this drama for the exaltation of the dramatic art upon the stage, as an educator as much entitled to serve the highest interests and aims of humanity as any other educational influence.

The source from which Shakespeare gathered his material, was probably the novel entitled the "History of Hamlet," by the Danish author, Saxo Grammaticus. This drama was written, according to Dr. Drake and Chalmers, in 1507, while Malone fixes the date in 1500, and it appeared first in print, in a quarto edition, in 1641.

SCENE.—Elsinore, Denmark.

Prince Hamlet, the son of King Hamlet, of Denmark, after receiving the news of the sudden death of his father, leaves Wittenberg, where he had been in pursuit of learning, and returns to the residence at Elsinore. In addition to the deep mourning caused by the great loss he had sustained in his father's death, he is, moreover, exceedingly affected by his mother's speedy remarriage. The queen, who had been loved with tenderness by King Hamlet during the thirty years of their married life, and who simulated, at the funeral of her husband, the most frantick grief, had, nevertheless, but a few brief weeks thereafter, celebrated her nuptials with Claudius, the brother of the late lamented king. Prince Hamlet's uncle, Claudius, was a prodigal and a hypocrite, who had also contrived to accomplish his election as king of Denmark. Hamlet, from this hasty and unseemly marriage, and other scandalous incidents which had transpired at the court, had long suspected a secret crime, and over this he brooded in a melancholy which alarmed his friends. Hamlet, moreover, from Horatio, and some officers who were devoted to him, learned that the ghost of the departed king had appeared to them on the portico, before the palace, at midnight. Prince Hamlet, on hearing this report, accompanies the guard on the following night, and he, indeed, discerns in the apparition, which also appears to him at midnight, the spirit of his father, who informs him that his sire had not died a natural death, but had been stealthily poisoned by his brother Claudius, the now reigning king. The ghost asks Hamlet to revenge the murder; and to a gentle youth, who had been induced to commit adultery by the ignoble usurper. Hamlet vows revenge, and at once resolves on a plan to carry out this intent. But his righteous revenge is delayed by difficulties, since he does not design to commit murder or any other crime, and, moreover, respects the injunction concerning his mother, whom he did not wish to harm.

Hamlet, closeted with his royal mother, upbraids her with her incestuous marriage to his uncle, and her father's murder. His father's ghost, at this moment, appears to him. The queen, to whom the spirit is invisible, seeing Hamlet gaze on and converse with empty air, thinks his mind is disordered, and displays the greatest consternation. During this interview Hamlet hears a noise behind the arras, and thinking it to be the king, thrusts his sword through the hangings, only to find he has killed Polonius, who was eavesdropping. Hamlet now resolves to act like one whose mental faculties had become clouded, and in this completely succeeds, to all others but his friend Horatio. In this confused aberration of mind, Hamlet leads the entire court at his will to carry out his purpose of judge and avenger; and he also finds in this affecotion of insanity the means of advising his beloved Ophelia to remain single. By a theatrical performance before the court, he succeeds in convicting the king of his crime. Ophelia's mind, distracted with the sights of Hamlet and the death of her father, gives way, and in pursuit of her insane amusements she is drowned. Laertes, Ophelia's brother, is instigated by the usurping uncle to fight with Hamlet, and how this act of revenge not only causes the death of the criminal king, but also the poisoning of the queen, of Laertes, and Hamlet, the drama fully unfolds.

In judging of the character of Hamlet, we must get rid of the absurdity of supposing him a man of decision and action, whose hesitation was due only to want of conviction of his duty.

While we all admire his brilliant intellectual gifts of wit, sarcasm, reflection, his courage and his virtues, we must still find him in firm purpose in his diseased view of God's earth and its inhabitants, and of life, with his shirtings of duty. But in his uncertainties about the mysteries of death and of the future world Hamlet but typifies each one of us at some time or other in our lives. And this is the secret of the attraction of Hamlet over us. How powerfully drawn is the scene where Hamlet, rising to nobleness and strength, upbraids his mother for her disgraceful adultery and treason to his noble father's memory, which Hamlet has felt to his least soul. And against his mother and her sin all the magnificent indignation of his purity and virtue speak. We forget his bloodstained hands in the white heat intensity of his words. In his second interview with Ophelia, he turns to her at first with gentle words and affection, which are curdled into bitterness and brutality by her offer to return his gifts and by seeing her father behind the arras.

Horatio, with his fortitude, his self-possession, his strong equanimity, is a strong contrast to Hamlet; and Laertes, who takes violent measures at the shortest notice to revenge his father's murder, is another contrast in a different way; but then Laertes is the young gallant of the period, and his capacity for action arises in part from the absence of those moral checks of which Hamlet is sensible. Polonius is owner of the shallow wisdom of this world, and exhibits this grotesquely while now, on the brink of dotage, he sees, but cannot see through. Hamlet's ironical mockery of his, Ophelia's sensitive and affectionate side is a reverse of heroic. She fails Hamlet in his need, and then in her turn becoming the sufferer, gives way under her afflictions. We do not honor, we commiserate her.

But whatever vacillation shows in the character of Hamlet, his grand, over-mastering purpose of revenge for his murdered father never leaves him. Polonius, Rosencrantz, Guildenstern, Ophelia, all whom he thinks plotted against him, are by his means dead; and then comes the end—the erring queen dying by her guilty husband's means, and he shortly following her; Laertes reaping the due reward of treachery, though forgiven by Hamlet before dying, and—then the death of "that man in Shakespeare we feel most pity for."

KING LEAR.

See Page 696.

The legend of King Lear and his three daughters existed in the medieval ages, in the Latin and French versions, and is also found in Holinshed's Chronicles of England, whence Shakespeare obtained the material for this drama, written in 1605.

SCENE. — The Kingdom of Britain.

Lear, King of Britain, having reached his eightieth year, concluded to resign his crown, and to divide his dominion between his two eldest daughters, Cordelia and Goneril, and his son, Regan. The Duke of Albany; Regan, the wife of the Duke of Cornwall; and Cordelia, whose hand and heart the King of France and the Duke of Burgundy are wooing. The old king questions his daughters as to which of them has the greatest love for him, and while Goneril and Regan, in the most exaggerated terms express their affection, Cordelia, scoring the fulsome meanness and hypocrisy of her sisters, declares in clear and simple word and action, and thereby dishonors her father. Lear, who had always been a fiercely passionate man, feels so embittered at the seeming coldness of her reply, that he rejects and disinherits his formerly favorite daughter, and divides his realm between the two elder daughters equally. He reserves for himself merely the maintenance of his title as king, and a hundred knights as attendants. With each of his daughters he is to alternately live one month at a time with his MOST loving ward. The Earl of Kent, who naturally raises objections against this precipitate action of the king, is banished from the kingdom. Cordelia, although disinherited and spurned by her father, and now rejected by the Duke of Burgundy, is nevertheless chosen as the wife of the King of France, solely on account of her virtue, merits, and charms. But the real characters of Goneril and Regan soon manifest themselves. They begin to treat their aged father with coldness, and they not only suffer, but order, moreover, that the servants fail to show the respect due to the old king. These unnatural daughters furthermore demand the entire dismissal of his guard of one hundred faithful warriors. Lear flies from Goneril and Regan, but only as it were from one trouble to a greater, for each sister endeavors to vie with the other in mockery and derision. This is too hard for the old man to bear. In his despair he becomes insane, and leaves the court at night during a violent rainstorm, his daughters closing the door on him. But the faithful Kent, in the disguise of an attendant, and his fool, accompany Lear through the dismal darkness, until the Earl of Gloucester meets them, who had discarded his son Edgar on account of the slanderous accusations by Edmund, his bastard son. In a novel upon the field the earl found his son Edgar, in a disguise as poor Tom, and here the poor old king with his two faithful friends at last found refuge. Through the aid of Gloucester and Kent, King Lear is securely brought to the town of Dover, where Cordelia lands with an army from France, for the purpose of reinstating her father upon the throne. Goneril and Regan, meantime, fall in love with Gloucester's bastard son Edmund, and Regan is poisoned in a fit of jealousy by her sister, while her husband, the villainous Cornwall (who had deprived the Earl of Gloucester of his eyes, for the latter's intercession for the aged king), dies by the hand of one of his own servants. Goneril ends her accursed career by committing suicide. Cordelia's army is outnumbered and defeated by Edmund's soldiers, and Cordelia and her father are captured. After Cordelia had been strangled by an assassin hired by Edmund, the latter meets his well-deserved fate in a duel with Edgar. Lear dies while tenderly clasping in his arms the corpse of Cordelia, but Edgar, Kent, and the Duke of Albany remain to again firmly establish the much harassed kingdom of Britain.

Lear is especially the play of the breach of family ties — the play of horrors, the unnatural cruelty to fathers, brothers, and sisters of those who should have loved them dearest. Lear, as he is first presented to us, is so self-indulgent and unrestrained, so foolish to the top of his bent, so terribly unjust, not only to Cordelia, but to Kent, that we feel that hardly any punishment is too bad for him. Stripped of power by his own rash folly, his own fool teaches him what a fool he has been. When he has come to himself, cut off the flatterers who surrounded him, and realizes the consequences of his own folly, our sympathy for him melts into tender pity. The pathos of his recognition of Cordelia, his submission to her, and seeking her blessing, his lamentation over her corpse, are exceeded by Shakespeare's power. Note the wonderful power of this last scene — the poor old king, bending with piteous lamentations over the dead body of his murdered daughter, trying to raise her to life, and, failing, relapsing into the dreadful torpor of despairing insanity. Cordelia is the sun above the depths shown in the natures of her sisters Goneril and Regan. The noble and long-suffering Kent is a fine character. Edgar and Edmund are a contrasted pair; both are men of penetration, energy, and skill — Edgar on the side of good, Edmund on the side of evil.

OTHELLO, THE MOOR OF VENICE.

See Page 722.

Based upon a romance contained in the Italian collection of "Ilucatomi," by Giraldi Cinthio, this tragedy was written in 1612 and first entered at Stationers' Hall, Oct. 6th, 1621, being printed in the following year.

SCENE. — During the First Act in Venice; during the rest of the drama at a seaport town in Cyprus.

Othello, a courageous Moor, and able commander-in-chief in the service of the republic of Venice, wins the love of Desdemona, a noble Venetian lady, and only daughter of the Senator Brabantio. The marriage secretly concluded between them is not acknowledged by the father, who deems the affinity of his daughter for a Moor, celebrated though he might be, as inexplicable and unnatural, and that only by spells and witchcraft could the fair Desdemona have been seduced to marry Othello, without the consent of her parent. At this juncture the services of the gallant Moor are needed by the republic of Venice to repel the invasion by the Turks of the island of Cyprus. Othello, accompanied by Desdemona, his wife, Cassio, his lieutenant, and Iago, his ensign, with Iago's wife, Emilia (the latter acting as attendant to Desdemona), accompanies the party. A storm scattered the Turkish fleet, but is riding against the Port of Othello, stirred up by a devil in the form of a human being. Iago entertains a deadly hatred against Othello, partly because he accuses him of having had in the past an illicit connection with his wife Emilia, and partly because Othello had preferred Cassio and had appointed him to a vacancy of a higher rank; whereas Iago believes he, from his bravery and knowledge, was fairly entitled to that place. Iago therefore

Plutarch's Life of Antony was the source from which Shakespeare gleaned the historical data for this tragedy, which was entered in the Stationers' book May 2, 1606, and was, according to the conjecture of Malone, composed in the same year. It was not, however, printed till the folio of 1623.

SCENE.—In different parts of the Roman Empire.

After the pitched battle of Philippi, where the last remaining force of the republic under Brutus and Cassius met with utter defeat, upon the division of the Roman territories ensuing, Asia fell to the possession of Mark Antony, who ruled that country as an autocrat with unlimited power, and became a slave to his love for pomp and display. In this condition he is mastered by an irresistible love for Cleopatra, the widowed Queen of Egypt. At Tarsus he met her for the first time, and, spellbound by the power of her charms, was induced by her to follow her to Alexandria, where he idled away his time amid pleasures and festivities. Bad news from Rome awakens him from the intoxication of his amorous pleasures, and, with heavy heart, tears himself away from Cleopatra, and hastens back to Italy. Here a reconciliation takes place, not only between himself and Octavius, but also between the triumvirs and Sextus Pompeius (Pompey). To strengthen this renewed friendship, Antony married Octavia, the beautiful sister of Octavius Caesar, who accompanied her husband to the seat of his government in the eastern provinces of Rome. Meanwhile Pompeius had, despite all agreement again renewed with Mark Antony and Octavius (in this engagement) now demanded an increase of power, he deprives him also, without raising a sword, of his army and dignity. These successes of Octavius alarmed Mark Antony, who sends his wife from Athens to Rome as a mediator, while he himself goes to Egypt, and at Alexandria commences the former life of luxurious pleasure in company with Cleopatra. A breach between Mark Antony and Octavius Caesar now becomes unavoidable, and the fortunes of war must decide between them. Antony, with Diomed, his general, takes a last farewell of Cleopatra preparatory to a battle with Caesar, who is now encamped before the walls of Alexandria. Antony recommends Diomed to the queen's special favor, who promises to reward him. An attendant brings Antony's helmet, and a slave puts on his sandals, while the Queen of Egypt, pressing his fate, is loth to part. Antony for the last time tries the fortunes of war, at first with some show of success, but is soon deserted by the fleet, which consists chiefly of Egyptian vessels, and, being also defeated on land, flies in despair to Alexandria, under the delusion that Cleopatra had betrayed him. The latter, to escape his ill-favor, goes herself to a temple, and is announced as having demon's ill-starred answers, coupled with Iago's cunning prompting, hurries on poor Desdemona's death. Then comes the disclosure of the dupe he has been; and the kiss with which he dies, shows where his love still was, and pleads for him. A noble nature "perpendicular in the dead extreme." Cassio, notwithstanding his mortal weaknesses, has a chivalrous nature, and has an enthusiastic admiration for his great general and the beautiful lady, his wife. Emilia may be compared to Paulina, in the Winter's Tale.

THE PLOTS OF SHAKESPEARE'S PLAYS.

Antony, on hearing the sad news, falls on his but not being killed, and learning that Cleopatra is still alive, causes himself to be carried to what he may die in her arms. Octavius extends to Cleopatra his protection and sympathy, but sends his friends. Posthumus, on the strict guard over her, hoping to take the young queen to Rome to grace his triumph; but Cleopatra, acquainted with the defeat and death of Antony, and anticipating her own treatment from the conqueror, applies asp to her bosom and dies. Charmian, her faithful maid, follows her mistress's example, but before dying has time to relate to Caesar's guards, who are breaking in, the tragic death of Egypt's queen.

Nowhere else does Shakespeare appear a greater master of a great dramatic theme. In Julius Cæsar we are prepared for any outbreak on the part of Mark Antony — by the wildness of his blood and want of a noble purpose in his ordinary pursuits, by his selfishness and unscrupulousness, too; by his proposal to sacrifice the patricians, and the redeeming qualities of his nature might be thought to be shown in his love for Cæsar, his appeal to the people for revenge, and his skill in managing them; yet in his development lust and self-indulgence prevail, and under their influence he loses judgment, soldiership, and even the qualities of a man. His seeming impulse towards good in his marriage with Octavia lasts but for a time — all her nobleness and virtue cannot save him. He turns from this gem among women to the luxurious Egyptian, and abides by his infatuation even when he knows he is deceived. How powerful is the story wrought out of the great soldier sinking to his ruin under the gorgeous colorings of the Eastern skies and the varying splendors of the lustful queen! "She makes hungry, where most she satisfies." To Cleopatra it is hardly possible to do justice here. The wonderful way in which Shakespeare has brought out the characteristics of this sumptuous, quondam harlot, goes far beyond all his previous studies of women. The contrast between her and the noble Roman lady Octavia, to whom her wandering husband bears such favorable witness, is most marked and most interesting. Enobarbus, who sees through every wife and guile of the queen, is, as it were, the chorus of the play.

Cymbeline.

See Page 775.

Cymbeline, the king from whom the play takes its title, began his reign, according to Holinshed, in the nineteenth year of the reign of Augustus Cæsar, and the scene of the play commences about the twenty-fourth year of Cymbeline's reign in Britain, i.e., in the sixteenth year of the Christian era. This play was written, according to Malone, in 1603, and, according to Chalmer, in 1606.

Scene. — In Britain and in Italy.

Cymbeline's first wife died when his three children (two sons and a daughter) were very young. Imogen, the eldest of these children, was brought up in her father's court, but the two sons were stolen out of their nursery during their infancy, and no trace of what had become of them, nor by whom they had been abducted, could be discovered. Cymbeline was again married. His second spouse was a wicked, plotting woman and extremely cruel to her stepchild Imogen, and yet, despite this hatred, desired her to marry Cloten, a son of her own by a former husband; since by this means she hoped, at the death of her husband, to place the crown of Britain upon the head of Cloten, her own offspring. She was aware that if the lost children were not found, the princess Imogen would be the sole heir of the king. But this design was spoiled by Imogen herself, who married, without the consent or even knowledge of her father or the queen, an accomplished gentleman named Posthumus, whose father had died a soldier's death in the wars for Cymbeline, and his mother, soon after his birth, died also. For grief at the loss of her husband. Imogen and Posthumus grew up at court, and were playfellows from their infancy. But in Cymbeline's latest marriage he banished Posthumus from his native land forever. The queen, who pretended to pity Imogen for the grief she suffered at losing her husband, offered to procure them a private meeting before Posthumus set out on his journey to Rome, whence he intended to go. The young couple took a most affectionate leave of each other. Imogen gave her husband a diamond ring, and Constanzia, her mother, and Posthumus promised never to part with it. He also fastened a bracelet on the arm of his wife, which he prayed she would preserve carefully as a token of his love, and both vowed eternal love and fidelity. Imogen remained a solitary and sad lady in her father's palace, and Posthumus reached Rome, where he fell into company with some gay young men of different nations, each one of them praising the ladies of his own country, and his own love. Posthumus, who praised his own dear Imogen as the most virtuous and constant woman in the world, offended by this speech a gentleman named Iachimo, who felt aggrieved that a lady of Britain should be so praised above the refined Roman ladies, his countrywomen. Posthumus, having wagered with Iachimo his ring against a sum of gold, that the chastity of his wife Imogen was invulnerable, the artful Italian, who had journeyed to Cymbeline's palace in Britain, contrives to hide himself in her bed-chamber, and thus furnishes himself with particulars in describing her person and her apartment, and, as a further evidence, by stealing her bracelet, in order to induce Posthumus to give him the ring. Returning from Britain with the tokens he has stolen, Iachimo claims from Posthumus the forfeit of his wife's infidelity. Posthumus at first doubts, as does his friend Pisanio, but Iachimo's proofs are so strong, that he at length yields to his force, gives him indignantly the ring, and vows vengeance on Imogen. Posthumus, now convinced of his wife's inconstancy, employs his servant Pisanio to pair to Britain for the purpose of murdering her; Pisanio, in the full belief of Imogen's innocence, vies her to disguise and absent herself for a time from her father's court, and wait till her truth can be made manifest. Pisanio, upon the advice of his master, became very tired, and a kind Providence strait, directed her steps to the dwelling of her long brothers, stolen in infancy by Belarius, a former in the court of Cymbeline. Belarius, banished alleged treason, had brought the princes up in a place where he lived concealed in a cave. At this case was Imogen's fortune to arrive, and she entered...

PERICLES, PRINCE OF TYRE.

See Page 803.

The story on which this play is formed is of great antiquity: Shakespeare probably gleaned it from Lawrence Twine's novel, entitled "The Pattern of Painful Adventures," published in 1567. That he also knew the treatise based on the same matter, viz., "Confessio Amantus," by Gower, appears already from the rôle of the chorus, which Shakespeare conveys to this ancient English poet for the elucidation of the plot and the connection of the various scenes. The English poet Dryden, in the prologue to his tragedy, "Mirza" (1677) recalls "Pericles the first work born to Shakespeare's muse." This tragedy was presented at Stationers' Hall, May 2, 1608, by Edward Blount, one of the printers of the first folio edition of Shakespeare's works; but it did not appear in print until the following year, and then it was published not by Blount, but by Henry Gosson.

SCENE.—In various countries.

Antiochus, king of Antioch, desiring of having his daughter remain unmarried, and thus in his own keeping at the palace of his court, causes her suitors to be slain if they are unable to solve a riddle which he submits to them. In this way the great beauty of the young princess, who is presumed to be a virgin, becomes a fatal snare to the lives of numerous wooers, who, while burning with ardent love for her, rashly undertake the great task of trying to untangle the puzzle. At last the enigma is solved by Pericles, Prince of Tyre, who at once resigns all his claims on the fair girl, since he has learned with horror, from the solution of the riddle, that king and princess—father and daughter—lived together in incest. Notwithstanding this refusal to marry the princess, Pericles is invited by Antioch to remain as a visitor at his court for some time. But the Prince of Tyre concludes not to stay, since it had been intimated to him that this invitation was merely extended to consummate his murder, Antiochus fearing the circulation of the report of his nefarious conduct and that of his unchaste daughter. Pericles hastened away to Tyre, but even in that city he does not feel secure against the persecution of Antioch, and, fearing that his presence at home might embroil the people of his country in war, resolves to go abroad for pleasure, meantime remaining in his communications with the government of his native land, and remaining with the aid of his exiled father as lord of his court and one of his most faithful advisers. Pericles goes to Tarsus, where he soon becomes beloved, and moreover ingratiates himself with the people by rendering them aid in a terrible famine, by supplying them with stores of provisions for their relief. Cleon, the governor of Tarsus, prevails on Pericles to settle in his country, but Pericles declines, and on resuming his travels he is driven by a storm at sea to the coast of Pentapolis, where he, as victor in a tournament, wins the hand of the fair Princess Thaisa, daughter of King Simonides. After staying a year at the court of his father-in-law, Pericles starts on his return home, having previously heard the news of Antiochus' demise. The sea, never a friend to Pericles, treated him badly, for scarcely had the vessel set sail when another gale nearly wrecked the ship. The young wife of Pericles, who accompanied him, was terribly frightened by the fierceness of the tempest, and during its prevalence was confined and delivered of a daughter, who, being born at sea, received the name Marina—that is, "the sea-born." Thaisa while in childbed is afflicted with spasms and convulsions, and in this state, taken for dead, is placed in a well-sealed casket.

Imogen is a character it is almost impertinence to praise. She has all Juliet's impetuous affection; but she is wiser far, and stands far above Posthumus. Compare her receiving Iachimo's assertions of Posthumus's infidelity with Posthumus receiving those against her. Note her noble indignation against Iachimo's base proposals to her, in which the princess, as well as the wife, speaks; and then how cleverly she disposes of her husband's weakness. Great is the pathos of her words over the lost bracelet. Then comes the meeting with her unknown brothers after she has heard her husband's slander; and then her seeming death. But she rises again, unlike the unhappy Juliet, to relive her life more truly than before—the queen, the life, the wife, of the husband she has lifted to herself, the sister of those gallant brothers, the daughter of the father, of whose comfort she was a great part. Posthumus's faith in Imogen is of the half-romantic kind; he does not understand the value of the woman he has won, and hence the sudden overthrow of that faith. Coten is the aristocratic fool, thick-witted and violent, and with all the coarse conceit of a high-born boor.

thrown in the sea, because the storm, which was raging with unabated violence, worked on the restless sailors, who did not think the sea would me calm again so long as a dead body was on board. The waves drifted the casket towards the shores of Ephesus, where Cerimon, a noble physician of great renown, soon succeeded, by means of his science and art, in reviving the apparently dead Thaisa, and restoring her again to life and vigor. Thaisa now enters the temple of Diana as a priestess to serve that goddess. Meantime, her husband, Pericles, filled with a consuming melancholy, had intrusted his daughter to the care of Cleon and his wife Dionyzia, and left Tarsus for his home in Tyre. Marina grew up at the palace of her foster-parents, and when she had reached her fourteenth year, by her matchless beauty and unequalled mental gifts, provoked the jealousy and envy of her foster-mother, whose daughter, Philoten, was entirely obscured by the brilliant charms of Marina. Dionyzia, determined to rid herself of such a rival, hires an assassin, who is just in the act of murdering the fair Marina when he is deprived of his victim by the sudden interference of some pirates, who wrest Marina from his clutches and escape with their fair prize to Mitylene, where they sell her to the keeper of a brothel. But the virtuous Marina knows not only how to keep herself pure and undefiled in the house of lust and sin, but also how to so impress her vengeful tempters that they desist from their immoral practices. Through the intervention of the governor of Mitylene, Marina obtains her liberty, and by virtue of her many talents is enabled to maintain herself until she is found by her father, who, driven by melancholy and despair, had again set out on his travels, and by a strange chance reached Mitylene, whence father and daughter embark for Ephesus. Here, visiting the temple of Diana, father and daughter have the inexpressible joy of finding in the high-priestess the long-lost wife and mother. The drama concludes with Pericles and Thaisa blessing the nuptials of their daughter and Lysimachus, the governor of Mitylene, and giving the crown of Tyrus as a wedding-gift to the happy couple. Cleon and Dionyzia, the wicked foster-mother of Thaisa, met with a sad but deserved fate at the hands of their own outraged people, who, enraged at their ingratitude towards Pericles—the friend of the citizens in their great extremity—set fire to the palace, which was burned with all its occupants in one general funeral pyre.

SHAKESPEARE'S POEMS.

See Page 822.

Besides the thirty-seven plays contained in this edition, Shakespeare wrote the following poems, which were first published separately. In Venus and Adonis, entered in the Stationers' register, and printed in 1593, we have the same luxuriance of fancy, the same intensity of passion as in Romeo and Juliet, unlawful as the indulgence in that passion is. From whatever source came the impulse to take from Ovid the hearted story of the fierce lust of the heathen goddess, we cannot forbear noticing how, through this stifling atmosphere, the great poet has blown the fresh breezes of English meadows and woodlands. No play has fuller evidence of Shakespeare's intimate knowledge and intense delight in country scenes and sights. This poem was printed six times during Shakespeare's life, and was dedicated by Shakespeare, when twenty-nine years of age, to the young Earl of Southampton. The Rape of Lucrece followed, 1594, and was also dedicated to Southampton, as “the first heir of my invention,” who, according to Sir William d'Avenant's statement, presented the poet with the sum of £1000, so he might make some purchase. If the incident is accepted as a fact, it is honorable to the liberality as well as the cultivated taste of the Earl of Southampton, and shows that the “poor Warwickshire lad” met with a munificent patron at an early stage of his literary career. The Passionate Pilgrim was printed in 1599; A Lover's Complaint, not dated; and a collection of Sonnets appeared in 1609. That some of these sonnets existed in 1598 we now know. They are so evidently intensely autobiographic and self-revealing, so one with the spirit and inner meaning of Shakespeare's growth and life, that we cannot take them in any other way than as the records of his loves and fears. Shakespeare admirers are so anxious to remove any seeming stain from the character of their ideal, that they deny that these sonnets are life pictures, forgetting how great is the difference between our times and those of Queen Elizabeth, and that an intimacy now thought criminal was then, in certain circles, nearly as common as hand-shaking is with us. “There are some men who love for ‘love's sake,' and loving once love always; and of these was Shakespeare,” says a distinguished author. “They do not lightly give their love, but once given, their faith is incorporate with their being.”
CHRONOLOGICAL ORDER

In which the Plays of Shakespeare are supposed to have been written, according to the arrangements of CHALMERS, MALONE, AND DR. DRAKE.

Chalmers and Malone reject Titus Andronicus and Pericles as spurious. Dr. Drake does not notice the former play, but, on the authority of Dryden, admits the latter as genuine, and supposes it to have been produced in 1600. The dates which they severally ascribe to the remaining plays are as follows:

THE TEMPEST.

DRAMATIS PERSONÆ.

Alonso, King of Naples.
Sebastian, his brother.
Prospero, the right Duke of Milan.
Antonio, his brother, the usurping Duke of Milan.
Ferdinand, son to the King of Naples.
Gonzalo, an honest old Counsellor.
Adrian, Francisco, Lords.
Caliban, a savage and deformed Slave.
Trinculo, a Jester.
Stephano, a drunken Butler.
Master of a Ship.

Boatswain.
Mariners.
Miranda, daughter to Prospero.
Ariel, an airy Spirit.
Iris,
Ceres,
Juno,
Nymphs,
Reapers,

Other Spirits attending on Prospero.

SCENE—A ship at sea; an island.

[For an Analysis of the Plot of this Play, see Page xl.]

ACT I.

Re-enter Boatswain.

Boats. Down with the topmast! yare! lower, lower! Bring her to try with main-cord. [A very within]. A plague upon this howling! they are louder than the weather or our office.

Re-enter Sebastian, Antonio, and Gonzalo.

Yet again! what do you here? Shall we give o'er and drown? Have you a mind to sink?

Seb. A topmast or your throat, you bawling, blasphemous, incharitable dog!

Boats. Work you then.

Ant. Hang, cut! hang, you scoundrel, insolent nosemaker! We are less afraid to be drowned than thou art.

Gon. I'll warrant him for drowning: though the ship were no stronger than a nutshell and as leaky as an untaught vessel.

Boats. Lay her a-hold, a-hold! set her two courses off to sea again; lay her off.

Enter Mariner.

Mariners. All lost! to prayers, to prayers! all lost!

Boats. What, must our mouths be cold?

Gon. The king and prince at prayers! let's assist For our case is as theirs.

Them. I'm not of patience.

Ant. We are merely cheated of our lives by drunkards: This wide-chapp'd rascal would thou might'st lie drowning.

The washing of ten tides!

Gon. He'll be hang'd yet, Though every drop of water swear against it And gape at widest to glut him.

[Exeunt. Ant. and Seb.]

Gon. Now would I give a thousand furlongs of sea for an acre of barren ground, long heath, brown furze, any thing. The wills above be done! but I would faint die a dry death.

[Exeunt.]
SCENE II. — The island. Before Prospero's cell.

Enter Prospero and Miranda.

Mir. If by your art, my dearest father, you have Put the wild waters in this roar, allay them.
The tempest, that would pour downAtIndexing pitch,
But that the sea, mounting to the welkin's cheek,
Dashes the fire out. O, I have suffered
With those that I saw suffer: a brave vessel,
Who had, no doubt, some noble creature in her,
Dash'd all to pieces. O, the cry did knock
Against my very heart. Poor souls, they perish'd.
Had I been any god of power, I would Have sunk the sea within the earth or ere
It should the good ship so have swallowed'd and
The flattering souls within her.

Pros. No more amazement: tell your piteous heart
There's no harm done.

Mir. O, woe the day!

Pros. I have done nothing but in care of thee,
Of thee, my dear one, thee, my daughter, who
Art ignorant of what thou art, nought knowing
Of whence I am, nor that I am more better
Than Prospero, master of a full poor cell,
And thy no greater father.

Mir. More to know
Did never meddle with my thoughts.

Pros. 'Tis time
I should inform thee further. Lend thy hand,
And pluck my magic garment from me. So:

[Enter spirits; all sit down.]

Act III. Scene II.

Pros. Lie there, my art. Wipe thou thine eyes; have comport.
The dreadful spectacle of the wreck, which touch'd
The very virtue of compassion in thee,
I have with such provision in mine art
So safely ordered that there is no soul —
No, not so much perdition as an hair
Betid to any creature in the vessel
Which thou heard'st cry, which thou sawst sink,
Sit down;
For thou must now know farther.

Mir. You have often
Began to tell me what I am, but stopp'd
And left me to a bootless inquisition.
Conclusion 'Stay: not yet.'

Pros. The hour's now come;
The very minute bids thee ope thine ear;
Obey and be attentive. Canst thou remember
A time before we came unto this cell?
I do not think thou canst, for then thou wast not
Out three years old.

Mir. Certainly, sir, I can.

Pros. By what? by any other house or person
Of any thing the image tell me that
Hath kept with thy remembrance.

Mir. 'Tis far off
And other like a dream than an assurance
That my remembrance warrants. Had I not Four or five women once that tended me? [is it Pros. Thou hastd, and more, Miranda. But how
That this lives in thy mind? What seest thou else
In the dark backward and abyss of time?
If thou remember'd, wouldst thou have come here,
How thou camest here thou mayst.

Mir. But that I do not.

Pros. Twelve year since, Miranda, twelve year
Thy father was the Duke of Milan and [since,
A prince of power.

Mir. Sir, are not you my father?

Pros. Thy mother was a piece of virtue, and
She said thou wast my daughter; and thy father
Was Duke of Milan; and thou his only heir
And prince no worse issued.

Mir. O the heavens!

Act IV. Scene I.

Pros. What foul play had we, that we came from thence?
Or blessed was 't we did?

Pros. Both, both, my girl:
By foul play, as thou say'st, were we beaved thence,
But blessfully holp lither.

Mir. O, my heart bleeds
To think o' the teen that I have turn'd you to,
Which is from my remembrance! Please you, farther.

Pr. My brother and thy uncles, call'd Antonio —
I pray thee, mark me — that a brother should Be so perjurious! He was bound to thee next thyself
Of all that time I loved and to the part
The manage of my state; as at that time
Through all the signories it was the first
And Prospero the prime duke, being so reputed
In dignity, and for the liberal arts
Without a parallel; those being all my study,
The government I cast upon my brother
And to my state grew stranger, being transported
And rant in secret studies. Thy false uncle —
Dost thou attend me?

Mir. Sir, most heedfully.

Pros. Being once perfected how to grant suits,
How to deny them, who to advance and who
To trash for over-topping, new created
The creatures that were mine, I say, or changed 'em,
Or else new form'd 'em; having both the key
Of officer and office, set all hearts i' the state
To what time pleased his caus he was
The ivy which had bid my princely trunk, [not.
And snaked my verdure out on 't. Thou attend'st
Mir. O, good sir, I do.

Pros. I pray thee, mark me,
I, thus neglecting worldly ends, all dedicated
To closeness and the bettering of my mind
With that which, but by being so retired,
O'er-prized all popular rate, in my false brother
Awaken'd an evil nature; and my trust,
Like a good parent, did get of him
A falsehood in its contrary as great
As my trust was; which had indeed no limit,
A confidence sans bound. He being thus lorded,
Not only with what my revenue yielded,
But what my power might else exact, like one
Who having into truth, by telling of it,
Made such a sinner of his memory,
To credit his own lie, he did believe
He was indeed the duke: out o' the substitution,
And executing the outward face of royalty,
With all prerogative: hence his ambition growing —
Dost thou hear?

Mir. Your tale, sir, would cure deadness.

Pros. To have no scope between this part he
And him he play'd it for, he needs will be [play'd
Absolutely Milan. Me, poor man, my library
Was dukedom large enough: of temporal royalties
He thinks me now inapable; confederates —
So dry he was for sway — wi' the King of Naples
To give him annual tribute, do him homage,
Subject his child to his crown and bend
The dukedom yet unbow'd — alas, poor Milan! —
To most ignoble stooping.

Mir. O the heavens!

Pros. Mark his condition and the event; then tell
If this might be a brother. [me

Mir. I should sin
To think but nobly of my grandmother:
Good worms have borne bad sons.

Pros. Now the condition.

This King of Naples, being an enemy
To me and my brother, hearten his brother's suit;
Which was, that he, in lieu of the premises
Of homage and I know not how much tribute,
Should presently extirpate me and mine
Out of the dukedom and confer fair Milan
With all the honours on my brother: whereon,
A treacherous army levied, one midnight
ACT I.

THE TEMPEST.

SCENE II.

Ariel and all his quality.

Pros. Hast thou, spirit, Perform'd to point the tempest that I bade thee?

Ari. To every article, I boarded the king's ship; now on the sleek, Now in the whirlpox, in every cabin, I flamed amazement; sometime I'd divide, And burn in many places; on the topmast, The yards and bowsprit, would I flame distinctly. Then meet and join. Jove's lightnings, the precursors O' the dreadful thunder-claps, more momentary And sight out-running were not; the fire and cracks Of sulphurous roaring the most mighty Neptune Seen to besiege and make his bold waves tremble, Yea, his dread thunder shake.

Pros. My brave spirit! Who was so firm, so constant, that this coil Would not infect his reason?

Ari. Not a soul But felt a fever of the mad and play'd Some tricks of desperation. All but mariners Plunged in the foaming brine and quit the vessel, Then all afeare with me: the king's son, Ferdinand, With hair up-staring — then like reeds, not hair: Was the first man that leap'd; cried, 'Hell is empty, And all the devils are here.'

Pros. Why, that's my spirit! But was not this nigh shore?

Ari. Close by, my master. Pros. But are they, Ariel, safe?

Ari. Not a hair perish'd; On their sustaining garments not a blister, But fresher than before: and, as thou badest me, In troops I have dispersed them 'bout the isle. The king's son have I landed by himself; Whom I left cooling of the air with sighs In an old angle of the isle and sitting, His arms in this sad knot.

Pros. Of the king's ship The mariners say how thou hast disposed And all the rest o' the fleet.

Ari. Safely in harbour Is the king's ship; in the deep nook, where once Thou call'dst me up at midnight to fetch dew From the still-vox'd Bermoothes, there she's hid: The mariners all under hatches stow'd; Who, with a charm join'd to their suffer'd labour, I have left asleep; and for the rest o' the fleet Which I dispersed, they all have met again And are upon the Mediterranean flote, Bound sadly home for Naples, Supposing that they saw the king's ship wreck'd And his great person perish.

Ari. Ariel, thy charge Exactly is perform'd: but there's more work, What is the time o' the day?

Ari. Past the mid season. Pros. At least two glasses. The time 'twixt six Must by us both be spent most presently, and now Ari. Is there more toil? Since thou dost give me pains, Let me remember thee what thou hast promised, Which is not yet perform'd me.

Pros. How now? moody? What is 't thou caust demand?

Ari. My liberty. Pros. Before the time be out? no more! Ari. I prithee, Remember I have done thee worthy service; Told thee no lies, made thee no mistakings, served Without or grudge or grumblings: thou didst Troth me a full year. [promise Pros. Dost thou forget From what a torment I did thee free? Ari. No. Pros. Thou dost, and think'st it much to tread Of the salt deep,
ACT I.

THE TEMPEST.

SCENE II.

To run upon the sharp wind of the north,
To do me business in the veins of the earth
When it is tainted with frost.

Ari. I do not, sir. [forgot
Pros. Thou liest, malignant thing! Hast thou
The foul witch Sycorax, with witchcraft and envy
Was grown into a hoop? hast thou forgot her?
Ari. No, sir. [speak; tell me.
Pros. Thou hast. Where was she born?
Ari. Sir, in Argier.

Pros. Over a month recount what thou hast been
When thou forget'st. This damn'd witch Sycorax,
For mischiefs manifold and sorceries terrible
To enter human hearing, from Argier,
Thou know'st, was banish'd: for one thing she did
They would not take her life. Is not this true?
Ari. Ay, sir. [with child
Pros. This blue-eyed hag was hither brought
And here was left by the sailors. Thou, my slave,
As thou report'st thyself, wast then her servant;
And, for thou wast a spirit too delicate
To act her earthly and abhor'd commands,
Refusing her grand hests, she did confine thee,
By help of her more potent ministers
And in her most unmitigable rage,
Into a cloven pine; within which rift
Imprison'd thou didst painfully remain
A dozen years; within which space she died
And left thee there; where thou didst vent thy groans
As fast as mill-wheels strike. Then was this island—
Save for the son that she did litter here,
A freckled whelp hag-born — not honour'd with
A human shape.

Ari. Yes, Caliban her son.
Pros. Dull thing, I say so; he, that Caliban
Whom now I keep in service. Thou best know'st
What torment I did find thee in; thy groans
Did make wolves howl and penetrate the breasts
Of ever angry bears: it was a torment
To lay upon the damn'd, which Sycorax
Could not again undo: it was mine art,
When I arrived and heard thee, that made gape
The pine and let thee out.

Ari. I thank thee, master.

Pr. If thou more murmur'st, I will read an oak
And peg thee in his knotty entrails till
Thou hast howl'd away twelve winters.

Ari. I will be correspondent to command
And do my spirit's gently.

Pros. Do so, and after two days
I will discharge thee.

Ari. That's my noble master!
What shall I do? say what; what shall I do?
Pros. Go make thyself like a nymph o' the sea; be
To no sight but thine and mine, invisible [subject
To every eyeball else. Go take this shape
And hither come in 't; go, hence with diligence!

[Exit Ariel.

Awake, dear heart, awake! thou hast slept well;
Awake!

Mir. The strange ness of your story put Heaviness in me.

Pros. Shake it off. Come on;
We'll visit Caliban my slave, who never Yields us kind answer.

Mir. 'Tis a villain, sir,
I do not love to look on.

Pros. But, as 'tis.
We cannot miss him: he does make our fire,
Fetch that wood, and serves in offices
That profit us. What, ho! slave! Caliban!
Thou earth, thou! speak.

Cal. [Within] There's wood enough within.

Pros. Come forth, I say! there's other business
Come, thou torture! when? [for thee:

Re-enter Ariel like a water-nymph.
Fine apparition! My quaint Ariel,
Hark in thine ear.

Ari. My lord, it shall be done. [Exit.

Pros. Thou poisonous slave, got by the devil him-
Upon thy wicked damn, come forth! [self

Enter Caliban.

Cal. As wicked dwelt as e'er my mother brush'd
With raven's feather from unwholesome fen
Drop on you both! a south-west blow on ye,
And blister you all o'er! [cramps.
Pros. For this, be sure, to-night shall have Side-stitches that shall pen thy breath up; urchins
Shall, for that vast of night that they may work,
All exercise on thee; thou shalt be pinch'd
As thick as honeycomb, each pinch more stinging
Than bees that made 'em.

Cal. I must eat my dinner.

This island's mine, by Sycorax my mother,
Which thou takest from me. When thou cam'st first,
Thou strokedst me and maddest much of me, wouldst
Water with berries in 't, and teach me how [give me
To make the bigger light, and have the less,
That burn by day and night; and I then loved thee
And show'd thee all the qualities o' the isle,
The fresh springs, brine-pits, barren place and fer-curse'd be I that did so! All the charms [life:
Of Sycorax, toads, beetles, bals, light on you!
For I gave all the subjects that I have,
Which first was mine own king: and here you stye me
In this hard rock, while you do keep from me
The rest o' the island.

Pros. Thou most llying slave, [thee,
Whom stripes may move, not kindness! I have used
Fifth as thou art, with human care, and lodged thee
In mine own cell, till thou didst seek to violate
The honour of my child.

Cal. O ho, O ho! would 't had been done!
Thou didst prevent me; I had peopled else
This isle with Calibans.

Ari. Abhorr'd slave, [which
Which any print of goodness will not take,
Being capable of all ill! I pitied thee,
Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee each hour
One thing or other: when thou didst not, savage,
Know thine own meaning, but wouldst gamble like
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thee purposes
With words that made them known. But thy vile race, [fatures
Though thou didst learn, had that in 't which good
Could not abide to be with; therefore wast thou
Deservedly confined into this rock,
Who hast deserved more than a prison.

Cal. Thou taught me language; and my profit on 't
Is, I know how to curse. The red plague rid you
For learning me your language!

Ari. Hag-seed, hence! Fetch us in fume; and be quick, thou'rt best,
To answer other business. Shrug'st thou, malice? If thou needest not or dost unwillingly
What I command, I'll rack thee with old cramps,
Fill all thy bones with aches, make thee roar
That beasts shall tremble at thy din.

Cal. [Aside] I must obey: his art is of such power,
It would control my dam's god, Sycorax,
And make a vassal of him.

Pros. So, slave; hence! [Exit Caliban.

Re-enter Ariel, invisible, playing and singing; Ferdinand following.

Ariel's song.

Come unto these yellow sands,
And then take hands;
Court me when you have and kiss'd
The wild waves whist.
Foot it fealty here and there:
And, sweet sprites, the buttren bear.
Burthen [dispersedly]. Hark, hark!
Bow-wow.
  The watch-dogs bark:
Bow-wow.

Ari. Hark, hark! I hear
The strain of strangling chanted dear
Cry, Cock-a-diddle-dow.

Fer. Where should this music be? 't is the air or the
It sounds no more; and, sure, it waits upon earth?
Some god of the island. Sitting on a bank,
Weeping again the king my father's wreck,
This music crept by me upon the waters,
Allaving both their fury and my passion
With its sweet air: thence I have follow'd it,
Or it hath drawn me rather. But 'tis gone.
No, it begins again.

Ariel sings.
Full fathom five thy father lies;
Of his bones are coral made:
Those are pearls that were his eyes:
Nothing of him that doth fade
But doth suffer a sea-change
Into something rich and strange.
Sea-nymphs hourly ring his knell:
Buon-ding-dong.

Ari. Hark! now I hear them,—Ding-dong, bell.

Fer. The ditty does remember my drown'd father.
This is no mortal business, nor no sound
That the earth owes. I hear it now above me.

Pros. The fringed curtains of thine eye advance
And say what thou seest yond.

Mir. What is 't? a spirit?

Ari. Lord, how it looks about! Believe me, sir,
It carries a brave form. But 'tis a spirit. [senses Pros. No, wench; it eats and sleeps and hath such
As we have, such. This gallant which thou seest
Was in the wreck; and, but he's something stain'd
With grief that's beauty's conqueror, thou mightst
A goodly person: he hath lost his fellows [call him
And strays about to find 'em.
I might call him
A thing divine, for nothing natural
I ever saw so noble.

Pros. [Aside] It goes on, I see, [free thee
As my soul proffers it. Spirit, fine spirit! I'll Within two days for this.

Fer. Most sure, the goddess
On whom these airs attend! Vouchsafe my prayer
May know if you remain upon this island;
And that you will some good instruction give
How I may bear me here: my prime request,
Which I do last pronounce, is, O you wonder!
If you be maid or no?

Mir. No wonder, sir;
But certainly a maid.

Fer. My language! heavens!
I am the best of them that speak this speech,
Were I but where 'tis spoken.

Pros. How? the best?
What would thou, if the King of Naples hear thee?
Fer. A single thing, as I am now, that wonders
To hear thee speak of Naples. He does hear me;
And he does weep: myself am Naples,
Who with mine eyes, never since at ebb, behold
The king my father's wreck'd.

Mir. Alack, for mercy!
Fer. Yes, faith, and all his lords; the Duke of
And his brave son being twain.

[Exeunt Milan, Per.]
Mir. The Duke of Milan
And his more braver daughter could control thee,
If now 't were fit to do 't.
At the first sight
They have changed eyes. Delicante Ariel. [sir:
I'll set thee free for this. [To Fer.] A word, good
I fear you have done yourself some wrong: a word.

Mir. Why speaks my father so ungently? This

Is the third man that e'er I saw the first
That e'er I sigh'd for: pity move my father
To be inclined my way!

Fer. O, if a virgin,
And your affection not gone forth, I'll make you
The queen of Naples.

Pros. Soft, sir! one word more.
[Aside] They are both in either's powers; but this swift business
I must uneasy make, lest too light winning
Make the prize light. [To Fer.] One word more; I charge thee
That thou attend me: thou dost here usurp
The name thou owest not; and hast put thyself
Upon this island as a spy, to win it
From me, the lord on 't.

Fer. No, as I am a man.

Mir. There's nothing ill can dwell in such a
If the ill spirit have so fair a house. [temp'le:
Good things will strive to dwell with 't.

Pros. Follow me.
Speak not for him; he's a traitor. Come;
I'll manage thy neck and feel together:
Sea-water shall I give thee drink: thy food shall be
The fresh-brook muscles, wither'd roots and husks
Wherein the acorn cradled. Follow.

Fer. No;
I will resist such entertainment till
Mine enemy has more power.

Mir. [Drews, and is charmed from moving.
O dear father,
Make not too rash a trial of him, for
He's gentle and not fearful.

Pros. What? I say;
My foot my tutor? Put thy sword up, traitor;
Who mistak'st a show but darest not strike, thy conscience
Is so possess'd with guilt: come from thy ward,
For I can here disarm thee with this stick
And make thy weapon drop.

Mir. Hence! hang not on my garments.

Mir. Sir, have pity;

I'll be his surety.

Silence! one word more
Shall make me chide thee, if not hate thee. What!
An advocate for an impostor! hush!
Thou think'st there is no more such shapes as he,
Having seen but him and Caliban; foolish wench!
To the most of men this is a Caliban
And they to him are angels.

Mir. My affections
Are then most humble; I have no ambition
To see a goodlier man.

Pros. Come on; obey:
Thy nerves are in their infancy again
And have no vigour in them.

So they are;
My spirits, as in a dream, are all bound up,
My father's loss, the weakness which I feel,
The wreck of all my friends; nor this man's threats,
To whom I am subdued, are but light to me,
Might I but through my prison once a day
Behold this maid: all corners else o' the earth
Let liberty make use of: space enough
Have I in such a prison.

Pros. [Aside] It works. [To Fer.] Come on.
Thou hast done well, fine Ariel! [To Fer.] Follow
[To Ari.] Hark what thou else shalt do me. [ne.

Mir. Be of comfort;
My father's of a better nature, sir,
Than let appears by speech: this is unvented
Which now came from him.

Pros. Thou shalt be as free
As mountain winds: but then exactly do
All points of my command.

ACT II.

THE TEMPEST.

SCENE II.
ACT II.

THE TEMPEST.

SCENE I. — Another part of the island.

Enter Alonso, Sebastian, Antonio, Gonzalo, Adrian, Francisco, and others.

Gon. Beseech you, sir, be merry; you have cause,
So have we all, of joy; for our escape
Is much beyond our loss. Our hint of woe
Is common; every day some sailor's wife,
The masters of some merchant and the merchant
Have given us theme of woe; but for the miracle,
I mean our preservation, few in millions
Can speak like us: then wisely, good sir, weigh
Our sorrow with our comfort.

Al. Prithee, peace.

Seb. He receives comfort like cold porridge.

Ant. The visitor will not give him o'er so.

Seb. Look, he's winding up the watch of his wit;
Gon. Sir,—
[by and by it will strike.

Seb. One: tell.
Gon. When every grief is entertain'd that's Comes to the entertainor.

Seb. A dollar. [spoken truer than you purposed.
Gon. Doleur comes to him, indeed: you have
Seb. You have taken it wiser than I meant
Gon. Therefore, my lord,— [you should.
Ant. Fie, what a spendthrift is he of his tongue!
Al. I prithee, spare.

Ant. Well, I have done: but yet,—
Seb. He will be talking, first begins to crow;
Ant. Which, of he or Adrian, for a good wager,
Seb. The old cock.
Ant. The cockerel.
Seb. Done. The wager?
Ant. A laugh.
Seb. A match!

Adr. Though this island seem to be desert,—
Seb. Ha, ha, ha! So, you're paid.
Adr. Uninhabitable and almost inaccessible,—
Seb. Yet,—

Ant. He could not miss 't. [cruel temperance.
Adr. It must needs be of subdole, tender and deli-
Ant. Temperance was a delicate wench. [livered.
Seb. Ay, and a sublate: as he most learnedly de-
Adr. The air breathes upon us here most sweetly,
Seb. As if it had lungs and rotten ones.
Ant. Or as 'twere perfumed by a fern.
Gon. Here is everything advantageous to life.
Seb. Of that there's none, or little. [green!
Gon. How lush and lusty the grass looks! how
Ant. The ground indeed is tawny.
Seb. With an eye of green in 't.
Ant. He misses not much.
Seb. No; he doth but mistake the truth totally.
Gon. But the rarity of it is,— which is indeed almost beyond credit.

Adr. As many vouch'd rarities are.

Gon. That our garments, being, as they were,
Drenched in the sea, hold notwithstanding
Their freshness and gloses, being rather new-dyed than Stained with salt water. [it not say he lies?
Ant. If but one of his pockets could speak, would
Seb. Ay, or very falsely pocket up his report.
Gon. Methinks our garments are now as fresh as when we put them on first in Afric, at the marriage of the king's fair daughter Claribel to the King of Tunis. [well in our return.

Seb. 'Twas a sweet marriage, and we prosper;
Adr. Tunis was no sooner grace before with such a paragon to their queen.
Gon. Not since widow Dido's time.
Ant. Widow! a pox o' that! How came that widow in? widow Dido?

Seb. What if he had said 'widow Æneas' too?
Good lord, how you take it!

Adr. 'Widow Dido' said you? you make me study of that; she was of Carthage, not of Tunis.

Gon. This Tunis, sir, was Carthage.

Adr. Carthage?

Gon. I assure you, Carthage.

Seb. His word is more than the miraculous harp;
He hath raised the wall and houses too.

Ant. What impossible matter will he make easy next?

Seb. I think he will carry this island home in his pocket and give it his son for an apple.

Ant. And, sowing the kernels of it in the sea,
Gon. Ay. [bring forth more islands.

Ant. Why, in good time.

Gon. Sir, we were talking that our garments seem now as fresh as when we were at Tunis at the marriage of your daughter, who is now queen.

Ant. And the rarest that ever came there.

Ant. O, widow Dido! ay, widow Dido.

Gon. Is not, sir, my doublet as fresh as the first day I wore it? I mean, in a sort.

Ant. That sort was well fished for. [riague.
Gon. When I wore it at your daughter's mar-

Adr. You cram these words into mine ears against The stomach of my sense. Would I had never Married my daughter there! for, coming thence,
My son is lost and, in my rate, she too,
Who is so far from Italy removed
I ne'er again shall see her. O thou mine heir
Of Naples and of Milan, what strange fish
Hath made his meal on thee?

Erat. Sir, he may live:
I saw him beat the surges under him,
And ride upon their lacks; he trod the water,
Whose enmity he flung aside, and breasted
The surge most swoln that met him; his bold head
'Bove the confusions waves he kept, and car'd
If himself with his good arms in lusty stroke
To the shore, that o'er his wave-worn basis bow'd,
As stooping to relieve him: I doubt not
He came alive to land.

Adr. No, no, he's gone. [loss.

Seb. Sir, you may thank yourself for this great
That would not bless our Europe with your daugh-
But rather lose her to an African; [ter,
Where she at least is banish'd from your eye,
Who hath cause to wet the grief on 't.

Adr. Prithee, peace.

Seb. You were kneel'd to and importuned other-
By all of us, and the fair soul herself [wise
Weigh'd between loathness and obedience, at Which end o' the beam should bow. We have lost
I fear, for ever: Milan and Naples have [your son,
More widows in them of this business' making
Than we bring men to comfort them:
The fault 's your own.

Adr. So is the dearst 'o the loss.

Gon. My lord Sebastian,
The truth you speak doth lack some gentleness
Time and space to speak it in: you rub the sore,
When you should bring the plaster.

Seb. Very well.

Ant. And most chirurgically.

Gon. It is foul weather in us all, good sir,
When you are cloudy.

Seb. Foul weather? *

Ant. Very foul.

Gon. Had I plantation of this isle, my lord,—

Ant. He 'd sow t' with nettle-seed.

Seb. Or docks, or mallows.

Gon. And were the king on't, what would I do?
ACT II.

THE TEMPEST.

Scene I.

Seb. 'Scape being drunk for want of wine.

Gen. I'm the commonwealth I would by contraries Execute all things; for no kind of traffic Would I admit; no name of many fraternize: Letters should not be known: riches, poverty, And use of service, none; contract, succession, Bourn, bound of land, tillth, vineyard, none; No use of metal, corn, or wine, or oil; No occupation; all men idle, all; And women too, but innocent and pure; No sovereignty:

Seb. Yet he would be king o'rt.

Ant. The latter end of his commonwealth forgets the beginning.

Gen. All things in common nature should produce With sweet or endeavour: treason, felony, Sword, pike, knife, gun, or need of any engine. Would I not have; but nature should bring forth, Of its own kind, all poison, all abundance, To feed my innocent people.

Seb. No marrying 'mong his subjects?

Ant. None, none: all idle; whose and knives.

Gen. I would with such perfection govern, sir, To excel the golden age.

Seb. God save his majesty!

Ant. Long live Gonzalo!

Gen. And,—do you mark me, sir? Prithée, no more: thou dost talk nothing to me.

Gen. I do well believe your highness; and did it to minister occasion to these gentlemen, who are of such sensible and nimble lungs that they always use to laugh at nothing.

Ant. 'Twas you we laughed at.

Gen. Who in this kind of merry fooling am nothing to you: so you may continue and laugh at nothing.

Ant. What a blow was there given! [stiff.]

Seb. An it had not fallen flat-long.

Gen. You are gentlemen of brave mettle; you would lift the moon out of her sphere, if she would continue in it five weeks without changing.

Enter Ariel, invisibly, playing solemn music.

Seb. We would so, and then go a bat-fowling.

Ant. Nay, good my lord, be not angry.

Gen. No, I warrant you: I will not adventure my discretion so weakly. Will you laugh me asleep, for

Ant. Go sleep, and hear us. [I am very heavy?] [All sleep except Alon. Seb., and Ant.]

Alon. What, all so soon asleep! I wish mine eyes

Seb. Would, with themselves, shut up my thoughts: I find They are inclined to do so.

Seb. Please you, sir,

Do not omit the heavy offer of it:

It seldom visits sorrow; when it doth,

It is a comfortor.

Ant. We two, my lord,

Will guard your person while you take your rest,

And watch your safety.

Alon. Thank you. Wondrous heavy.

[Alono sleeps. Exit Ariel.]

Seb. What a strange drowsiness possesses them! Ant. It is the quality o' the climate.

Seb. Why

Doth it not then our eyelids sink? I find not Myself disposed to sleep.

Ant. Nor I: my spirits are nimble.

They fell together all, as by consent;

They dropp'd, as by a thunder-stroke. What might, When Seb.'s Sebastian? O, what might? — No more:

And yet me thinks I see it in thy face,

What thou shouldst be: the occasion speaks thee, and

My strong imagination sees a crown

Dropping upon thy head.

Seb. What, art thou waking?

Ant. Do you not hear me speak?

Seb. I do; and surely

It is a sleepy language and thou speak'st

Out of thy sleep. What is it thou didst say?

This is a strange repose, to be asleep

With eyes that hope! with standing, speaking, moving,

And yet so fast asleep.

Ant. Noble Sebastian,

Thou let'st thy fortune sleep—die, rather; whist.'st

Whiles thou art waking.

Seb. Thou dost snore distinctly;

There is meaning in thy snores.

Ant. I am more serious than my custom: you

Must be so too, if need be; which to do

Treblest thee o'er.

Seb. Well, I am standing water.

Ant. I'll teach you how to flow.

Seb. Do so: to ebb

Hereditary sloth instructs me.

Ant. If you but knew how you the purpose cherish

Whiles thou mockst it! how, in stripping it,

You more invest it! Ebbing men, indeed,

Most often do so near the bottom run

By their own fear or sloth.

Seb. Prithée, say on:

The setting of thine eye and cheek proclaim

A matter from thee, and a birth indeed

Which throses thee much to yield.

Ant. Although this lord of weak remembrance, this,

Who shall be of as little memory

When he is earth'd, hath here almost persuaded,—

For he's a spirit of persuasion, only

Professes to persuade,—the king his son's alive,

'Tis as impossible that he's undrown'd

As he that sleeps here swims.

Seb. I have no hope

That he's undrown'd.

Ant. O, out of that 'no hope'

What great hope have you! no hope that way is Another way so high a hope that even

Ambition cannot pierce a wink beyond,

But doubt discovery there. Will you grant with me

That Ferdinand is drown'd?

Seb. He's gone.

Ant. Who is the next heir of Naples?

Seb. Claribel.

Ant. She that is queen of Tunis; she that dwells

Ten leagues beyond man's life: she that from Naples

Can have no note, unless the sun were post—

The man i' the moon's too slow—till new-born chins

Be rough and razzable; she that — from whom?

We all were sea-swallow'd through some cast again,

And by that destiny to perform an act,

Whereof 's past is prologue; what to come

In yours and my discharge.

Seb. What stuff is this! how say you?

'tis true, my brother's daughter's queen of Tunis;

So is she heir of Naples; 'twixt which regions

There is some space.

Ant. A space whose every cubit

Seems to cry out, 'How shall that Claribel

Measure us back to Naples? Keep in Tunis,

And let Sebastian wake.' — Say, this were death

That now hath selected; why, they were no worse

Than now they are. There be that can rule Naples

As well as he that sleeps; lords that can prate

As amply and unnecessarily

As this Gonzalo: I myself could make

A chough of as deep chat. O, that you bore

The mind that I have! what a sleep were this

For your advancement! Do you understand me?

Seb. Methinks I do.

Ant. And how does your content

Tender your own good fortune?

Seb. I remember

You did supplant your brother Prospero.
True.
And look how well my garments sit upon me;
Much fitter than before; my brother's servants
Were then my fellows; now they are my men.
Sb. But, for your conscience?

Ant. Ay, sir; where lies that? if 't were a kibe,
'Twould put me to my slipper; but I feel not
This deity in my bosom: twenty consistencies,
This sound of cries and clashing, and all that;
And melt ere they molest! Here lies your brother,
No better than the earth he lies upon,
If he were that which now he 's like, that 's dead;
Whom I, with this obedient steel, three inches of it,
Can lay to bed for ever: whiles you, doing thus,
To the perpetual wish for dead put
This ancient morsel, this Sir Prudence, who Should not upbraid our course. For all the rest,
They 'll take suggestion as a cat laps milk;
They 'll tell the clock to any business that
We say beats the hour.
Sb. Thy case, dear friend,
Shall be my precedent: as thou go'st at Milan,
I 'll come by Naples. Draw thy sword: one stroke
Shall free thee from the tribute which thou payest;
And I the king shall love thee.

Ant. Draw together;
And when I rear my hand, do you the like,
To fall it on Gonzalo.
Sb. O, but one word. [They talk apart.

Enter Ariel, invisible.

Ari. My master through his art foresees the danger
That you, his friend, are in; and sends me forth —
For else his project dies — to keep them living.

[Songs in Gonzalo's ear.

While you here do snoring lie,
Open-eyed conspiracy
His time doth take.
If of life you keep a care,
Shake off slumber, and beware:
Awake, awake!

Ant. Then let us both be sudden.

Gon. Now, good angels
Preserve the king.

[Ari. Why, how now? ho, awake! Why are Wherefore this ghostly looking? [You drawn?
Gon. Why. Whiles we stood here securing your reign,
Even now, we heard a hollow burst of bellowing
Like bulls, or rather lions: did 't not wake you?
It struck mine ear most terribly.

Ari. I heard nothing.

Ant. O, 'twas a din to fright a monster's ear,
To make an earthquake! sure, it was the roar
Of whole a herd of lions.

Gon. Heard you this, Gonzalo?

Ant. Upon mine honour, sir, I heard a humming,
And that a strange one too, which did awake me:
I shaked you, sir, and cried: as mine eyes open'd,
I saw their weapons drawn; there was a noise
That 's very. 'Tis best we stand upon our guard,
Or that we quit this place: let's draw our weapons.

Gon. Lead off this ground; and let's make fur-
For my poor son. [Theer search

Heavens keep him from these beasts!
For he is, sure, 'tis the island.

Gon. Lead away. [done.
Ari. Prospero my lord shall know what I have
So, king, go safely on to seek thy son.

Exit.

SCENE II.—Another part of the island.

Enter Caliban with a burden of wood. A noise of Thunder heard.

Cal. All the infection that the sun sucks up
From dogs, fens, flax, on trees fall and make him
By inch-meal a disease! His spirits hear me
And yet I needs must curse. But they 'll not pinch,
Fright me with urchin-shows, pitch me I 't the mire,
Nor lead me, like a firebrand, in the dark
Out of my way, unless he bid 'em; but
For every tribute are they set upon me;
Sometime like apes that mow and chatter at me
And after bite me, then like hedgehogs which Lie tumbling in my barefoot way and mount
Their pricks at my footfall; sometime am I
Aloft, with astrigent who with cloven tongues
Do kiss me into madness.

Enter Trinculo.

Trin. O, now, oh! Here comes a spirit of his, and to torment me
For bringing wood in slowly. 'I ll fall flat;
Perchance he will not mind me.

Trin. Here 's neither bush nor shrub, to bear off any weather at all, and another storm brewing; I hear it sing ' t the wind; yond same black cloud, yond huge one, looks like a foul bombard that would shed his liquor. If it should thunder as it did before,
I know not where to hide my head: yond same cloud cannot choose but fall by pailsfuls. What have we here? a man or a fish? dead or alive? A fish: he smells like a fish; a very ancient and fish-like smell, a kind of must. Look there:
A strange fish! Wore I in England now, as once I was, and had but this fish painted, not a holiday fool there but would give a piece of silver: there would this monster make a man: any strange beast there makes a man: when they will not give a deit to relive and drivel, and beggar them out ten to see a dead Indian. Legged like a man! and his fins like arms! Warm o' my troth! I do now lose my opinion; hold! it no longer: this is no fish, but an islander, that lately suffered by a thunderbolt. [Thunder.] Alas, the storm is come again!
My best way is to creep under his galamander; there is no other shelter hereabout; misery acquaints a man with strange bed-fellows. I will here shroud till the dregs of the storm be past.

Enter Stephano, singing: a battle in his head.

Ste. I shall no more to sea, to sea,
Here shall I die ashoare —

This is a very scurry tune to sing at a man's funeral: well, here's my comfort. [Drinks.

[Sings.

The master, the swabber, the boatswain and I,
The gunner and his mate
Loved Mall, Meg and Marian and Margery,
But none of us cared for Kate;
For she had a tongue with a taunt,
Would cry to a sailor, Go hang!
She loved not the savour of tar nor pitch,
Yet a tailor might scratch her where'er she did
Then to sea, boys, and let her go hang! [itch:

This is a scurry tune too: but here's my comfort.

[Drinks.

Cal. Do not torment me: Oh!
Ste. What's the matter? Have we devils here?
Do you put tricks upon 's with savages and men of Island? I have not scared drowning to be afraid now of your four legs: for it hath been said, As proper a man as ever went on four legs cannot make him give ground; and it shall be said so again while Stephano breathes at 's nostrils.
Cal. The spirit torments me: Oh!
Ste. The spirit torments me: Oh!
Ste. He's in his fit now and does not talk after the wisest. He shall taste of my bottle: if he have never drunk wine afore, it will go near to remove his fit. If I can recover him and keep him tame, I will not take too much for him; he shall pay for him that hath him, and that soundly.

Cal. Hast thou not yet but little hurt? thou wilt anon, I know it by thy trembling: now Prosper works upon thee.

Ste. Come on your ways; open your mouth; here is that which will give language to you; open your mouth; this will shake your shaking; I can tell you, and that soundly: you cannot tell who's your friend: open your chaps again.

Trin. I should know that voice: it should be — but he is drowned; and these are devils: O defend me!

Ste. Four legs and two voices: a most delicate monster! His forward voice now is to speak well of his friend: his backward voice is to utter foul speeches and to detract. If all the wine in my bottle will recover him, I will help his ague. Come, Amen! I will pour some in thy other mouth.

Trin. Stephano!

Ste. Dost thy other mouth call me? Mercy, mercy! This is a devil, and no monster: I will leave him: I have no long spoon.

Trin. Stephano! If thou beest Stephano, touch me and speak to me: for I am Trinculo — be not afraid — thy good friend Trinculo.

Ste. If thou beest Trinculo, come forth: I'll pull thee by the lesser legs; if any be Trinculo's legs, these are they. Thou art very Trinculo indeed! How camest thou to be the siege of this moon-calf? can he vent Trinculos?

Trin. I took him to be killed with a thunder-stroke. But art thou not drowned, Stephano? I hope now thou art not drowned. Is the storm blown over? I hid me under the dead moon-calf's gamboge for fear of the storm. And art thou living, Stephano? O Stephano, two Neapolitans 'scape'd!

Ste. Prithee, do not turn me about; my stomach is not constant.

Cal. [Aside] These be fine things, an if they be not sprites.

That's a brave god and bears celestial liquor. I will kneel to him.

Ste. How diest thou 'scape? How camest thou hither's 'scape by this bottle which I made of the bark of a tree with mine own hands since I was cast ashore.

Cal. I'll swear upon that bottle to be thy true subject: for the liquor is not earthly.

Ste. Here; swear then how thou escapest.

Trin. Swam ashore, man, like a duck: I can swim like a duck, I'll be sworn.

Ste. Here, kiss the book. Though thou canst swim like a duck, thou art made like a goose.

Trin. O Stephano, hast any more of this?

Ste. The whole butt; my cellar is in a rock by the sea-side where my wine is hid; moon-calf! how does thine ague?

Cal. Hast thou not much heaven?

Ste. Out o' the moon, I do assure thee: I was the man? i' the moon when time was.

Cal. I have seen thee in her and I do adore thee: My mistress show'd me thee and thy dog and thy bush.

Ste. Come, swear to that; kiss the book: I will furnish it anon with new contents; swear.

Trin. By this good light, this is a very shallow monster! I afraid of him! A very weak monster! The man i' the moon! A most poor credulous monster! Well drawn, monster, in good sooth!

Cal. I'll show thee every fertile inch o' the island; and I will kiss thy foot: I prithee, be my god.

Trin. By this light, a most peridious and drunken monster! when 's god's asleep, he'll rob his bottle. Cal. I'll kiss thy foot; I'll swear myself thy subject. Ste. Come on:; down, and swear. [Exit Trinculo.

Trin. I shall laugh myself to death at this puppy-headed monster. A most scarry monster! I could— Ste. Come, kiss. [find in my heart to beat him.

Trin. But that the poor monster's in drink: an abominable monster!

Cal. I'll show thee the best springs; I'll pluck I'll fish for thee and get thee wood enough.

A plague upon the tyrant that I serve! I'll bear him no more sticks, but follow thee, Thou wondrous man.

Trin. A most ridiculous monster, to make a wonder of a poor drunkard!

Cal. Prithee, let me bring thee where crabs grow; and I with my long nails will dig thee pig-nuts; show thee a jay's nest and instruct thee how to shave the nimble marmoset. I'll bring thee to clustering aliberts and sometimes I'll get thee young scampels from the rock. Wilt thou go with me? Ste. I prithee now, lead the way without any more talking. Trinculo, the king and all our company else being drowned, we will inherit here: here; bear my bottle: fellow Trinculo, we'll fill him by and by.

Cal. [Sings drunkenly] Again.

Farewell, master; farewell, farewell! Trin. A howling monster; a drunken monster!

Cal. No more than I'll make for fish; nor fetch in firing At requiring; nor scrape trencher, nor wash dish:

'Ban, 'Ban, Cacaliban Has a new master: get a new man.

Freedom, hey-day! hey-day, freedom! hey-day, freedom!

Ste. O brave monster! Lead the way. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—Before Prospero's cell.

Enter Ferdinand, bearing a log.

Per. There are some sports are painful, and their labour
Delight in them sets off; some kinds of baseness
Are nobly undergone and most poor matters
Point to rich ends. This is my mean task
Would be heavy to me as odious, but
The mistress which I serve quickens what's dead
And makes my labours pleasures: O, she is Ten times more gentle than her father's cabred,
And he's composed of harshness. I must remove

Some thousands of these logs and pile them up.
Upon a sore injunction: my sweet mistress ness
Weeps when she sees me work, and says, such base
Hath never been her Phytofrator. I forget:
But these sweet thoughts do even refresh my labours,
Most busy lest, when I do it.

Enter Miranda; and Prospero at a distance, unseen.

Mir. Alas, now, pray you, Work not so hard: I would the lightning had Burnt up those logs that you are cajo'li'd to pile!
Pray, set it down and rest you: when this burns,
'Twill weep for having wearied you. My father
I am your wife, if you will marry me;
If not, I'll die your maid: to be your fellow
You may deny me; but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no.

Fer. My mistress, dearest;
And I thus humble ever.

Mir. My husband, then?

Fer. Ay, with a heart as willing
As bondage e'er of freedom: here's my hand.

Mir. And mine, with my heart in't: and now
Till half an hour hence. [farewell

Fer. A thousand thousand!

Pros. So glad of this as they I cannot be,
Who are surprised withal; but my rejoicing
At nothing can be more. I'll to my book,
For yet ere supper-time must I perform
Much business appertaining.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Another part of the island.

Enter Caliban, Stephano, and Trinculo.

Ste. Tell not me; when the butt is out, we will drink water; not a drop before: therefore hear up, and board'em. Servant-monster, drink to me.

Trin. Servant-monster! the folly of this island!
They say there's but live upon this isle: we are three of them: if th'o other two be brawned like us, the state totters.

Ste. Drink, servant-monster, when I bid thee:
thy eyes are almost set in thy head.

Tri. Where should they be set else? he were a brave monster indeed, if they were set in this tail.

Ste. My man-monster hath drown'd his tongue in sack: for my part, the sea cannot drown me; I swim, ere I could recover the shore, five and thirty leagues off and on. By this light, thou shalt be my liege lord, monster, or my standard.

Tri. Your lieutenant, if you list; he's no stand- Ste. We'll not run, Monsieur Monster.

Tri. Nor go neither; but you'll lie like dogs and yet say nothing neither.

Ste. Moon-calf, speak once in thy life, if thou beest a good moon-calf.

[Aside.

Cal. How does thy honour? Let me lick thy I'll not serve him; he's not valiant.

Tri. Thou liest, most ignominious monster: I am in case to justle a constable. Why, thou deboshed fish, thou, was there ever man a coward that hath drunk so much sack as I do? Why will thou tell a magnificent lie, being but half a fish and half a monster?

[Aside.

Cal. Lo, how he mocks me! wilt thou let him, Tri. 'Lord' quoth he! That a monster should be such a natural!

Cal. Lo, lo, again! bite him to death, I prithee.

Ste. Trinculo, keep a good tongue in your head: if you prove a mutiner,—the next tree! The poor monster's my subject and he shall not suffer indignity.

Cal. I thank my noble lord. Wilt thou be pleased to hear me again to the suit I made to thee?

Ste. Marry, will I: kneel and repeat it; I will stand, and so shall Trinculo.

Enter Ariel, invisible.

Cal. As I told thee before, I am subject to a tyrant, a sorcerer, that by his cunning hath cheated Ari. Thou liest. [pee of the island.

Cal. Thou liest, thou jesting monkey, thou:
I would my valiant master would destroy thee! I do not lie.

Ste. Trinculo, if you trouble him any more in't, take him by the hand, I will supplant some of your Tri. Why, I said nothing.

[Beeth.

Ste. Mmu., then, and no more. Proceed.

Cal. I say, by sorcery he got this isle;
From me he got it. If thy greatness will Revive me—"for I know thou dar'st,
But this thing dare not.

Ste. That's most certain.

Cal. Thou shalt be lord of it and I will serve thee.

Ste. How now shall this be compassed? Canst thou bring me to the party?

Cal. Yea, yea, my lord; I'll yield thee thine asleep,
Where thou mayst knock a nail into his head.

Ari. Thou liest; thou canst not. [pitch]

Cal. What a pled nimmy's this! Thou scurvy
I do beseech thy greatness, give him blows
And take his bottle from him: when that's gone
He shall drink the blood of hiselin; for I shall not Know where the quick freshares.

[him

Ste. Trinculo, run into no further danger: interrupt the monster one word further, and, by this hand,
I'll turn my merry out o' doors and make a stock-fish of thee.

Trin. Why, what did I? I did nothing. I'll go farther off.

Ste. Didst thou not say he lied?

Ari. Thou liest.

Ste. Do I so? take thou that. [Beats Trin.] As you like this, give me the lie another time.

Trin. I did not give the lie; out o' your wits and hearing too? A box o' your bottle! this can sack and drinking do. A murrain on your monster, and the devil take your fingers!

Cal. Ha, ha, ha! [further off.

Ste. Now, forward with your tale. Priateh, stand
Cal. Beat him enough: after a little time
I'll beat him too.

Cal. Why, as I told thee, 'tis a custom with him,
I' th' afternoon to sleep; there thou mayst brain him,
Having first seized his books, or with a log
Batter his skull, or punche him with a stake,
Or cut his wendaz with thy knife. Remember
First to possess his books: for without them
He's but a sot, as I am, nor hath not
One spirit to command: they all do hate him
As rootedly as I. Burn but his books.
He has brave urtensils,—for so he calls them,—
Which, with a brand, he'll deck withal.
And that most deeply to consider
The beauty of his daughter; he himself
Calls her a nonpareil: I never saw a woman,
But only Sycorax my dam and she;
But she as far surpasseth Sycorax
As great's do least.

Ste. Is it so brave a Ass?

Cal. Ay, lord; she will become thy bed, I warrant.
And bring thee forth brave brood.

Ste. Monster, I will kill this man: his daughter
And I will be king and queen,—save our graces—
And Trinculo and thyself shall be viceroys. Dost thou like the plot, Trinculo?

Trin. Excellent.

Ste. Give me thy hand: I am sorry I beat thee;
but, while thou livest, keep a good tongue in thy head.

Cal. Within this half hour will be asleep;
Wilt thou destroy him then?

Ste. Ay, on mine honour.

Ari. This will I tell my master. [ure

Cal. Thou makest me merry: I am full of pleas-
Let us be jo'ndal: you will twit the catch
You shall be neat as a meagre.

Ste. At thy request, monster, I will do reason, any reason. Come on, Trinculo, let us sing. [Sings.

Flont 'em and scout 'em
And scout 'em and flout 'em;

That's right is free.

Cal. That's not the tune. [Ariel play's tune on a tabor and pipe.

Ste. What is this same?
Their manners are more gentle-kind than of
Our human generation you shall find
Many, nay, almost any.
Pros. [Aside] Honest lord, They have said well; for some of you there present Are worse than devils.
Alon. I cannot too much muse
Such shapes, such gesture and such sound, expressing, Although they want the use of tongue, a kind Of excellent dumb discourse.
Pros. [Aside] Praise in departing.
Fra. They vanish'd strangely.
Seb. No matter, since They have left their viands behind; for we have stomachs. Will 't please you taste of what is here? Not I.
Goo. Faith, sir, you need not fear. When we were boys, Who would believe that there were mountaineers Dew-lapp'd like bulls, whose throats had hanging at 'em
Wallets of flesh? or that there were such men Whose heads stood in their breasts? which now we Each puttering of five for one will bring us [find Good warrant of.
Alon. I will stand to and feed, Although my last: no matter, since I feel The best is past. Brother, my lord the duke, Stand to and do as we.
Thunder and lightning. Enter Ariel, like a harpy; claps his wings upon the table; and, with a quaint device, the banquet vanishes.
Ari. You are three men of sin, whom Destiny, That hath to instrument this lower world And what is in 't, the never-surfeited sea Hath caus'd to belch up you; and on this island Where man doth not inhabit; you 'mongst men Being most unfit to live, I have made you mad; And even with such-like valour men hang and Their proper selves. [Alon., Seb., &c. draw their swords.
You fools! I and my fellows Are ministers of Fate: the elements, Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well Wound the loud winds, or with tempests' at stabs Kill the still-closing waters, as diminish One dowel that's in my flame: my fellow-ministers Are like inscrutable. If you could hurt, Your swords are now too massy for your strengths And will not be uplifted. But remember—
For that's my business to you — that you three From Milan did supplant good Prospero;
Exposed unto the sea, which hath requit it, Him and his innocent child; for which foul deed The powers, delaying not for six months to guard you Incensed the seas and shores, yea, all the creatures, Against your peace. Thee of thy son, Alonso, They have bereft; and do pronounce by me: Lingering perdition, worse than any death Can be at once, shall step by step attend [from— You and your ways; whose wrath's to guard you Which here, in this most desolate isle, else falls Upon your heads— is nothing but heart-sorrow And a clear life ensuing.
He vanishes in thunder; then, to soft music, enter the Shapes again, and dance, with macks and mews, and carrying out the table.
Pros. Bravely the figure of this harpy hast thou Perform'd, my Ariel; a grace it had, devouring: Of my instruction hast thou nothing bated In what thou hast to say: so, with good life And observation strange, my minister ministers Their several kinds have done. My high charms And these mine enemies are all knit up [work In their distractions; they now are in my power; And in these fists I leave them, while I visit Young Ferdinand, whom they suppose is drown'd, And his and mine loved darling.
[Exit above.
Gon. I, the name of something holy, sir, why stand In this strange stare? [Alon.
O, it is monstrous, monstrous! Methought the billows spoke and told me of it; The winds did sing it to me, and the thunder,
That deep and dreadful organ-pipe, pronounced The name of Prosper: it did blast my trespass, Therefore my son i' the ooze is lodg'd, and I'll seek him deeper than e'er plummet sounded And with him there he mudd'd.
[Exeunt.
Seb. But one fiend at a time, I'll light their legions o'er. [Ant.
I'll be thy second. [Exeunt Seb. and Ant.
Gon. All three of them are desperate: their great guilt, Like poison given to work a great time after, Now gins to bite the spirits. I do beseech you That are of suppurer joints, follow them swiftly And hinder them from what this ecstasy May now provoke them to.
[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I. — Before Prospero's cell.

Enter Prospero, Ferdinand, and Miranda.

Pros. If I have too austerity pen'd you, Your compensation makes amends, for I Have given you here a third of mine own life, Or that for which I live: who once again I tender to thy hand: all thy vexations Were but my trials of thy love, and thou Hast strangely stood the test: here, stow Heaven, I ratify this my rich gift. O Ferdinand, Do not smile at me that I bestow her off, For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise And make it halt behind her.
Fer. I do believe it.
Against an oracle.
Pros. Then, as my gift and thine own acquisition Worthy purchased, take my daughter: but

If thou dost break her virgin-knot before All sanctimonious ceremonies may With full and holy rite be minister'd; No sweet assersion shall the heavens let fall To make this contract grow; but barren hale, Sour-eyed disdain and discard shall bestrew The union of your bed with weeds so loathly That you shall hate it both: therefore take heed, As Hyman's lamps shall light you.
Fer. As I hope For quiet days, fair issue and long life, With such love as 'tis now, the nunnish den, The most opportune place, the strongest suggestion Our wiser genius can, shall never melt Mine honour into dust, to take away The edge of that day's celebration When I shall think, or Phoebus' steeds are found'r, Or Night keep chain'd below.
Pros. Fairly spoke.
Sit then and talk with her; she is thine own.
What, Ariel! my industrious servant, Ariel!

Enter Ariel.

Art. What would my potent master? here I am.
Pros. Thou and thy meneer follow thy last ser-did worthily perform; and I must use you [vice
In such another trick. Go bring the rabble,
Over whom I give thee power, here to this place:
Incite them to quick motion; for I must Bestow upon the eyes of this young couple
Some vanity of mine art: it is my promise,
And they expect it from me.

Ari. Pros. Ay, with a twinkle. Presently?
Ari. Before you can say 'come' and 'go,
And breathe twice and cry 'so, so,'
Each one, tripping on his toe,
Will be here with mop and saw.
Do you love me, master? no?
Pros. Dearly, my delicate Ariel. Do not approach
Till thou hast hear me call.

Ari. Well, I conceive. [Exit.

Pros. Look thou be true; do not give dallowance
Too much the rein: the strongest oats are straw
To the fire; the blood: be more abstemious,
Or else a good-night your vow!

Fer. I warrant you, sir;
The white cold virgin snow upon my heart
Abates the ardour of my liver.

Pros. Well,
Now come, my Ariel! bring a corollary,
Rather than want a spirit: appear, and pertly!
No tongue! all eyes! be silent. [Soft music.

Enter Iris.

Iris. Ceres, most bounteous lady, thy rich leas
Of wheat, rye, barley, vetches, oats and peas;
Thy turn mountain with thy nibbling sheep,
And thy meads thatch'd with stover, them to keep;
Thy banks with pioned and twilled briars,
Which spongy April at thy hest betrims, [groves,
To make cold nymphs chasecastrate; and thy bourn-
Whose shadow the dismissed bachelor loves,
Being less-born; thy pole-clipt vineyard;
And thy sea-marsh, sterile and rocky-hard,
Where thou thyself dost air; — the queen of the sky,
Whose watery arch and messenger am I,
Bid thee leave these, and with her sovereign grace,
Here on this grass-plot, in this very place,
To come and sport; thy roeckcs fly amain:
Approach, rich Ceres, her to entertain.

Enter Ceres.

Ccr. Hail, many-coloured messenger, that ne'er
Dost disobey the wife of Jupiter;
Who with thy saffron wings upon my flowers
Dissolute honey-drops, refreshing showers,
And with each end of thy blue bow dost crown
My bosky acres and my unshrub'd down,
Rich scarce to my proud earth; why hath thy queen
Summon'd me hither, to this short-grass' green?
Iris. A contract of true love to celebrate;
And some donation freely to estate.

On the best lovers.

Ccr. Tell me, heavenly bow,
If Venus or her son, as thou dost know,
Do not await the queen of Paphos and her son Dove-drawn with her. Here thought they to have Some wanton charm upon this man and maid. [done
Whose vows are, that no bed-right shall be paid
Till Hymen's torch be lighted: but in vain;

Mars's hot minion is returned again;
Her waspish-headed son has broke his arrows,
Sovers he will shoot no more but play with sparrings
And be a boy right out.

Ccr. High'st queen of state,
Great Juno, comes; I know her by her gait.

Enter Juno.

Juno. How does my bounteous sister? Go with me
To bless this twain, that they may prosper and
And honour'd in their deed. [They sing.

Juno. Honour, riches, marriage-blessing,
Long continuance, and increasing,
Hourly joys be still upon you!
Juno sings her blessings on you.

Ccr. Earth's increase, folson plenty,
Barns and garners never empty,
Vines with clustering bunches growing,
Plants with goodly burtthen bowing;
Spring come to you at the farthest
In the very end of harvest!
Scarcely and want shall shun you;
Ceres' blessing so is on you.

Fer. This is a most majestic vision, and Harmonious charmingly. May I be bold
To think these spirits?

Pros. Spirits, which in mine art
I have from their confines call'd to exact
My present fancies.

Fer. Let me live here ever;
So rare a wonder'd father and a wife
Makes this place Paradise.

Pros. [Juno and Ceres whisper, and send Iris on employment.

Iris. Sweet, now, silence!
Juno and Ceres whisper seriously;
There's something else to do: hush, and be mute.
Or else our spell is marred.

Iris. You nymphs, call'd Naiads, of the windng
With your sedged crowns and ever-harmless books,
Leave your crisp channels and on this green land
Answer your summons: Juno does command:
Come, temperate nymphs, and help to celebrate
A contract of true love: be not too late.

Enter certain Nymphs.

You sunburnt sicklemen, of August weary,
Come hither from the furrow and be merry;
Make holiday: your rye-straw hats put on
And these fresh nymphs encounter every one
In country footing.

Enter certain Reapers, properly habited: they join with the Nymphs in a graceful dance; towards the end whereof Prospero starts suddenly, and speaks, after which, to a strange, hollow, and confused noise, they heavily vanish.

Pros. [Aside] I had forgot that foul conspiracy
Of the beast Caliban and his confederates.
Against my son they meant to murder; no more! It almost come. [To the Spirits.] Well done! avoid it.

Fer. This is strange: your father's in some passion
That works him strongly.

Mrs. Never till this day
Saw I him touch'd with anger so distemper'd.
Pros. You do look, my son, in a moved sort,
As if you were dismay'd: be cheerful, sir.
Our revels now are ended. These our actors,
As I foretold you, were all spirits and
Are melted into air, into thin air:
And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,
The cloud-clap'd towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolve
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind. We are such stuff
ACT V.

THE TEMPEST.

SCENE I. — Before Prospero’s cell.

Enter Prospero in his magic robes, and Ariel.

Pros. Now does my project gather to a head:
My charms crack not: my spirits obey; and time
Goes upright with his carriage. How is the day?
Ari. On the sixth hour: at which time, my lord,

You said our work should cease.

Pros. I did say so,

When first I raised the tempest. Say, my spirit,
How fares the king and his followers?

Ari. Confined together

In the same fashion as you gave in charge,

Just as you left them; all prisoners, sir,

All’s hush’d as midnight yet.

Trin. Ay, but to lose our bottles in the pool,—

Ste. There is not only disgrace and dishonour in that, monster, but an infinite loss.

Trin. That’s more to me than my wetting; yet this is your harmless fairy, monster.

Ste. I will fetch off my bottle, though I be ever ears for my labour.

Cal. Prithée, my king, be quiet. See’st thou here,

This is the mouth of the cell: no noise, and enter.

Do that good mischief which may make this island

Thine own for ever, and I, thy Caliban,

For aye thy foot-ticker.

[thoughts.]

Ste. Give me thy hand. I do begin to have bloody

Trin. O king Stephano! O peer! O worthy Stephano! look what a wardrobe here is for thee!

Cal. Let it alone, thou fool! It is but trash.

Trin. O, bo, monster! we know what belongs to a frippery. O king Stephano!

Ste. Put off that gown, Trinculo; by this hand,

I’ll have that gown.

Trin. Thy grace shall have it.

Cal. The dropsy drown this fool! what do you mean
To do with thus on such luggage? Let’s alone.

And do the murder first: if he awake,

From toe to crown he’ll fill our skins with pinches,

Make us strange stuff.

Ste. Be you quiet, monster. Mistress line, is not this my jerkin? Now is the jerkin under the line:

Now, jerkin, you are like to lose your hair and prove a bald jerkin.

[your grace.

Trin. Do, do: we steal by line and level, an’t like

Ste. I thank thee for that jest: here’s a garment for’t: wit shall not go unrewarded while I am king of this country. ‘Scal’d by line and level’ is an excellent pass of pate: there’s another garment for’t.

Trin. Monster, come, put some line upon your fingers, and away with the rest.

Cal. I will have none on’t: we shall lose our time,

And all be turn’d to barnacles, or to apes

With foreheads villainous low.

Ste. Monster, lay-to your fingers; help to bear this away where my hoghead of wine is, or I’ll turn you out of my kingdom: go to, carry this.

Trin. And this.

Ste. Ay, and this.

A noise of hunters heard. Enter divers Spirits, in shape of dogs and hounds, and hunt them about,

Prospero and Ariel setting them on.

Pros. Hey, Mountain, hey!

Ari. Silver! there it goes, Silver!

Pros. Fury, Fury! there, Tyrant, there! hark!

Sark! [Cal., Ste., and Trin. are driven out.

Go charge my goblins that they grind their joints

With dry convulsions, shorten up their sinews

With aged cramps, and more pinch-spotted make

Than pand or cat o’ mountain. [then

Ari. Hark, they roar!

Pros. Let them be hunted soundly. At this hour

Lie at my mercy all mine enemies:

Shortly shall all my labours end, and thou

Shalt have the air at freedom: for a little

Follow, and do me service.

[Exeunt.]
Act V. The Tempest. Scene 1.

In the line-grove which weather-feuds your cell;
They cannot budge till your release. The king,
His brother and yours, abide all three distracted
And the remainder mourning over them,
Brimful of sorrow and dismay; but chiefly [zalo;]
Him that you term'd, sir, 'The Good old lord. Gonz-
His tears run down his beard, like winter's drops
From the roof, and thus they expressly works
That if you now beheld them, your affections [em
Would become tender.

Pros. Dost thou think so, spirit?
Ari. Mine would, sir, were I human.
Pros. Whence this? This mine shall Hast thou, which art but air, a touch, a feeling
Of their affections, and shall not myself,
One of their kind, that relish all as sharply,
Passion as they, be kindler moved than thou art?
Though with their high wrongs I am struck to the
Yet with my nobler reason 'gainst my fury [quick,
Do I take part: the rarer action is
In virtue than in vengeance: they be pentent,
The sole drift of my purpose doth extend
Not a frown further. Go release them, Ariel:
My charms I'll break, their senses I'll restore,
And they shall be themselves.

[Exit. Pros. Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes and groves,
And ye that on the sands with printless foot
Do chase the ebbing Neptune and do fly him
When he comes back; you demi-puppets
By moonshine do the green chair ringlets make,
Whereof the eye not bites, and you whose pastime
Is to make midnight mushrooms, that rejoice
To hear the solemn curfew; by whose aid,
Weak masters though ye be, I have builded
The moonshine, call'd forth the mutinous winds,
And的心ed the sleep of this hallowed hour:
Set roaring war: to the dread rattling thunder
Have I given fire and rifted Jove's stout oak
With his own bolt; the strong-based promontory
Have I made shake and by the spurs pluck'd up
The pine and cedar: graces at my command
Have waked their sleepers, oped, and let 'em forth
By my so potent art. But this rough magic
I here abjure, and, when I have required
Some heavenly music, which even now I do,
To work mine end upon their senses that
This airy charm is for, I'll break my staff,
Bury it under the ground; and with the vault
And deeper than did ever plummet sound
I'll drown my book. [Solomon music.

Re-enter Ariel before: then Alonso, with a frantic gesture, attended by Gonzalo; Sebastian and Antonio in like manner, attended by Adrian and Francisco: they all enter the circle which Prospero had made, and there stand charmed;
which Prospero observing, speaks:
A solemn air and the best comforter
To an unsettled fancy cure thy brains,
Now use a prayer, and build within thy skull! There stand,
For you are spell-stopp'd.
Holy Gonzalo, honourable man,
Mine eyes, even sociable to the show of thine,
Fall fellowly drops. The charm dissolves apace,
And as the morning steels upon the night,
Melting the darkness, so their rising senses
Begin to chase the ignorant fumes that mantle
Their clearer reason. O good Gonzalo,
My true preserver, and a loyal sir
To him thou follow'st? I will play thy graces
Home both in word and deed. Most cruelly
Didst thou bereave me and my daughter?
Thy brother was a farther in the act. [blood,
Thou art pinched for 't now. Sebastian. Flesh and
You, brother mine, that entertain'd ambition,

Expell'd remorse and nature; who, with Sebastian,
Whose inward pinches therefore are most strong,
Would here have kill'd your king: I do forgive thee,
Unnatural though thou art. Their understanding
Begins to swell, and the approaching tide
Will shortly fill the reasonable shore.
That now lies foul and muddy, that one of them
That yet looks on me, or could know me: Ariel,
Fetch me the hat and rapier in my cell:
I will discourse me, and myself present
As I was sometime Milan: quickly, spirit;
Thou shalt ere long be free.

Ariel sings and helps to attire him,
Where the bee sucks, there shall I:
In a cowslip's bell I lie;
There I conch when owls do cry.
On the bat's back I do fly.
After summer merrily.
Merrily, merrily shall I live now
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.

Pros. Why, that's my dainty Ariell! I shall miss
But yet thou shalt have freedom: so, so, so. [thee;
To the king's ship, invisible as thou art:
There shall thou find the mariners asleep
Under the hatches; the master and the boatswain
Be awake, enforce them to this place,
And presently, I prithee.

Ari. I drink the air before me, and return.
Or ere you pulse twice beat.

[Exit. Gonz. All torment, trouble, wonder and amaze-
Inhabits here: some heavenly power guide us [ment
Out of this fearful country!

Sebastian, sir, king,
The wronged Duke of Milan, Prospero;
For more assurance that a living prince
Does not now sleep to the dead vault
Will come back to the end of this hour
And to thee and thy company I bid
A hearty welcome.

Alon. Whether thou be'st he or no,
Or some enchanted tribute to abuse me,
As late I have been, I know thy pulse
Beats as of flesh and blood: and, since I saw thee,
The affliction of my mind amends, with which
I fear, a madness held me: this must crave,
An if this be at all, a most strange story.
Thy dukedom I resign and do entrust [pero
Thou pardon me my wrongs. But how should Pros-
Be living and be here?

Pros. First, noble friend,
Let me embrace thine age, whose honour cannot
Be measured or confined.

Gonz. Whether this be
Or be not, I'll not swear.

Pros. You do yet taste
Some subtleties o' the isle, that will not let you Believe things certain. Welcome, my friends all! [Aside to Seb. and Ant.] But you, my brace of lords, were I so minded,
I here could pluck his highness' frown upon you
And justify you traitors: at this time
I will tell no tales.

Pros. No.
For you, most wicked sir, whom to call brother
Would even infect my mouth, I do forgive
Thy ranked fault: all of them; and require
My dukedom of thee, which perforce, I know,
Thou must restore.

Alon. If thou be'st Prospero,
Give us particulars of thy preservation;
How thou hast met us here, who three hours since
We were deem'd upon this shore; where I have lost—
How sharp the point of this remembrance is!—
My dear son Ferdinand.

Pros. I am woe for 't, sir.
Alon. Irreparable is the loss, and patience
Says it is past her cure.
Pro. I rather think
You have not sought her help, of whose soft grace
For the like loss I have her sovereign aid
And rest myself content.
Alon. You the like loss!
Pros. As great to me as late; and, supportive
To make the dear loss, have I means much weaker
Than you may call to comfort you, for I
Have lost my daughter.
Alon. A daughter?
O heavens, that they were living both in Naples,
The king and queen there! that they were, I wish
Myself were muddled in that oozy bed
[ter?]
Where my son lies. When did you lose your daugh-

Pros. In this last tempest, I perceive, these lords
At this encounter do so much admire
That they devour their reason and scarce think
Their eyes do offices of truth, their words
Are natural breath: but, howsoe'er you have Been justled from your senses, know for certain
That I am Prospero and that very duke
Which was thrust forth of Milan, who most strangely
Upon this shore, where you were wreck'd, was landed,
To be the lord on 't. No more yet of this;
For it is a chronicle of day by day,
Not a relation for a breakfast nor Beating this first meeting. Welcome, sir;
This cell's my court: here have I few attendants
And subjects none abroad: pray you, look in.
My dukedom since you have given me again,
I will requite you with as good a thing:
At least bring forth a wonder, to content ye
As much as me my dukedom.

Here Prospero discovers Ferdinand and Miranda playing at chess.

Mr. Sweet Lord, you play me false.
Fer. No, my dear'st love,
Mr. Yes, for a score of kings you should
And I would call it fair play.

Alon. If this prove
A vision of the Island, one dear son
Shall I twice lose.
Sch. A most high miracle!
Fer. Though the seas threaten, they are merciful;
I have cursed them without cause.

Kneels.
Alon. Now all the blessings
Of a good father compass thee about!
Arise, and say how thou canst here.
Mir. O, wonder! How many goodly creatures are there here!
How beauteous mankind is! O brave new world,
That has such people in't!

Pros. 'Tis now to thee.
Alon. What is this maid with whom thou wast at play?
Your eld'st acquaintance cannot be three hours:
Is she the goddess that hath savior'd us,
And brought us thus together?
Fer. Sir, she is mortal;
But by immortal Providence she's mine:
I chose her when I could not ask my father
For his advice, nor thought I had one. She Is daughter to this famous Duke of Milan,
Of whom so often I have heard renown,
But never saw before; of whom I have Received a second life: and second father
This lady makes him to me.

Alon. I am hers:
But, O, how oddly will it sound that I
Must ask my child for love!

Pros. There, sir, stop:
Let us not burthen our remembrance with
A heaviness that's gone.

Gon. I have inly wept, [gods,
Or should have spoke ere this. Look down, you
And on this couple drop a blessed crown!
For it is you that have chalk'd forth the way
Which brought us bither.

Alon. I say, Amen, Gonzalo!
Gon. Was Milan thrust from Milan, that his issue
Should become kings of Naples? O, rejoice
Beyond a common joy, and set it down
With gold on lasting pillars: In one voyage
Did Claribel her husband find at Tunis,
And Ferdinand, her brother, found a wife
Where he himself was lost, Prospero his dukedom
In a poor isle and all of us ourselves
When no man who was his

Alon. [To Fer. and Mir.] Give me your hands:
Let grief and sorrow still embrace his heart.
That doth not wish you joy!

Gon. Be it so! Amen!

Re-enter Ariel, with the Master and Boatswain amazebly following.

O, look, s'ir, look, s'ir! here is more of us:
I prophesied, if a gallows were on land,
This fellow could not drown. Now, blasphemy,
That swear'st grace o'board, not an oath on shore?
Hit th'ist no mouth by land? What is the news?

Boots. The best news is, that we have safely found
Our king and company; the next, our ship—
Which, but three glasses since, we gave out split—
Is tight and brave and bravely rigg'd as when
We first put out to sea.

Ari. [Aside to Pros.] Sir, all this service
Have I done since I went.

Pros. [Aside to Ari.] My trick'sy spirit! [strengthen Alone. These are not natural events; they
From strange to stranger, Say, how came you bither?

Boots. If I did think, s'ir, I were well awake,
I'd still search for you. We were dead of sleep,
And—how we know not—all clapp'd under hatches;
Where but even now with strange and several noises
Of roaring, shrieking, howling, jingling chains,
And more diversity of sounds, all horrible,
We were awaked; straightway, at liberty;
Where we, in all her trim, freshly belied
Our royal, good and gallant ship, our master
Capering to eye her: on a truce, so please you,
Even in a dream, were we divided from them
And were brought moping bither.

Ari. [Aside to Pros.] Was't well done?

Pros. [Aside to Ari.] Bravely, my diligence.
Thou shalt be free.

Alon. This is as strange a maze as e'er man trod;
And there is in this business more than nature
Was ever conduct of: some oracle
Must rectify our knowledge.

Pros. Sir, my liege,
Do not infest your mind with beating on
The strangeness of this business; at pick'd leisure
Which shall be shortly, single I'll resolve you,
Which to you shall seem probable, of every
These happen'd accidents; till when, be cheerful
And think of each thing well. [Aside to Ari.] Come hither, spirit;

Set Caliban and his companions free; [sir?
Untie the spell. [Edict. Ari.] How fares my gracious
There are yet missing of your company
Some few odd labs that you remember not.

Re-enter Ariel, driving in Caliban, Stephano and Trinculo, in their stolen apparel.

Ste. Every man shift for all the rest, and let no man take care for himself; for all is but fortune.
Coragio, bully-monster, coragio.

Tri. If these be true spirits which I wear in my head, here's a goodly sight.

Cal. O Setebos, these be brave spirits indeed!
ACT V.

THE TEMPEST.

SCENE I.

To my poor cell, where you shall take your rest
For this one night: which, part of it, I'll waste
With such discourse as, I not doubt, shall make it
Go quick away; the story of my life
And the particular accidents gone by Since I came to this isle; and in the morn
I'll bring you to your ship and so to Naples,
Where I have hope to see the nuptial
Of these our dear-beloved solemnized;
And hence retire me to my Milan, where Every third thought shall be my grave.

Alon. I long
To hear the story of your life, which must Take the ear strangely.

Pros. I'll deliver all;
And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales
And sail so expeditious that shall catch [chick,
Your royal fleet far off. [Aside to Ariel.] My Ariel,
That is thy charge: then to the elements
Be free, and fare thou well! Please you, draw near.

[Exeunt.

EPILOGUE.

Spoken by Prospero.

Now my charms are all o'erthrown,
And what strength I have 's mine own,
Which is most faint: now, 't is true,
I must be here confined by you.
Or sent to Naples. Let me not,
Since I have my dukedom got
And pardon'd the deceivers, dwell
In this bare isle by your spell;
But release me from my bands
With the help of your good hands:
Gentle breath of yours my sails
Must fill, or else my project fails,
Which was to please. Now I want
Spirits to enforce, art to enchant,
And my ending is despair,
Unless I be relieved by prayer,
Which pierces so that it assaults
Mercy itself and frees all faults.
As you from crimes would pardon'd be,
Let your indulgence set me free.

SCENE.—Verona; Milan; the frontiers of Mantua.

ACT I.

SCENE I.— Verona. An open place.

Enter Valentine and Proteus.

Val. Cease to persuade, my loving Proteus: Home-keeping youth have ever homey wits, Were not affronted by thy swelling words, Days to the sweet glances of thy honour’d love, I rather would entreat thy company To see the wonders of the world abroad Than, living duly shagarded at home, Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness, But since thou lovest, love still and thrive therein, Even as I would when I to love begin.

Pro. wilt thou be gone? Sweet Valentine, adjure! Think on thy Proteus, when thou haply seest Some rare note-worthy object in thy travel: Wish me partaker in thy happiness When thou dost meet good hap; and in thy danger, If ever danger do environ thee, Comment thy grievance to my holy prayers, For I will be thy beasman, Valentine.

Val. And on a love-book pray for my success?

Pro. Upon some book I love I’ll pray for thee.

Val. That’s on some small story of deep love: How young Leander cross’d the Hellespont, Pro. That’s a deep story of a deeper love;

For he was more than over shoes in love, Val. ‘Tis true; for you are over boots in love, And yet you never swim the Hellespont.

Pro. Over the boots? Nay, give me not the boots. Val. No, I will not, for it boots thee not.

Pro. What? Val. To be in love, where scorn is bought with greans: [ment’s mirth Cow looks with heart-sore sighs; one fading no With twenty watchful, weary, tedious nights: If haply won, perhaps a hapless gain; If lost, why then a grievous labour won; However, but a folly bought with wit, Or else a wit by folly vanquished.

Pro. So, by your circumstance, you call me fool.

Val. So, by your circumstance, I fear you’ll prove.

Pro. ’Tis love you cavil at. I am not Love.

Val. Love is your master, for he masters you: And he that is so yoked by a fool, Methinks, should not be chronicled for wise.

Pro. Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud The eating canker dwells, so eating love Inhabits in the fairest wits of all.

Val. And writers say, as the most forward bud Is eaten by the canker ere it blow,

Even so by love the young and tender wit Is turn’d to folly, blasting in the bud, Losing his verdure even in the prime And all the fair effects of future hopes.

But whereas we must a counsel thee That art a votary to fond desire?

Once more adieu! my father at the road

Expects my coming, there to see me ship’d.

Pro. And thither will I bring thee, Valentine.

Val. Sweet Proteus, now: now let us take our leave.

To Milan let me hear from thee by letters Of thy success in love and what news else Betideth here in absence of thy friend; And I likewise will visit thee with mine.

Pro. All happiness bechance to thee in Milan!

Val. As much to you at home! and so farewell.

[Exit.

Pro. He after honour hunts, I after love: He leaves his friends to dignify them more; I leave myself, my friends and all, for love. Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphosed me, Made me neglect my studies, lose my time, War with gross counsel, set the world at nought: Made wit with musing weak, heart sick with thought.

Enter Speed.

Speed. Sir Proteus, save you! saw you my master?

Pro. But now he parted hence, to embark for Milan.

Speed. Twenty to one then he is ship’d already, And I have play’d the sheep in losing him.

Pro. Indeed, a sheep doth very often stray, An if the shepherd be a while away.

Speed. You conclude that my master is a sheep- herd then and I a sheep?

Pro. I do.

Speed. Why then, my horns are his horns, whether I wake or sleep.

Pro. A silly answer and fitting well a sheep.

Speed. This proves me still a sheep.

Pro. True, and thy master a shepherd.

Speed. Nay, that I can deny by a circumstance.

Pro. It shall go hard but I’ll prove it by another.

Speed. The shepherd seeks the sheep, and not the sheep the shepherd; but I seek my master, and my master seeks not me: therefore I am no sheep.

Pro. The sheep for fodder follow the shepherd; the shepherd for food follows not the sheep: thou
THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA. SCENE II.

Jul. What think'st thou of the gentle Proteus?
Luc. Lord, Lord! to see what folly reigns in us!
Jul. How now! what means this passion at his name?
Luc. Pardon, dear madam: 'tis a passing shame
That I, unworthy body as I am,
Should censure thus on lovely gentlemen.
Jul. Why not on Proteus, as of all the rest?
Luc. Then thus: of many good I think him best.
Jul. Your reason?
Luc. I have rather, but a woman's reason;
I think him so because I think him so. [hin]
Jul. And wouldst thou have me cast my love on
Luc. Ay, if you thought your love not cast away.
Jul. Why, he, of all the rest, hath never moved me.
Luc. Yet he, of all the rest, I think, best loves ye.
Jul. His little speaking shows his love but small.
Luc. It is that's closest kept burns most of all.
Jul. They do not love that do not show their love.
Luc. O, they love best that let men know their love.
Jul. I would I knew his mind.
Luc. Peruse this paper, madam.
Jul. 'To Julia.' Say, from whom?
Luc. That the contents will show.
Luc. Sir Valentine's page; and sent, I think, from
He would have given it you; but I, being in the way,
Did in your name receive it: pardon the fault, I pray.
Jul. Now, by my modesty, a goodly broker!
Dare you presume to have showed these lines?
To whisper and conspire against my youth?
Now, trust me, 'tis an office of great worth
And you an officer fit for the place.
There, take the paper: see it be return'd;
Or else return no more into my sight.
Luc. To plead for love deserves no ice than hate.
Jul. Will ye be gone?
Luc. That you may ruminate.
Jul. And yet I would I had o'erlooked the letter:
It were a shame to call her back again
And pray her to a fault for which I chid her.
What a fool is she, that knows I am a maid,
And would not force the letter to my view!
Since maids, in modesty, say 'no' to that
Which they would have the profligate construe 'ay.'
Fie, fie, how wayward is this foolish love!
That, like a baby, will scratch the nurse
And presently all humbled kiss the rod!
How charitably did Lucetta hence,
When willingly I would have had her here!
How angrily I taught my brow to frown,
When inward joy enforced my heart to smile!
My penance is to call Lucetta back
And ask remission for my folly past.
What ho! Lucetta!

Re-enter Lucetta.

Luc. What would thy ladyship?
Jul. Is't near dinner-time?
Luc. I would it were,
That you might kill your stomach on your meat
And not upon your maid.
Jul. What is't that you took up so gingerly?
Luc. Nothing.
Jul. Why dost thou stoop, then?
Luc. To take a paper up that I let fall.
Jul. And is that paper nothing?
Luc. Nothing concerning me.
Jul. Then let it lie for those that it concerns.
Luc. Madam, it will not lie where it concerns,
Unless it have a false interpreter.
Jul. Some thought of yours hath writ to you in rhyme.
Luc. That I might sing it, madam, to a tune.
Give me a note: your ladyship can set.
Jul. As little by such toys as may be possible.
Best sing it to the tune of 'Light o' love.'

19
ACT I.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA. SCENE III.

Luc. It is too heavy for so light a tune.
Jul. Heavy! belike it hath some burden then?
Luc. Ay, and melodions were it, would you sing it.
Jul. And why not you?
Luc. I cannot reach so high.
Jul. Let's see your song. How now, minion!
Luc. Keep tune there still, so you will sing it out:
And yet methinks I do not like this tune.
Jul. You do not?
Luc. No, madam; it is too sharp.
Jul. You, minion, are too saucy.
Luc. Nay, now you are too dat
And mar the concord with too harsh a descent:
There wanteth but a mean to fill your song.
Jul. The mean is drown'd with your unruly bass.
Luc. Indeed, I bid the base for Proteus.
Jul. This babble shall not henceforth trouble me.
Here is a coil with protestation! [Tears the letter.
Go get you gone, and let the papers lie:
You would be lingering them, to anger me.
Luc. She makes it strange; but she would be best pleased
To be so anger'd with another letter. [Exit.
Jul. Nay, I would I were so anger'd with the same!
O hateful hands, to tear such lovely words!
Injurious wasps, to feed on such sweet honey
And kill the bees that yield it with your stings!
I'll kiss each several paper for amends.
Look, here is writ 'kind Julia.' Unkind Julia!
As in a picture of the goodly youth,
I throw thy name against the bruising stones,
Trampling contempluously on thy dishonour.
And here is writ 'love-wounded Proteus.'
Poor wounded name! my bosom as a bed
Shall lodge thee till thy wounds be thoroughly heal'd;
And thus I search it with a sovereign kiss.
But twice or thrice was 'Proteus' writen down.
Be calm, good wind, blow not a word away
Till I have found each letter in the letter,
Except mine own name: that some whirlwind bear
Unto a ragged fearful-hanging rock
And throw it thence into the raging sea!
Lo, here in one line is his name twice writ,
'Poor forlorn Proteus, passionate Proteus,
To the sweet Julia;' that I'll tear away.
And yet I will not, sith so prettily
He couples it to his complaining names.
Thus will I fold them one upon another:
Now kiss, embrace, contend, do what you will.

Re-enter Lucetta.

Luc. Madam,
Dinner is ready, and your father stays.
Jul. Well, let us go.
Luc. What, shall these papers lie like tell-tales here?
Jul. If you respect them, best to take them up.
Luc. Nay, I was taken up for laying them down:
Yet here they shall not lie, for catching cold.
Jul. If you have a month's mind to them.
Luc. Ay, rather, you may say what sights you see;
I see things too, although you judge I wink.
Jul. Come, come; will 't please you go? [Exit.

SCENE III.—The same. Antonio's house.

Enter Antonio and Panthio.

Ant. Tell me, Panthio, what sad talk was that Wherewith my brother held you in the cloister?
Pant. 'Twas of his nephew Proteus, your son.
Ant. Why, what of him?
Pant. He would'th'that your lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home,
While other men, of slander reputation,
Put forth their sons to seek preferment out:
Some to the wars, to try their fortune there;
Some to discover islands far away;
Some to the studious universals.
For any or for all these exercises
He said that Proteus your son was meet,
And did request me to importune you
To let him spend his time no more at home.
Which you, out of great impeachment to his age,
In having known no travel in his youth.
Ant. Nor need'st thou much importune me to that.
Whereon this month I have been hammering.
I have consider'd well his loss of time
And how he cannot be a perfect man,
Not being tried and found in the world:
Experience is by industry achieved
And perfected by the swift course of time.
Then tell me, whither were I best to send him?
Pant. I think your lordship is not ignorant
How his companion, youthful Valentine,
Attends the emperor in his royal court.
Ant. I know it well.
Pant. 'T were good, I think, your lordship sent him thither:
There shall he practise tours and tournaments,
Hear sweet discourse, converse with noblemen,
And be the eye of every fair and worth.
Worthy his youth and nobleness of birth.
Ant. I like thy counsel; well hast thou advised;
And that thou mayst perceive how well I like it.
The execution of it shall make known,
Even with the speediest expedition
I will dispatch him to the emperor's court.
Pant. To-morrow, may it please you, Don Alphonso,
With other gentlemen of good esteem,
Are journeying to salute the emperor
And to command their service to his will.
Ant. Good company; with them shall Proteus go:
And, in good time, how will we break with him.

Enter Proteus.

Pro. Sweet love! sweet lines! sweet life!
Here is her hand, the agent of her heart;
Here is her oath for love, her honour's pawn.
O, that our fathers would applaud our loves,
To seal our happiness with their consents!
O heavenly Julia!
Ant. How now! what letter are you reading there?
Pro. May 't please your lordship, 'tis a word or
Of commendations sent from Valentine,
[Two Deliver'd by a friend that came from him.
Ant. A letter, and the letter; I see what news.
Pro. There is no news, my lord, but that he writes
How happily he lives, how well beloved
And daily graced by the emperor;
Wishing me with him, partner of his fortune.
Ant. And how stand you affected to his wish?
Pro. You're of the same mind, I think, your lordship.
And not depending on his friendly wish.
Ant. My will is something sorted with his wish.
Muse not that I thus suddenly proceed;
For what I will, I will, and there an end.
I am resolved that thou shalt spend some time
With Valentine in the emperor's court;
What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me.
To-morrow be in readiness to go;
Excuse it not, for I am peremptory.
Pro. My lord, I cannot be so soon provided:
Please you, deliberate a day or two.
Ant. Look, what thou want'st shall be sent after
No more of stay. To-morrow thou must go.
Come on, Panthio: you shall be employ'd
To hasten on his expedition.

[Exit Ant. and Panthio.

Pro. Thence have I shunn'd the fire for fear of burning.
And drench'd me in the sea, where I am drown'd.
I fear'd to show my father Julia's letter,
Lest he should take exceptions to my love;
ACT II.

THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.  SCENE I.

And with the vantage of mine own excuse
I hath excepted most against my love.
O, how this spring of love resembleth
The uncertain glory of an April day,
Which now shows all the beauty of the sun,
And by and by a cloud takes all away!

Re-enter Panthino.

Pan. Sir Proteus, your father calls for you:
He is in haste; therefore, I pray you, go.
Pro. Why, this if is: my heart accords thereto,
And yet a thousand times it answers 'no.' [Exeunt.

ACT II.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

Speed. Sir, your glove.
Val. Not mine; my gloves are on.
Speed. Why, then, this may be yours, for this is but one.
Val. Ha! let me see: ay, give it me, it's mine:
Sweet ornament that deck's a thing divine!
Ah, Silvia, Silvia!

Speed. Madam Silvia! Madam Silvia!
Val. How now, sirrah?
Speed. Sir, is not that within hearing, sir?
Val. Why, sir, who bade you call her?
Speed. Your worship, sir; or else I mistook.
Val. Well, you'll still be too forward. [slow.
Speed. And yet I was last chidden for being too
Val. Go to, sir; tell me, do you know Madam
Speed. Sir, that your worship loves? — Silvia?
Val. Why, how know you that I am in love?
Speed. Marry, by these special marks: first, you have learned, like Sir Proteus, to wreathe your arms, like a malecontent; to relish a love-song, like a robin-redbreast; to walk alone, like one that had the pestilence; to sigh, like a school-boy that had lost his A B C; to weep, like a young wench that had buried her grandam; to fast, like one that takes diet; to watch, like one that fears robbing; to speak purling, like a beggar at Hallowmas. You were wont, when you laughed, to crow like a cock;
when you walked, to walk like one of the lions;
when you fasted, it was presently after dinner;
when you looked sadly, it was for want of money:
and now you are metamorphosed with a mistress, that, when I look on you, I can hardly think you my master.

Val. Are all these things perceived in me?
Speed. They are all perceived without ye.
Val. Without me? they cannot.
Speed. Without you? nay, that's certain, for without you were so simple, none else would:
but you are so without those follies, that these follies are within you and shine through you like the water in an urinal, that not an eye that sees you but is a physician to comment on your malady.
Val. But tell me, dost thou know my lady Silvia?
Speed. She that you gaze on so as she sits upper?
Val. Hast thou observed that? even she, I mean.
Speed. Why, sir, I know her not.
Val. Dost thou know her by my gazing on her,
and yet knowest her not?
Speed. Is she not hard-favoured, sir?
Val. Not so fair, boy, as well-favoured.
Speed. Sir, I know that well enough.
Speed. That she is not so fair as, of you, well—
Val. I mean that her beauty is exquisite, but her favour infinite.
Speed. That's because the one is painted and the other out of all count.
Val. How painted? and how out of count?
Speed. Marry, sir, so painted, to make her fair, that no man counts of her beauty.
Val. How esteemeest thou me? I account of her

Speed. You never saw her since she was deformed.
Val. How long hath she been deformed?
Speed. Ever since you loved her.
Val. I have loved her ever since I saw her; and still I see her beautiful.
Speed. If you love her, you cannot see her.
Val. Why?
Speed. Because Love is blind. O, that you had mine eyes; or your own eyes had the lights they were wont to have when you chid at Sir Proteus for going ungartnered!
Val. What should I see then?
Speed. Sir, your own present folly and her passing deformity: for he, being in love, could not see to garter his hose, and you, being in love, cannot see to put on your hose.
Val. Belike, boy, then, you are in love: for last morning you could not see to wipe my shoes.

Speed. True, sir; and yet I think my bed: I thank you, you swung me for my love, which makes me the bolder to chide you for yours.
Val. In conclusion, I stand affected to her.
Speed. I would you were set, so your affection would cease.
Val. Last night she enjoined me to write some lines to one she loves.
Speed. And have you?
Val. I have.
Speed. Are they not Amoretti?'
Val. No, boy, but as well as I can do them.
Peace! here she comes.
Speed. [Aside] O excellent motion! O exceeding puppet! Now will he interpret to her.

Enter Silvia.

Val. Madam and mistress, a thousand good-morrows.

[Hon of manners.

Speed. [Aside] O, give ye good even! here's a mild
Sil. Sir Valentine and servant, to you two thousand.
[She gives him it.
Speed. [Aside] He should give her interest, and Val. As you enjoin'd me, I have writ your letter unto the secret nameless friend of yours;
Which I was much unwilling to proceed in
But for my duty to your ladyship.
[Done.
Sil. I thank you, gentle servant: 'tis very clerkly
Val. Now trust me, madam, it came hardly off:
For being ignorant to whom it goes
I writ at random, very doubtfully.
Sil. Perchance you think too much of me:
Val. No, madam; so it stead you, I will w
Please you command, a thousand times as much.
And yet—
Sil. A pretty period! Well, I guess the secret.
And yet I will not name it; and yet I care not.
And yet take this again: and yet I thank you,
Meaning henceforth to trouble you no more.
Speed. [Aside] And yet you will; and yet another
yet?
Val. What means your ladyship? do you not like
Sil. Yes, yes, the lines are very quaintly writ;
But since unwillingly, take them again.
Nay, take them.
Val. Madam, they are for you.
Sil. Ay, ay: you writ them, sir, at my request:

21
Enter Pantano.

Poa. Sir Proteus, you are stay'd for.

Pro. Go; I come, I come.

Alas! this parting strikes poor lovers dumb. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—The same. A street.

Enter Launce, leading a dog.

Launce. Nay, 'twill be this hour ere I have done weeping; all the kind of the Launces have this very fault. I have received my proportion, like the prodigious son, and am going with Sir Proteus to the Imperial's court. I think Crab my dog be the sourdest-natured dog that lives; my mother weeping, my father wailing, my sister crying, our maid howling, our cat wringing her hands, and all our house in a great perplexity, yet did not this cruel-hearted cur shed one tear; he is a stone, a very pebble-stone, and has no more pity in him than a dog; a Jew would have wept to have seen our parting; why, my grandam, having no eyes, look you, wept herself blind at my parting. Nay, I'll show you the manner of it, I'll tell you what this whole is as well, and show you another. [Exit.]

Scene II.—Verona. Julia's house.

Enter Proteus and Julia.

Pro. Have patience, gentle Julia.

Jul. I must, where is no remedy.

Pro. When possibly I can, I will return.

Jul. If you turn not, you will return the sooner.

Keep this remembrance for thy Julia's sake. [Exit Proteus.

Jul. I have dined,AY, but hearken, sir; though the chaunceful Love can feed on the air, I am one that am nourished by my victuals and would fain have meat, O, be not like your mistress; be moved, be moved. [Exit.

Enter Pantano.

Poa. Launce, away, away, abroad! thy master is shipped and thou art to post after with ears. What's the matter? why weep'st thou, man? Nay, ass! you'll lose the tide, if you tarry any longer.

Launce. It is no matter if the tied were lost: for it is the unkindest tied that ever any man tied.

Poa. What's the unkindest tide?

Launce. Why, he that's tied here, Crab, my dog.

Pro. Tut, man, I mean thou 'll lose the flood, and in losing the flood, lose thy voyage, and, in losing thy voyage, lose thy master, and, in losing thy master, lose thy service, and, in losing thy service,—Why dost thou stop my mouth?

Launce. For fear thou shouldst lose thy tongue.

Poa. Where should I lose my tongue?

Launc. In thy tide.

Poa. In thy tide?

Launce. Lose the tide, and the voyage, and the master, and the service, and the tide! Why, man, if the river were dry, I am able to fill it with my tears; if the wind were down, I could drive the boat with my body.

Pro. Come, come away, man; I was sent to call Launce. Sir, call me what thou dar'st.

Poa. Wilt thou go?

Launce. Well, I will go. [Exit.]

Enter Silvia, Valentine, Thurio, and Speed.

Sil. Servant!

Val. Mistress?
Enter Proteus. [Exit Thurio.

Thur. Madam, my lord your father would speak with you. Sil. I wait upon his pleasure. Come, Sir Thurio, Go with me. Once more, new servant, welcome: I'll leave you to confer of house-affairs. When you have done, we look to hear from you. Pro. We'll both attend upon your ladyship. [Exeunt Silvia and Thurio. Val. Now, tell me, how do all from whence you came? commended. Pro. Your friends are well and have them much. Val. And how do yours? Pro. I left them all in health. Val. How does your lady? and how thrives your love? Pro. My tales of love were wont to weary you; I know you joy not in a love-discourse. Val. Ay, Proteus, but that life is alter'd now: I have done penance for contaminating Love. Whose high imperious thoughts have punish'd me With bitter fars, with penitential groans, With nightly tears and daily heart-sore sighs; For in revenge of my contempt of love, Love hath chase'd sleep from my entrail'd eyes And made them watchers of mine own heart's sorrows; O gentle Proteus, Love's a mighty lord [row. And hath so humbled me as I confess There is no woe to his correction Not to his service no such joy on earth. Now no discourse, except it be of liking: Now can I break my fast, dine, sup and sleep, Upon the very naked name of love. Pro. Enough: I read your fortune in your eye. Was this the idol that you worship so? Val. Even she; and is she not a heavenly saint? Pro. No; but she is an earthly paragon.
Val. Call her divine.
Pro. I will not flatter her.
Val. O, flatter me; for love delights in praises.
Pro. When I was sick, you gave me bitter pills,
Val. Then speak the truth by her; if not divine,
Sovereign to all the creatures on the earth.
Pro. Except my mistress.
Val. Exceed, except not any; except with you against my love.
Pro. Have I not reason to prefer mine own?
Val. And I will help thee to prefer her too:
She shall be dignified with this high honour —
To bear my lady's train, lest the base earth
Should from her vesture chance to steal a kiss
And true so great a favour, growing proud,
Disdain to root the summer-swelling flower
And make rough winter everlasting.
Pro. Why, Valentine, what braggardism is this?
Val. Pardon me, Proteus; all I can is nothing
To her whose worth makes other worthies nothing;
She is alone.
Pro. Then let her alone. [own.
Val. Not for the world: why, man, she is mine
As rich in having such a jewel
As twenty seas, if all their sand were pearl,
The water nectar and the rocks pure gold.
Pro. But she loves me not? [surprise.
Val. Ay, and we are betroth'd: nay, more, our
With all the cunning manner of our flight,
Determined of; how I must climb her window,
The ladder made of cords, and all the means
Pledged and agreed on for my happiness.
Good Proteus, go with me to my chamber.
In these affairs I am so engross'd with thy counsel.
Pro. Go on before; I shall inquire you forth:
I must unto the road, to disembar.
Some necessaries that I needs must use,
And then I'll presently attend you.
Val. Will you make haste?
Pro. I will. [Exit Valentine.
Val. Even as one heat another heat expels,
Or as one nail by strength drive out another,
So the remembrance of my former love
Is by a newer object quite forgotten.
Is it mine, or Valentine's praise,
Her true perfection, or my false transgression,
That makes me reasonless to reason thus?
She is fair; and so is Julia that I love —
That I did love, for now my love is thaw'd;
Which, like a waxen image against a fire,
Bears no impression of the thing it was.
Methinks my zeal to Valentine is cold,
And that I love him not as I was wont.
O, but I love his lady too much,
And that's the reason I love him so little.
How shall I dote on her with more advice,
That thus without advice begin to love her!
'Tis but her picture I have yet beheld,
And that hath dazzled my reason's light;
But when I look on her perfections,
There is no reason but I shall be blind.
If I can check my erring love, I will;
If not, to compass her I'll use my skill. [Exit.

SCENE V.—The same. A street.

Enter Speed and Launce severally.

Speed. Launce! by mine honesty, welcome to Milan!
ACT III.  THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.  SCENE I.

For Valentine myself, for Julia Silvia.
I to myself am dearer than a friend,
For love is still most precious in itself:
And Silvia — witness Heaven, that made her fair!—
Shows Julia but a swarthy Ethiope.
I will forget that Julia is alive.
Remembering that my love to her is dead;
And Valentine I'll be as sly as we.
Aiming at Silvia as a sweeter friend.
I cannot now prove constant to myself,
Without some treacherous used to Valentine.
This night he meaneth with a corded ladder
To climb celestial Silvia’s chamber-window,
Myself in counsel, his competitor.
Now propitiously I’ll give her father notice
Of their disguising and pretended flight;
Who, all enraged, will banish Valentine;
For Thurio, he intends, shall wed his daughter;
But, Valentine being gone, I’ll quickly cross
By some sly trick blunt Thurio’s dull proceeding.
Love, lend me wings to make my purpose swift,
As thou hast lent me wit to plot this drift! [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Verona.  Julia’s house.

Enter Julia and Lucetta.

Jul.  Counsel, Lucetta: gentle girl, assist me;
And even in kind love I do conjure thee,
Who art the table wherein all my thoughts
Are visibly character’d and engraved,
To lesson me and tell me some good mean
How, with my honour, I may undertake
A journey to my loving Proteus.

Luc.  Alas, the way is wearisome and long!

Jul.  A true-devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps;
Much less shall she that hath Love’s wings to fly.
And when the flight is made to one so dear,
Of such degree, as Sir Proteus.

Luc.  Better forbear till Proteus make return.

Jul.  O, know’st thou not his looks are my soul’s
Pity the dearth that I have pined in,  [food?
By longing for that food so long a time.
Dost thou but know the inly touch of love,
Thou wouldst as soon go kindle fire with snow
As seek to quench the fire of love with words.

Luc.  I do not seek to quench your love’s hot fire,
But qualify the fire’s extreme rage,
Lest it should burn above the bounds of reason.

Jul.  The more thou damnest it up, the more it
The current that with gentle humour glides, burns.
Thee, know’st, being stopp’d, impatiently doth rage;
But when his fair course is not hindered,
He makes sweet music with the enamell’d stones,
Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge
He overtaketh in his pilgrimage,
And by so many winding nooks he strays
With willing sport to the wild ocean.
Then let me go and hinder not my course:
I’ll be as patient as a gentle stream
And make a pastime of each weary step,
Till the last step have brought me to my love;
And there I’ll rest, as after much turmoil
A blessed soul doth in Elysium.

Luc.  But in what habit will you go along?

Jul.  Not like a woman; for I would prevent
The loose observation of the unblest may.
Gentle Lucetta, fit me with such weeds
As may be seen some well-reputed page.

Luc.  Why, then, your ladyship must cut your hair.

Jul.  No girl: I’ll knit it up in silken strings
With twenty odd-conceited true-love knots.
To be fantastic may become a youth.
Of greater time than I shall show to be, [speeches?

Luc.  What fashion, madam, shall I make your

Jul.  That fits as well as ‘Tell me, good my lord,
What compass will you wear your farthingale?’
Why even what fashion thou best likest, Lucetta.

Luc.  You must needs have them with a copiece, madam.

Jul.  Out, out, Lucetta! that will be ill-favour’d.

Luc.  A round hose, madam, now’s not worth a
Unless you have a copiece to stick pins on.  [pin,

Jul.  Lucetta, as thou lovest me, let me have
What thou thinkest meet and is most mannerly.
But tell me, wench, how will the world repute me
For undertaking so unmaist a journey?
I fear me, it will make me scandalized.

Luc.  If you think so, then stay at home and go not.

Jul.  Nay, that I will not.

Luc.  Then never dream on infamy, but go.
If Proteus like your journey when you come,
No matter who’s displeased when you are gone:
I fear me, he will scarce be pleased withal.

Jul.  That is the least, Lucetta, of my fear:
A thousand oaths, an ocean of his tears
And instances of infinite love
Warrant me welcome to your Proteus.

Luc.  All these are servants to deceitful men.

Jul.  Base men, that use them so base effect!
But truer stars did govern Proteus’ birth;
His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles.
His love sincere, his thoughts immediate,
His tears pure messengers sent from his heart,
His heart as far from fraud as heaven from earth.

Luc.  Pray heaven he prove so, when you come to him?

Jul.  Now, as thou lovest me, do him not that
To bear a hard opinion of his truth:
Only desire me love by loving him;
And present give me with to my chamber,
To take a note of what I stand in need of,
To furnish me upon my longing journey.
All that is mine I leave at thy dispose,
My goods, my lands, my reputation;
Only, in lieu thereof, dispatch me hence.
Come, answer not, but to it presently!
I am impatient of my tarryance.  [Exeunt."

ACT III.

Enter Duke, Thurio, and Proteus.

Duke.  Sir Thurio, give us leave, I pray, awhile;
We have some secrets to confer about.  [Exit Thu.
Now, tell me, Proteus, what’s your wish with me.

Pro.  My gracious lord, that which I would dis-

The law of friendship bids me to conceal:  [cover
But when I call to mind your gracious favours
Done present, undeserving as I was then,
My duty pricks me on to utter that
Which else no worldly good should draw from me.

Know, worthy prince, Sir Valentine, my friend,
This night intends to steal away your daughter:
Myself am one made privy to the plot:
Know you not determined to bestow her
On Thurio, whom your gentle daughter hates;
And should she thus be stolen from you?
It would be much vexation to your age.
Thus, for my duty’s sake, I rather chose
To cross my friend in his intended plot,
Than, by execution, dispatch me hence.
A pack of sorrows which would press you down,
Being unprovided, to your timeless grave.
Duke. Proteus, I thank thee for thine honest care; Which to requit, command me while I live, That myself, and yet to shun thee, I leave, Happily when they have judged me fast asleep, And oftentimes have purposed to forbid Sir Valentine her company and my court; But fearing lest my jealous aim might err And so unworthily disgrace the man, A rashness that I ever yet have shunn'd, I gave him gentle looks, thereby to find That which myself hast now disclosed to me. And, that thou mayst perceive my fear of this, Knowing that tender youth is soon suggested, I nightly lodge her in an upper tower, The key whereof myself have never kept; And therefore she cannot be conveyed away. Pro. Know, noble lord, they have devised a mean How she her chamber-window will ascend And with a corded ladder fetch her down; For which the youthful lover now is gone And this way comes he with it presently; Where, if it please you, you may intercept him. But, good my Lord, do it so cunningly That my discovery be not aimed at; For love of you, not hate unto my friend, Hath made me publisher of this pretence. Duke. Upon mine honour, he shall never know That she was brought thither. Pro. Adieu, my Lord; Sir Valentine is coming. [Exit. Enter Valentine. Duke. Sir Valentine, whither away so fast? Val. Please it your grace, there is a messenger That stays to bear my letters to my friends, And I am going to deliver them. Duke. Be they of much import? Val. The tenour of them doth but signify My health and happy being at your court. Duke. Nay then, no matter; stay with me awhile; I am to break with thee of some affairs That touch me near, wherein thou must be secret. 'Tis not unknown to thee that I have sought To match my friend Sir Thorio to my daughter. Val. I know it well, my Lord; and, sure, the match Were high and honourable; besides, the gentleman Is full of virtue, bounty, worth and qualities Beseeching such a wife as your fair daughter; Cannot your Grace win her to fancy him? [ward, Duke. No, trust me; she is peevish, sullen, fro- Proud, disobedient, stubborn, lacking duty, Neither regarding that she is my child Nor fearing me as if I were her father; And, may I say to thee, this pride of hers, Upon advice, hath drawn my love from her; And, where I thought the remnant of mine age Should have been cherished by her child-like duty, I know not resolved to take a wife And turn her out to who will take her in: Then let her beauty be her wedding-tower; For me and my possessions she esteem not. [this? Val. What would your Grace have me to do in this? Duke. There is a lady in Verona here Whom I affect; but she is nice and coy And nought esteem my aged eloquence: Now therefore would I have thee to my tutor — For long alone I have forgot to court; Besides, the fashion of the time is changed — How and which way I may bestow myself To be seated in the like light. Val. Win her with gifts, if she present not words; Dumb jewels often in their silent kind More than quick words do move a woman's mind. Duke. But she did scorn a present that I sent her. Val. A woman sometimes scorcs what best con- Send her another; never give her o'er: [leants her. For scorn at first makes after-love the more. If she do frown, 't is not in hate of you, But rather to begot more love in you; That she may feel thy love could not yet gone: For why, the fouls are mad, if I at mine. Take no repulse, whatever she doth say; For 'get you gone,' she doth not mean 'away!' Flatter and praise, commend, extol their graces; Though ne'er so black, say they have angels' faces. That man that hath a tongue, I say, is no man, If with his tongue he cannot win a woman. Duke. But she I mean is promised by her friends Unto a youthful gentleman of worth, And kept severely from resort of men, That no man hath access by day to her. Val. Why, then, I would resort to her by night. Duke. That will not do: thou must not go to her; It will not do, thou must not go to her. Val. Why then, a ladder quickly made of cords, To cast up, with a pair of anchoring hooks, Would serve to scale another Hero's tower, So bold Leander would adventure it. Duke. Now, as thou art a gentleman of blood, Advise me where I may have such a ladder. [that. Val. Why, sir, that would be but a day. Duke. This very night; for Love is like a child, That song for everything that he can come by. Val. By seven o'clock I'll get you such a ladder. Duke. But, hark thee; I will go to her alone: How shall I best convey the ladder thither? Val. Why, any cloaks will serve the turn, my lord. Duke. How shall I fashion me to wear a cloak? I pray thee, let me feel thy cloak upon me. What letter is this same? What's here? 'To Silvia!' And here an engine fit for my proceeding. I'll be to-morrow to break the seal for once. [Reads. 'My thoughts do harbour with my Silvia nightly, And slaves they are to me that send them flying: O, could their master come and go as lightly, Himself would lodge where senseless they are lying: My love's thoughts in thy pure bosom rest them: While I, their king, that lither them importune, Do curse the grace that with such grace hath bless'd them,' Because myself do want my servants' fortune: I curse myself, for they are sent by me, That they should harbour where their lord would What's here? [be. 'Silvia, this night I will enfranchise thee,' 'Tis so: and here's the ladder for the purpose. Why, Phacthoon, — for thou art Mercop's son,— Will thou aspire to guide the heavenly car And with thy daring folly burn the world? Wilt thou reach stars, because they shine on thee? Go, base intruder! overweening slave! Bestow thy fawning smiles on equal mates. And think my patience, more than thy desert, Is privilege for thy departure hence: Thank me for this more than for all the favours Which I have bestowed on thee, for which I have esteemed thee. But if thou linger in my territories Longer than swiftest expedition Will give thee time to leave our royal court, By heaven! my wrath shall far exceed the love I ever bore my daughter or thyself. Be gone! I will not hear thy vain excuse;
ACT III.  THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.  SCENE I.

But, as thou lostest thy life, make speed from hence.

[Exit.[

Val.  And why not death rather than living torne To die is to be banish'd from myself;[ment?  And Silvia from her self? banish'd from her Is self from self: a deadly banishment!  What light is light, if Silvia be not seen?  What joy is joy, if Silvia be not by?  Unless it be to think that she is by  And feel upon the shadow of perfection.  Except I fly by Silvia in the night,  There is no name in the nightingale;  Unless I look on Silvia in the day,  There is no day for me to look upon;  She is my essence, and I leave to be.  If I be not by her fair influence  Foster'd, that thid, cherish'd, kept alive,  I fly not death, to fly his deadly doom:  Tarry I here, I but attend upon death:  But, fly I hence, I fly away from life.

Enter Proteus and Launce.

Pro.  Run, boy, run, run, and seek him out.

Launce.  Soho, soho!

Pro.  What seest thou?

Launce.  Him we go to find: there's not a hair on 's head but 'tis a Valentine.

Pro.  Valentine?

Val.  Who then? his spirit?

Pro.  Neither.

Pro.  What then?

Val.  Nothing.

Launce.  Can nothing speak? Master, shall I strike?  Pro.  Who wouldst thou strike?

Lach.  No, master, forbear.

Pro.  Villain, forbear.

Laurence.  Why, sir, I'll strike nothing: I pray you,—  [a word.

Pro.  Sirrah, I say, forbear.  Friend Valentine,  Val.  My ears are stopt and cannot hear good news, so much of bad already hath possess'd them.  Pro.  Then in dumb silence will I bury mine,  For they are harsh, untuneable and bad.

Val.  Is Silvia dead?

Pro.  No, Valentine.

Val.  No Valentine, indeed, for sacred Silvia.  With she forsworn me?

Pro.  No, Valentine.

Val.  No Valentine, if Silvia have forsworn me.  What is your news?

Launce.  Sir, there is a proclamation that you are vanished.

Pro.  I am banish'd — O, that's the worst.  From hence, from Silvia and from me thy friend.  Val.  O, I have fed upon this woe already,  And now excess of it will make me surfeit.  Both Silvia know that I am banish'd?

Pro.  Ay, ay, and she hath offer'd to the doom — Which, unreversed, stands in effectual force — A sea of melting pearl, which some call tears;  Those at her father's chari'ck flight she tend'rd;  With them, upon her knees, her humble self;  Wringing her hands, whose whiteness so became As if but now they waxed pale for woe:  [them  But neither bended knees, pure hands held up,  Sad sighs, deep groans, nor silvery-shedding tears,  Could penetrate her uncompassionate sire;  But Valentine, if he be ta'en, must die.  Besides, her intercession chatt'd him so,  When she for thy repeal was suppliant,  That she forswore her life, or for thine sake  With many bitter threats of biding there.  [speak'st.  Val.  No more; unless the next word that thou  Have some malignant power upon my life:  If so, I pray thee, breathe it in mine ear,  As ending anthem of my endless doleour.  Pro.  Cease to lament for that thou canst not help,  And study help for that thou lament'st.  Time is the nurse and breeder of all good,  Here if thou stay, thou canst not see thy love;  Besides, thou wert to abbreviate thy life.  Hope is a lover's staff: walk hence with that  And manage it against despairing thoughts.  Thy letters may be here, though thou art hence;  Which, being writ to me, shall be deliver'd  Even in the milk-white bosom of thy love.  The time now is the expostulate:  Come, I'll convey thee through the city-gate;  And, ere I part with thee, confer at large  Of all that may concern thy love-affairs.  As thou lostest Silvia, though not for thyself.  Regard thy danger, and along with me!  [boy,  Val.  I pray thee, Launce, an if thou seest my Bid him make haste and meet me at the North-gate.  Pro.  Go, sirrah, find him out.  Come, Valentine.  Val.  O my dear Silvia!  Helpless Valentine!

[Exit Val. and Pro.

Launce.  I am but a fool, look you; and yet  I have the wit to think my master is a kind of a knave: but that's all one, if he be but one knave.  He lives not now that knows me to be in love; yet I am in love; but a team of horse shall not pluck that from me: nor who 'tis I love; and yet 'tis a woman: but what woman, I will not tell myself; and yet 'tis a milkmaid; yet 'tis not a maid, for she hath had gossips: yet 'tis a maid, for she is her master's maid, and serves for wages.  She hath more qualities than a water-spangle; which is much in a bare Christian.  [Pulling out a paper.  Here is the cate-log of her condition.  'Imprimis: She can fetch and carry.'  Why, a horse can do no more; say a horse cannot fetch, but only carry:  therefore is she better than a jade.  'Item: She can milk;' look you, a sweet virtue in a maid with clean hands.

Enter Speed.

Launce.  With my master's ship? why, it is at Speed.  Well, your old vice still; mistake the word.  What news, then, in your paper?

Launce.  The blackest news that ever thou heardest.  Speed.  Why, man, how black?

Launce.  Why, as black as ink.

Speed.  Let me read them.  [read.

Laurence.  Fie on thee, joll-head! thou canst not Speed.  Thou liest; I can.  [thee?

Launce.  I will try thee.  Tell me this: who begot Speed.  Marry, the son of my grandfather.  Launce.  O illiterate boisterer! it was the son of thy grandmother: this proves that thou canst not read.  Speed.  Come, fool; come; try me in thy paper.  Launce.  There; and Saint Nicholas be thy speed!  Speed.  [a sheet]Imprimis: She can milk.

Launce.  Ay, that she can.

Speed.  Item: She brews good ale.

Launce.  And thereof comes the proverb: 'Blessing of thy heart, you brew good ale.'

Speed.  Item: She can sew.

Launce.  That's as much as to say, Can she so?

Speed.  Item: She can knit.

Launce.  What need a man care for a stock with a wench, when she can knit him a stock?

Speed.  Item: She can wash and scour.

Launce.  A special virtue: for then she need not be washed in prison or be compelled to the bath.

Speed.  Item: She can spin.

Launce.  Then may I set the world on wheels, when she can spin for her living.

Speed.  Item: She hath many nameless virtues.

Launce.  That's as much as to say, bastard vir-

ACT III. THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA. SCENE II.

A little time will melt her frozen thoughts
And worthless Valentine shall be forgot.

Enter Proteus.

Now how, Sir Proteus! Is your countryman
According to our proclamation gone?

Pro. Ay, she is gone a good league to the
That may be mended with a breakfast. Read on.

Speed. Item: She hath a sweet mouth.

Launce. That makes amends for her sour breath.

Speed. Item: She doth talk in her sleep.

Launce. 'tis no matter for that, so she sleep not
In her talk there.

Speed. Item: She is slow in words.

Launce. O villain, that set this down among her
To be slow in words is a woman's only virtue:
I pray thee, out with 't, and place it for her chief

Speed. Item: She is proud.

Launce. Out with that too; it was Eve's legacy,
And cannot be 'ta'en from her.

Speed. Item: She hath no teeth,

Launce. I care not for that neither, because I love

Speed. Item: She is curst.

Launce. Well, the best is, she hath no teeth to bite.

Speed. Item: She will often praise her liquor.

Launce. If her liquor be good, she shall: if she will not, I will; for good things should be praised.

Speed. Item: She is too liberal.

Launce. Of her tongue she cannot, for that's writ don their she purshe shall not, for that I'll keep shut: now, of another thing she may, and that cannot I help. Well proceed.

Speed. Item: She hath more hair than wit, and more faults than hairs, and more wealth than faults.

Launce. Stop there; I'll have her: she was mine, and not mine, twice or thrice in that last article.

Because that once was the office once more.

Speed. Item: She hath more hair than wit,

Launce. More hair than wit? it may be; I'll prove it.
The cover of the salt hides the salt, and therefore it is more than the salt; the hair that covers the wit is more than the wit, for the greater hides the less. What's next?

Speed. And more faults than hairs.

Launce. That's monstrous: O, that that were out!

Speed. And more wealth than faults.

Launce. Why, that word makes the faults gracious.
Well, I'll have her: and if it be a match, as holding it is impossible, Speed. What then?

Launce. Why, then will I tell thee—that thy master stays for thee at the North-gate.

Speed. For me?

Launce. For thee! ay, who art thou? he hath stayed for a kins man then thee.

Speed. And must I go to him?

Launce. Thou must run to him, for thou hast stayed so long that going will scarce serve the turn.

Speed. Why didst not tell me sooner? box of your love-letters!

Exeunt

Now will he be swinged for reading my letter; an unmannerly slave, that will thrust him into secrets! I'll after, to rejoice in the boy's correction.

SCENE II.—The same. The Duke's palace.

Enter Duke and Thurio.

Duke. Sir Thurio, fear not but that she will love
Now Valentine is banish'd from her sight. [you,

Thur. Since his exile she hath despised me most.

Duke. Forget my company and raiul't at me, I suffered much of others who did her.

Duke. This weak impress of love is as a figure
Trenched in ice, which with an hour's heat
Dissolves to water and doth lose his form.

Duke. This discipline shows thou hast been in Thy course, and thou know'rt that I'll put in practice.
Therefore, sweet Proteus, my direction-giver,
Let us into the city presently.

To sort some gentlemen well skilled in music.
I have a sonnet that will serve the turn
To give the onset to thy good advice.
Duke. About it, gentlemen!
Pro. We'll wait upon your grace till after supper,
And afterward determine our proceedings.
Duke. Even now about it? I will pardon you.

[Exeunt.

SCENE I.—The frontiers of Mantua. A forest.

Enter certain Outlaws.

First Out. Fellows, stand fast; I see a passenger.
Sec. Out. If there be ten, shrink not, but down with 'em.

Enter Valentine and Speed.

Third Out. Stand, sir, and throw us that you have about ye:
If not, we'll make you sit and rifle you.
Speed. Sir, we are undone; these are the villains
That all the travellers do fear so much.
Val. My friends,
First Out. Then knout not so, sir; we are your enemies.
Sec. Out. Peace! we'll hear him.
Third Out. Ay, by my beard, will we, for he's a proper man.
Val. Then know that I have little wealth to lose:
A man I am cross'd with adversity;
My chamber, and I lose myself in costs,
Of which if you should here disturb me,
You take the sum and substance that I have.
Sec. Out. Whither travel you?
Val. To Verona.
First Out. Whence came you?
Val. From Milan.
Third Out. Have you long sojourned there?
Val. Some sixteen months, and longer might have
If crooked fortune had not thwarted me. [stay'd,
First Out. What, were you banish'd thence?
Val. I was,
Sec. Out. For what offence? [hear.
Val. For that which now torments me to re
I kill'd a man, whose death I much repent;
But yet I slew him manfully in fight,
Without false vantage or base treachery.
First Out. Why, ne'er repent it, if it were done so.
But were you banish'd for so small a fault?
Val. I was, and held me glad of such a doom.
Sec. Out. Have you the tongues?
Val. My youthful travel therein made me happy,
Or else I often had been miserable.
Friar.
Third Out. By the bare scalp of Robin Hood's fat
This fellow were a king for our wild faction!
First Out. We'll have him. Sighs, a word.
Speed. Master, be one of them; it's an honourable kind of thievish.
Val. Peace, villain!
[To.
Sec. Out. Tell us this: have you any thing to take
Val. Nothing but my fortune. [lenem,
Third Out. Know, then, that some of us are griefs
Such as the fury of ungovern'd youth
Thrust from the company of awful men;
Myself was from Verona banished
For practising to steal away a lady,
An heir, and near allied unto the duke.

where you shall hear music and see the gentleman that you asked for.

Jul. But shall I hear him speak?
Host. Ay, that you shall.

Jul. That will be music. [Music plays.

Host. hear him speak.
Jul. Is he among these?
Host. Ay: but, peace! let 's hear 'em.

SONG.

Who is Silvia? what is she,
That all our sing? commend her?
Holy, fair and wise is she,
The heaven such grace did lend her,
That she might admired be.

Is she kind as she is fair?
For beauty lives with kindness.
Love doth to her eyes repair,
To help him of his blindness.
And, being help'd, inhabits there.

Then to Silvia let us sing,
That Silvia is excelling;
She excells in each mortal thing
Upon the dull earth dwelling;
To her let us garlands bring.

Host. How now! are you saddler than you were before? How do you, man? the music likes you not.
Jul. You mistake: the musician likes me not.

Host. Why, my pretty youth?
Jul. He plays false, father.

Host. How? out of tune on the strings?
Jul. Not so; but yet so false that he grieves my very heart-strings.

Host. You have a quick ear.
Jul. Ay, I would I were deaf; it makes me have a slow heart.

Host. I perceive you delight not in music.
Jul. Not a whit, when if jars so.

Host. Hark, what fine change is in the music!
Jul. Ay, that change is the spite. [Music.

Host. You would have them always play but one
Jul. I would always have one play but one thing.
But, host, doth this Sir Proteus that we talk on Often resort unto this gentlewoman?

Jul. I tell you what Launce, his man, told me: he loveth her out of all nick.

Jul. Where is Launce?

Host. Gone to seek his dog: which to-morrow, by his master's command, he must carry for a present to his lady.

Pro. Sir Thurio, feelest thou: I will so plead
That thou shalt say my cunning drift excels.

Th. Where meet we?

Pro. At Saint Gregory's well.

Th. Farewell. [Exeunt Thur. and Musicians.

Enter Silvia above.

Pro. Madam, good even to your ladyship.
Sil. I thank you for your music, gentlemen.

Who is that that spake? [Music.

Pro. One, lady, if you knew his pure heart's
You would quickly learn to know him by his voice.

Sil. Sir Proteus, as I take it.

Pro. Sir Proteus, gentle lady, and your servant.

Sil. What's your will?

Pro. That I may compass yours.

Sil. You have your wish: my will is even this:
That presently you bie you home to bed. Then subtle, persued, false, disloyal man!
Think'st thou I am so shallow, so conceitless,
To be seduced by thy flattery.
That hast deceived so many with thy vows?

Return, return, and make thy love amends.
For me, by this pale queen of night I swear,
I am so far from granting thy request.
That I despise thee for thy wrongful suit,
And by and by intend to chide myself.

Even for this cause I spend in talkimg to thee.

Pro. I grant, sweet love, that I did love a lady;
But she is dead.

Jul. [Aside] 'Tis false, if I should speak it;
For I am sure she is not buried.

Sil. Say that she be: yet Valentine thy friend
Survives: to whom thou'st thyself a witness,
I am betroth'd: and art thou not ashamed
To wrong him with thy importunity?

Pro. I likewise hear that Valentine is dead.

Sil. And so suppose am I: for in his grave
Assure thyself my love is buried.

Pro. Sweet lady, let me take it from the earth.

Sil. Go to thy lady's grave and speak thence
Or, at the least, in her sepulchre thine.

Jul. [Aside] He heard not that.

Pro. Madam, if your heart be so obdurate,
Vonuchase me yet your picture for my love,
The picture that is hanging in your chamber:
To that I think end: to that I think sick and weep:
For since the substance of your perfect self
Is else devoted, I am but a shadow;
And to your shadow will I make true love.

Jul. [Aside] If 'twere a substance, you would sure, deceive it.
And make it but a shadow, as I am.

Sil. I am very loath to be your idol, sir;
But since your falsehood shall become you well
To worship shadows and adore false shapes,
Send me to him in the morning and I'll send it:
And so, good rest.

Pro. As wretches have o'ermight
That wait for execution in the morn.
[Exeunt Pro. and Sil. severally.

Jul. Host, will you go?

Host. By my halidon, I was fast asleep.

Jul. Pray you, where lies Sir Proteus?

Host. Marry, at my house. Trust me, I think
'tis almost day.

Jul. Not so; but it hath been the longest night
That e'er I watch'd and the most heaviest.
[Exeunt.

SCENE III. — The same.

Enter Eglamour.

Egl. This is the hour that Madam Silvia
Entranced me to call and know her mind:
There's some great matter she'd employ me in.
Madam, madam!

Enter Silvia above.

Sil. Who calls?

Egl. Your servant and your friend;
One that attends your ladyship's command. [row.

Sil. Sir Eglamour, a thousand times good-mor.
Egl. As many, worthy lady, to yourself!

According to your ladyship's imposition,
I am thus early come to know what service
It is your pleasure to command me in.

Sil. O Eglamour, thou art a gentleman —
Think not I flatter, for I swear I do not —
Valiant, wise, remorseful, well accomplish'd:
Theon art ignorant what deep good will
I hear into the banish'd Valentine,
Nor how my father would enforce me marry
Van Thurio, whom my very soul abhors.
Thyself hast loved; and I have heard thee say
Nougrieve, thou sayst, for so near thy heart
As when thy lady and thy true love die,
Upon whose grave thou vow'dst pure chastity.
Sir Eglamour, I would to Valentine.
To Mantua, where I hear he makes abode;
ACT IV.  THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.  SCENE IV.

And, for the ways are dangerous to pass,
I do desire thy worthy company.
Upon whose faith and honour I repose.
Unease not my father's anger, Egadmore,
But think upon my grief, a lady's grief;
And on the justice of my flying home.
To keep my hoary match, [plagues.] Which heaven and fortune still rewards with
I do desire thee, even from a heart
As full of sorrow as the sea of sands,
To bear me company and go with me:
If not, to hide what I have said to thee,
That I may venture to depart alone.
Egl. Madam, I pity much your grievances;
Which since I know they virtuously are placed,
I give consent to go along with you,
Recking as little what betideth me
As much I wish all good befell you.
When will you go?
Sib. This evening coming.
Egl. Where shall I meet you?
Sib. At Friar Patrick's cell, Where I intend holy confession.
Egl. I will not fail your ladyship. Good-morrow, &c.
Sib. Good-morrow, kind Sir Egadmore. [Exeunt severally.

SCENE IV.—The same.

Enter Launce, with his Dog.

Launce. When a man's servant shall play the cur with him, look, you, it goes hard: one that I brought up of a puppy; one that I saved from drowning, when three or four of his blind brothers and sisters went to it. I have taught him, even as one would say precisely: thus I would teach a dog. I was sent to deliver him as a present to Mistress Silvia from my master: and I came no sooner into the dining-chamber but he steps me to her tester and steals her capon's leg: O,
'tis a foul thing when a cur cannot keep himself in all companies! I would have, as one should say, one that takes upon him to be a dog indeed, to be, as it were, a dog at all things. If I had not had more wit than he, to take a fault upon me that he did, I think verily he had been hanged for it; sure as I live, he had suffered for't; you may judge. He trusts me himself into the company of three or four gentlemanlike dogs, under the duke's table: he had not been there—bless the mark!—a missing while, but all the chamber smelt him. 'Out with the dog!' says one: 'What cur is that?' says another. 'Whip him out!' says the third; 'Hang him up!' says the duke. I, having been acquainted with the smell before, knew it was Crab, and goes me to the fellow that whips the dogs: 'Friend,' quothe I, 'you mean to whip the dog?' 'Ay, marry, do I,' quothe he.
'You do him the wrong,' quothe I: 'it was I did the fellow Cuddy. He makes me no more ado, but whips me out of the chamber.
How many masters would do this for his servant?
Nay, I'll be sworn, I have sat in the stocks for puddings he hath stolen, otherwise he had been executed; I have stood on the pillory for geese
he hath killed, otherwise he had suffered for't.
Thou thinkest not of this now, Nay, I remember the trick you served me when I took my leave of Madam Silvia; did not I bid thee still mark me and do as I do when didst thou see me heave up my leg and make water against a gentlewoman's far-thingale? didst thou ever see me do such a trick?

Enter Proteus and Julia.

Pr. Sebastian is thy name? I like thee well
And will employ thee in some service presently.

Jul. In what you please: I'll do what I can.
Pro. I hope thou wilt. [To Launce] How now, you whoreson peasant!
Where have you been these two days lodging?
Launce. Marry, sir, I carried Mistress Silvia the dog you bade me take care to myself.
Pro. And what says she to my little jewel?
Launce. Marry, she says your dog was a cur, and you tell us curish thanks is good enough for such a
Pro. But she received my dog? [present.
Launce. No, indeed, did she not: here have I brought him for you again.
Pro. What, didst thou offer her this from me?
Launce. Ay, sir; the other squirrel was stolen from me by the hangman boys in the market-place:
and then I offered her mine own, who is a dog as big as ten of yours, and therefore the gift the greater.
Pro. Go get thee hence, and find my dog again,
Or ne'er return again into my sight.
Away, I say! stay'st thou to vex me here?
[Exit Launce.

A slave, that still an end turns me to shame!
Pro. Sebastian, I have entertained thee.
Partly that I have need of such a youth
That can with so much spirit do my business,
For 'tis no trusting to yond foolish loth.
But chiefly for thy face and thy behaviour,
Which, if my anger deceiveth me not,
Witness good bringing up, fortune and truth:
Therefore know thou, for this I entertain thee.
Go presently and take this ring with thee,
Deliver it to Madam Silvia:
She loved me well deliver'd it to me.
Jul. It seems you loved not her, to leave her token.
She is dead, belike?
Pro. But pity her.
Jul. Wherefore shouldst thou pity her?
Pro. Because methinks that she loved you as well
As you do love your lady Silvia.
She dreams on him that has forget her love;
You dote on her that cares not for your love.
'Tis pity love should be so contrary;
And thinking on it makes me cry 'alas!'
Pro. Well, give her that ring and therewithal
This letter. That is her hand, and tells her
I claim the promise for her heavenly picture.
Your message done, be home unto my chamber,
Where thou shalt find me, sad and solitary. [Exit.
Jul. How many women would do such a message?
Alas, poor Proteus! thou hast entertain'd
That with his very heart despiseth me?
Because he loves her, he despiseth me;
Because I love him, I must pity him.
This ring I gave him when he parted from me,
To bind him to remember my good will;
And now and ever, unhappy messenger,
To plead for that which I would not obtain,
To carry that which I would have refused,
To praise his faith which I would have praised.
I am my master's true-confirmed love;
But cannot be true servant to my master,
Unless I prove false traitor to myself.
Yet will I woo for him, but yet so coldly
As, heaven it knows, I would not have him speed.

Enter Silvia, attended.

Gentlewoman, good day! I pray you, be my mean
To bring me where to speak with Madam Silvia.
Sib. What would you with her, if that I be she?
Jul. If you be she, I do entreat your patience
To hear me speak the message I am sent on.
Sil. From whom?

Jul. From my master, Sir Proteus, madam.

Sil. O, he sends you for a picture.

Jul. Ay, madam.

Sil. Ursula, bring my picture there.

Go give your master this: tell him from me. One Julia, that his changing thoughts forget, Would better fit his chamber than this shadow.

Jul. Madam, please you peruse this letter.—

Pardon me, madam; I have unadvised delivered you a paper that I should not:
This is the letter to your ladyship.

Sil. I pray thee, let me look on that again.

Jul. It may not be; good madam, pardon me.

Sil. There, hold!

I will not look upon your master's lines:
I know they are stuff'd with protestations
And full of new-found oaths; which he will break
As easily as I do tear his paper.

Jul. Madam, he sends your ladyship this ring.

Sil. The more shame for him that he sends it me;
For I have heard him say a thousand times
This Julia gave it him at his departure.

Though his false finger have profan'd the ring,
Mine shall not do his Julia so much wrong.

Jul. She thanks you.

Sil. What say'st thou?

Jul. I thank you, madam, that you tender her.

Poor gentlewoman! my master wrongs her much.

Sil. Dost thou know her?

Jul. Almost as well as I do know myself:
To think upon her woes I do protest.

That I have wept a hundred several times. [Her.

Sil. Belike she thinks that Proteus hath forsook Jul. I think she doth; and that's her cause of sorrow.

Sil. Is she not passing fair?

Jul. She hath been fairer, madam, than she is:
When she did think my master loved her well,
She, in my judgment, was as fair as you;
But since she did neglect her looking-glass
And threw her sun-expelling mask away,
The air hath starved the roses in her cheeks
And pinch'd the lily-thurture of her face,
That now she is become as black as I.

Sil. How tall was she?

Jul. About my stature; for at Pentecost,

When all our pageants of delight were play'd,
Our youth got me to play the woman's part,
And I was trimm'd in Madam Julia's gown,
Which served me as fit, by all men's judgments,
As if the garment had been made for me;
Therefore I know she is about my height,
And at that time I made my voice so good,
For I did play a lamentable part:
Madam, 'twas Ariadne passioning
For Theseus' perjury and unjust flight;
Which I so lively acted with my tears
That my poor mistress, moved therewithal,
Wep't bitterly; and would I might be dead
If I in thought felt not her very sorrow!

Sil. She is beholding to thee, gentle youth.

Alas, poor lady, desolate and left!

I weep myself to think upon thy words.

Here, youth, there is my purse; I give thee this
For thy sweet mistress' sake, because thou lovest her.

Jul. [Exit Silvia, with attendants.]

Sil. And she shall thank you for't, if ever you know
A virtuous gentlewoman, mild and beautiful! [Her.
I hope my master's suit will be but cold,
Since she respects my mistress' love so much.

Alas, how love can trifle with itself!
Here is her picture: let me see: I think,
If I had such a tire, this face of mine
Were full as lovely as is this of hers:
And yet the painter flatter'd her a little,
Unless I flatter with myself too much.

Her hair is auburn, mine is perfect yellow;
If that be all the difference in his love,
I'll get me such a colour'd periwig,
Her eyes are grey as glass, and so are mine:
Ay, but her forehead's low, and mine's as high,
What should it be that he respects in her
But I can make respective in myself,
If this found Love were not a blinded god?
Come, shadow, come, and take this shadow up,
For 'tis thy rival. O thou senseless form,
Thou shalt be worship'd, kiss'd, loved and adored!
And, were there sense in his idolatry,
My substance should be statue in thy stead.

I'll use thee kindly for thy mistress' sake,
That used me so; or else, by Jove I vow,
I should have scratch'd out your unseen eyes,
To make my master out of love with thee! [Exit.}
ACT V.  THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA.  SCENE IV.

Pro.  O, ay; and pities them.
Thu.  Wherefore?
Jul.  [Aside] That such an ass should owe them.
Pro.  That they are out by lease.
Jul.  Here comes the Duke.

Enter Duke.

Duke.  How now, Sir Proteus! how now, Thurio!
Which of you saw Sir EGLAMOUR of late?
Thu.  Not I.
Pro.  Nor I.
Duke.  Saw you my daughter?
Pro.  Neither.
Duke.  Why then,
She's fled unto that peasant Valentine;
And EGLAMOUR is in her company.
'Tis true: for Friar Laurence met them both,
As he in penance wander'd through the forest;
Him he knew well, and guess'd that it was she,
But, being mask'd, he was not sure of it.
Besides, she did intend confession
At Patrick's cell this even: and there she was not:
These likelihoods confirm her flight from hence.
Therefore, I pray you, stand not to discern;
But mount you presently and meet with me
Upon the rising of the mountain-foot
That leads toward Mantua, whither they are fled:
Dispatch, sweet gentlemen, and follow me.  [Exit.]
Thu.  Why, this is dangerous company,
That flies her fortune when it follows her.
I'll after, more to be revenged on EGLAMOUR
Than for the love of reckless Silvia.
[Exit.]
Pro.  And I will follow, more for Silvia's love
Than hate of EGLAMOUR that goes with her.  [Exit.
Jul.  And I will follow, more to cross that love
Than hate for Silvia that is gone for love.  [Exit.

SCENE III.—The frontier of Mantua. The forest.

Enter Outlaws with Silvia.

First Out.  Come, come,
Be patient: we must bring you to our captain.
Sil.  A thousand more mischances than this one
Have teach'd me how to brook this patiently.
Sec. Out.  Come, bring her away.  [Thou?][Exit.
First Out.  Who is the gentleman that was with Third Out.  Being nimble-footed, he hath outrun
Both MOYSES and VALERIUS follow him.
[us, with her to the west end of the wood;
There is our captain: we'll follow him that's fled;
The thicket is best: he cannot escape.
First Out.  If it be possible, I must bring you to our captain's cave:
For fear not: he bears an honourable mind,
And will not use a woman lawlessly.
Sil.  O Valentine, this I endure for thee!  [Exeunt.]

SCENE IV.—Another part of the forest.

Enter Valentine.

Val.  How use both breed a habit in a man!
This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
I better brook than flourishing peopled towns:
Here can I sit alone, unseen of any.
And to the nightingale's complaining notes
Tune my distresses and record my woes.
O thou that dost inhabit in my breast,
Leave not the mansion so long tenantless,
Lest, growing ruinous, the building fall
And leave no famous monument of what it was!
Repair me with thy presence, Silvia:
Thou gentle nymph, cherish thy forlorn swain!
What hallowing and what stir is this to-day?  [law.
These are my mates, that make their wills their
Have some unhappy passenger in chase.

They love me well; yet I have much to do
To keep them from uncivil outrages.
Withdraw thee, Valentine: who's this comes here?

Enter Proteus, Silvia, and Julia.

Pro.  Madam, this service I have done for you,
Though you respect not aught your servant doth,
To hazard life and rescue you from him
That would have forced your honour and your love;
Vouchsafe me, for my need, but one fair look:
A smaller boon than this I cannot beg
And less than this, I am sure, you cannot give.
Val.  [Aside] How like a dream is this I see and Love, lend me patience to forbear awhile.  [hear!]
Sil.  O miserable, unhappy that I am!
Pro.  Unhappy were you, madam, ere I came;
But by my coming I have made you happy.
Sil.  By thy approach thou mak'st me most unhappy.  [your presence.
Jul.  [Aside] And me, when he approacheth to
Sil.  Had I been seized by a hungry lion,
I would have had a breakfast to the beast,
Rather than be trusted, when one's own,
O, Heaven! be judge how I love Valentine,
Whose life's as tender to me as my soul!
And full as much, for more there cannot be,
I do detest false perjured Proteus.
Therefore be gone: solicit me no more.  [death.
Pro.  Women! If it's to achieve that it next to
Would I not undergo for one calm look!
O, 'tis the curse in love, and still approved,
When women cannot love where they're beloved!
Sil.  When Proteus cannot love where he's re-
Read over Julia's heart, thy first best love, [loved.
For whose dear sake thou didst then read thy faith
Into a thousand oaths: and all those oaths
Descended into perjury, to love me.
Thou hast no faith left now, unless thou 'd'st two;
And that's far worse than none: better have none
Than plural faith which is too much by one:
Thou counterfeit to thy true friend!
Pro.  In love
Who respects friend?
Sil.  All men but Proteus.
Pro.  Nay, if the gentle spirit of moving words
Can no way change you to a noble form,
'll woo you: like a soldier, at arms' end,
And love you against the nature of love,—force ye.
Sil.  O heaven!
Pro.  I'll force thee yield to my desire.
Val.  Ruffian, let go that rude uncivil touch,
Thou friend of an ill fashion!
Pro.  Come, Valentine!
Val.  Thou common friend, that's without faith or love,
For such is a friend now: treacherous man!
Thou hast beguiled my hopes: nought but mine eye
Could have persuad'd me; now I dare not say
I have one friend alive: thou wouldst disprove me
Who should have false Proteus: who, when one's own
Is perjur'd to the bosom? Proteus.
I am sorry I must never trust thee more,
But count the world a stranger for thy sake.
The private wound is deepest: 'O time most accurst,
'Mongst all foes that a friend should be the worst!  [Proteus.
Pro.  My shame and guilt confounds me,
Forgive me, Valentine: if heartily sorrow
Be a sufficient ransom for offence.
I tender 'thou here; I do as truly suffer
As e'er I did commit.
Val.  Then I am said:
And once again I do receive thee honest.
Who by repentance is not satisfied
Is nor of heaven nor earth, for these are pleased.
By penitence the Eternal's wrath's appeas'd:
And, that my love may appear plain and free,
All that was mine in Silvia I give thee.
Jul. O me unhappy! [She swoons.]
Pro. Look to the boy.
Jul. O good sir, my master charged me to deliver a ring to Madam Silvia, which, out of my neglect, was never done.
Pro. Where is that ring, boy?
Jul. Here ’tis; this is it.
Pro. How! let me see:
Why, this is the ring I gave to Julia.
Jul. O, cry you mercy, sir, I have mistook;
This is the ring you sent to Silvia. [Depart
Pro. But how camest thou by this ring? At my I gave this unto Julia.
Jul. And Julia herself did give it me;
And Julia herself hath brought it hither.
Pro. How! Julia!
Jul. Behold her that gave aim to all thy oaths, And entertain’d thee deeply in her heart. How oft hast thou with perjury cleat the root! O Proteus, let this habit make thee blush! Be thou ashamed that I have took upon me Such an immodest raiment, if shame live In a disguise of love:
It is the lesser blot, modesty finds, [minds. Women to change their shapes than men their Pro. Than men their minds! ’tis true. O heaven! were man But constant, he were perfect. That one error Fills him with faults: makes him run through all Inconstancy falls off ere it begins. [thee: What is in Silvia’s face, but I may spy More fresh in Julia’s with a constant eye? Val. Come, come, a hand from either:
Let me be blest to make this happy cluse;
T were nitty two such friends should be long foes.
Pro. Bear witness, Heaven, I have my wish for Jul. And I mine. [ever.

Enter Outlaws, with Duke and Thurio.

Outlaws. A price, a price, a prize! [Duke.
Val. Forbear, forbear, I say! it is my lord the Your grace is welcome to a man disgraced, Banished Valentine.
Duke. Sir Valentine!
Thur. Yonder is Silvia; and Silvia’s mine, Val. Thurio, give back, or else embrace thy death;

Come not within the measure of my wrath; Do not name Silvia thine; if once again, Verona shall not hold thee. Here she stands: Take but possession of her with a touch: I dare thee but to breathe upon my love.
Thur. Sir Valentine, I care not for her, I; I hold him but a fool that will endanger His body for a girl that loves him not: I claim her not, and therefore she is thine.
Duke. The more degenerate and base art thou, To make such means for her as thou hast done And leave her on such slight conditions. Now, by the honour of my ancestry, I do applaud thy spirit, Valentine, And think thee worthy of an empress’ love: Know then, I here forget all former griefs, Cancel all grudge, repeal thee home again, Plead a new state in thy unravel’d merit, To which I thus subscribe: Sir Valentine, Thou art a gentleman and well derived: Take thou my Silvia, for thou hast deserved her. Val. I thank your grace; the gift hath made me I now beseech you, for your daughter’s sake, [happy. To grant me boon that I shall ask of you. Duke. I grant it, for thine own, whate’er it be. Val. These banish’d men that I have kept withal Are men enudled with worthy qualities: Forgive them what they have committed here And let them be recall’d from their exile: They are renounced, civil, full of good And fit for great employment, worthy lord. [thee: Duke. Thou hast prevail’d; I pardon them and Dispose of them as thou know’st their deserts. Come, let us go: we will include all jars With triumphs, mirth and rare solemnity. Val. And, as we walk along, I dare be bold With our discourse to make your grace to smile. What think you of this page, my lord? [Bashes. Duke. I think the boy hath grace in him; he Val. I warrant you, my lord, more grace than boy. Duke. What mean you by that saying? Val. Please you, I’ll tell you as we pass along, That you will wonder what hath fortuned. Come, Proteus: ’tis your penance but to hear The story of your loves discovered; That done, our day of marriage shall be yours; One feast, one house, one mutual happiness. [Exeunt.

SCENE——Windsor, and the neighborhood.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Windsor. Before Page’s house.

Enter Justice Shallow, Slender, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Shal. Sir Hugh, persuade me not: I will make a Star-chamber matter of it: if he were twenty Sir John Falstaffs, he shall not abuse Robert Shallow, esquire.

Slan. In the county of Gloucester, justice of peace and ‘Coram.’

Shal. Ay, cousin Slender, and ‘Custalorum.’

Slan. Ay, and ‘Rato-lorum’ too; and a gentleman born, master parson; who writes himself ‘Armigero,’ in any bill, warrant, quittance, or obligation, ‘Armigero.’

Shal. Ay, that I do; and have done any time these three hundred.

Slan. All his successors gone before him hath done’t; and all his ancestors that come after him may: they may give the dozen white laces in their Shal. It is an old coat.

Evans. The dozen white laces do become an old coat well; it agrees well, passant; it is a familiar beast to man, and signifies love.

Shal. The lace is the fresh fish; the salt fish is an Evans. I may quarter, coz. [old coat.

Shal. You may, by marrying.

Evans. It is marrying indeed, if he quarter it.

Shal. Not a whit.

Evans. Yes, my’r lady; if he has a quarter of your coat, there is but three skirts for yourself, in my simple conjectures: but that is all one. It Sir John Falstaff have committed disgramments unto you, I am of the church, and will be glad to do my be- nevolence to make atonement and compensate be- tween you.

Shal. The council shall hear it: it is a riot.

Evans. It is not meet the council hear a riot: there is no fear of God in a riot; the council, look you, shall desire to hear the fear of God, and not to hear a riot: take your viziments in that.

Shal. Ita! o’ my life, if I were young again, the sword should end it.

Evans. It is better that friends is the sword, and end it: and there is also another device in my brains, which peradventure brings good discretions with it: there is Anne Page, which is daughter to Master Thomas Page, which is pretty virginity.

Slan. Mistress Anne Page? She has brown hair, and speaks small like a woman.

Evans. It is that very person for all the odd, as just as you will desire; and seven hundred pounds of money, and gold and silver, is her grandsire upon his death’sbed—Got deliver to a joyful resurrection!—give, when she is able to overtake seventeen years old: it were a good motion if we leave our priddles and praffles, and desire a marriage between Master Abraham and Mistress Anne Page, [pound?]

Slan. Did her grandsire leave her seven hundred shillings. Ay, and her father is make her a paller penny.

Slan. I know the young gentlewoman; she has good gifts.

Evans. Seven hundred pounds and possibilities is good gifts.

Shal. Well, let us see honest Master Page. Is Falstaff there?

Evans. Shall I tell you a lie? I do despise a liar as I do despise one that is false, or as I despise one that is not true. The knight, Sir John, is there; and, I beseech you, be ruled by your well-willers. I will peat the door for Master Page. [Knocks] What, ho! Got pless your house here! Page. [Within] Who’s there?

Enter Page.

Evans. Here is Got’s blessing, and your fricid, and Justice Shallow; and here young Master Slender, that peradventures shall tell you another tale, if matters grow to your likeings.

Page. I am glad to see your worship well. I thank you for my venison, Master Shallow.

Shal. Master Page, I am glad to see you: much good do it your good heart! I wished your venison better; it was ill killed. How doth good Mistress Page?—and I thank you always with my heart, la! with my heart.

Page. Sir, I thank you.

Shal. I thank you: by yea and no, I do.

Page. I am glad to see you, good Master Slender.
Enter Sir John Falstaff, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

Fal. Now, Master Shallow, you'll complain of me to the king?

Shal. Knight, you have beaten my men, killed my deer, and broke open my lodge.

Fal. But not kissed your keeper's daughter?

Shal. Tut, a pin! this shall be answered.

Fal. I will answer it straight; I have done all that is now answered. [Exit Shallow; the council shall know this.

Fal. 'twere better for you if it were known in counsel: you'll be laughed at.

Fal. Good worts! good baggage. Slender, I broke your head; what matter have you against me?

Slender. Marry, sir; I have matter in my head against you; and against your cony-catching rascals, Bardolph, Nym, and Pistol.

Evans. You Banbury cheese!

Slender. Ay, it is no matter.

Pistol. How now, Mephostophilus!

Slender. Ay, it is no matter.

Nym. Sling, say! panca, panca! slice! that's my humour. [cousin?

Slender. Where's Simple, my man? Can you tell?

Evans. Peace, I pray you. Now let us understand. There are three umpires in this matter, as I understand; that is Master Page, intellect Master Page; and I think myself; and the three party is, lastly and finally, mine host of the Garter. Page. We three, to hear it and end it between them. Evans. Fery gout: I will make a brief of it in my note-book; and we will afterwards ork upon the cause with as great discretion as we can.

Pistol! Pistol.

Pistol. He hears with ears.

Evans. The devil and his tam! what phrase is this, 'He hears with ear'? why, it is affectations.

Pistol. Pistol, did you pick Master Slender's purse?

Slender. Ay, by these gloves, did he, or I would I might never come in mine own great chamber again else, of seven greats in mill-sixpences, and two Edward shovels-boards, that cost me two shifting and two peace a-piece of Yeald Miller, by these gloves.

Evans. Is this true, Pistol?

Evans. No; it is false, if it is a pick-purse.

Pistol. Ha, thou mountain-foreigner! Sir John and master mine, I challenge you to a battle of this laden bilbo. Word of death: froth and scum, thou lies! Slender. By these gloves, then, 'twas he. Nym. Be advised, sir, and pass good humours:

I will say 'marry trap' with you, if you run the mutchbook's humour on me; that is the very note of it.

Slender. By this hat, then, he in the red face had it; for though I cannot remember what I did when you made me drunk, yet I am not altogether an ass.

Fal. What say you, Scarlet and John?

Bardolph. Sir, for my part. I say the gentleman had drunk himself out of his five sentences.

Evans. It is his five senses: lie, what the ignorance is!

Bardolph. And being fap, sir, was, as they say, cashiered; and so conclusions pass the carewes.

Slender. Sir, by my troth; and he then too; but 'tis no matter: I 'll ne'er be drunk whilst I live again, but in honest, civil, godly company, for this trick: if I be drunk, I 'll drink with those that have the fear of God, and not with drunken knives.

Evans. So get judge me, that is a virtuous mind.

Fal. You hear all these matters denied, gentlemen; you hear it.

Enter Anne Page, with wine; Mistress Ford and Mistress Page, following.

Page. Nay, daughter, carry the wine in; we'll drink with divers ladies, and sober ladies.

Evans. O heaven! this is Mistress Anne Page.

Page. How now, Mistress Ford! Fal. Mistress Ford, by thy troth, you are very well met: by your leave, good mistress.

Page. Wife, bid these gentlemen welcome. Come, we have a hot venison pastry to dinner; come, gentlemen, I hope we shall drink down all unkindness. [Enter all except Shal., Slender, and Evans.

Slender. I had rather than forty shillings I had my Book of Songs and Sonnets here.

Enter Simple.

Simple. How now, Simple! where have you been? I must wait on myself, must I? You have not the Book of Riddles about you, have you?

Shal. Book of Riddles! why, did you not lend it to Alice Shortcake upon All-hallowmas last, a fortnight past? and she will play Latin in the play.

Shalender. Come, coz; come, coz; we stay for you. A word with you, coz; marry, this, coz; there is, as 'twere, a tender, a kind of tender, made afar off by Sir Hugh here. Do you understand me?

Slender. Ay, sir, you shall find me reasonable; if it be so, I am a philosopher; but I am the reason.

Shal. Nay, but understand me.

Shal. So I do, sir.

Evans. Give ear to his motions, Master Slender: I will description the matter to you, if you be capacity of it.

Shal. Nay, I will do as my cousin Shallow says: I pray you, pardon me; he's a justice of peace in his country, simple though I stand here. Simple. But that is not the question: the question is concerning your marriage.

Shal. Ay, there's the point, sir.

Evans. Marry, is it; the very point of it; to Mistress Anne Page.

Shal. Why, if it be so, I will marry her upon any reasonable demands.

Evans. But can you affect the 'oman? Let us command to know that of your mouth or of your lips for divers philosophers hold that the lips is parcel of the mouth. Therefore, precisely, can you carry your good will to the maid?

Shal. Cousin Abraham Slender, can you love her?

Shal. I hope, sir, I will do as it shall become one that would do reasons.

Evans. Nay, God's lords and his ladies! you must speak possible, if you can carry her your desires towards her.
Act I. The Merry Wives of Windsor. Scene III.

Shakespeare.

Skal. That you must. Will you, upon good dowry, marry her?

Shen. I will do a great thing than that, upon your request, cousin, in any reason.

Skal. You would have, conceive me, conceive me, sweet coz; what I do is to please you, coz. Can you love the maid?

Shen. I will marry her, sir, at your request; but if there be no great love in the beginning, yet heaven may decrease it upon better acquaintance, when we are married, and have more occasion to know one another; I hope, upon familiarity will grow more content: but if you say, 'Marry her,' I will marry her; that I am freely dissolved, and, disolutely.

Evans. It is a very discretion answer; save the fall is in the ort 'disolutely;' the ort is, according to our meaning, 'disolutely.'

Shen. Ay. I think my cousin meant well.

Shen. Ax, or else I would I might be hanged, la!

Shal. Here comes fair Mistress Anne.

Re-enter Anne Page.

Would I were young for your sake, Mistress Anne! Shen. The dinner is on the table: my father desires your worship's company.

Shal. I will wait on him, fair Mistress Anne.

Evans. O'd's plessed will! I will not be absence at the grace.

[Exeunt Shallow and Evans.

Shen. Will 'tplease your worship to come in, sir?

Shen. No, I thank you, forsooth, heartily; I am very well.

Shen. The dinner attends you, sir.

Shen. I am not a hungry man; I thank you, forsooth.

Go, sirrah, for all you are my man, go wait upon my cousin Shallow. [Exit Simple.] A justice of peace sometimes may be beholding to his friend for a man. I keep but three men and a boy yet, till my mother be dead; but what though? yet I live like a poor gentleman born.

Shen. I may not go in without your worship: they will not sit till you come.

Shen. I 'faith, I 'll eat nothing; I thank you as much as though I did.

Shen. I pray you, sir, walk in.

Shen. I had rather walk here. I thank you. I bruised my shin this other day with playing at sword and dagger with a master of fence; three veneyes for a day or stewed pales, and, by my troth, I cannot abide the smell of hot meat since. Why do your dogs bark so? be there bears in the town? [off.

Shen. I think there are, sir; I heard them talked.

Shen. I love the sport well; but I shall as soon quarrel at it as any man in England. You are afraid, if you see the bear's nose, are you not?

Shen. Ay, indeed, sir.

Shen. That 's meat and drink to me, now. I have seen Sackerson loose twenty times, and have taken him by the chain; but, I warrant you, the women have so cried and shrieked at it, that it passed: but women, indeed, cannot abide 'em; they are very ill-favoured rogues.

Re-enter Page.

Page. Come, gentle Master Shender, come; we stay for you.

Shen. I 'll eat nothing, I thank you, sir.

Page. By cock and pie, you shall not choose, sir! come, come.

Shen. Nay, pray you, lead the way.

Shen. Mistress Anne, yourself shall go first.

Page. No, sir, you, keep on.

Shen. Truly, I will not go first; truly, la! I will not do you that wrong.

Shen. I pray you, sir.

Shen. I 'll rather be unmannerly than troublesome. You do yourself wrong, indeed, la! [Exeunt.

Scene II.—The same.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Simple.

Evans. Go your ways, and ask of Doctor Caius's house which is the way; and there dwell one Mistress Quickly, which is in the manner of his nurse, or his dry nurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer.

Shen. Well, sir.

Evans. Nay, it is better yet. Give her this letter for it is a woman that altogether's acquaintance with Mistress Anne Page: and the letter is, to desire and require her to solicit your master's desires to Mistress Anne Page. I pray you, be gone; I will make an end of my dinner; there's pippins and cheese to come.

[Exeunt.

Scene III.—A room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff, Host, Bardolph, Nym, Pistol, and Robin.

Fal. Mine host host of the Garter! [and wisely.

Host. What says my bully-rock? speak sharply.

Fal. Truly, mine host, I must turn away some of my followers.

Host. Discord, bully Hercules; cashier: let them wag: trot, trot.

Fal. I sit at ten pouns a week.

Host. Sir, I hope you will entertain your master.

Falstaff. I shall draw, he shall tap: said I well, bully Hector?

Fal. Do so, good mine host.

Host. I have spoke; let him follow. [To Bardolf.] Let me see the froth and line: I am at a word; follow me.

Fal. Bardolph, follow him. A tapster is a good trade: an old cloak makes a new jerkin; a withered serving-man a fresh tapster. Go: adieu.

Bardol. It is a life that I desired: I will thrive, Sir. O base Hungarian wight! will thou the spigot warmth?

Falist. He was gotten in drink: is not the humour concealed?

Fal. I am glad I am so acquitt of this tinder-box; his thefts were too open: his fitching was like an unskilful singer; he kept not time. [rest.

Nym. The good humour is to steal at a minute's watch. Sir, there's the wise it call. 'Stee! for!' a fico for the phrase!

Fal. Well, sirs, I am almost out at heels.

Pistol. Why, then, let kibes ensue.

Fal. There is no remedy; I must cony-catch; I must shift.

Pistol. Young ravens have must food.

Fal. Which of you know Ford of this town?

Pistol. I ken the wight: he is of substance good.

Fal. My honest lads, I will tell you what I am Sir. Two yards, and more. [about.

Pistol. No quips now, Pistol! Indeed, I am in the waist, two yards about; but I am now about no waste: I am about thrift. Briefly, I do mean to make love to Ford's wife: I spy entertainment in her; she discourses, she carves, she gives the leer of invitation: I can construe the action of her familiar style: and the hardiest voice of her behaviour, to be Englished rightly, is, 'I am Sir John Falstaff.'

Pistol. He hath studied her well, and translated her will, out of honesty into English.

Nym. The anchor is deep: will that humour pass?

Fal. Now, the report goes she has all the rule of her husband's purse; he hath a legions of angels.

Pistol. As many devils entertain: and 'To her, boy,' say I. [the angels.

Nym. The humour rises: it is good: humour me Fal. I have write me here a letter to her; and here another to Page's wife, who even now gave me good eyes too, examined my parts with most judicious

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR. ACT IV.

Scene IV. A room in Doctor Caius's house.

Enter Mistress Quickly, Simple, and Rugby.

Quick. What, John Rugby! I pray thee, go to the casement, and see if you can see my master, Master Doctor Caius, coming. If he do, I faith, and find any body in the house, here will be an old abusing of God's patience and the king's English.

Rag. I'll go watch.

Quick. Go; and we'll have a posset for 't soon at night, in faith, at the latter end of a sea-coal fire.

[Exit Rugby.] An honest, willing, kind fellow, as ever servant shall come in house withal, and, I warrant you, most delicate no breed-bate: his worst fault is, that he is given to prayer; he is something peevish that way: but nobody but has his fault; but let that pass. Peter Simple, you say your name is?

Sim. Ay, for fault of a better.

Quick. And Master Slender's your master?

Sim. Yes, that he is.

Quick. Does he not wear a great round beard, like a Glover's paring-knife?

Sim. No, forsooth: he hath but a little wee face, with a little yellow beard, a Cain-coloured beard.

Quick. A softly-spirted man, is he not?

Sim. He is, forsooth. He is like a man of his hands as any is between this and his head; he hath fought with a warrener.

Quick. How say you? O, I should remember him: does he not hold up his head, as it were, and strut in his gait?

Sim. Yes, indeed, does he.

Quick. Well, heaven send Anne Page no worse fortune! Tell Master Parson Evans I will do what I can for your master: Anne is a good girl, and I wish —

Re-enter Rugby.

Rag. Out, alas! here comes my master.

Quick. We shall all be shent. Run in here, good young man; go into this closet: he will not stay long. [Sings Simple in the closet.] What, John Rugby! John, what, John, I say! Go, John, go make your master ready; I doubt he be not well, that he comes not home.

[Singing] And down, down, adown-a, &c.

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Vat is you sing? I do not like des toys. Pray you, go and vetch me in my closet a hoitier vert, a box, a green-a-box: do intend vat I speak? a green-a-box.

Quick. Ay, forsooth; I'll fetch it you. [Aside] I am glad he went not in himself: if he had found the young man, he would have been horn-mam.

Caius. Good morrow, sirrah, ye shall be content.

Quick. [Aside Falstaff and Robin.] As I live, there is some simples in my closet, dat I will not for the world I shall leave behind.

Quick. Ay me, he'll find the young man there, and be mad!

Caius. O diable, diable! vat is in my closet? Villain! barron! [Pulling Simple out.] Rugby, my rapier!

Quick. Good master, be content.

Caius. Wherefore shall I be content-a?

Quick. The young man is an honest man.

Caius. What shall de honest man do in my closet? there is no honest man dat shall come in my closet.

Quick. I beseech you, be not so phlegmatic. Hear the truth of it: he came of an errand to me from Parson Hugh.

Caius. Vell.

Sim. Ay, forsooth; to desire her to —

Quick. Peace, I pray you.

Caius. Peace-a your tongue. Speak-a your tale.

Sim. To desire this honest gentlewoman, your maid, to speak a good word to Mistress Anne Page for my master in the way of marriage.

Quick. This is all, indeed, la! but I'll ne'er put my finger in the fire, and need not.

Caius. Sir Hugh send-a you? Rugby, bake me some paper. Tarry you a little-a while. [Writes] Quick. [Aside to Simple] I am glad he is so quiet: if he had been throughly moved, you should have heard him so loud and so melancholy. But notwithstanding, I do you my master what good I can: and the very yen and the no is, the French doctor, my master, — I may call him my master, look you, for I keep his house; and I wash, wring, brew, bake, scour, dress meat and drink, make the beds, and do all myself.

Caius. Sir Hugh send-a you? Rugby, bake me some paper. Tarry you a little-a while. [Writes] Quick. [Aside to Simple] Are you avisied o'that? you shall find it a great charge; and to be up early and down late; but notwithstanding,—to tell you in your ear; I would have no words of it,—my master himself is in love with Mistress Anne Page; but notwithstanding that, I know Anne's mind,—that's neither here nor there. [Exit.]

Caius. It is no matter a-ter dat: do not you tell-a me dat I shall have Anne Page for myself? By gar, I will kill de Jack priest; and I have appointed nine host of de Jarter to measure our weapon. By gar, I will myself have Anne Page.

Quick. Sir, the maid loves you, and all shall be well. We must give folks leave to prate: what, the good-jer!

Caius. Rugby, come to the court with me. By gar, if I have not Anne Page, I shall turn your head out of my door, my poor heels, Rugby.

Enter Mrs. Page, with a letter.

Mrs. Page. What, have I escaped love-letters in the holiday-time of my beauty, and am I now a subject for them? Let me see. [Reads.] Ask me no reason why I love you; for though Love use Reason for his physician, he admits him not for his counsellor. You are not young, no more am I; go to then, there's sympathy: you are merry, so am I; ha, ha! then there's more sympathy: you love sack, and so do I; would you desire better sympathy? Let it suffice thee, Mistress Page,—at the least, if the love of soldier can suffice,—that I love thee. I will not say, pity me; 'tis not a soldier-like phrase; but I say, love me. By me, Thine own true knight, By day or night, Or any kind of light, With all his might.

For thee to light, JOHN FAULSTAFF,' What a Herod of Jewry is this! O wicked, wicked world! One that is well-nigh worn to pieces with age to show himself a young gallant! What an un-weighed behaviour hath this Flemish drunkard picked,—with the devil's name!—out of my conversation, that he dares in this manner assay me? Why, he hath not been thrice in my company! What should I say to him? I was then frugal of my mirth: Heaven forgave me! Why, I'll exhibit a bill in the parliament for the putting down of men. How shall I be revenged on him? for revenged I will be, as sure as his guts are made of puddings.

Enter Mistress Ford.

Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page! trust me, I was going to your house.

Mrs. Page. And, trust me, I was coming to you. You look very ill.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I'll ne'er believe that; I have to show to the contrary. Mrs. Page, Faith, but you do, in my mind.

Mrs. Ford. Well, I do then; yet I say I could show you to the contrary. O Mistress Page, give me some counsel!

Mrs. Page. What's the matter, woman?

Mrs. Ford. O woman, if it were not for one trivial respect, I could come to such honour! Mrs. Page. Hang the trifle, woman! take the honour. What is it? dispense with triles; what is it?

Mrs. Ford. If I would but go to hell for an eternal moment or so, I could be knighted.

Mrs. Page. What? thou best? Sir Alice Ford! These knights will lack; and so thou shouldst not alter the article of thy guny.

Mrs. Ford. We burn daylight; here, read, read; perceive how I might be knighted. I shall think the worse of fat men, as long as I have an eye to make difference of men's liking: and yet he would not swear; praised women's modesty: and gave such orderly and well-behaved reprood to all uncomeliness, that I would have sworn his disposition would have gone to the truth of his words; but they do no more adhere and keep place together than the Thunder- bush Psalms to the tune of Green Sleeves. What tempest, I twop, threw this whale, with so many tons of oil in his belly, ashore at Windsor? How shall I be revenged on him? I think the best way were to entertain him with hope, till the wicked fire of lust have melted him in his own grease. Did you ever hear the like?

Mrs. Page. Letter for letter, but that the name of Page and Ford differs! To thy great comfort in this mystery of ill opinions, here's the twin-brother of thy letter: but let thine inherit first: for, I protest, mine never shall. I warrant he hath a thousand of these letters, writ with blank space for different names,—sure, more,—and these are of the second edition: he will print them, out of doubt; for he cares not what he puts into the press, when he would put as two toys if had rather a grievance, and lie under Mount Pelion. Well, I will find you twenty lascivious turtles ere one chaste man.

Mrs. Ford. Why, this is the very same; the very hand, the very words. What doth he think of us?

Mrs. Page. Nay, I know not: it makes me almost sick, to think what must come out with mine own honesty. I hearten myself like one that I am not acquainted withal; for, sure, unless he know some strain in me, that I know not myself, he would never have bored me in this fury.

Mrs. Ford. 'Boarding,' call you it? I'll be sure to keep him above deck.

Mrs. Page. So will I: if he come under my hatches, I'll never to sea again. Let's be revenged on him: let's appoint him a meeting; give him a show of comfort in his suit and lead him on with a fine-baited delay, till he hath pawned his horses to mine hand, to the uttermost penny.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I will consent to act any villainy against him, that may not touch the chariness of our honesty. O, that my husband saw this letter! it would give eternal food to his jealousy.

Mrs. Page. Why, look where he comes; and my good man too; he's as far from jealousy as I am from giving him cause; and that I hope is an unmeasurable distance.

Mrs. Ford. You are the happier woman.

Mrs. Page. Let's consult together against this greedy knight. Come hither. [They retire.]

Enter Ford with Pistol, and Page with Nym.

Ford. Well, I hope it be not so.

Pist. Hope is a curtail dog in some affairs: Sir John affects thy wife.

Ford. Why, sir, my wife is not young. [poor.

Pist. He woos both high and low, both rich and both young and old, one with another, Ford. He loves the gallimaufry: Ford, perpend.

Ford. Love my wife!

Pist. With liver burning hot. Prevent, or go thou, Like Sir Action he, with Ringwood at thy heels: O, odious is the name!

Ford. What, what, Sir?

Pist. The horn, I say. Farewell. [night:

Take heed, have open eye, for thieves do foot by Take heed, ere summer comes or cuckold-birds do Away, Sir Corporal Nym! [sing.

Believe it, Page; he speaks sense.

[Exit. Ford, [Aside I will be patient; I will find out this, Nym. [To Page] And this is true: I like not the humour of lying. He hath wronged me in some humours: I should have borne the rumoured letter to her; but I have a sword and it shall bite upon my necessity. I love your wife; there's the short and the long. My name is Corporal Nym; I speak and I avouch; 'tis true: my name is Nym and Falstaff loves your wife. Adieu. I love not the humour of bread and cheese, and there's the humour of it. Adieu. [Exit. Page. I am the humours of it, quotas a'! here's a fellow brights English out of his wits. Ford. I will seek out Falstaff. [prose.

Page. I never heard such a drawing, affecting Ford. If I do find it: well.

Page. I will not believe such a Caiarian, though the present, and I will bend him for a true man. Ford. Twas a good sensible fellow: well.

Page. How now, Meg?

[Mrs. Page and Mrs. Ford come forward.

Mrs. Page. Whither go you, George? Hark you.

Mrs. Ford. How now, sweet Frank! why art thou melancholy?

Ford. I melancholy! I am not melancholy. Get you home, go.

Mrs. Ford. Faith, thou hast some crotchets in thy head. Now, will you go, Mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. Have with you. You'll come to dinner, George. [Aside to Mrs. Ford] Look who comes yonder: she shall be our messenger to this paltry knight.

Mrs. Ford. [Aside to Mrs. Page] Trust me, I thought on her: she'll fit it.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Mrs. Page. You are come to see my daughter Anne? Quick. Ay, forsooth; and, I pray, how does good Mistress Anne?

Mrs. Page. Go in with us and see: we have an hour's talk with you.

[Exeunt Mrs. Page, Mrs. Ford, and Mrs. Quickly.

Ford. You heard what this knave told me, did you not?

Page. Yes; and you heard what the other told Ford. Do you think there is truth in them?

Page. Hang 'em, slaves! I do not think the knight would offer it: but these that accuse him in his intent towards our wives are a yoke of his discarding men; very rogues, now they be out of service.

Ford. Were they his men?

Page. Marry, were they.

Ford. I like it never the better for that. Does he lie at the Garter?

Page. Ay, marry, does he. If he should intend this voyage towards my wife, I would turn her loose to him; and what he gets more of her than sharp would I let it lie on my head: I cannot be thus satisfied.

Page. Look where my ranting host of the Garter comes: there is either ipsum in his pate or money in his purse when he looks so merrily.

Enter Host.

How now, mine host?

Host. How now, jolly-rook! thou'rt a gentleman, Cavaleiro-justice, I say!

Enter Shallow.

Shal. I follow, mine host, I follow. Good even and twenty, good Master Page! Master Page, will you go with us? we have sport in hand.

Host. Tell him, cavaleiro-justice; tell him, bully-rook.

Shal. Sir, there is a fray to be fought between Sir Hugh the Welsh priest and Cains the French doctor. Ford. Good mine host o' the Garter, a word with you. [Draws him aside.

Host. What sayest thou, my bully-rook?

Shal. [To Page] Will you go with us to behold it? My merry host hath had the measuring of their weapons; and, I think, hath appointed them contrary places: for, believe me, I hear the parson is no jester. Bark, I will tell you what our sport shall be. [They converse apart.

Host. Hast thou no suit against my knight, my guest-cavaleiro?

Ford. None, I protest: but I'll give you a pottle of burnt sack to give me recourse to him and tell him my name is Brook, or for a jest.

Host. My hand, bully; thou shalt have egress and regress:—said I well?—and thy name shall be Brook. It is a merry knight. Will you go, An-creics?
THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

ACT II.

Enters Falstaff and Pistol.

Fal. I will not lend thee a penny.

Pist. Why, then the world's mine oyster, Which I with sword will open.

Fal. Not a penny. I have been content, sir, you should lay my commission to pay thee: I have granted upon my good friends for three reprivities for you and your coach-fellow Nym; or else you had looked through the grate, like a geniuncle of baboons. I am damned in hell for swearing to gentlemen my friends, you were good soldiers and tall fellows; and when Mistress Bridget lost the handle of her fan, I took't upon mine honour thou hast it not.

Pist. Didst not thou share? hast thou not fifteen pence?

Fal. Reason, you rogue, reason: thinketh thou I'll endanger my soul gratis? At a word, hang no more about me, I am no gibbet for you. Go, a short knife and a thrust! To your mansion of Pick latch! Go. You'll not bear a letter for me, rogue! you stand upon your honour! Why, thou unconfinable baseness, it is as much as I can do to keep the terms of my honour precise: 1, 1, I myself sometimes, leaving the fear of God on the left hand and finding mine honour in the necessary, am fain to shuffle, to hedge and to lurch; and yet you, rogue, will ensnare your rags, your cat-a-mountain looks, your red-lattice phrases, and your bold-beating oaths, under the shelter of your honour! You will not do it, you?

Pist. I do relent: what would thou more of man?

Enter Robin.

Rob. Sir, here's a woman would speak with you.

Fal. Let her approach.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Quick. Give your worship good morrow.

Fal. Good morrow, good wife.

Quick. Not so, an't please your worship.

Fal. Good maid, then.

Quick. Farewell, sir.

As my mother was, the first hour I was born.

Fal. Do believe the swearer. What with me?

Quick. Shall I vouchsafe your worship a word or two?

Fal. Two thousand, fair woman: and I'll vouchsaw what you say.

Quick. There is the short and the long of it; you have brought her into such a canaries as'tis wonderful. The best courtier of them all, when the court lay at Windsor, could never have brought her to such a canary. Yet there has been knights, and lords, and gentlemen, with their coaches, I warrant you, coach, letter after letter, gold and silver; smelling so sweetly all musk, and so rushing, I warrant you, in silk and gold; and in such allignant terms; and in such wine and sugar of the best and the fairest, that would have won any woman's heart; and, I warrant you, they could never get an eye-wink of her: I had myself twenty angels given me this morning: but I defy all angels in any such sort, as they say, but in the way of honesty: and, I warrant you, they could never get her so much as sip on a cup with the proudest of them all: and yet there has been ears, nay, which is more, pensioners: but, I warrant you, all is one with her.

Quick. What says she to me? be brief, my good she-Mercy.

Quick. Marry, she hath received your letter, for which she thanks you a thousand times; and she gives you to notify that her husband will be absent from his house between ten and eleven.

Fal. Ten and eleven.

Quick. Ay, forsooth; and then you may come and see the picture, she says, that you wot of: Master Ford, her husband, will be from home. Alas! the sweet woman leads an ill life with him; he's a very jealous man: she leads a very trampled life with him, good heart.

Fal. Ten and eleven. Woman, command me to her; I will not fail her.

Quick. Why, you say well. But I have another messenger to your worship. Mistress Page hath her hearty commendations to you too: and let me tell you in your ear, she was as furious a civil modest wife, and one, I tell you, that will not miss you morning nor evening prayer, as any is in Windsor, who'er be the other; and she bade me tell your worship that her husband is seldom from home; but she hopes there will come a time. I never knew a woman so strait-witted: surely I think you have charms, la; yes, in truth.

Fal. Not I. I assure thee: setting the attraction of my good parts aside I have no other charms.

Quick. Blessing on your heart for't!

Fal. But, I pray thee, tell me this: has Ford's wife and Page's wife acquainted each other how they love me?

Quick. That were a jest indeed! they have not so little grace, I hope: that were a trick indeed! But Mistress Page would desire you to send her your little page, of all loves: her husband has a marvellous infection to the little page; and truly Master Page is an honest man. Never a wife in Windsor leads a better life than she does: do what she will, say what she will, take all, pay all, go to bed when she list, rise when she list, all is as she will: and truly she deserves it: for if there be a kind woman in Windsor, she is one. Must send her your page: no remedy.

Fal. Why, I will.

Quick. Nay, but do so, then: and, look you, he may come and go between you both; and in any case have a nay-word, that you may know one another's mind, and the boy never need to understand any thing; for 'tis not good that children should know any wickedness; old folks, you know, have discretion, as they say, and know the world.
I'll use them well; commend me to them both;
there's my purse; I am yet thy debtor. Boy, go along with this woman. [Enter Mistress Quickly and Robin.] This news directs me! -

Pist. This punk is one of Cupid's carriages:
Clap on more sails: pursue; up with your lights:
Give fire: she is my prize, or ocean whelm them.

Fal. Sayest thou so, old Jack? go thy ways; I'll make more of thy old body than I have done. Will they yet look after thee? Wilt thou, after the expense of so much money, be now a gainer? Good body, I thank thee. Let them say 'tis grossly done; so it be fairly done, no matter.

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. Sir John, there's one Master Brook below would fain speak with you, and be acquainted with you; and hath sent your worship a morning's drink of ancient vintage.

Fal. Call him in. [Exit Bardolph.] Such Brooks are welcome to me, that o'erflow such liquor. Ah, ha! Mistress Ford and Mistress Page have I encompassed you? go to; via!

Re-enter Bardolph, with Ford disguised.

Ford. Bless you, sir!

Fal. And you, sir! Would you speak with me?
Ford. I make bold to press with so little preparation upon you.

Fal. You're welcome. What's your will? Give us leave, drawer. [Exit Bardolph.]

Ford. Sir, I am a gentleman that have spent much; my name is Brook.

Fal. Good Master Brook, I desire more acquaintance of you.

Ford. Good Sir John, I see for yours; not to charge you; for I must let you understand I think myself in better plight for a lender than you are: the which hath something emboldened me to this un-seasoned intrusion; for they say, if money go before, and virtue do lie open.

Fal. Money's a good soldier, sir, and will on.

Ford. Troth, and I have a bag of money here troubles me: if you will help to bear it, Sir John, take all, or half, for easing me of the carriage.

Fal. Sir, I know not how I may desire to be your porter.

Ford. I will tell you, sir, if you will give me the Fal. Speak, good Master Brook: I shall be glad to be your servant.

Ford. Sir, I hear you are a scholar,— I will be brief with you,— and you have been a man long known to me, though I had never so good means, as desire, to make myself acquainted with you.
I shall discover a thing to you, wherein I must very much lay open mine own imperfection: but, good Sir John, as you have one eye upon my follies, as you hear them unfolded, turn another into the register of your own: that I may pass with a reproof the easier, with you yourself know how easy it is to be such an offender.

Fal. Very well, sir; proceed.

Ford. There is a gentlewoman in this town; her husband's name is Ford.

Fal. Well, sir.

Fal. I have long loved her, and, I protest to you, bestowed much on her; followed her with a doting observance; engrossed opportunities to meet her; fee'd every slight occasion that could but nig-gadly give me sight of her: not only bought many presents to give her, but have given largely to many to know what she would have given; briefly, I have herself her as love hath pursued me; which hath been on the wing of all occasions. But whatsoever
I have given her, either in my mind or in my means, meed, I am sure, I have received none; unless experience be a jewel that I have purchased at an infinite rate, and that hath taught me to say this:
'Love like a shadow flies when substance love
pursues;
Pursuing that it flies, and flying what pursues.'

Fal. Have you received no promise of satisfaction at her hands?

Ford. Never.

Fal. Have you importuned her to such a purpose?

Ford. Never.

Fal. What quality was your love, then?

Ford. O good sir!

Fal. Like a fair house built on another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it. [Exit.

Fal. To what purpose have you unfolded this to Ford. When I have told you that, I have told you all. Some say, that though she appear honest to me, yet that she has other suitors; which I know to be true, and that there is shrewd construction made of her.
Now, Sir John, here is the heart of my purpose: you are a gentleman of excellent breeding; admirable discourse, of great admiittance, authentic in your place and person; generally allowed for your many war-like, court-like, and learned preparations.

Fal. O, sir!

Ford. Believe it, for you know it. There is money; spend it, spend it; spend more; spend all I have;
only give me so much of your time in exchange of it, as to lay an amiable siege to the honours of this Ford's: use your art of wooing: win her consent to you: if any man may, you may as soon as any.

Fal. Would it apply well to the vehemency of your affection, that I should win what you would enjoy? Methinks you prescribe to yourself very preposterously.

Ford. O, understand my drift. She dwells so securely on the excellency of her honour, that the folly of my soul dares not present itself; she is too bright to be looked against. Now, could I come to her with any detection in my hand, my desires had instance and argument to communicate themselves; I could drive her thence from the ward of her purity, her reputation.
In a word, both to show, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. What say you to 't, Sir John?

Fal. Master Brook, I will first make bold with your money; next, give me your hand; and last, as I am a gentleman, you shall, if you will, enjoy Ford's wife.

Fal. I say you shall.

[none.

Ford. Want no money, Sir John; you shall want

Fal. Want no Mistress Ford, Master Brook: you shall want none. I shall be with her, I may tell you, by her own appointment; even as you came in to me, herself and others she went to and from me; for I say,
I shall be with her between ten and eleven; for at that time the jealous rascally knave her husband will be forth. Come you to me at night; you shall know how I speed.

Ford. I am best in your acquaintance. Do you know Ford, sir?

Fal. Hang him, poor cuckoldly knave! I know him not: yet I wrong him to call him poor; they say the jealous wittol knave hath masses of money, for which the his wife seems to well-favoured. I will use her as the key of the cuckoldly rogue's coffers;
and there's my harverpion.

Ford. I would you knew Ford, sir, that you might avoid him if you saw him.

Fal. Hang him, mechanical salt-butter rogue! I will stare him out of his wits; I will awe him with my cudgel: it shall hang like a meteor over the
Act III.

The Merry Wives of Windsor. Scene I.

Caius. By gar, he is de coward Jack priest of de world; he is not show his face.

Host. Thou art a Castalion-King-Urinal. Hector of Greece, my boy!

Caius. I pray you, bear vitals that me have stay six or seven, two, treee hours for him, and he is no come.

Shal. He is the wiser man, master doctor: he is a curer of souls, and you a curer of bodies; if you should fight, you go against the hair of your professions. Is it not true, Master Page?

Page. Master Shallow, you have yourself been a great fighter, though now a man of peace.

Shal. Bodykins, Master Page, though I now he old and of the peace, if I see a sword out, my finger itches to make one. Though we are justices and doctors and churchmen, Master Page, we have some suit of our youth in us: we are the sons of women, Master Page.

Page. 'Tis true, Master Shallow.

Shal. It will he found so, Master Page. Master Doctor Caius, I am come to fetch you home. I am sworn of the peace: you have showed yourself a wise physician, and Sir Hugh hath shown himself a wise and pietistic churchman. You must go with me, master doctor. [Mock water.

Host. Pardoun, guest-justice, A word, Mournseur Caius. Mock-water! vat is dat?

Host. Mock-water, in our English tongue, is valour, bully. Caius. By gar, den, I have as much mock-vater as de Englishman. Scaryy jack-dog priest! by gar, me vill cut his ears.

Host. He vill clapper-claw thee tightly, bully.

Caius. Clapper-de-claw! vat is dat?

Host. That is, he will make thee amends.

Caius. By gar, me de look he shall clapper-de-claw me: for, by gar, me vill have it.

Host. And I will provoke him to 't, or let him wag.

Caius. Me tank you for dat.

Host. And, moreover, bully—but first, master guest, and Master Page, and eke Cavaleiro Slender, go you through the town to Frogmore. [Aside to them.

Page. Sir Hugh is there, is he?

Host. He is there; see what humour he is in; and I will bring the doctor about by the fields. Will it do well?

Host. We will do it.

Caius. By gar, me vill kill de priest; for he speak for a jack-an-ape to Anne Page.

Host. Let him die: sheath thy impatience, throw cold water on thy choler; go about the fields with me through Frogmore: I will bring thee where Mistress Anne Page is, at a farm-house a-feeding; and thou shalt woo her. Cried I ain? said I well? Caius. By gar, me dank you for dat: by gar, I love you; and I shall procure-a you de good guest, my lord's earl, de knight, de lords, de gentlemen, my patients.

Host. For the which I will be thy adversary toward Anne Page. Said I well?

Caius. By gar, 't is good; well said.

Host. Let us wag, then.

Caius. Come at my heels, Jack Rugby. [Exeunt.

Scene II.—A field near Frogmore.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans and Simple.

Evans. 1 pray you now, good Master Slender's serving-man, and friend Simple by your name, which way have we looked for Master Caius, that calls himself doctor of physics?

Sin. Marry, sir, the pitie-ward, the park-ward, every way; old Windsor way, and every way but the town way.

43
Evans. I most vehemently desire you will also look that way.
Sim. I will, sir.
[Exit.]
Evans. 'Tis my soul, how full of chollors I am, and trembling of mind! I shall be glad if he have devised how to make my seeds of roses
And a thousand fragrant posies.
To shallow —
Meric on me! I have a great dispositions to cry.
[Songs.
Melodious birds sing madrigals —
When I sat in Paphion —
And a thousand vagram posies.
To shallow, &c.

Re-enter Simple.
Sim. Yonder he is coming, this way, Sir Hugh.
Evans. He's welcome. [Songs.
To shallow rivers, to whose falls —
Heaven prosper the right! What weapons is he?
Sim. No weapons, sir. There comes my master,
Master Shallow, and another gentleman, from Frogsmore, over the stile, this way.
Evans. Pray you, give me my gown; or else keep it in your arms.

Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender.
Shal. How now, master Parson! Good morrow, good Sir Hugh. Keep a gamaster out of the dice, and a good student out of his book, and it is wonderful.
Sim. [Aside] Ah, sweet Anne Page!
Page. 'Tis my soul, good Sir Hugh!
Evans. 'Tis your friend, and I, your mercysake, all of you!
Shal. What, the sword and the word! do you study them both, master parson?
Page. And youthful still! in your doublet and hoose this raw rheumatic day!
Evans. There is reasons and causes for it.
Page. We are come to you to do a good office, master parson.
Evans. Fery well; what is it?
Page. Yonder is a most reverend gentleman, who, believing having received wrong by some person, is at most odds with his own gravity and patience that ever you saw.
Shal. I have lived fourscore years and upward; I never heard a man of his place, gravity and learning, so wide of his own respect.
Evans. What is he?
Page. I think you know him; Master Doctor
Caius, the renowned French physician.
Evans. Got's will, and his passion of my heart! I had as lief you would tell me of a mess of porridge.
Page. Why?
Evans. He has no more knowledge in Hicobrates and Galen, — and he is a knave besides; a cowardly knave as you would desires to be acquainted withal.
Page. I warrant you, he's the man should fight with him.
Sim. [Aside] O sweet Anne Page!
Shal. It appears so by his weapons. Keep them asunder: here comes Doctor Caius.

Enter Host, Caius, and Rugby.
Page. Nay, good master parson, keep in your weapon.
Shal. So do you, good master doctor.
Host. Disarm them, and let them question; let them keep their limbs whole and hack our English.
Caius. I pray you, let me speak a word with your car. Wherefore will you not meet-a me?
Evans. [Aside to Caius] Pray you, use your patience;
in good time.
Caius. By gar, you are de coward, de Jack dog,
John ape.
Evans. [Aside to Caius] Pray you, let us not be bragging toockers to other men's humours; I desire you in friendship, and I will one way or other make you amend. [Aloud] I will knock your urinals about your knave's cogscomb for missing your meetings and appointments.
Caius. Diable! Jack Rugby, — mine host de parson,
I like not stay for him to kill him. Have I not,
at de place I did appoint?
Evans. As I am a Christian soul now, look you, this is the place appointed; I'll be judgment by mine host of the Garter.
Host. Peace, I say, Gallia and Gaul, French and Welsh, sole-curer and body-curer!
Caius. Ay, dat is very good; excellent.
Am I politic? am I subtle? am I a Machiavel?
Shall I lose my doctor? no; he gives me the potions and the motions. Shall I lose my parson, my priest, my Sir Hugh? no; he gives me the prayers and the no-verbs. Give me thy hand, terrestrial;
so. Give me thy hand, celestial; so. Boys of art,
I have deceived you both; I have directed you to wrong places; your hearts are mighty, your skins are whole, and but burnt sack be the issue. Come, shal, let us turn to a thousand prayers.
Page. I am at the place,
Page. I am at the place,
Page. I am at the place,
Page. I am at the place.
Page. I am at the place.
Page. I am at the place.
Page. I am at the place.
Page. I am at the place.
Page. I am at the place.
Page. I am at the place.
Page. I am at the place.
Page. I am at the place.
Page. I am at the place.
Page. I am at the place.
Page. I am at the place.

SCENE II.—A street.

Enter Mistress Page and Robin.

Mrs. Page. Nay, keep your way, little gallant;
you were wont to be a follower, but now you are a leader. Whether had you rather lead mine eyes, or eye your master's heels?
Robin. I bad rather, forsooth, go before you like a man than follow him like a dwarf.
Mrs. Page. O, you are a flattering boy: now I see you'll be a courtier.

Enter Ford.

Ford. Well met, Mistress Page. Whither go you?
Mrs. Page. Truly, sir, to see your wife. Is she at home?
Ford. Ay; and as idle as she may hang together, for want of company. I think, if your husbands were deat, you two would marry.
Mrs. Page. Be sure of that.—two other husbands.
Ford. Where had you this pretty weathercock?
Mrs. Page. I cannot tell what the dicken his name is my husband had him of. What do you call your knight's name, sirrah?
Ford. Sir John Falstaff.
Ford. Sir John Falstaff!
Mrs. Page. He, he; I can never hit on's name.
There is such a league between my good man and he! Is your wife at home indeed?
Ford. Indeed she is.
MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.—Act III., Scene i.
Mrs. Page. By your leave, sir: I am sick till I see her.
[Exit Mrs. Page and Robin.]

Ford. Has Page any brains; hath he any eyes; hath he thinking?
Sure, they sleep; he hath the Falstaff in him, the boy with his!
Good letters, twenty mile, as easy as a cannon will shoot point-blank: he cries Man, I cannot hear him; he has the Falstaff's boy with his!
[Exit Ford.]

Mrs. Page. Come, come, come.
Mrs. Ford. Here, set it down.
Mrs. Page. Give your men the charge; we must be brief.
Mrs. Ford. Marry, as I told you before, John and Robert, be ready here hard by in the brew-house; and when I suddenly call you, come forth, and without any pause or staggering take this basket on your shoulders; that done, trudge with it in all haste, and carry it among the witches in Batchel-mead, and there empty it in the muddy ditch close by the Thames side.

Mrs. Page. You will do it?
Mrs. Ford. I ha' told them over and over; they lack no direction. Be gone, and come when you are called.
[Exit Servants.]

Mrs. Page. Here comes little Robin.

Enter Robin.

Mrs. Ford. How now, my eyes-musket! what news with you?
Rob. My master, Sir John, is come in at your back-door, Mistress Ford, and requests your company.
Mrs. Page. You little Jack-a-Lent, have you been true to us?
Rob. Ay, I'll be sworn.
Mrs. Ford. O sweet Sir John!
Mrs. Page. You warrant thee; if I do not act it, hiss me.
[Exit.]

Mrs. Ford. Go to, then: we'll use this unwholesome humidity, this gross watery pumishment; we'll teach him to know turtles from jays.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Have I caught thee, my heavenly jewel?
Why, now let me die, for I have lived long enough;
this is the paragon of my ambition: O this blessed Mrs. Ford, O sweet Sir John!
[Exit.]

Now shall I sin in my wish: I would thy husband were dead;
I'll speak it before the best lord;
I would make thee my lady.

Mrs. Ford. Thy lady, Sir John! alas, I should be a pitiful lady!
Fal. Let the court of France show me such another.
I see how thine eye would emulate the diamond: thou hast the right arched beauty of the brow that becomes the ship-tire, the tire-valiant, or any tire of Venetian adornment.

Mrs. Ford. A plain kerchief, Sir John; my brows become nothing else: nor that well neither.

Fal. By the Lord, thou art a traitor to say so;
thou wouldst make an absolute curiouer; and the firm fixture of thy foot would give an excellent motion to thy gait in a semi-circled parting: I see what thou wert, if Fortune thy foe were not, Nature thy friend.
Come, thou must not hide it.

Mrs. Ford. Believe me, there's no such thing in me.
Fal. What made me love thee? let that persuade thee there's something extraordinary in thee.
Come, I cannot cog any other reason this and that, like a number of these hisping laowhters, that come like women in men's apparel, and smell like Bucklersbury in simple time: I cannot, but I love thee;
one but thee; and then deservest it.

Mrs. Ford. Do not betray me, sir. I fear you love Mistress Page.

SCENE III.—A room in Ford's house.

Enter Mistress Ford and Mistress Page.

Mrs. Ford. What, John! What, Robert!
Mrs. Page. Quickly, quickly! Is the buck-basket
Mrs. Ford. I warrant. What, Robin, I say!
ACT III.

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

SCENE III.

Fal. Thou mightst as well say I love to walk by the Counter-gate, which is as hateful to me as the reek of a lime-kiln.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, heaven knows how I love you; and you shall one day find it.

Fal. Keep in that mind; I'll deserve it.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I must tell you, so you do; or else I could not be in that mind.

Fal. She shall not see me: I will ensconce me behind the arras.

Mrs. Ford. Pray you, do so; she's a very tattling woman. [Falstaff hides himself!]

Re-enter Mistress Page and Robin.

What's the matter? how now?

Mrs. Page. O Mistress Ford, what have you done? You're shamed, you're overwhelmed, you're undone for ever!

Mistress Ford. What's the matter, good Mistress Ford? You're a well-a-day, Mistress Ford! having an honest man to your husband, to give him such cause of suspicion!

Mrs. Page. What cause of suspicion?

Mistress Ford. What cause of suspicion! Out upon you! I wish it were true! I wish I had it true!

Mrs. Page. Why, alas, what's the matter?

Mistress Ford. Your husband's coming hither, woman, with all the officers in Windsor, to search for a gentleman that he says is here now in the house by your consent, to take an ill advantage of his absence; and you are undone.

Mrs. Page. Tis not so, I hope.

Mrs. Page. Pray heaven it be not so, that you have such a man here! but 'tis most certain your husband's coming, with half Windsor at his heels, to search for such a one. I come before to tell you. If you know yourself clear, why, I am glad of it; but if you have a friend here, convey, convey him out. Be not amazed; call all your senses to you; defend your reputation, or bid farewell to your good life for ever.

Mistress Ford. What shall I do? There is a gentleman near me, sir; and I fear not mine own shame so much as his peril: I had rather than a thousand pound he were out of the house.

Mrs. Page. For shame! never stand 'you had rather' and 'you had rather:' your husband's here at hand; best think of some conveyance: in the house you cannot hide him. O, how have you deceived me! Look, here is a basket; if he be of any reasonable stature, he may creep in here; and throw foul linen upon him, as if it were going to buckling: or—it is whiting-time—send him by your two men to Dutchet-meal.

Mistress Ford. He's too big to go in there. What shall I do?

Fal. [Coming forward] Let me see 't, let me see 't, O, let me see 't! I'll in, I'll in. Follow your friend's counsel. I'll in.

Mrs. Page. What, Sir John Falstaff! Are these your letters, knight?

Fal. I love thee. Help me away. Let me creep in here. I'll never—[Gets into the basket; they cover him with foul linen.]

Mrs. Page. Help to cover your master, boy. Call you a man, Mistress Ford. You dissembling knight!

Re-enter Servants.

Go take up these clothes here quickly. Where's the clerk-staff? look, how you drumble! Carry them to the laundress in Dutchet-meal; quickly, come.

Enter Ford, Page, Caiaus, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. Pray you, come near; if I suspect without cause, when the matter is over, then let me be your jest; I deserve it. How now! whither bear you Sir Hugh Evans. To the laundress, forsooth. [this?]

Mrs. Ford. Why, what have you to do whether they bear it? You were best meddle with buck-washing.

Ford. Buck! I would I could wash myself of the buck! Buck, buck, buck! Ay, buck! I warrant you buck; and of the season too, it shall appear. [Exeunt Servants with the basket.] Gentlemen, I have dreamed to-night; I'll tell you my dream. Here, here, here be my keys; ascend my chambers; search, seek, find out! I'll warrant we'll unmask the fox. Let me stop this way first. [Locking the door.] So, now uncap.

Page. Good Master Ford, be contented: you wrong yourself too much.

Ford. True, Master Page. Up, gentlemen; you shall see sport anon; follow me, gentlemen. [Exit Page.

Ford. This is very fantastical humour and jealousies. Caiaus. By gar, 'tis no the fashion of France; it is not jealous in France.

Page. Nay, follow him, gentlemen; see the issue of his search. [Exeunt Page, Caiaus, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Is there not a double excellence in this?

Mrs. Ford. I know not which pleases me better, that my husband is deceived, or Sir John.

Mrs. Page. What a taking was he in when your husband asked who was in the basket!

Mrs. Ford. Nay, I am half afraid he will have need of washing; so throwing him into the water will do him a benefit.

Mrs. Page. Hang him, dishonest rascal! I would all of the same strain were in the same distress.

Mrs. Ford. I think my husband hath some special suspicion of Falstaff's being here; for I never saw him so gross in his jealousy till now.

Mrs. Page. I will lay a plot to try that; and we will yet have more tricks with Falstaff: his dissembling disease will scarce obey this medicin.

Mrs. Ford. Shail we send that foolish carrier, Mistress Page, to you, and excuse his throwing into the water; and give him another hope, to betray him to another punishment?

Mrs. Page. We will do it: let him be sent for tomorrow, eight o'clock, to have amends.

Re-enter Ford, Page, Caiaus, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Ford. I cannot find him: may be the knave bragged of that he could not compass.

Ford. Evans, is there be any body in the house, and in the chambers, and in the cellars, and in the presses, herein forgive my sins at the day of judgment! Caiaus. By gar, nor I; there is no bodies.

Page. Fie, fie, Master Ford! are you not ashamed? What spirit, what devil suggests this imagination? I would not ha' your distemper in this kind for the wealth of Windsor Castle.

[Exit. Ford. 'Tis my fault, Master Page: I suffer for Evans. You suffer for a past conclusion: your wife is as honest a 'oman as I will desires among five thousand, and five hundred too.

Caiaus. By gar, I see 't is an honest woman.

Ford. Well, I promised you a dinner. Come, come, walk in the Park: I pray you, pardon me; I that good comfort. She calls you, coz: I'll leave Anne. Now, Master Sleender,— [you.
Sten. Now, good Mistress Anne,—
Anne. What is your will?
Sten. My father's heartlings, that 's a pretty jest indeed! I ne'er made my will yet, I thank heaven;
I am not such a sickly creature. I give heaven praise.
Anne. I mean, Master Sleender, what would you with me.
Sten. Truly, for mine own part. I would little or nothing with you. Your father and my uncle hath made motions; if it be my luck, so: if not, happy man be his dote! They can tell you how things go better than I can: you may ask your father; here he comes.

Enter Page and Mistress Page.

Page. Now, Master Sleender: love him, daughter Anne.
Why, how now! what does Master Fenton here?
You wrong me, sir, thus still to haunt my house:
I told you, sir, my daughter is disposed of.
Fent. Nay, Master Page, be not impatient.
Mrs. Page. Master Fenton, come not to my Page.
She is no match for you. [child.
Fent. Sir, will you hear me?
Page. No, good Master Fenton.
Come, Master Shallow; come, son Sleender, in Knowing my mind, you wrong me, Master Fenton.

[Exeunt Page, Shal., and Sten.

Quick. Speak to Mistress Page.

Fent. Good Mistress Page, for that I love your
In such a righteous fashion as I do, daughter
Perforce, against all checks, rebukes and manners,
I must advance the colours of my love
And not retire: let me have your good will.
Anne. Good mother, do not marry me to your fool,
Mrs. Page. I mean it not; I seek you a better hus-
Quick. That's my master, master doctor. [band.
Anne. Alas, I had rather be set quick in the earth
And bow'd to death with turnips! [ter Fenton,
Mrs. Page. Come, trouble not yourself. Good Mas-
I will not be your friend nor enemy:
My daughter will I question how she loves you,
And as I find her, so am I affected.
Till then farewell, sir: she must needs go in;
Her father will be angry.

Fent. Farewell, gentle mistress: farewell, Nan.
[Exeunt Mrs. Page and Anne.

Quick. This is my doing, now: 'Nay,' said I, 'will you cast away your child on a fool, and a physician
Look on Master Fenton:' this is my doing.
Fent. I thank thee; and I pray thee, once to-night
Give my sweet Nan this ring; there's for thy pains,
Quick. Now heaven send thee good fortune! [Exit Fenton.
A kind heart he hath: a woman would run through fire and water for such a kind heart. But yet I would my master had Mistress Anne; or I would Master Sleender had her: or, in sooth, I would Master Fenton had her: I will do what I can for them all three; for so I have promised, and I'll be as good as my word: but speciously for Master Fenton. Well, I must of another errand to Sir John Falstaff from my two mistresses: what a beast am I to slack it! [Exit.

SCENE V.—A room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, I say,—
Bard. Here, sir.
Fal. Go fetch me a quart of sack: put a toast in't.
[Exit Bardolph.
I have lived to be carried in a basket, like a barrow of butcher's offal, and to be thrown in the Thames? Well, if I be served such another trick, I'll have my brains taken out and butter'd, and give them to a dog for a new-year's gift. The rogues slipted me into the river with as little remorse as they would have drowned a blind bitch's puppies, fifteen of the fitter: and you may know by my size that I have a kind of alacrity in sinking; if the bottom were as deep as hell, I should down. I had been drowined so that the shore was shelvy and shallow—a death that I abhor; for the water swells a man; and what a thing should I have been when I had been drowined! I should have been a mountain of mummy.

_Exit._

_Bardolph_ with sack.

_Bard._ Here's Mistress Quickly, sir, to speak with you.

_Fal._ Come, let me pour in some sack to the Thames water; for my belly's as cold as if I had swallowed snowballs for pills to cool the reins. Call her in.

_Bard._ Call her in, woman!

_Enter Mistress Quickly._

_Quiet._ By your leave;  I cry you mercy: give your worship good morrow.

_Fal._ Take away these chalices. Go brew me a pot of sack truly.

_Bard._ With eggs, sir?

_Quiet._ Simple of itself; I'll no palet-sperm in my brewage. [Exit Bardolph.] How now!

_Quiet._ Marry, sir, I come to your worship from Mistress Ford.

_Fal._ Mistress Ford! I have had ford enough: I was thrown into the ford; I have my belly full of ford.

_Quiet._ Alas the day! good heart, that was not her fault: she does so take on with her men; they mistook their erection. [promise]

_Fal._ So did I mine, to build upon a foolish woman's _Quiet._ Well, she laments, sir, for it, that it would yearn your heart to see it. Her husband goes this morning a-birding; she desires you once more to come to her between eight and nine: I must carry her word quickly: she'll make you amends, I warrant you.

_Fal._ Well, I will visit her: tell her so; and bid her think what a man is: let her consider his frailty, and then judge of my merit.

_Quiet._ I will tell her.

_Fal._ Do so. Between nine and ten, sayest thou?

_Quiet._ Eight and nine, sir.

_Fal._ Well, be gone: I will not miss her.

_Quiet._ Peace be with you, sir. [Exit.]

_Fal._ I marvel I hear not of Master Brook: he sent me word to stay within: I like his money well. O, here he comes.

_Enter Ford._

_Ford._ Bless you, sir!

_Fal._ Now, Master Brook, you come to know what hath passed between me and Ford's wife?

_Ford._ That, indeed, Sir John, is my business.

_Fal._ Master, I will not lie to you: I was at her house the hour she appointed me.

_Ford._ And sped you, sir?

_Fal._ Very ill-favouredly, Master Brook.

_Ford._ How so, sir? Did she change her determination?

_Fal._ No, Master Brook; but the pecking Cornuto her husband, Master Brook, dwelling in a continual pushain of jealousy, comes me in the instant of our encounter, after we had embraced, kissed, protestèd, and, as it were, spoke the prologue of our comedy; and at his hee-las rabble of his companions, thither provoked and instigated by his distemper, and, forsooth, to search his house for his wife's love.

Ford. What, while you were there?

_Fal._ While I was there.

_Ford._ And did he search for you, and could not find you?

_Fal._ You shall hear. As good luck would have it, comes in one Mistress Page; gives intelligence of Ford's approach; and, in her invention and Ford's wife's distraction, they conveyed me into a bucket.

_Ford._ A buck-basket!

_Fal._ By the Lord, a buck-basket! rammed me in with foul souks and stews, socks, foul stockings, greasy napkins; that, Master Brook, there was the rankest compound of villanous smell that ever offended nostril.

_Ford._ And how long lay you there?

_Fal._ Nay, you shall hear, Master Brook, what I have suffered to bring this woman to evil for your good. Being thus crammed in the basket, a couple of Ford's knaves, his hinds, were called forth by their mistress to carry me in the name of foul clothes to Datchet-lane: they took me on their shoulders; met the jealous knave their master in the door, who asked them once or twice what they had in this basket: I quaked for fear, lest the lunatic knife would have searched it: but fate, ordaining he should be a cuckold, held his hand. Well: on went he for a search, and away went I for foul clothes. But mark the sequel, Master Brook: I suffered the proud of these courses of clothes to be delivered; first, an intolerable fright, to be detected with a jealous rotten bell-wether; next, to be compassed, like a good bilbo, in the circumference of a peck, bilt to point, heel to head; and then, to be stopped in, like a strong dissolution, with stinking clothes that fretted in their own grease: think of this;—a man of my kindred, think of that,—that an ass subject to heat as butter; a man of continual dissolution and thaw: it was a miracle to escape suffocation. And in the height of this bath, when I was more than half stewed in grease, like a Dutch dish, to be thrown into the Thames, and cooled, glowing hot, in that surfeit, like a horse-shoe; think of that,—hissing hot,—think of that, Master Brook.

_Ford._ In good sadness, sir, I am sorry that for my sake you have suffered all this. My suit then is desperate; you'll undertake her no more?

_Fal._ Master, I will be thrown into Etna, as I have here will Thames, ere I will leave her thus. Her husband this morning gone a-birding; I have received from her another embassy of meeting; 'twixt eight and nine is the hour, Master Brook.

_Ford._ 'Tis past eight already, sir.

_Fal._ Is it? I will then address me to your appointment. Come to me at your convenient leisure, and you shall know how I speed; and the conclusion shall be crowned with your enjoying her. Adieu. You shall have her, Master Brook; Master Brook, you shall cuckold Ford. [Exit.]

_Ford._ Hum! ha! Is this a vision? Is this a dream? Do I dream? Master Ford! awake! awake! Master Ford! there's a lie made in your best coat, Master Ford. This 'tis to be married! this 'tis to have linen and buck-baskets! Well, I will proclaim myself what I am: I will now take the lecturer; he is 't my house; he cannot 'scape me; 'tis impossible he should; he cannot creep into a halfpenny purse, put into a pepper box: but, lest the devil that guides him should aid him, I will search impossible places. Though what I am I cannot avoid, yet to be what I would not shall not make me tame: if I have horns to make one mad, let the proverb go with me: I 'll be horn-mad. [Exit.]
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—A street.

Enter Mistress Page, Mistress Quickly, and William.

Mrs. Page. Is he at Master Ford’s already, think’st thou?

Quick. Sure he is by this, or will be presently: but, truly, he is very courageous mad about his throwing into the water. Mistress Ford desires you to come suddenly.

Mrs. Page. I will with her by and by: I’ll but bring my young man here to school. Look, where his master comes; ’tis a playing-day, I see.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

How now, Sir Hugh! no school to-day? [to play. Evans. No; Master Slender is let the boys leave Quick. Blessing of his heart! Mrs. Page. Sir Hugh, my husband says my son profits nothing in the world at his book. I pray you, ask him some questions in his accidence. [come. Evans. Come hither, William; hold up your head: Mrs. Page. Come on, sirrah; hold up your head; and, God’s name, let your master be not afraid. Evans. William, how many numbers is in nouns? Will. Two.

Quick. Truly, I thought there had been one number more, because they say, ‘O! ’s nouns.’ Evans. Peace your tattlings! What is ‘fair,’ Will, Polecat? [William? Quick. Polecats! there are fairer things than polecats, sure.

Evans. No, it is ‘lapsis’: I pray you, remember in your prayer.

Will. Lapis.

Evans. That is a good William. What is he, William, that does lead articles? Will. Articles are borrowed of the pronoun, and be thus declined. Singulariter, nominativum, hic, haec, hoc.

Evans. Nominativum, hic, haec, hoc; pray you, mark: genitivum, hius, suas, suae, suae.

Well, what is your accusativum, William? Will. Accusativum, hic.

Mrs. Page. Peace!

Will. Genitivum,—horum, harum, horum. Quick. Vengeance of Jenny’s case! tie on her! never name her, child, if she be a whore. Evans. For shame, ’oman. You’o do ill to teach the child such words: he teaches him to hick and to hauck, which they’o do fast enough of themselves, and to call ‘horum’ tie upon you! Evans. ’Oman, art thou lunatic! hast thou no understandings for thy cases and the numbers of the genders? Thou art as foolish Christian creatures as I would desires.

SCENE II.—A room in Ford’s house.

Enter Falstaff and Mistress Ford.

Fal. Mistress Ford, your sorrow hath eaten up my suffrance. I see you are obscene in your love; and I profess requital to a hair’s breadth; not only, Mistress Ford, in the simple office of love, but in all the accompaniments, complement and ceremony of it. But are you sure of your husband now?

Mrs. Ford. He’s a-birding, sweet Sir John.

Mrs. Ford. Step into the chamber, Sir John. [Exit Falstaff.

Enter Mistress Page.

Mrs. Page. How now, sweetheart! who’s at home besides yourself?

Mrs. Ford. Why, none but mine own people.

Mrs. Page. Indeed!

Mrs. Ford. No, certainly. [Aside to her] Speak louder.

Mrs. Page. Truly, I am so glad you have nobody here.

Mrs. Ford. Why?

Mrs. Page. Why, woman, your husband is in his old tunes again; he so takes on yonder with my husband; so rails against all married mankind: so curses all Eve’s daughters, of what complexion soever; and so buffets himself on the forehead, crying, ‘Peer out, peer out!’ that any madness I ever beheld but tameness, civility and patience, to this his distemper he is in now: I am glad the fat knight is not here.

Mrs. Ford. Why, does he talk of him?

Mrs. Page. Of none but him: and swears he was carried out the last time he searched for him, in a basket; protests to my husband he is now here, and hath drawn him and the rest of their company from their sport, to make another experiment of his suspicion; but I am glad the knight is not here; now he shall see his own fouldery.

Mrs. Ford. How near is he, Mistress Page?

Mrs. Page. Hard by; at street end; he will be here anon.

Mrs. Ford. I am undone! The knight is here.

Mrs. Page. Why then you are utterly shamed, and he’s but a dead man. What a woman are you! —Away with him, away with him! better shame than murder.

Mrs. Ford. Which way should he go? how should I bestow him? Shall I put him into the basket again?

Re-enter Falstaff.

Fal. No, I’ll come no more i’ the basket. May I not go out ere he come?

Mrs. Page. Alas, three of Master Ford’s brothers watch the door with pistols, that none shall issue 10:31

Mrs. Ford. He will seek there, on my word. Neither press, coffee, chest, trunk, web, vault, but he hath an abstract for the remembrance of such places, and goes to them by his note: there is no hiding you in the house.

Ford. Where is it?

Mrs. Ford. If you go out in your own semblance, you die, Sir John. Unless you go out disguised —

Mrs. Page. How might we disguise him?

Mrs. Ford. Alas the day, I know not! There is no woman’s gown big enough for him; otherwise he might put on a hat, a muffler and a kerchief, and so escape.

Ford. So this is he?

Mrs. Page. Set somebody hold let Falstaff.

Mrs. Ford. Why, this is lunaticks! this is mad as a mad dog!

Shal. Indeed, Master Ford, this is not well, indeed. Ford. So say I too, sir.

Re-enter Mistress Ford.

Come hither, Mistress Ford; Mistress Ford, the honest woman, the modest wife, the virtuous creature, that hath the jealous foot to her husband! I suspect without cause, mistress, do I?

Mrs. Ford. Heaven forbid you witness do, if you suspect me in any dishonesty.

Ford. Well said, brazen-face! hold it out. Come forth, sirrah. Pulling clothes out of the basket.

Page. This passes!

Ford. Would you take up your wife’s clothes? Come away.

Ford. Empty the basket, I say!

Mrs. Ford. Why, man, why?

Ford. Master Page, as I am a man, there was some conveyed out of my house yesterday in this basket: why may not he be there again? In my house I am sure he is: my intelligence is true: my jealousy is reasonable. Pull me out all the linen.

Mrs. Ford. If you find a man there, he shall die a man’s death.

Ford. By my faith, this is not well, Master Ford; this wrongs you.

Eevens. Master Ford, you must pray, and not follow the imaginations of your own heart: this is —

Ford. Well, he’s not here I seek for. [Jealousies.]

Page. Ford. Help to search my house this one time. If I find not what I seek, show no colour for my extremity; let me for ever be your table-sport; let them say of me, ‘As jealous as Ford, that searched a hollow walnut for his wife’s leman.’ Satisfy me once more; once more search with me.

Ford. What, he, Mistress Page! come you and the old woman down; my husband will come into the chamber.

Ford. Old woman! what old woman’s that?

Mrs. Ford. Why, it is my maid’s aunt of Brentford.

Ford. A witch, a queen, an old cozening queen! Have I not forbid her my house? She comes of errands, does she? We are simple men; we do not know what’s brought to pass under the profession of fortune-telling. She works by charms, by spells, by the figure, and such daintyy as this, is beyond our element: we know nothing. Come down, you whoreson, you; come down, I say!

Mrs. Ford. Nay, good, sweet husband! Good gentlemen, let him not strike the old woman.

Ford. Ay, but if it prove true, Master Page, have you any way then to unfool me again? Set down the basket, villain! Somebody call my wife, Youth in a basket! O you panderer rascals! there’s a knot, a breach, a conspiracy against me: now shall the devil be shamed. What, wife, I say! Come, come forth! Behold what honest clothes you send forth to bleeding!
cry out thus upon no trail, never trust me when I open again.

Page. Let’s obey his humour a little further: come, gentlemen.

[Exeunt Ford, Page, Shal., Caius, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Trust me, he beat him most pitifully.

Mrs. Ford. Nay, by the mass, that he did not; he beat him most unpitifully, methought.

Mrs. Page. I have the cudgel bawled and hung over the altar: it hath done meritorious service.

Mrs. Ford. What think you? may we, with the warrant of womanhood and the witness of a good conscience, pursue him with any further revenge?

Mrs. Page. The spirit of wantonness is, sure, scoured out of him: if the devil have him not in too simple, with fine and recovery, he will never, I think, in the way of waste, attempt us again.

Mrs. Ford. Shall we tell our husbands how we have served him?

Mrs. Page. Yes, by all means; if it be but to scrape the figures out of your husband’s brains. If they can find in their hearts the poor unvirtuous fat knight shall be any further afflicated, we two will still be the ministers.

Mrs. Ford. I’ll warrant they’ll have him publicly shamed; and methinks there would be no period to the jest, should he not be publicly shamed.

Page. Come, to the forge with it then; shape it: I would not have things cool.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Bardolph.

Ford. Sir, the Germans desire to have three of your horses: the duke himself will be to-morrow at court, and they are going to meet him.

Host. What duke should that be comes so secretly? I bear not him in the court. Let me speak with the gentlemen: they speak English?

Ford. Ay, sir: I’ll call them to you.

Host. They shall have my horses; but I’ll make them pay; I’ll save them: they have had my house a week at command; I have turned away my other guests: they must come off; I’ll save them. Come.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—A room in Ford’s house.

Enter Page, Ford, Mistress Page, Mistress Ford, and Sir Hugh Evans.

Evans. ’Tis one of the best discretions of a woman as ever I did look upon.

Page. And did he send you both these letters at an instant?

Mrs. Page. Within a quarter of an hour. [wilt: Ford. Pawn me, wife. Henceforth do what then I rather will suspect the sun with cold [stand, Thus they with wantonness: now do they thy honour in him that was of late an heretic, As firm as faith.

Page. ’Tis well, ’tis well; no more: Be not as extreme in submission As in offence.

But let our plot go forward: let our wives Yet once again, to make us public sport, Appoint a meeting with this old fat fellow, Where we may take him and disgrace him for it.

Ford. There is no better way than that they spoke of.

Page. How? to send him word they’ll meet him in the park at midnight? Fie, fie, he’ll never come. Evans. You say he has been thrown in the rivers and has been grievously peat as an old ‘oman; me-thinks there should be terrors in him that he should not come; methinks his flesh is punished, he shall have no desires.

Page. So think I too.

Mrs. Ford. Devise but how you’ll use him when he comes, And let us two devise to bring him thither.

Mrs. Page. There is an old tale goes that Herne the hunter,

Sometime a keeper here in Windsor forest,

Doth all the winter-time, at still midnight,

Walk round about an oak, with great tang’d horns; And there he blasts the tree and takes the cattle,

And makes milch-kine yield blood and shames a chain

In a most hideous and dreadful manner;

You have heard of such a spirit, and well you know The superstitious tule-headed eld

Received and did deliver to our age

This tale of Herne the hunter for a truth.

Page. Why, yet there want not many that do fear In deep of night to walk by this Herne’s oak: But what of this?

Mrs. Ford. Marry, this is our device; That Falstaff at that oak shall meet with us.

Page. Well, let it not be doubted but he’ll come: And in this shape when you have brought him thither, What shall be done with him? what is your plot?

Mrs. Page. That likewise we have thought upon, And thus:

Nan Page, a daughter and my little son And three or four more of their growth we’ll dress Like urchins, urchins and fairies, green and white, With rounds of waxen tapers on their heads, And rattles in their hands: upon a sudden, As Falstaff, she and I, are newly met, Let them from forth a sawpit rush at once With some diffused song: upon their sight, We two in great amazement will fly: Then let them all encircle him about And, fairy-like, to-pinch the unclean knight, And ask him why, that hour of fairy revel, In their so sacred paths he dares to tread In shape profane.

Mrs. Ford. And till he tell the truth, Let the supposed fairies pinch him sound And burn him with their tapers.

Mrs. Page. The truth being known, We’ll all present ourselves, dis-born the spirit, And shock him home to Windsor good will.

Ford. The children must Be practised well to this, or they’ll ne’er do. Evans. I will teach the children their behaviours; and I will be like a jack-an-apes also, to burn the knight with my taber.

Ford. They shall be excellent. I’ll go and buy them.

Mrs. Page. My Nan shall be the queen of all the fairies, Finely attired in a robe of white.

Ford. Nay, I’ll to him again in name of Brook: He’ll tell me all his purpose: sure, he’ll come.

Mrs. Page. Fear not you that. Go use us properties And tricking for our fairies.

Evans. Let me about it: it is admirable pleasures and very honest knaveries.

[Exeunt Page, Ford, and Evans.

Mrs. Page. Go, Mistress Ford, Send quickly to Sir John, to know his mind.

[Exit Mrs. Ford.

I’ll to the doctor: he hath my good will. And none but he, to marry with Nan Page. That Slender, though well landed, is an idiot; And he my husband best of all affects. The doctor is well men’dy’d, and his friends Potent at court; he, none but he, shall have her. Though twenty thousand worther come to crave her.

[Exit.
SCENE V.—A room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Host and Simple.

Host. What wouldst thou have, ho? what, thick-skinned talk, breathe, discuss; brief, short, quick, snap.

Sim. Marry, sir. I come to speak with Sir John Falstaff from Master Slenor.

Host. There’s his chamber, his house, his castle, his standing bed and truckle-bed; ’tis painted about with the story of the Prodigal, fresh and new. Go knock and call; he’ll speak like an Anthropophilus unto thee: knock, I say.

Sim. I would to heaven a fat woman, gone up into his chamber: I’ll be so bold as stay, sir, till she come down; I come to speak with her, indeed.

Host. Ha! a fat woman! the knight may be robbed; I’ll call. Bully knight! bully Sir John! speak from thy lungs military: art thou there? Is it thine host, thine Ephesian, calls.

Sim. [Aside] How now, mine host!

Host. Here’s a Bohemian-Tartar terries the coming down of thy fat woman. Let her descend, bully; let her descend; my chambers are honorable: lie? lie!—Enter Falstaff.

Sim. There was mine host, an old fat woman even now with me; but she’s gone. [Brentford?]

Sim. Pray you, sir, was’t not the wise woman of Fal. Ay, marry, was it, muscel-shell: what would you with her?

Sim. My master, sir, Master Slenor, sent to her saying, her go through the streets, to know, sir, whether one Nym, sir, that beguiled him of a chain, had the chain or no.

Sim. I spake with the old woman about it.

Sim. And what says she, I pray, sir?

Sim. Marry, she says that the very same man that beguiled Master Slenor of his chain cozened him of it.

Sim. I would I could have spoken with the woman herself; I had other things to have spoken with her too from him.

Sim. What are they? let us know.

Host. Ay, come, quick.

Sim. I may not conceal them, sir.

Host. Conceal them, or thou diest.

Sim. Why, sir, they were nothing but about Mistress Anne Page; to know if it were my master’s fortune to have her or no.

Sim. “Tis, ’tis, a fault of his fortune.

Sim. What, sir?

Sim. To have her, or no. Go; say the woman told me so.

Sim. May I be bold to say so, sir?

Sim. Ay, sir; like who more bold.

Host. Thou, sensible host, must make my master glad with these tidings. [Exit.

Host. Thou art clerkly, thou art clerkly, Sir John. Was there a wise woman with thee?

Sim. Ay, that there was, mine host; one that hath taught me more wit than ever I learned before in my life; and I paid nothing for it neither, but was paid for my learning.

Enter Bardolph.

Bard. Out, alas! sir! cozenage, mere cozenage! Host. Where be my horses? speak well of them, who they are.

Bard. Run away with the cozeners; for so soon as I came beyond Eton, they threw me off from behind one of them, in a slough of mire; and set spurs and away, like three German devils, three Doctor Faustuses.

Host. They are gone but to meet the duke, villain: do not say they be fled; Germans are honest men.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans.

Evans. Where is mine host?

Host. What is the matter, sir?

Evans. Have a care of your entertainments: there is a friend of mine come to town, tells me there is three cozen-germans that has cozened all the hostes of Reading, of Maidenhead, of Coggeshall, of horses and money. I tell you for good will, look you; you are wise and full of gibes and slandering-stocks, and ’tis not convenient you should be cozened. Fare you well.

[Exit.

Enter Doctor Caius.

Caius. Veris mine host de Jarteer?

Host. Here, master doctor, in perplexity and doubtful dilemma.

Caius. I cannot tell vat is dat: but it is tell-a-me dat you make grand preparation for a duke de Jananny: by my 1rot, dere is no duke dat the court is know to come. I tell you for good vill: adieu.

[Exit.

Host. Hue and cry, villain, go! Assist me, knight. I am undone! Fly, run, hue and cry, villain! I am undone! [Exit Host and Bard. Fol. I would I could the world might be cozened: for I have been cozened and beaten too. If it should come to the ear of the court, how I have been transformed and how my transformation hath been washed and cudgelled, they would melt me out of my fat drop by drop and liquor fishermen’s boots with me: I warrant they would whip me with their fine wits till I were as crest-fallen as a dried pear. I never prospered since I foresware myself at prime-ro. Well, if my way were but long enough to say my prayers, I would repent.

Enter Mistress Quickly.

Now, whence come you?

Quick. From the two parties, forsooth.

Sim. The devil take one party and his dam the other! and so they shall be both bestowed. I have suffered more for their sakes, more than the villainous inconstancy of man’s disposition is able to bear.

Host. Quick. And have not they suffered? Yes, I warrant; speciously one of them; Mistress Ford, good heart, is beaten black and blue, that you cannot see a white spot about her.

Sim. What tellest thou me of black and blue? I was beaten myself into all the colours of the rainbow; and I was like to be apprehended for the witch of Brentford: but that my admirable dexterity of wit, my counterfeiting the action of an old woman, delivered me, the knave constant had set me the stocks, the common stocks, for a witch.

Quick. Sir, let me speak with you in your chamber; you shall hear how things go; and I, I warrant, to your content. Here is a letter will say somewhat. Good hearts, what ado here is to bring you together! Sure, one of you does not serve heaven well, that you are so crossed.

Sim. Come up into my chamber.

[Exit.

SCENE VI.—Another room in the Garter Inn.

Enter Fenton and Host.

Host. Master Fenton, talk not to me; my mind is heavy; I will give over all.

Fent. As you please, sir. I will assist me in my purpose.

Host. Assist me in my purpose, and as an honest gentleman, I’ll give thee a hundred pound in gold more than thy loss.

Host. I will hear you, Master Fenton; and I will at the least keep your counsel.

Fent. From time to time I have acquainted you with these letters from Tho. Page: Who mutually hath answer’d my affection, So far forth as herself might be her choosers,
ACT V.

THE MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR. SCENE V.

Even to my wish: I have a letter from her Of such contents as you will wonder at: The mirth whereof so larded with my matter, That neither singly can be manifested, Without the show of both; fat Falstaff Hath a great scene; the image of the jest I’ll show you here at last. Her good mine host. To-night at Herne’s oak, just ‘twixt twelve and one. Must my sweet Nan present the Fairy Queen? The purpose why, is here: in which disguise, While other jests are something rank on foot, Her father hath commanded her to slip Away with Slender and with him at Elton. Immediately to marry: she hath consented: Now, sir, Her mother, ever strong against that match And firm for Doctor Caius, hath appointed That she shall likewise shuffle her away, While other sports are taking of their minds, And at the deanery, where a priest attends, Straight marry her: to this her mother’s plot She seemingly obedient likewise hath Made promise to the doctor. Now, thus it rests: Her father means she shall be all in white, And in that habit, when Slender sees his time To take her by the hand and bid her go, She shall go with him: her mother hath intended, To the better denote to her the doctor, For they must all be masked and go armed. That quaint in green she shall be loose curdled, With ribands pendant, flattering about her head; And when the doctor spies his vantage ripe, To pinch her by the hand, and, on that token, The maid hath given consent to go with him. Host. Which means she to deceive, father or mother? Ford. Both. But she is one. And here it rests, that you’ll procure the vicar To stay for me at church ‘twixt twelve and one, And, in the lawful name of marrying, To give our hearts united ceremony. Host. Well, husband your device; I’ll to the vicar: Bring you the maid, you shall not lack a priest. Ford. So shall I evermore be bound to thee; Besides, I’ll make a present recompense. [Exit.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A room in the Garter Inn. Enter Falstaff and Mistress Quickly. Ford. Prithee, no more prattling; go. I’ll hold, This is the third time: I hope good luck lies in odd numbers. Away! go. They say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Away! Quickly. I’ll provide you a chain; and I’ll do what I can to get you a pair of horns. Ford. Away. I say; time wears: hold up your head, and minece. [Exit Mrs. Quickly.]

Enter Ford. How now, Master Brook! Master Brook, the matter Will be known to-night, or never. Be you in the Park about midnight, at Herne’s oak, and you shall see wonders. Ford. Went you not to her yesterday, sir, as you told me you had appointed? Ford. I went to her. Master Brook, as you see, like a poor old man: but I came from her, Master Brook, like a very old woman. That same knave Ford, her husband, hath the finest mad devil of jealousy in him. Master Brook, that ever governed treeny. I will tell you: he beat me grievously, in the shape of a woman; for in the shape of man, Master Brook, I fear not Goliah with a weaver’s beam; because I know the strife itself is a snore. I am in haste: go along with me: I’ll tell you, Master Brook. Since I plucked geese, played truant and whipped top, I knew not what ‘t was to be beaten till lately. Folow me: I’ll tell you strange things of this knave Ford, on whom to-night I will be revenged, and I will deliver her wife into your hands. Follow. Strange things in hand, Master Brook! Follow. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—Windsor Park. Enter Page, Shallow, and Slender. Page. Come, come; we’ll concoch the castle-ditch till we see the light of our fairies. Remember, son Slender, my daughter. Shallow. Ay, forsooth; I have spoke with her and we have a may-word how to know one another; I come to her white, and very ‘mum!’ she cries ‘budget!’ and by that we know one another. Skulld. That’s good too: but what needs either your ‘mum’ or her ‘budget’? the white will decipher her well enough. It hath struck ten o’clock. Page. The night is dark: light and spirits will become it well. Heaven prosper our sport! No man means evil but the devil, and we shall know him by his horns. Let’s away; follow me. [Exit.]

SCENE III.—A street leading to the Park. Enter Mistress Page, Mistress Ford, and Doctor Caius. Mrs. Page. Master doctor, my daughter in green: when you see your time, take her by the hand, and away with her to the deanery; and dispatch it quickly. Go before into the Park: we two must go together. Caius. I know vat I have to do. Adieu. Mrs. Page. Fare you well, sir. [Exit Caius.] My husband will not rejoice so much at the abuse of Falstaff as he will chafe at the doctor’s marrying my daughter: but ’tis no matter: better a little chiding than a great deal of heart-break. Mrs. Ford. Where is Nan now and her troop of fairies, and the Welsh devil Huglia? Mrs. Page. They are all concealed in a pit hard by Herne’s oak, with obscured lights: which, at the very instant of Falstaff’s and our meeting, they will, at once dispaly to the night. Mrs. Ford. That cannot choose but amaze him. Mrs. Page. If he be not amazed, he will be mocked; if he be amazed, he will every way be mocked. Mrs. Ford. We’ll betray him finely. [cry Mrs. Page. Against such lewdsters and their leeches; Those that betray them do no treacheries. Mrs. Ford. The hour draws on. To the oak, to the oak! [Exit.]

SCENE IV.—Windsor Park. Enter Sir Hugh Evans disguised, with others as Faires. Evans. Trib. trib. fairies: come; and remember your parts: be bold, I pray you; follow me into the pit: and when I give the watch-ords, do as I bid you: come, come; trib. trib. [Exit.]

SCENE V.—Another part of the Park. Enter Falstaff disguised as Herne. Ford. The Windsor bell hath struck twelve: the minute draws on. Now, the hot-blooded goddass me. Remember, Jove, thou wast a bull for thy Europa; love set on thy horns. O powerful love! that, in some respects, makes a beast a man, in some other, a man a beast. You were also, Jupiter, a swan for the love of Leda. O omnipotent Love! how near the god drew to the complexion of a goose! A fault done first in the form of a beast. O Jove, a beastly fault! And then another fault in the semblance of a fowl; think on’t, Jove; a foul fault! When gods have hot backs, what shall poor men do? For me, I am here a Windsor stag; and the fattest, I think, of the forest. Send me a cool rut-time, Jove, or who can blaming blame to miss my tail? Who comes here? my doe?

Enter Mistress Ford and Mistress Page.

Mrs. Ford. Sir John! art thou there, my dear? my male deer?

Ford. My doe with the black sent! Let the sky rain potatoes; let it thunder to the time of Green Sleeves, half kissing-comfits and snow eringoes; let there come a tempest of provocation, I will shelter me here. [heart]

*Mrs. Ford. Mistress Page is come with me, sweet- Ford. Divide me like a bribe brick, each a branch: I will keep myself to myself, my shoulders to the fellow of this walk, and my horns I bequeath your husbands. Am I a woodman, ha? Speak I like Herne the hunter? Why, now is Cupid a child of conscience; he makes restitution. As I am a true spirit, welcome.

Mrs. Page. Alas, what noise?

*Mrs. Ford. Haven forgive our sins!

Ford. What should this be?

*Mrs. Ford. Away, away! [They run off.]

Ford. I think the devil will not have me damned, least he there’s in me should set hell on fire; he would never else cross me thus.

Enter Sir Hugh Evans, disguised as before:

*Evans. Sweet Master, and the owner it. Quick. Fairies, black, grey, green, and white. You moonshine revelers, and shades of night. You orphan heirs of fixed destiny. Attend your office and your quality. Crier Holgobain, make the fairy eyes. Pist. Elves, list your names; silence, you airy toys. Cricket, to Windsor chimney’s shall thou leap: Wherefort hedges unmarked and worlds unmar- There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry; swept, Our radiant queen laces slats and slutted. [thud.]

Ford. They are fairies; he that speaks to them shall I ’ll wink and cough; no man their works must eat.

Lies down upon his face.

Evans. Where’s Bede? Go you, and where you find a maid That, ere she sleeps, has thrice her prayers said, Raise up the organs of her fancy; Sleep she as sound as careless infancy; But those as sleep and think not on their sins, Pinch them, arms, legs, bucks, shoulders, sides and Quick. About, about; [shims. Search Windsor Castle, elves, within and out: Strew good luck, ophues, on every sacred room: That it may stand till the perpetual doom, In state as wholesome as in state’s it is, Worthy the owner, and swell his gain. The several chairs of order look you scorn With juice of balm and every precious flower; Each fair instamant, coat, and several crest, With loyal blazon, evermore be blust! And nightly, meadow-fairies, look you sing, Like tomb haunts find companionship. The expression that it bears, green let it be, More fertile-fresh than all the field to see;

And 'Honi soit qui mal y pense' write In emerald tufts, flowers purple, blue, and white; Like sapphire, pearl and rich embroidery, Buckled below fair knighthood’s bending knee: Fairies use flowers for their charactery. Away; disperse: but till ‘tis one o’clock, Let our dance of custom round about the oak Of Herne the hunter, let us not forget.

Evans. Pray you, lock hand in hand; yourselves in order set; And twenty glow-worms shall our lanterns be, To guide our measure round about the tree. But, stay; I smell a man of middle-earth.

Ford. Hark! there’s a defender come from that Welsh fairy, lest he transform me to a piece of cheese! [birth.]

*Pist. Vile worm, thou wast o’erlook’d even in thy Quick. With trial-fire touch me his finger-end: If he be chaste, the flame will back descend And turn him to no pain; but if he start, It is the flesh of a corrupted heart.

*Pist. A trial, come.

Evans. Come, will this wood take fire? [They burn him with their taperes.]

Ford. Oh, Oh, Oh!

Quick. Corrupt, corrupt, and tainted in desire! About him, fairies: sing a scornful rhyme: And, as you trip, still pinch him to your time.

SONG.

Flie on sinful fantasy!

Flie on lust and luxury! Last is but a bloody fire. Kindled with unchei desire, Fed in heart, whose fames aspire As thoughts to blow them, higher and higher. Pinch him, fairies, mutually; Pinch him for his villany: Pinch him, and burn him, and turn him about, Till cannelies and starlight and moonshine be out.

*During this song they pinch Falstaff. Doctor Calus comes one way, and steals away a boy in green; Sender another way, and takes off a boy in white; and Ventoun comes, and steals away Mrs. Anne Page. A noise of hunting is heard within. All the Fairies run away. Falstaff pulls off his buck’s head, and ries.

Enter Page, Ford, Mistress Page and Mistress Ford.

*Page. Nay, do not fly; I think we have watch’d you now: Will none but Herne the hunter serve your turn?

Mrs. Page. I pray you, come, hold up the jest no higher. Now, good Sir John, how like you Windsor wives? See you these, husband? do not these fair yokes Become the forest better than the town?

Ford. You never, who’s a cuckold now? Master Brook, Falstaff’s a knave, a cuckoldly knave; here are his horns, Master Brook; and, Master Brook, he hath enjoyed nothing of Ford’s but his buck-lasket, his cudgel, and twenty pounds of money, which must be paid to Master Brook; his horses are arrested for it, Master Brook.

*Mrs. Ford. Sir John, we have had ill luck; we could never meet. I will never take you for my love again: but I will always count you my deer.

Ford. I do begin to perceive that I am made an ass.

Ford. Ay, and an ox too; both the proofs are extant.

Ford. And these are not fairies? I was three or four times in the thought they were not fairies: and yet the guiltiness of my mind, the sudden surprise of my powers, drove the grossness of the folly into a received belief, in despite of the teeth of all rhyme and reason, that they were fairies. See now how ’tis may be made a Jack-a-Lent, wench, ’tis upon ill employment!
Eros. Sir John Falstaff, serve Got, and leave your desires, and fairies will not please you.

Ford. Well said, Father Hugh.

Eros. And leave your jealousies too, I pray you.

Ford. I will never mistrust my wife again, till thou art able to woo her in good English.

Ford. Have I laid my brain in the sun and dried it, that it wants matter to prevent so gross an erroneous as this? Am I rid with a Welsh goat too? shall I have a coxcomb of frize? 'Tis time I was chcoked with a piece of toasted cheese.

Eros. Sese is not good to give puffer; your belly is all puffer.

Ford. 'Sese' and 'puffer'! have I lived to stand at the tantlr of one that makes triflers of English? This is enough to be the decay of lust and late-walking through the realm.

Mrs. Page. Why, Sir John, do you think, though we would have thrust virtue out of our hearts by the head and shoulders and have given ourselves without scruple to hell, that ever the devil could have made you our delight?

Ford. What, a Hedge-pudding? a bag of flax?

Mrs. Page. A puffed man?

Ford. Old, cold, withered and of intolerable entails!

Ford. And one that is as slanderous as Satan?

Page. And as poor as Job?

Ford. And as wicked as his wife?

Eros. And given to fornications, and to taverns and sack and wine and methuselahs, and to drinkings and swarings and starings, pribbles and prabbles?

Ford. Well, I am your theme: you have the start of me; I am dejected; I am not able to answer the Welsh flannel; ignorance itself is a plume of o'er me; use me as you will.

Ford. Marry, sir, we'll bring you to Windsor, to one Master Brook, that you have cozened of money, to whom you should have been a pander: over and above that you have suffered, I think to repay that money will be a biting affliction.

Page. Yet be cheerful, knight: thou shalt eat a posset to-night at my house; where I will desire thee to laugh at my wife, that now laughs at thee: tell her Master Slender hath married her daughter.

Mrs. Page. [Aside] Doctors doth that: if Anne Page be my daughter, she is, by this, Doctor Caius' wife.

Enter Slender.

Slen. Whan, ho! ho, father Page?

Page. Son, how now! how now, son! have you dispatched?

Slen. Dispatched! I'll make the best in Gloucestershire know 't; would I were hanged, ha, else!

Page. Of what, son?

Slen. I came yonder at Eton to marry Mistress Anne Page, and she's a great lubberly boy. If it had not been I the church, I would have swung him, or he should have swung me. If I did not think it had been Anne Page, would I might never stir;—and 'tis a postmaster's boy.

Page. Upon my life, then, you took the wrong.

Slen. What need you tell me that? I think so, when I took a boy for a girl. If I had been married to him, for all he was in woman's apparel, I would not have had him.

Page. Why, this is your own folly. Did not I tell you how you should know my daughter by her garments?

Slen. I went to her in white, and cried 'mum,' and she cried 'bedger,' as Anne and I had appointed; and yet it was not Anne, but a postmaster's boy.

Mrs. Page. Good George, be not angry: I knew of your purpose; turned my daughter into green; and, indeed, she is now with the doctor at the deancy, and there married.

Enter Caius.

Caius. Vere is Mistress Page? By gar, I am cozened: I ha' married an garcon, a boy; un paysan, by gar, a boy; it is not Anne Page: by gar, I am cozened.

Mrs. Page. Why, did you take her in green?

Caius. Ay, by gar, and 'tis a boy: by gar, I'll raise all Windsor.

[Exit.

Ford. This is strange. Who hath got the right Anne?

Page. My heart misgives me: here comes Master Fenton.

Enter Fenton and Anne Page.

How now, Master Fenton! [Pardon]

Anne. Pardon, good father! good my mother.

Page. Now, mistress, how chance you went not with Master Slender?

Mrs. Page. Why went you not with master doctor, maid?

Ford. You do amaze her: hear the truth of it.

Page. You would have married her most shamefully, Where there was no proportion held in love.

Mrs. Page. The truth is, she and I, long since contracted.

Ford. Sir, the offence is holy that she hath committed; And this deceit loses the name of craft.

Page. If disobedience, or undutious title, Since therein she doth evitate and shun.

Anne. A thousand irreverent cursed hours, [Her.

Page. Stand not amazed: here is no remedy: In love the heavens themselves do guide the state; Money buys lands, and wives are sold by fate.

Ford. I am glad, though you have ta'en a special stand to strike at me, that your arrow hath glanced.

Page. Well, what remedy? Fenton, heaven give thee joy!

What cannot be eschewed must be embraced.

Ford. When night-dogs run, all sorts of deer are chased.

[Enter.

Mrs. Page. Well, I will muse no further: Master Heaven give you many, many merry days! Good husband, let us every one go home;

Page. And laugh this sport o'er by a country fire: Sir John and all.

Ford. Let it be so. Sir John,

To Master Brook you yet shall hold your word;

For he to-night shall lie with Mistress Ford.

[Exit.

DRAMATIS PERSONAE.

Vincentio, the Duke.
Angelo, Deputy.
Esclus, an ancient Lord.
Claudio, a young gentleman.
Lucio, a fantastic.
Two other gentlemen.
Provost.
Thomas, two friars.
PETER, A Justice.
VARRIUS.
Elbow, a simple constable.

Froth, a foolish gentleman.
Pompey, servant to Mistress Overdone.
Abhorson, an executioner.
Barnardine, a dissolute prisoner.
Isabella, sister to Claudio.
Mariana, betrothed to Angelo.
Juliet, beloved of Claudio.
Francisca, a nun.
Mistress Overdone, a bawd.
Lords, Officers, Citizens, Boy, and Attendants.

SCENE.—Vienna.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—An apartment in the Duke's palace.

Enter Duke, Esclus, Lords and Attendants.

Esclus. My lord.

Duke. Of government the properties to unfold,
Would seem in me to affect speech and discourse;
Since I am put to know that your own science
Exceeds, in that, the lists of all advice
My strength can give you; then no more remains,
But that to your sufficiency . . . .

. . . . . . . . . as your worth is able,
And let them work. The nature of our people,
Our city's institutions, and the terms
For common justice, you're as pregnant in
As art and practice hath enriched any
That we remember. There is our commission,
From which we would not have you warp. Call
I say, bid come before us Angelo. [Enter

What figure of us think you he will bear?
For you must know, we have with special soul
Erected him our access to supply.
Lent him our terror, dress'd him with our love,
And given his deputation all the organs
Of our own power: what think you of it?

Esclus. If any in Vienna be of worth
To undergo such ample grace and honour,
It is Lord Angelo.

Duke. Look where he comes.

Enter Angelo.

Ang. Always obedient to your grace's will,
I come to know your pleasure.

Duke. Angelo,

There is a kind of character in thy life,
That to the observer doth thy history
Fully unfold. Thyself and thy belongings
Are not thine own so proper as to waste
Thyself upon thy virtues, they on thee.
Heaven doth with us as we with torches do,
Not light them for themselves: for if our virtues
Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike
As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely touch'd
But to fine issues, nor nature never lends

The smallest sample of her excellence
But, like a thirsty goddess, she determines
Herself the glory of a created
Both thanks and use. But I do bend my speech
To one that can my part in him advertise;
Hold therefore, Angelo:—

In our remove be thou at full onself;
Mortality and mercy in Vienna
Live in thy tongue and heart; old Esclus,
Though first in question, is thy secondary.
Take thy commission.

Ang. Now, good my lord,
Let there be some more test made of my metal,
Before so noble and so great a figure
Be stamp'd upon it.

Duke. No more evasion:
We have with a leaven'd and prepared choice
Proceeded to you; therefore take your honours.
Our haste from hence is of so quick condition
That it prefers itself and leaves unquest'd
Matters of needful value. We shall write to you,
As time and our concerns shall importune,
How it goes with us, and do look to know
What doth befall you here. So, fare you well:
To the hopeful execution do I leave you
Of your commissions.

Ang. Yet give leave, my lord,
That we may bring you something on the way.

Duke. My haste may not admit it;
Nor need you, on mine honour, have to do
With any scrape; your scope is as mine own,
So to enforce or qualify the laws
As to your soul seems good. Give me your hand:
I'll privately away. I love the people,
But do not like to stage me to their eyes:
Though it do well, I do not relish well
Their loud applause and Ayes vehement;
Nor do I think the man of safe discretion
That does affect it. Once more, fare you well.

Ang. The heavens give safety to your purposes!

Esclus. Lead forth and bring you luck in happiness!

Duke. I thank you. Fare you well. [Exit.

Esclus. I shall desire you, sir, to give me leave
To have free speech with you: and it concerns me
To look into the bottom of my place:
A power I have, but of what strength and nature I am not yet instructed. Ay. 'Tis so with me. Let us withdraw together, and we may soon our satisfaction have Touching this matter. Escal. I'll wait upon your honour. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A street.

Enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. If the duke with the other dukes come not to composition with the King of Hungary, why then all the dukes fall upon the king.

First Gent. Heaven grant us its peace, but not the King of Hungary's!

Sec. Gent. Amen.

Lucio. Nor doth conclude like the sanctimonious pirate, that went with to sea with the Ten Commandments, but scraped one out of the table.

Sec. Gent. 'Shall not steal'?

Lucio. Ay, that he razed.

First Gent. Why, 'tis a commandment to commit the Captain and all the rest from their functions: they put forth to steal. There's not a soldier of us all, that, in the thanksgiving before meat, doth perform the petition well that prays for peace.

Sec. Gent. I never heard any soldier dislike it.

Lucio. I believe thee; for I think thou never wast where grace was said.

Sec. Gent. No? a dozen times at least.

First Gent. What, in metre?

Lucio. In any proportion or in any language.

First Gent. I think, or in any religion.

Lucio. Ay, why not? Grace is grace, despite of all controversy: as, for example, thou thyself art a wicked villain, despite of all grace.

First Gent. Well, there went a pair of shears between us.

Lucio. I grant: as there may between the lists and the violet. Thou art the list.

First Gent. And thou the violet: thou art good velvet; thou art a three-piled piece; I warrant thee: I had as lief be a list of an English kersey as be piled, as thou art piled, for a French velvet. Do I speak feelingly now?

Lucio. I think thou dost; and, indeed, with most painful feeling of thy speech: I will, out of thine own, or that I begin thy health; but, whilst I live, forget to drink after thee. [Exeunt.]

First Gent. I think I have done myself wrong, have Sec. Gent. Yes, that thou hast, whether thou art tainted or free.

Lucio. Behold, behold, where Madam Mitigation comes! I have purchased as many diseases under her roof as come to—

Sec. Gent. To what, I pray?

Lucio. Judge.

Sec. Gent. To three thousand colours a year.

First Gent. Ay, and more.

Lucio. A French crown more.

First Gent. Thou art always figuring diseases in me; but thou art full of error; I am sound.

Lucio. Nay, not as one would say, healthy; but so sound as things that are hollow: thy bones are hollow; impety has made a feast of thee.

Enter Mistress Overdone.

First Gent. How now! which of your hips has the most profound sciatica?

Mrs. Or. Well, well; there's one youder arrested and carried to prison was worth live thousand of you. Sec. Gent. As I pray thee? [fall.] Mrs. Or. Marry, sir, that's Claudio, Signior Clun. First Gent. Claudio to prison? 'tis not so. [dio.] Mrs. Or. Nay, but I know 'tis so: I saw him arrested, saw him carried away; and, which is more, within these three days his head to be chopped off.

Lucio. But, after all this fooling, I would not have it so. Art thou sure of this?

Mrs. Or. I am too sure of it: and it is for getting Madam Julietta with child.

Lucio. Believe me, this may be: he promised to meet me two hours since, and he was ever precise in promise-keeping.

Sec. Gent. Besides, you know, it draws something near to the speech we had to such a purpose.

First Gent. But, most of all, agreeing with the proclamation.

Lucio. Away! let's go learn the truth of it. [Exeunt Lucio and Gentlemen.]

Mrs. Or. Thus, what with the war, what with the sweat, what with the gallows and what with poverty, I am custom-shrunk.

Enter Pompey.

How now! what's the news with you? Pompey. Yonder man is carried to prison.

Mrs. Or. Well; what has he done?

Pompey. A woman.

Mrs. Or. But what's his offence?

Pompey. Grabbing for trouts in a peculiar river.

Mrs. Or. What, is there a maid with child by him?

Pompey. No, but there's a woman with maid by him. You have not heard of the proclamation, have you? Mrs. Or. What proclamation, man?

Pompey. All houses in the suburbs of Vienna must be plumbed down.

Mrs. Or. And what shall become of those in the Pom. They shall stand for seed: they had gone down too, but that a wise burgler put in for them.

Mrs. Or. But shall all our houses of resort in the suburbs be plumbed also?

Pompey. To the ground, mistresse.

Mrs. Or. Why, here's a change indeed in the commonwealth! What shall become of me?

Pompey. Come: fear not you: good counselors lack no clients: though you change your place, you need not change your trade: I'll be your tapster still.

Mrs. Or. I have bought a house in the suburbs for the time to come, and I'll have gotten together a thousand people for a fair. They are well pleased with the fair. Mrs. Or. What's to do here, Thomas tapster? let's withdraw.

Pompey. Here comes Signior Claudio, led by the provost to prison; and there's Madam Juliet.

Enter Provost, Claudio, Juliet, and Officers.

Claudio. Fellow, why dost thou show me thus to the world?

Bear me to prison, where I am committed.

Pros. I do it not in evil disposition, but from Lord Angelo by special charge.

Claudio. Thus can the demigod Authority Make us pay down for our offence by weight. The words of heaven: on whom it will, it will; On whom it will not, so't yet still it is just.

Re-enter Lucio and two Gentlemen.

Lucio. Why, how now, Claudio! whence comes this restraint?

Claudio. From too much liberty, my Lucio: liberty: As surfeit is the father of much fast. So every scope by the immoderate use Turns to restraint. Our natures do pursue, Like rats that ravin down their proper bane, A thirsty evil: and when we drink we die.

Lucio. If I could speak so wisely under an arrest, I would send for certain of my creditors: and yet, to say the truth, I had as lief have the folly of freedom as the morality of imprisonment. What's thy offence, Claudio?

Claudio. What but to speak of would offend again.

Lucio. What is 't murder?
ACT I.

SCENE IV.

Claud. No.
Lucio. Lechery?
Claud. Call it so.

[Enter Friar, Lucio, and Priest.

Priest. Here, you must go. [with you.

Lucio. One word, good friend. Lucio, a word.

Lucio. A hundred, if they'll do you any good.

Is lechery so look'd after?

[Enter Clay. Thus stands it with me: upon a true con-

[Enter Friar. I got possession of Julietta's bed:

[Enter Lucio. Who, newly in the seat, that it may know

He can command, lets it straight feel the spur;

Which the tyranny be in his place,

Or in his omission that fills it up,

I stagger'd in: Lucio, my new governor

Awakes me all the enrolled penalties [will

Which have, like miscord'd armour, hung by the

So long that nineteen zodiacs have gone round

And none of them been worn; and, for a name,

Now puts the drowsy and neglected act

Freshly on me: 'tis surely for a name.

Lucio. I warrant it is; and thy head stands so

Tickle on thy shoulders that a millmaid, if she be

In love, may sign it off. Send after the duke

And appeal to him.

Lucio. I have done so, but he's not to be found.

I prithee, Lucio, do me this kind service:

This day my sister should the cloister enter

And there receive her approbation:

Acquaint her with the danger of my state;

Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends

To the strict deputy; bid herself assay him:

I have grown I hope in that; for in my youth

There is a prone and speechless dialect,

Such as move men; beside, she hath prosperous art

When she will play with reason and discourse,

And well she can persuade.

Lucio. I pray she may; as well for the encouragement

Of the state, as for the use of her mind which else should stand under grievous imposition, as for the enjoying of thy life, who I would be sorry should be thus foolishly lost at a game of tick-tack. I'll to her.

Lucio. I thank you, good friend Lucio.

Lucio. Within two hours.

Claud. Come, officer, away!

SCENE III. — A monastery.

Enter Duke and Friar Thomas.

Duke. No, holy father; throw away that thought;
Believe not that the dripping dart of love
Can pierce a complete bosom. Why I desire thee
To give me secret harbour, hath a purpose;
More grave and wrinkled than the aims and ends
Of burning youth.

Fri. T. May your grace speak of it?

Duke. My holy sir, none better knows than you
How I have ever loved the life removed
And held in idle price to haunt assemblies
Where youth, and cost, and witless bravery keeps,
I have deliver'd to Lord Angelo,
A man of stricture and firm abstinence,
My absolute power and place here in Vienna,

And he supposes me travell'd to Poland;
For so I have strew'd it in the common ear,
And sent it receiv'd. Now, pleas sir,
You will demand of me: What do I do this?

Fri. T. Gladly, my lord.

Duke. We have strict statutes and most biting
The needful bits and curbs to headstrong weeds,
Which for this nineteen years we have let slip;
Even like an o'ergrown lion in a cage,
That goes about to whet his teeth, and his fangs,
Having bound up the threatening twigs of birch,
Only to stick it in their children's sight
For terror, not to use, in time the rod
Becomes more mock'd than fear'd; so our decrees,
Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead;
And liberty pinch'd in infancy.

The baby beats the nurse, and quite aathwart
Goes all decorum.

Fri. T. It rested in your grace
To unloose this tied-up justice when you pleased;
And if in you more dreadful would have seem'd
Than in Lord Angelo.

Duke. I do fear, too dreadful:
Sith 'twas my fault to give the people scope,
'Twould be my tyranny to strike and gaff them
For what I bid them do; for we bid this be done,
When evil deeds have their permissive pass
And it not the punishment. Therefore indeed, my
I have on Angelo imposed the office;
[father,]

Who may, in the ambush of my name, strike home,
And yet my nature never in the fight
To do in slander. And to behold his sway,
I will, as 't were a brother of your order,
Visit both prince and people; therefore, I prithee,
Supply me with the habit and instruct me
How I may formally in person bear me
Like a true friar. More reasons for this action
At our more leisure shall I render you;
Only, this one: Lord Angelo is precise;
Standing a guard with envy; scarce confessest
That his blood flows, or that his appetite
Is more to breathe than stone: hence shall we see,
If power change purpose, what our seers be.

SCENE IV. — A nunery.

Enter Isabella and Franciscus.

Isab. And have you oon's no farther privileges?

Fra. Are not these large enough?

Isab. Yes, truly: I speak not as desiring more;
But rather wishing a more strict restraint
Upon the sisterhood, the votaries of Saint Clare.
[Aside. [Within] No! Peru that this place!

Isab. Who's that which calls?

Fra. It is a man's voice. Gentle Isabella,
Turn you the key, and know his business of him;
You may, I may not; you are yet unworn.
When you have vowed, you must not speak with men
But in the presence of the priors;
Then, if you speak, you must not show your face,
Or, if you show your face, you must not speak.
He calls again; I pray you, answer him. [Exit.

Isab. Peace and prosperity! Who is that calls?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Hail, virgin, if you be, as those cheek-roses
Proclaim you are no less! Can you so stand me
As bring me to the sight of Isabella,
A novice of this place and the fair sister
To her unhappy brother Claudius?

Isab. I am the same Lucio. [Enter Lucio. Isab. unhappy Lucio? let me ask, The rather for I now must make you know
I am that Isabella and his sister.

Lucio. Gentle and fair, your brother kindly greets
Not to be weary with you, he's in prison.

Lucio. For that which, if myself might be his
ACT II.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SCENE I.

He should receive his punishment in thanks: He hath get his friend with child.

Isab. Sir, make not your story.

Lucio. It is true. I would not—though 'tis my familiar sin With maids to seem the lapwing and to jest, Tongue far from heart—play with all virgins so: I hold you as a thing ensky'd and sainted, By your renouncement an immortal spirit, And to be talk'd with in sincerity, As with a saint.

Isab. You do blaspheme the good in mocking me.

Lucio. Do not believe it. Fewness and truth, 'tis You and his lover have embraced: [thus: As those that feed grow full, as blossoming time That from the seedness the bare fallow brings To teeming poison, even so her plentiful womb Expresseth his full tillth and husbandry. [Juliet? Isab. Some one with child by him? My cousin Lucio. Is she your cousin? [names Isab. Adoptedly; as school-maids change their By vain though apt affection.

Lucio. Isab. O, let him marry her.

This is the point. The duke is very strangely gone from hence; How many gentlemen, myself being one In hand and hope of action. By these that know the very nerves of state, His givings-out were of an infinite distance; From his true-meant design. Upon his place, And with full line of his authority, Governs Lord Angelo; a man whose blood Is very snow-broth; one who never feels The wanton stings and motions of the sense, But doth rebuke and blunt his natural edge With profits of the mind, study and fast. He—to give fear to use and liberty, Which have for long run by the hideous law, As mice by hounds—hath pick'd out an act, Under whose heavy sense your brother's life Falls into forfeit: he arrests him on it: And follows close the rigour of the statute, To make him an example. All hope is gone, Unless you have the grace by your fair prayer To soften Angelo; and that's my path of business 'Twixt you and your poor brother.

Isab. Doth he so seek his life? Lucio. Has censured him Already; and, as I hear, the provost hath A warrant for his execution.

Isab. Alas! What poor ability's in me To do him good?

Lucio. Assay the power you have.

Isab. My power? Alas, I doubt—

Lucio. Our doubts are traitors
And make us lose the good we oft might win By fearing to attempt. Go to Lord Angelo,
And let him learn to know, when maidens sue, Men give like gods; but when they weep and kneel, All their petitions are as freely theirs As they themselves would owe them.

Isab. I'll see what I can do.

Lucio. But speedily.

Isab. I will about it straight; No longer staying but to give the mother Notice of my affair. I humbly thank you Command me to my brother: soon at night I'll send him certain word of my success.

Lucio. I take my leave of you.

Isab. Good sir, adieu.

[Exit.]
ACT II.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SCENE I.

Ang. Go to: what quality are they of? Elbow is your name? why dost thou not speak, Elbow?

Pom. He cannot, sir; he's out at elbow.

Ang. Are you, sir?

Elb. He, sir! a tapster, sir! parcel-bawd; one that serves a bad woman; whose house, sir, was, as they say, plumbed down in the suburbs; and now she professes a hot-house, which, I think, is a very ill house.

Escal. How know you that? [too.

Elb. Ay, sir, whom I detest before heaven and your honour.

Escal. How? thy wife?

[woman.—

Elb. Ay, sir; whom, I thank heaven, is an honest

Escal. Dost thou detest her therefore?

Elb. I say, sir, I will detest myself also, as well as she; if she be not a bawd's house, it is pitty of her life, for it is a naughty house.

Escal. How dost thou know that, constable?

Elb. Marry, sir, by my wife; who, if she had been a woman cardinally given, might have been accused in fornication, adultery, and all uncleanness there.

Escal. By the woman's means?

Elb. Ay, sir, by Mistress Overdone's means; but as she spits in his face, so she detests him.

Pom. Sir, if it please your honour, this is not so.

Elb. Prove it before these varlets here, thou honourable man; prove it.

Escal. Do you hear how he misplaces?

Pom. No, indeed, sir; nor of a pin; you are therein in the right: but to the point. As I say, this Mistress Elbow, being, as I say, with child, and being great-bellied, and longing, saving your honour's reverence, for stewed princes; sir, we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were, in a fruit-dish, a dish of some three-pence; your honour's have seen such dishes; they are not China dishes, but very good dishes.

Escal. Go to, go to: no matter for the dish, sir.

Pom. No, indeed, sir; nor of a pin, you are therein in the right: but to the point. As I say, this Mistress Elbow, being, as I say, with child, and being great-bellied, and longing, saving your honour's reverence, for stewed princes; sir, we had but two in the house, which at that very distant time stood, as it were, in a fruit-dish, a dish of some three-pence; your honour's have seen such dishes; they are not China dishes, but very good dishes.

Froth. No, indeed.

Pom. Why, you being then, if you be remembered, cracking the stones of the foresaid princes,—

Froth. Ay, so I did indeed.

Pom. Why, very well; I telling you then, if you be remembered, that such a one and such a one were past care of the thing yougot of; unless they keepeth it or doth it told you,—

Froth. All this is true.

Pom. Why, very well, then. —

Escal. Come, you are a tedious fool; to the purpose.

What was done to Elbow's wife, that he hath cause to complain of? Come me to what was done to her,

Pom. Sir, your honour cannot come to that yet. Escal. But I mean it not.

Pom. Sir, but you shall come to it, by your honour's leave. And, I beseech you, look into Master Froth here, sir; a man of fourscore pound a year; whose father died at Hallowmas: was't not at Hallowmas, Master Froth?

Froth. All-hallow eve.

Pom. Why, very well; I hope here be truths. He, sir, sitting, as I say, in a lower chair, sir: 'tis in the Bunch of Grapes, where indeed you have a delight to sit, have you not?

Froth. I have so; because it is an open room and good delight.

Pom. Why, very well then; I hope here be truths.

Ang. This will last out a night in Russia, When nights are longest there; I'll take my leave, And leave you to the hearing of the cause; Hoping you'll find good cause to whip them all.

Escal. I think no less. Good morrow to your lordship. [Exit Angelo.

Now, sir, come on: what was done to Elbow's wife, or none.

Pom. Once, sir? there was nothing done to her.

Escal. I beseech you, sir, ask him what this man did to my wife.

Pom. I beseech your honour, ask me.

Escal. Well, sir; what did this gentle man to her?

Pom. Dost thou, sir, look in this gentleman's face. Good Master Froth, look upon his honour; 'tis for a good purpose. Dost thy honour mark his face?

Escal. Ay, sir, very well.

Pom. Nay, I beseech you, mark it well.

Escal. Well, I do so.

Pom. Dost thy honour see any harm in his face?

Escal. Why, no.

Pom. I'll be supposed upon a book, his face is the worst thing about him. Good, then; if his face be the worst thing about him, how could Master Froth do the constable's wife any harm? I would know that of your honour.

Escal. He's in the right. Constable, what say you to it?

Elb. First, an it like you, the house is a respected house; next, this is a respected fellow; and his mistress is a respected woman.

Pom. By this hand, sir, his wife is a more respected person than any of us all.

Elb. Varlet, thou liest; thou liest, wicked varlet! the time is yet to come that she was ever respected with man, woman, or child.

Pom. Sir, she was respected with him before he married with her.

Escal. Which is the wiser here? Justice or Iniquity? Is this true?

Elb. O thou calf! O thou varlet! O thou wicked Hannibal! I respected with her before I was married to her! If ever I was respected with her, or she with me, let not your worship think me the poor duke's officer. Prove this, thou wicked Hannibal, or I'll have mine action of battery on thee.

Escal. If he took you a box o' the ear, you might have your action of slander too.

Elb. Marry, I thank your good worship for it. What of your worship's pleasure I shall do with this wicked calf?

Escal. Truly, officer, because he hath some offences in him that thou wouldst discover if thou couldst, let him continue in his courses till thou knowest what they are.

Elb. I thank your worship for it. Thou seest, thou wicked varlet, now, what's come upon thee: thou art to continue now, thou varlet; thou art to continue.

Escal. Where were you born, friend?

Froth. Here in Vienna, sir.

Escal. Are you of fourscore pounds a year?

Froth. Yes, an't please you, sir.

Escal. So. What trade are you of, sir?

Pom. A tapster; a poor widow's tapster.

Escal. Your mistress' name?

Pom. Mistress Overdone.

Escal. Hath she had any more than one husband?

Pom. Nine, sir; Overdone by the last.

Escal. Nine! Come hither to me, Master Froth. Master Froth, I would not have you acquainted with tapsters: they will draw you, Master Froth, and you will hang them. Get you gone, and let none of you.

Froth. I thank your worship. For mine own part. I never come into any room in a taphouse, but I am drawn in.

Escal. Well, no more of it. Master Froth; farewell. [Exit Froth.] Come you hither to me, Master tapster. What's your name, Master tapster?
SCENE II.—Another room in the same.

Enter Provost and a Servant.

Prov. He's hearing of a cause; he will come I'll tell him of you.

Serv. Pray you, do. [Exit Servant.]

Prov. I'll know His pleasure; may be he will relent. Alas, He hath but as offended in a dream! All sects, all ages smack of this vice; and he To die for 't.

Enter Angelo.

Aug. Now, what's the matter, provost?

Prov. Is it your will Claudio shall die to-morrow?

Aug. Did not I tell thee yea? hadst thou not order? Why dost thou ask again?

Prov. Lest I might be too rash: Under your good correction, I have seen, When, after execution, judgment hath Repented o'er his dooms.

Aug. Go to: let that be mine: Do you your office, or give you up your place, And you shall well be spared.

Prov. I crave your honour's pardon. What shall be done, sir, with the groaning Juliet? She's very near her hour.

Aug. Dispose of her To some more fitter place, and that with speed.

Re-enter Servant.

Serv. Here is the sister of the man condemn'd
Dares access to you.

Aug. Hath he a sister?

Prov. Ay, my good lord; a very virtuous maid, And to be shortly of a sisterhood, If not already.

Aug. Well, let her be admitted. [Exit Servant.]

See you the fornicatress be removed: Let her have needful, but not lavish, means; There shall be order for 't.

Enter Isabella and Lucio.

Aug. God save your honour!

Prov. Stay a little while. [To Isab.] You're welcome: what's your will?

Isab. I am a woeful suitor to your honour, Please but your honour hear me.

Aug. How's Well: what's your suit?

Isab. There is a vice that most I do abhor, And most desire should meet the blow of justice; For which I would not plead, but that I must; For which I must not plead, but that I am At war 'twixt will and will not.

Aug. Well; the matter?

Isab. I have a brother is condemn'd to die: I do beseech you, let it be his fault, And not my brother.

Prov. [Aside] Heaven give them moving graces!

Aug. Observe the fault, and not the actor of it? Why, every fault's condemn'd ere it be done: Mine were the very cipher of a function. To fine the faults whose fine stands in record, And let go by the actor.

Isab. O just but severe law! I had a brother, then. Heaven keep your honour! Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] Give 't not o'er so: to him again, entreat him; Kneel down before him, hang upon his gown; You are too cold; if you should need a pin, You could not with more tame a tongue desire it: To him, I say!

Isab. Must he needs die?

Aug. Maiden, no remedy.

Isab. Yes: I do think that you might pardon him, And neither heaven nor man grieve at the mercy,
Any. I will not do 't.

Isab. But can you, if you would? Any. Look, what I will not, that I cannot do. Isab. But might you do 't, and do the world no wrong.

If so your heart were touch'd with that remorse
As mine is to him?

He. He's sentenced; 'tis too late.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] You are too cold.

Isab. Too late? why, no; I, that do speak a word, May call it back again. Well, believe this, No ceremony that to great ones longs,
Not the king's crown, nor the disputed sword,
The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
Become them with one-half so good a grace
As mercy does.

If he had been as you and you as he,
You would have slept like him; but he, like you,
Would not have been so stern.

Pray you, be gone.

Isab. I would to heaven I had your potency,
And you were Isabella! should it then be thus?
No; I would tell what 't were to be a judge,
And what a prisoner.

[Aside.] Ay, touch him; there's

Your brother is a forfeit of the law,
And you but waste your words.

Isab. Alas, alas! why, all the souls that were forfeit once;
And He that might the vantage best have took Found out the remedy. How would you be,
If He, which is the top of judgment, should
But judge you as you are? O, think on that;
And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
Like man new made.

Be you content, fair maid;
It is the law, not I condemn your brother:
Were he my kinsman, brother, or my son,
It should be thus with him: he must die to-morrow.

Isab. To-morrow! O, that's sudden! Spare him, spare him!

He's not prepared for death. Even for our kitchens
We kill the fowl of season: shall we serve heaven
With less respect than we do minister [you;]
To our dear selves? Good, good my lord, beThink Who is it that hath died for this offence?
There's many have committed it.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] Ay, well said.

Any. The law hath not been dealt, though it hath slept:

Those many had not dared to do that evil,
If the first that did the edict infringe
Had answer'd for his deed: now 'tis awake.

Takes note of what is done: and, like a prophet,
Leeks in a glass, that shows what future evils,
Either new, or by remissness new-conceived,
And so in progress to be hatch'd and born,
Are now to have no successive degrees,
But, ere they live, to end.

Yet show some pity.

Any. I show it most of all when I show justice;
For then I pity those I do not know.
Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall;
And do him right that, answering one foul wrong,
Lives not to act another. Be satisfied;
Your brother dies to-morrow; be content.

Isab. So you must be the first that gives this
And he, that suffers. O, it is excellent
To have a giant's strength; but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] That's well said.

Isab. Could great men thunder
As low as little does? Love should ne'er be quiet,
For every pelting, petty officer
Would use his heaven for thunder;
Nothing but thunder! Merciful Heaven,

Thou rather with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt
Split'st the unedgeable and quarrel'd oak
Than the soft myrtle: but man, proud man,
Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assured,
His glassy essence, like an angry

Days such fantastic tricks before high heaven
As make the angels weep: who, with our spleens,
Would all themselves laugh mortal.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] O, to him, to him, wench! He's coming; I perceive 't. [He will relent.]

Provost. [Aside.] Fray heaven she win him! these
We cannot weigh our brother with ourselves.
Great men may jest with saints; 'tis wit in them,
But in the less foul profanation.

Lucio. Thou 'rt the right girl: more o' that.

Isab. That in the captain's but a choleric word,
Which in the soldier is flat blasphemy:
[on t.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] Art advised o' that? more

Any. Why do you put these sayings upon me?

Isab. Because authority, though it err like others,
Hath yet a kind of medicine in itself,
That skins the vice o' the top. Go to your bosom;
Knock there, and ask your heart what it doth know
That liketh a brother's fault: it will confess
A natural guiltiness such as is his.
Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue
Against my brother's life.

Any. [Aside] She speaks, and 'tis
Such sense, that my sense breeds with it. Fare you Isab. Gentle my lord, turn back. [well.

Any. I will bethe hin': come again to-morrow.

Isab. Mark how I'll bribe you: good my lord,
Any. How! bribe me? [turn back.

Isab. Ay, with such gifts that heaven shall share with you.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] You had marr'd all else.

Isab. Not with fond shekels of the tested gold,
Or stones whose rates are either rich or poor
As fancy values them; but with true prayers
That shall be up at heaven and enter there
Ere sunrise, prayers from preserved souls,
From fasting maid's whose minds are dedicate
To nothing temporal.

Lucio. [Aside to Isab.] Well; come to me to-morrow.

Any. [Aside to Isab.] Go to: 'tis well; away!

Isab. Heaven keep your honour safe!

Any. [Aside] Amen

For I am that way going to temptation,
Where prayers cross.

Isab. At what hour to-morrow
Shall I attend your lordship?

Any. At any time 'fore noon.

Isab. 'Save your honour!

[Exeunt Isabella, Lucio, and Provost.

Any. What's this, what's this? Is this her fault or
The tempter or the tempted, whosis most? [mine.

Ha! Not she; nor doth she tempt: but it is I
That, lying by the violet in the sun,
Do as the carriion does, not as the flower,
Corrupt with virtuous season. Can it be
That modesty may more betray our sense [enough,
Than woman's lightness? Having waste ground
Shall we desire to raze the sanctuary
And pitch our evils there? O, he, he, he!
What's the best arm, or what's the fairest? Anger?
Dest thou desire her folly for these things
That make her good? O, let her brother live;
Thieves for their robbery have authority [her.
When judges steal themselves. What, do I love
That I desire to hear her speak again;
And best upon her heart, what's that is 't I dream on?
O cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint,
With saints clos'd bait thy hook! Most dangerous
Is that temptation that doth good us on
To sin in loving virtue: never could the strumpet,
With all her double vigour, art and nature,
Once stir my temper; but this virtuous maid
Subdues me quite. Ever till now,
When men were fond, I smiled and wonder'd how.

SCENE III. — A room in a prison.

Enter, severally, Duke disguised as a friar, and

Provost.

Duke. Hail to you, provost! so I think you are.

Prov. I am the provost. What's your will, good friar?

Duke. Bound by my charity and my best order, I come to visit the afflicted spirits
Here in the prison. Do me the common right
To let me know the nature of their crimes, that I may minister
To them accordingly. [needful.

Prov. I would do more than that, if more were

Enter Juliet.

Look, here comes one: a gentlewoman of mine,
Who, falling in the flaws of her own youth,
Hath bluster'd her report: she is with child;
And he that got it, sentenced: a young man
More fit to do another such offence
Than die for this.

Duke. When must he die?

Prov. As I do think, to-morrow. I have provided for you: stay awhile, [To Juliet.

And you shall be conducted.

Duke. Repent you, fair one, of the sin you carry? Jul. I do; and bear the shame most patiently. I'll teach you how you shall arraign your
And try your sentence, if it be sound, [conscience.
Or hollowly put on.

Jul. I'll gladly learn.

Duke. Love you the man that wrong'd you?

Jul. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him.

Duke. So then it seems your most offensive act
Was mutually committed?

Jul. Mutually.

Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind than his.

Jul. I do confess it, and repent it, father.

Duke. 'Tis meet so, daughter: but lest you do Forget
As that the sin hath brought you to this shame,
Which sorrow is always towards, ourselves, not heaven,
Showing we would not spare heaven as we love it,
But as we stand in fear.—

Jul. I do repent me, as it is an evil,
And hate the shame with joy. [Duke.

There rest.

Your partner, as I hear, must die to-morrow,
And I am going with instruction to him.
Grace go with you, Benedicte! [Exit. Jul.

Must die to-morrow! O injuries love,
That respires me a life, whose very comfort
Is still a dying horror! [Prov.

'Tis pity of him. [Exit.

SCENE IV. — A room in Angelo's house.

Enter Angelo.

Aug. When I would pray and think, I think and pray
To several subjects. Heaven hath my empty words;
Whilst in my invention, hearing not my tongue,
Anchors on Israel: Heaven in my mouth,
As if I did but only chew his name:
And in my heart the strong and swelling evil
Of my conception. The state, wherein I studied,
Is like a good thing, being often read,
Grown fear'd and tedious; yea, my gravity,
Wherein—let no man hear me—I take pride,
Could I with boot change for an idle plume,
Which the air beats for vain. O place, O form,
How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit,
Wrench awe from fools and tie the wiser souls
To thy false seeming! Blood, thou art blood:
Let's write good angel on the devil's horn;
'T is not the devil's crest.

Enter a Servant.

How now! who's there?

Serv. One Isabel, a sister, desires access to you.

Aug. Teach her the way. [Exit Serv.] O heavens! Why does my blood thus muster to my heart, Making both it unable for itself,
And dispossessing all my other parts
Of necessary fitness?
So play the foolish thongs with one that swoons;
Come all to help him, and so stop the air
By which he should revive: and even so
The general, subject to a well-wish'd king,
Quite their own part, and in obsequious fondness
Crowd to his presence, where their untainted love
Must needs appear offence.

Enter Isabella.

How now, fair maid?

Isab. I am come to know your pleasure.

Aug. That you might know it, would much better please me.

Than to demand what 'tis. Your brother cannot Isab. Even so. Heaven keep your honour!

Aug. Yet may he live awhile; and, it may be,
As long as you or I: yet he must die.

Isab. Under your sentence?

Aug. Yes.

Isab. When, I beseech you? that in his reprieve,
Longer or shorter, he may be so fitted
That his soul sicken not.

Aug. Ha! lie these filthy vices! It were as good
To pardon him that hath from nature stolen
A man already made, as to remit
Their saucy sweetness that do coin heaven's image
In stamps that are forbid: 'tis all as easy
Falsely to take away a life true made
As to put metal in restrained means
To make a false one.

Isab. 'Tis set down so in heaven, but not in earth.

Aug. Say you so? then I shall pose you quickly.
Which had you rather, that the most just law
Now took your brother's life: or, to redeem him,
Give up your body to such sweet uncleanness
As she that he hath staint'd?

Isab. Sir, believe this,
I had rather give my body than my soul.

Aug. I talk not of your soul: our compel'd sins
Stand more for number than for accompl.

Isab. How say you?

Aug. Nay, I'll not warrant that; for I can speak Against the thing I say. Answer to this:
I, now the voice of the recorded law,
Pronounce a sentence on your brother's life:
Might there not be a charity in sin
To save this brother's life?

Isab. Please you to do't,
I'll take it as a peril to my soul,
It is no sin at all, but charity.

Aug. Pleased you to do't at peril of your soul,
Were equal poise of sin and charity.

Isab. That I do beg his life, if it be sin.
Heaven let me hear it! you granting of my suit,
It be that sin, I'll make it my most prayer
To have it added to the faults of mine,
And nothing of your answer.

Aug. Nay, but hear me.
Your sense pursues not mine: either you are ignorant,
Or seem so craftily; and that's not good.
ACT III.  MEASURE FOR MEASURE.  SCENE I.

Isab.  Let me be ignorant, and in nothing good,
But graciously to know I am no better.

Ang.  Thus wisdom wishes to appear most bright
When it doth tax itself; as these black marks
Proclaim an ensniled beauty ten times louder
Than beauty could, display'd.  But mark me;
To be received plain, I'll speak more gross:
Your brother is to die.

Isab.  No.

Ang.  And his offence is so, as it appears,
Accountant to the law upon that pain.

Isab.  True.

Ang.  Admit no other way to save his life,—
As I subscribe not that, nor any other,
But in the loss of question,—that you, his sister,
Finding yourself desired of such a person,
Whose credit with the judge, or own great place,
Could fetch your brother from the manacles
Of the all-building law; and that there were
No earthly mean to save him, but that either
You must lay down the treasures of your body
To this supposed, or else to let him suffer;
What would you do?

Isab.  As much for my poor brother as myself:
That is, were I under the terms of death,
The impression of keen whipps I 'ld wear as rubies,
And strip myself to death, as to a bed
That longing have been sick for, ere I 'ld yield
My body up to shame and death.

Ang.  Then must your brother die.

Isab.  And 't were the cheaper way;
Better it were a brother died at once,
Than that a sister, by redeeming him,
Should die for ever.

Ang.  Were not you then as cruel as the sentence
That you have slander'd so?

Isab.  Ignomy in ranson and free pardon
Are of two houses; lawful mercy
Is nothing kin to foul redemption.

Ang.  You seem'd of late to make the law a tyrant;
And rather proved the siding of your brother
A merriment than a vice.

Isab.  O, pardon me, my lord; it oft falls out,
To have what we would have, we speak not what we
I something do excuse the thing I hate, [mean:
For his advantage that I dearly love.

Ang.  We are all frail.

Isab.  Else let my brother die,
If not a foedary, but only he
Owe and succeed thy weakness.

Ang.  Nay, women are frail too.  [selves;

Isab.  Ay, as the glasses where they view them-
Which are as easy broke as they make forms.
Women!  Help Heaven!  I fear their creation man
In printing by them.  Nay, call us ten times frail
For we are soft as our complacencies are,
And credulous to false prints.

Ang.  I think it well:
And from this testimony of your own sex,—

Since I suppose we are made to be no stronger
Than faults may shake our frames,—let me be bold;
I do arrest your words.  Be that you are,
That is, a woman; if you be more, you're none;
If you be one, as you are well express'd
By all external warrants, show it now,
By putting on the destined livery.

Isab.  I have no tongue but one: gentle my lord,
Let me entreat you speak the former language.

Ang.  Plainly conceived.  I love you.

Isab.  My brother did love Juliet,
And you tell me that he shall die for it.

Ang.  He shall not, Isabel, if you give me love.

Isab.  I know your virtue hath a license in't,
Which seems a little fonder than it is,
Topnick on others.

Ang.  Believe me, on mine honour,
My words express my purpose.

Isab.  Ha! little honour to be much believed,
And most pernicious purpose!  Seeing, seeming!
I will proclaim thee, Angelo; look for 't!
Sign me a present pardon for my brother.  [aloud
Or with an outstretched threat I'll tell the world
What man thou art.

Ang.  Who will believe thee, Isabel?
My unsold'd name, the astoner of my life,
My vouch against you, and my place i' the state,
Will so your accusation overweight
That you shall still in your own report
And snarl of calamity.  I have begun,
And now I give my sensual race the rein:
Fit thy consent to my sharp appetite;
Lay by all nicety and prolixious blushes,
That banish what they sue for; redeem thy brother
By yielding up thy body to my will;
Or else he must not only die the death,
But thy unkindness shall his death draw out
To lingering suflerance.  Answer me to-morrow,
Or, by the affection that now guides me most,
I'll prove a tyrant to him.  As for you,
Say what you can, my false o'erweighs your true.
[Exit.

Isab.  To whom should I complain?  Did I tell this,
Who would believe me?  O perious months,
That bear in them one and the self-same tongue,
Either of condemnation or approval;
Bidding the law make court'sy to their will:
Hooking both right and wrong to the appetite,
To follow as it draws!  I'll to my brother:
Though he hath fall'n by prompture of the blood,
Yet hath he in him such a mind of honour,
That, had he twenty heads to tender down
On twenty bloody blocks, he 'ld yield them up,
Before his sister should her body stoo.
To such abhor'd pollution.
Then, Isabel, live chaste, and, brother, die:
More than our brother is our chastity.
I'll tell him yet of Angelo's request,
And fix his mind to death, for his soul's rest.  [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A room in the prison.

Enter Duke, disguised as before, Claudio, and Provost.

Duke.  So then you hope of pardon from Lord Angelo?

Claud.  The miserable have no other medicine
But only hope:
I've hope to live, and am prepared to die.

Duke.  Be absolute for death; either death or life Shall thereby be the sweeter.  Reason thus with
If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing [life:

That none but fools would keep; a breath thou art,
Servile to all the skye influences.
That dost this habitation, where thou keep'st,
Hourly afflict; merely, thou art death's tool;
For him thou labour'st by thy flight to shun
And yet runnest toward him still.  Thou art not
For all the accommodations that thou bear'st
Are nursed by baseness.  Thou'rt by no means valiant;
For thou dost fear the soft and tender fork
Of a poor worm.  Thy best of rest is sleep,
As isabel.

Prov. My business is a word or two with Claudio.

Isab. And very welcome. Look, signior, here’s your sister.

Claud. I humbly thank you.

Due. O heavens! It cannot be.

Isab. Yes, he would give’t thee, from this rank offence.

Claud. To sue to live, I find I seek to die;

And, seeking death, dull life: let it come on.

Isab. Would thou wouldst have happiness, my lord! Peace here; grace and good company!

Due. Dear sir, ere long I’ll visit you again.

Claud. Most holy sir, I thank you.

Enter Isabella.

Isab. My business is a word or two with Claudio.

Prov. And very welcome. Look, signior, here’s your sister.

Due. Provost, a word with you.

Proc. As many as you please.

Due. Bring me to hear them speak, where I may be concealed.

Claud. Now, sister, what’s the comfort?

Isab. Why, as all comforts are; most good, most good indeed.

Angels are living and in heaven,

Intends you for his swift ambassador,

Where you shall be an everlasting lieger:

Therefore your best appointment make with speed;

To-morrow you set on.

Isab. Is there no remedy?

Claud. None, but such remedy as, to save a head,

To cleave a heart in twain.

But is there any?

Isab. Yes, brother, you may live:

There is a devilish mercy in the judge,

If you’ll importune it, that will free your life,

But fetter you till death.

Isab. Perpetual durance?

Due. Ay, just: perpetual durance, a restraint,

Though all the world’s vastity you had,

To a determined scope.

Isab. But in what nature?

Due. In such a one as, you consenting to’t,

Would bark your honour from that trunk you bear,

And leave you naked.

Claud. Let me know the point.

Isab. O, I do fear thee, Claudio; and I quake,

Lest thou a-feverous life shouldst entertain,

And six or seven winters more respect

Than a perpetual honour. Darest thou die?

The sense of death is most in apprehension;

And the poor beetle, that we tread upon,

In corporal suffering finds a pang as great

As when a giant dies.

Claud. Why give you me this shame?

Think you I can a resolution fetch

From flowery tenderness? If I must die,

I will encounter darkness as a bride,

And hug it in mine own: — grave

Isab. There spoke my brother; there my father’s

Did utter forth a voice. Yes, thou must die;

Thou art too noble to conserve a life

In base appliances. This outward-sainted deity,

Whose settled visage and deliberate word

Nips youth in the head and fouls doth emmew

As falcon doth the fowl, is yet a devil;

His filth within being cast, he would appear

A pond as deep as hell.

Claud. The prenzie Angelo!

Isab. O, ’tis the cunning livery of hell,

The dammed soul’s Boyd to best and horrid cover

In prenzie guards! — Dost thou think, Claudio?

If I would yield him my virginity,

Thou mightst be freed.

Claud. O heavens! it cannot be.

Isab. Yes, he would give’t thee, from this rank offence.

So to offend him still. This night’s the time

That I should do what I abhor to name,

Or else thou diest to-morrow.

Claud. Thou shalt not do’t.

Isab. O, were it but my life,

I’d throw it down for your deliverance

As frankly as a pin.

Claud. Thanks, dear Isabel.

Isab. Be ready, Claudio, for your death to-morrow.

Claud. Yes. Has he affections in him,

That thus can make him bite the law by the nose,

When he would force it? Sure, it is no sin;

Or of the deadly seven it is the least.

Isab. Which is the least?

Claud. If it were damnable, he being so wise,

Why would he for the momentary trick

Be perdurably mired? O Isabel!

Isab. What says my brother?

Claud. Death is a fearful thing.

Isab. And shamed life a hateful.

Claud. Ay, but to die, and go we know not where;

To lie in cold obstruction and to rot:

This sensible warm motion to become

A kneaded clot; and the delighted spirit

To bathe in fiery floods, or to reside

In thrilling region of thick-ribbed ice;

To be imprison’d in the viewless winds,

And blown with restless violence round about

The penent world; or to be worse than worst

Of those that lawless and uncertain thought

Imagine horror: ’tis too soon.

The weirdest and most loathed worldly life

That age, aching, penury and imprisoning

Can lay on nature is a paradise

To what we fear of death.

Isab. Alas, alas!

Claud. Sweet sister, let me live:

What sin you do to save a brother’s life,

Nature dispenses with the deed so far

That it becomes a virtue.

Isab. O you beast!

O faithless coward! O dishonest wretch!

Will thou be made a man out of my vice?

Is’t not a kind of incest, to take life

[think?

From thine own sister’s shame? What should I

Heaven shield my mother play’d my father fair!

For such a warped slip of wilderness

Ne’er issued from his blood. Take my defiance!

Die, perish! Might but my bending down

Reprove thee from thy fate, it should proceed:

I’ll pray a thousand prayers for thy death,

No word to save thee.

Claud. Nay, hear me, Isabel.

Isab. O, fie, fie, fie!

Thy sin’s not accidental, but a trade.

Mercy to thee would prove itself a lawd:
ACT III.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SCENE II.

'Is best that thou diest quickly.

Claud.

O hear me, Isabella!

Re-enter Duke.

Duke. Vouchsafe a word, young sister, but one Isab. What is your will?

Duke. Might you dispense with your leisure, I would by and by have some speech with you; the satisfaction I would require is likewise your own benefit.

Isab. I have no superfluous leisure; my stay must be stolen out of other affairs; but I will attend you awhile.

Duke. Son, I have overheard what hath passed between you and your sister. Angelo had never the purpose to corrupt her; only he hath made an assembly or two stands, to try his judgment with the disposition of natures; she, having the truth of honour in her, hath made him that gracious denial which he is most glad to receive. I am confessor to Angelo, and I know this to be true; therefore prepare yourself to death: do not satisfy your reso-lation from the angry law; do not stain to you must die; go to your knees and make ready.

Claud. Let me ask my sister pardon. I am so out of love with life that I will sue to be rid of it.

Duke. Hold you there: farewell. [Exit Claudius.]
Provost, a word with you!

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. What's your will, father?

Duke. That now you are come, you will be gone.
Leave me awhile with the maid: my mind promises with my habit no loss shall touch her by my company.

Prov. In good time.

[Exit Provost. Isabella comes forward.

Duke. The hand that hath made you fair hath made you good: the goodness that is cheap in beauty makes beauty brief in goodness; but grace, being the soul of your complexion, shall keep the body of it ever fair. The assault that Angelo hath made to you, fortune hath conveyed to my understanding;
and, but that frailty hath examples for his falling,
I should wonder at Angelo. How will you do to content this substitute, and to save your brother?

Isab. I am now going to resolve him: I had rather my brother die by the law than my son should be unlawfully born. But, O, how much is the good duke deceived in Angelo! If ever he return and I can speak to him, I will open my lips in vain, or discover his government.

Duke. That shall not be much amiss: yet, as the matter stands, I will avoid your accusation;
he made trial of you only. Therefore fasten your ear on my advisings: to the love I have in doing good a remedy presents itself. I do make myself believe that you may most uprightly do a poor wronged lady a merited benefit; redeem your brother from his law-wounding inveighings; it is not the own gracious person; and much please the absent duke, if peradventure he shall ever return to have hearing of this business.

Isab. Let me hear you, speak, father. I have spirit to do any thing that appears not foul in the truth of my spirit.

Duke. Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful.
Have you not heard speak of Mariana, the sister of Frederick the great soldier who miscarried at sea?

Isab. I have heard of the lady, and good words were with her name.

Duke. She should this Angelo have married; was alliance to her by oath, and the nuptial appointed:
between which time of the contract and limit of the solemnity, her brother Frederick was wrecked at sea, having in that perished vessel the dowry of his sister. But mark how heavily this befall to the poor gentlewoman: there she lost a noble and renowned brother, in his love toward her ever most kind and natural; with him, the portion and sire of her marriage-dowry, with both, her combine husband, this well-seeing Angelo.

Isab. Can this be so? did Angelo so leave her?

Duke. Left her in her tears, and dripped not one of them with his comfort; swallowed his vows whole, pretending in her discoveries of dishonour: in few, beseeched her on her own humiliation, which she yet wears for his sake; and he, a marble to her tears, is washed with them, but relents not.

Isab. What a merit were it in death to take this poor maid from the world! What corruption in this life, that it will let this man live? But how out of this can she avail?

Duke. It is a rupture that you may easily heal; and the cure of it not only saves your brother, but keeps you from dishonour in doing it.

Isab. Show me how, good father.

Duke. This fornicated maid hath yet in her the continuing of her first affection, and that kindness, that in all reason should have quenched her love, hath, like an impediment in the current, made it more violent and unruly. Go you to Angelo;
answer his requiring with a plausible obedience; agree with his demands to the point; only refer your affairs to her: then, that your stay with him may not be long; that the time may have all shadow and silence in it; and the place answer to convenience. This being granted in course,—now follows all,—we shall advise this wronged maid to stead your appointment, go in your place; if the encounter acknowledge itself hereafter, it may compel him to be accomplice: and here, by this, is your brother saved, your honour untainted, the poor
Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt deputy scaled.
The maid will frame and make fit for his attempt.
If you think well to carry this as you may, the delightness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. What think you of it?

Isab. The image of it gives me content already;
and I trust it will grow to a most prosperous perfection.

Duke. It lies much in your holding up. Haste your self to Angelo; if for this night he entreat you to his bed, give him promise of satisfaction.
I will presently to Saint Luke's: there, at the moated grange, resides this dejected Mariana. At that place call upon me; and dispatch with Angelo, that it may be quickly.

Isab. I thank you for this comfort. Fare you well, good father.

[Exeunt severally.

SCENE III.—The street before the prison.

Enter, on one side, Duke disguised as before; on the other, Elb, and Officers with Pompey.

Elb. Nay, if there be no remedy for it, but that you will needs buy and sell men and women like beasts, we shall have all the world drink brown and white bastard.

Duke. O heavens! what stuff is here?

Proo. 'Twas never merry world since, of two maries, the merriest was put down, and the worser allowed by order of law a furred gown to keep him warm; and furred with fox and lamb-skins too, for, that craft, being richer than innocency, stands for the facing.

Duke. Take you your way, sir. 'Bless you, good father friar.

Duke. And you, good brother father. What of fenced hath this man made you, sir?

Elb. Marry, sir, he hath offended the law: and, sir, we take him to be a thief too, sir; for we have T III.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SCENE II.

Lucio. I know not where; but wheresoever, I wish him well.

Lucio. It was a mad fantastical trick of him to steal from the state, and usurp the beggary he was never born to. Lord Angelo dutes it well in his absence; he puts transgression to't.

Duke. He does well in't.

Lucio. A little lenity to lechery would do no harm in him: something too cruel that way, friar.

Duke. It is too general a vice, and severity must cure it.

Lucio. Yes, in good sooth, the vice is of a great kindred; it is well allied; but it is impossible to extirp it quite, friar, till eating and drinking is put down, for they say this Angelo was not made by man and woman after this downward way of creation: is it true, think you?

Duke. How should he be made, then?

Lucio. Some report a sea-nymph swam him; some, that he was begot between two stock-fishes. But it is certain that when he makes water his urine is congealed ice; that I know to be true: and he is a motion generative; that's infallible.

Duke. You are pleasant, sir, and speak apace.

Lucio. Why, what a ruthless thing is this in him, for the rebellion of a cockpiece to take away the life of a man! Would the duke that is absent have done this? Ere he would have hanged a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand: he had some feeling of the sport; he knew the service, and that instructed him to mercy.

Duke. I never heard the absent duke much detected for women: he was not inclined that way.

Lucio. O, sir, you are deceived.

Duke. 'T is not possible.

Lucio. Who, not the duke? yes, your beggar of fifty; and his use was to put a ducat in her chock, and the child would recover in him. He would be drunk too; that let me inform you.

Lucio. Sir, I was an inward of his. A shy fellow was the duke: and I believe I know the cause of his withdrawing.

Duke. What, my prithee, might be the cause?

Lucio. No, sir: 'tis a secret must be locked within the teeth and the lips: but this I can let you understand, the greater file of the subject held the duke to be wise.

Duke. Wise! why, no question but he was.

Lucio. A very superficial, ignorant, unweighing fellow.

Duke. Either this is envy in you, folly, or mistaking: the very stream of his life and the business he hath helmed must upon a warranted need give him a better proclamation. Let him be but testified in his own bringings-forth, and he shall appear to the crown the scholar, a statesman and a soldier. Therefore you speak unskilfully; or if your knowledge be more it is much darkened in your malice.

Lucio. Sir, I know him, and I love him.

Duke. Love talks with better knowledge, and knowledge with dearer love.

Lucio. Come, sir. I know what I know.

Duke. I can hardly believe that, since you know not what you speak. But, if ever the duke return, as our prayers are he may, let me desire you to make your answer before him. If it be honest your answer, you have courage to maintain it; I am bound to call upon you: and I pray you, your name?

Lucio. Sir, my name is Lucio: well known to the duke.

Duke. He shall know you better, sir, if I may live to report you.

Lucio. I fear you not.

Duke. O, you hope the duke will return no more; or you imagine me too unhurtful an opposite. But indeed I can do you little harm; you'll forswear this again.
Lucio. I'll be hanged first: thou art deceived in me, friar. But no more of this. Canst thou tell if Claudio die to-morrow or no?
Duke. Why should he die, sir?
Lucio. Why? For filling a bottle with a tun-dish, I would the duke we talk of were returned again: this ungeniature agent will unpeople the province! Yet, tell me, friar; the provender must not build in his horse-caves, because they are lecherous. The duke yet would have dark deeds darkly answered;
he would never bring them to light: would he were returned! Marry, this Claudio is condemned for untrussing. Farewell, good friar: I prithee, pray for me. The duke, I say to thee, would again, would mutter on Fridays. He's not past it yet, and I say to thee, he would mouth with a beggar, though she smelt brown bread and garlic: say that I said
so. Farewell. [Exit.

Duke. No might nor greatness in mortality
Can now succeed, but back-wounding calumny
The whitest virtue strikes: What king so strong
Can tie the gall up in the slanderous tongue?
But who comes here?

Enter Escalus, Provost, and Officers with Mistress Overdone.

Escal. Go: away with her to prison!
Mrs. Or. Good my lord, be good to me: your honour is accounted a merciful man; good my lord.
Escal. Double and treble admonition, and still forfeit in the same kind! This would make mercy sweat and play the tyrant.
Prov. A bawd of eleven years' continuance, may it please your honour.
Mrs. Or. My lord, this is one Lucio's information against me. Mistress Kate Keepdown was with child by him in the duke's time; he promised her marriage: his child is a year and a quarter old, come Phillip and Jacob: I have kept it myself, and see how he goes about to abuse me!
Escal. That fellow is a fellow of much license; let him be called before us. Away with her to prison!
Go to: no more words. [Exeunt Officers with Mistress Or.]
Provost, my brother Angelo will not be altered: Claudio must die to-morrow:
let him be furnished with divines, and have all charitable preparation. If my brother wrought by my pity, it should not be so with him.
Prov. So please you, this friar hath been with him, and advised him for the entertainment of death.

Duke. Bliss and goodness on you!
Escal. Of whence are you?
Duke. Not of this country, though my chance is
To use it for my time: I am a brother [now
Of gracious order, late come from the See
In special order, to the church's prayer,
To comfort and to strengthen the weak,
And perform an old contracting.
[Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.— The mounted grange at St. Luke's.

Enter Mariana and a Boy.

Boy sings.

Mori. Break off thee song, and haste thee quick
Here comes a man of comfort, whose advice [away:
Hath often still'd my brawling discontent.

[Exit Boy.

Enter Duke disguised as before.

I cry you mercy, sir; and well could wish
You had not found me here so musical:
Let me excuse me, and believe me so,
My mirth it much displeased, but pleased my woe.
Duke. 'Tis good; though music oft hath such a charm
Do make bad good, and good provoke to harm.
I pray you, tell me, hath any body inquired for me here-to-day? much upon this time have I promised here to meet.

Maria. You have not been inquired after; I have sat here all day.

Enter Isabella.

Duke. I do constantly believe you. The time is come even now. I shall crave your forbearance a little: may be I will call upon you anon, for some advantage to yourself.

Maria. I am always bound to you. [Exit Duke.]

What is the news from this good deputy?

Isab. He hath a garden circumvallated with brick, whose western side is with a vineyard back'd; And to that vineyard is a planched gate, That makes his opening with this bigger key; This other doth command a little door. Which from the vineyard to the garden leads; There have I made my promise

Upon the heavy middle of the night
To call upon him. [way?]

Duke. But shall you on your knowledge find this Isab. I have taken a due and wary note upon't; With whispering and most guilty diligence, In action all of precept, he did show me
The way twice over.

Duke. Are there no other tokens Between you 'greed concerning her observance? Isab. No, none, but only a repair 't the dark; And that I have possess'd him my most stay Can be but brief: for I have made him know I have a servant comes with me along, That stays upon me, whose persuasion is I come about my brother.

Maria. 'Tis well borne up. I have not yet made known to Mariana
A word of this. What, ho! within! come forth!

Re-enter Mariana.

I pray you, be acquainted with this maid;
She desires to do you good,
I do desire the like.

Duke. Do you persuade yourself that I respect you? [It.

Maria. Good friar, I know you, and have found Duke. Take, then, this your companion by the Who hath a mystery ready for your ear. [Hand, I shall attend your leisure: but make haste;

The vaprosoor night approaches.

Maria. Will't please you walk aside?

[Exit Mariana and Isabella.]

Duke. O place and greatness! millions of false eyes Are stack upon thee; volumes of report
Run with these false and most contrarious quests
Upon thy doings: thousand escapes of wit
Make thee the father of their idle dreams
And rack thee in their fancies.

Re-enter Mariana and Isabella.

Welcome, how agreed?

Isab. She 'll take the enterprise upon her, father,
If you advise it.

Duke. It is not my consent,
But my entreaty too.

Isab. Little have you to say
When you depart from him, but, soft and low,
"Remember now my brother,"

Maria. Fear me not.

Duke. Nor, gentle daughter, fear you not at all.
He is your husband on a pre-contract;
To break you thus together, 'tis no sin,
Sith that the justice of your title to him
Doth flourish the deceit. Come, let us go:
Our corn's to reap, for yet our tithe's to sow. [Exit.

SCENE II.—A room in the prison.

Enter Provost and Pompey.

Prov. Come hither, sirrah. Can you cut off a man's head?

Pom. If the man be a bachelor, sir, I can; but if he be a married man, he's his wife's head, and I can never cut off a woman's head.

Prov. Come, sir, leave me your snatches, and yield me a direct answer. To-morrow morning are to die Claudio and Barnardine. Here is in our prison a common executioner, who in his office lacks a helper: if you will take it on you to assist him, it shall redeem you from your yokes; if not, you shall have your full time of imprisonment and your deliverance with an unpled whippimg, for you have been a notorious bawd.

Pom. Sir, I have been an unlawful bawd time out of mind; but yet I will content to be a lawful hangman. I would be glad to receive some instruction from my fellow partner.

Prov. What, ho! Abhorson! Where's Abhorson, there?

Enter Abhorson.

Abhor. Do you call, sir?

Prov. Sirrah, here's a fellow will help you to-morrow in your execution. If you think it meet, compound with him by the year, and let him abide here with you; if not, use him for the present and dismiss him. He cannot plead his estimation with you; he hath been a bawd.

Abhor. A bawd, sir? lie upon him! he will discard our mystery.

Prov. Go to, sir; you weigh equally; a feather will turn the scale. [Exit Prov.

Pom. Pray, sir, by your good favour,—for surely, sir, a good favour have you, but that you have a hanging look,—do you call, sir, your occupation a mystery?

Abhor. Ay, sir; a mystery. [mystery?

Prov. Pom. painting, sir, I have heard say, is a mystery; and your whores, sir, being members of my occupation. Painting, sir, is a mystery. But what mystery there should be in hanging, if I should be hanged, I cannot imagine. Abhor. Sir, it is a mystery.

Prov. Pom. Proof?

Abhor. Every true man's apparel fits your thief: if the too big for your thief, your true man thinks it big enough; if it be too big for your thief, your thief thinks it little enough: so every true man's apparel fits your thief.

Re-enter Provost.

Prov. Are you agreed?

Pom. Sir, I will serve him; for I do find your hangman is a more prudent thief than your bawd: he doth oftener ask forgiveness.

Prov. You, sirrah, provide your block and your axe to-morrow four o'clock.

Abhor. Come on, bawd! I will instruct thee in my trade's folly.

Pom. I do desire to learn, sir; and I hope, if you have occasion to use me for your own turn, you shall find me yare; for truly, sir, for your kindness I owe you a good turn.

Prov. Call hither Maritana and Claudio. [Exit Pompey and Abhorson.

The one has my pity; not a jot the other.

Being a murderer, though he were my brother.

Enter Claudio.

Look, here's the warrant. Claudio, for thy death: 'Tis now dead midnight, and by eight to-morrow
Thou must be made immortal. Where's Barnardine?

Clau. As fast lock'd up in sleep as guiltless labour
When it lies starkly in the traveller's bones:
He will not wake.

Pro. Who can do good on him?

Well, go, prepare yourself. [Knocking within.]

But, hark, what noise?

Heaven give your spirits comfort! [Exit Claudio.]

By and by.

I hope it is some pardon or reprieve
For the most gentle Claudio.

Enter Duke disguised as before.

Welcome, father.

Duke. The best and wholesomest spirits of the night
Envelop you, good provost! Who called here of late?

Pro. None, since the curfew rung.

Duke. Not Isabel?

Pro. No.

Duke. They will, then, ere 'tis long.

Pro. What comfort is for Claudio?

Duke. There's some in hope.

Pro. It is a bitter deputy.

Duke. Not so, not so; his life is parallel'd
Even with the stroke and line of his great justice;
He doth with holy abstinance
That in himself which he spurs on his power
To qualify in others: were he mead'd with that
Which he corrects, then were he tyrannous;
But this being so, he's just.

Pro. [Knocking within.] Now are they come, Duke.

Duke. This is a gentle provost: seldom when
The steeled gaoler is the friend of men.

[Knocking within.]

How now! what noise? That spirit's possessed
With haste [strokes].

That wounds the unsisting postern with these

Pro. There he must stay until the officer
Arise to let him in: he is call'd up.

Duke. Have you no countermand for Claudio yet,
But hast the to-morrow.

Pro. None, sir, none.

Duke. As near the dawning, provost, as it is,
You shall hear more erenow.

Pro. Happily
You something know; yet I believe there comes
No countermand; no such example have we:
Besides, upon the very siege of justice
Lord Angelo hath to the public ear
Profess'd the contrary.

Enter a Messenger.

This is his lordship's man.

Duke. And here comes Claudio's pardon.

Mes. [Giving a paper] My lord hath sent you this note; and by me this further charge, that you swerve not from the smallest article of it, neither in time, matter, or other circumstance. Good morrow: for, as I take it, it is almost day.

Pro. I shall obey him. [Exit Messenger.]

Duke. [Aside] This is his pardon, purchased by
For which the pardoner himself is in, [such sin
Hence hath offence his quick celerity,
When it is borne in high authority:
When vice makes mercy, mercy's so extended,
That for the fault's love is the offender friended.
Now, sir, what news?

Pro. I told you. Lord Angelo, belike thinking me reminis of mine office, awakens me with this unwanted putting on; methinks strangely, for he hath not used it before.

Duke. Pray you, let's hear.

Pro. [Reads]

'Whatsoever you may hear to the contrary, let Claudio be executed by four of the clock; and in the manner whereunto the same satisfaction, let me have Claudio's head sent me by five. Let this be duly performed; with a thought that more depends on it than we must yet deliver. Thus fail not to do your office, as you will answer it at your peril.'

What says you to this, sir?

Duke. What is that Barnardine who is to be executed in the afternoon?

Pro. A Bohemian born, but here nursed up and bred;
one that is a prisoner nine years old.

Duke. How came it that the absent duke had not either deliver'd him to his liberty or executed him?
I have heard it was ever his manner to do so.

Pro. His friends still wrought reprieves for him:
and, indeed, his fact, till now in the government of Lord Angelo, came not to an undoubted proof.

Duke. It is now apparent?

Pro. Most manifest, and not denied by himself.

Duke. Hath he borne himself penitently in prison?
how seems he to be touched?

Pro. A man that apprehends death no more dreadfully but as a drunken sleep; careless, reckless, and fearless of what's past, present, or to come; insensible of mortality, and desperately mortal.

Duke. He wants advice.

Pro. He will hear none; he hath evermore had the liberty of the prison; give him leave to escape hence, he would not: drunk many times a day, if not, many times drunk. We have very oft awaked him, as if to carry him to execution, and showed him a seeming warrant for it: he hath not moved him at all.

Duke. More of him anon. There is written in your brow, provost, honesty and constancy: if I read it not truly, my ancient skill beguiles me; but, in the boldness of my cunning, I will lay myself in hazard. Claudio, whom here you have warrant to execute, is no greater forfeit to the law than Angelo who hath sentenced him. To make you understand this in a manifest effect, I crave but four days' respite; for the which you are to do me both a present and a dangerous courtesy.

Pro. Pray, sir, in what?

Duke. In the delaying death.

Pro. Alack, how may I do it, having the hour limited, and an express command, under penalty, to deliver his head in the view of Angelo? I may make my case as Claudio's, to cross this in the smallest.

Duke. By the vow of mine order I warrant you, if my instructions may be your guide. Let this Barnardine be this morning executed, and his head borne to Angelo.

Pro. Angelo hath seen them both, and will discover the favour.

Duke. O, death's a great disguiser; and you may add to it. Shade the head, and tie the beard; and say it was the desire of the penitent to be so bared before his death; you know the course is common.
If any thing fall to you upon this, more than thanks and good fortune, by the saint whom I profess, I will plead against it with my life.

Pro. Pardon me, good father; it is against my oath.

Duke. Were you sworn to the duke, or to the deputy?

Pro. To him, and to his substitutes.

Duke. You will think you have made no offence, if the duke avouch the justice of your dealing?

Pro. But what likelihood is in that?

Duke. Not a resemblance, but a certainty. Yet
MEASURE FOR MEASURE. SCENE III.

I see you fearful, that neither my coat, in-uity, nor persuasion can with ease attempt you; I'll go further than I meant, to pluck all fears of you. Look you, sir, here is the hand and seal of the duke: you know the character, I doubt not: and the signet is not strange to you.

PROF. I know the hand, but not the seal. The contents of this is the return of the duke; you shall anon over-read it at your pleasure; where you shall find, within these two days he will be here. This is a thing that Angelo knows not: for he this very day receives letters of strange tenor; perchance of the duke's death; perchance of his new mastery; but, by chance, nothing of what is writ. Look, the unfolding call uses the shepherd. Put not yourself into amazement how these things should be: all difficulties are but easy when they are known. Call your executioner, and off with Barnardine's head: I will give him a present shrift and advise him for a better place. Yet you are amazed; but this shall absolutely resolve you. Come away; it is almost clear dawn.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Another room in the same.

Enter Pompey.

POM. I am as well acquainted here as I was in our house of profession: one would think it were Mistress Overdone's own house, for here be many of her old customers. First, here's young Master Rash; he's in for a commodity of brown paper and old ginger, nine-score and seventeen pounds; of which he made five marks, ready money; marry, then ginger was not much in request, for the old women were all dead. Then is there here one Master Caper, at the suit of Master Three-pile the younger, for some small quality of peach-colored satin, which now reaches him a beggar. Then have we here young Dizy, and young Master Deep-vow, and Master Copper-spar, and Master Starve-lackey the rapier and dagger man, and young Drop-heir that killed lusty Pudding, and Master Fortlight the tilter, and brave Master Shooty the great traveller, and wild Half-can that stabbed Potts, and, I think, forty more; all great doers in our trade, and are now 'for the Lord's sake.'

Enter Abhorson.

ABHOR. Sirrah, bring Barnardine hither.

POM. Master Barnardine! you must rise and be hanged, Master Barnardine!

ABHOR. What, ho, Barnardine!

BARR. [Within] A pox o' your throats! Who makes that noise there? What are you?

ABHOR. Your friends, sir; the hangman. You must be so good, sir, to rise and be put to death.

BARR. [Within] Away, you rogue, away! I am sleepy.

ABHOR. Tell him he must awake, and that quickly too.

POM. Pray, Master Barnardine, awake till you are executed, and sleep afterwards.

ABHOR. Go in to him, and fetch him out. POM. He is coming, sir, he is coming; I hear his straw rustle.

ABHOR. Is the axe upon the block, sirrah?

POM. Very ready, sir.

Enter Barnardine.

BARR. How now, Abhorson? what's the news with you?

ABHOR. Truly, sir, I would desire you to clap into your ears; for, look you, the warrant's out to-day.

BARR. You rogue, I have been drinking all night; I am not fitted for't.

POM. O, the better, sir; for he that drinks all night, and is hanged betimes in the morning, may sleep the sounder all the next day.

ABHOR. Look you, sir; here comes your ghostly father: do we jest now, think you?

Enter Duke disguised as before.

Duke. Sir, induced by my charity, and hearing how hastily you are to depart, I am come to advise you, comfort you and pray with you.

BARR. Friar, not I: I have been drinking hard all night, and I will have more time to prepare me, or they shall beat out my brains with billets: I will not consent to die to-day, that's certain.

[You Duke. O, sir, you must: and therefore I beseech Look forward on the journey you shall go.]

BARR. I swear I will not die to-day for any man's persuasion.

Duke. But hear you.

BARR. Not a word: if you have any thing to say to me, come to my ward; for thence will not I to-day.

[Exit.]

Duke. Unfit to live or die; O gravel heart! After him, fellows; bring him to the block.

[Exeunt Abhorson and Pompey.

Re-enter Provost.

PROF. Now, sir, how do you find the prisoner?

Duke. A creature unprepared, unmeet for death; And to transport him in the mind he is Were damnable.

PROF. Here in the prison, father, There died this morning of a cruel fever One Ragozine, a most notorious pirate, A man of Claudio's years; his beard and head Just of his colour. What if we do omit This reprobate till he were well inclined; And satisfy the deputy with the visage Of Ragozine, more like to Claudio?

Duke. O, 'tis an accident that heaven provides! Dispatch it presently: the hour draws on Prefix'd by Angelo; see this be done, And sent according to command: whilsts I Persuade this rude wretch willingly to die. This shall be done, good father, presently. But Barnardine must die this afternoon; And how shall we continue Claudio, To save me from the danger that might come If he were known alive?

Duke. Let this be done, Put them in secret holds, both Barnardine and Claudio: Ere twice the sun hath made his journal greeting To the under generation, you shall find Your safety manifested.

PROF. I am thy free dependant.

Duke. Quick, dispatch, and send the head to Angelo.

[Exit Provost.]

Now will I write letters to Angelo,— The provost, he shall bear them,—whose contents Shall witness to him I am near at home, And that, by great injunctions, I am bound To enter publicly: him I'll desire To meet me at the consecrated fount A league below the city: and from thence, By cold gradation and well-balanced form, We shall proceed with Angelo.

Re-enter Provost.

PROF. Here is the head; I'll carry it myself. Duke. Convenient is it. Make a swift return; For I would commune with you of such things That want no ear but yours.

Duke. The tongue of Isabel, she's come to know If yet her brother's pardon be come hither: But I will keep her ignorant of her good,

71
To make her heavenly comforts of despair,
When it is least expected.

Enter Isabella.

Isab. Ho, by your leave!
Duke. Good morning to you, fair and gracious daughter.

Isab. The better, given me by so holy a man.

Hath yet the deputy sent my brother's pardon?
Duke. He hath released him, Isabel, from the His head is off and sent to Angelo.
[world:]
Isab. Nay, but it is not so.

Duke. It is no other; show your wisdom, daughter, In your close patience.
Isab. O, I will to him and pluck out his eyes!
Duke. You shall not be admitted to his sight.

Isab. Unhappy Claudio! wretched Isabel!
Injured world! most damned Angelo!
Duke. This nor hurts him nor profits you a jot; Forbear it therefore; give your cause to heaven.
Mark what I say, which you shall find By every syllable a faithful verity:
[eyes;
The duke comes home to-morrow; nay, dry your One of our convent, and his confessor,
Gives me this instance: already he hath carried Notice to Escalus of Angelo.
Who do prepare to meet him at the gates, There to give up their power. If you can, pace your wisdom
In that good path that I would wish it go, And you shall have your bosom on this wretch, Grace of the duke, revenges to your heart, And general honour.
Isab. I am directed by you.

Duke. This letter, then, to Friar Peter give; 'Tis that he sent me of the duke's return: Say, by this token, I desire his company At Mariana's house to-night. Her cause and yours I'll perfect him withal, and he shall bring you Before the duke, and to the head of Angelo Accuse him home and home. For my poor self, I am combined by a sacred vow
And shall be absent. Wendi you with this letter; Command these fretting waters from your eyes With a light heart; trust not my holy order, If I pervert your course. Who's here?

Enter Lucio.

Lucio. Good even. Friar, where's the provost?
Duke. Not within, sir.

Lucio. O pretty Isabel, I am pale at mine heart to see thine eyes so red: thou must be patient. I am fain to dine and sup with water and bran; I dare not for my head fill my belly; one fruitful meal would set me to 't. But they say the duke will be here to-morrow. By my troth, Isabel, I loved the brother; if the old fantastical duke of dark corners had been at home, he had lived.

[Exit Isabella.

Duke. Sir, the duke is marvellous little beholding to your reports; but the best is, he lives not in them.

Lucio. Friar, thou knowest not the duke so well as I do: he's a better woodman than thou takest him for.

Duke. Well, you'll answer this one day. Fare ye well.

Lucio. Nay, tarry; I'll go along with thee: I can tell thee pretty tales of the duke.
Duke. You have told me too many of him already, sir, if they be true; if not true, none were enough.

Lucio. I was once before him for getting a wench with child.

Duke. Did you such a thing?

Lucio. Yes, marry, did I; but I was fain to forswear it; they would else have married me to the rotten medicinal.

Duke. Sir, your company is fairer than honest. Rest you well.

Lucio. By my troth, I'll go with thee to the lane's end; if bawdy talk offend you, we'll have very little of it. Nay, triar, i am a kind of barb: I shall stick.
[Exit.

SCENE IV.—A room in Angelo's house.

Enter Angelo and Escalus.

Escal. Every letter he hath writ hath dismounted other.

Ang. In most uneven and distracted manners. His actions show much like to madness; pray heaven his wisdom be not tainted! And why meet him at the gates, and redeliver our authorities Escal. I guess not.
[there?
Ang. And why should we proclaim it in an hour before his entering, that if any crave redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street?

Escal. He shows his reason for that: to have a dispatch of complaints, and to deliver us from devices hereafter, which shall then have no power to stand against us.

Ang. Well, thou beseech me, let it be proclaimed betimes i'th' morn; I'll call you at your house: give notice to such men of sort and suit as are to meet him.

Escal. I shall, sir. Fare you well.

Ang. Good night.

[Exit Escalus.

This deed unshapes me quite, makes me unpregnant And dull to all proceedings. A deflower'd maid! And by an eminent body that enforced The law against it! But that her tender shame Will not proclaim against her maiden lost, How might she tongue me! Yet reason dares him.

For my authority bears of a credent bulk, That no particular scandal once can touch [lived, But it confounds the breadth. He should have Saved that his riotous youth, with dangerous sense, Might in the times to come have ta'en revenge, By so receiving a dishonour'd life With ransom of such shame. Would yet he had lived!

Aack, when once our grace we have forgot, Nothing goes right: we would, and we would not.
[Exit.

SCENE V.—Fields without the town.

Enter Duke in his own habit, and Friar Peter.

Duke. These letters at fit time deliver me;
[Giving letters.
The provost knows our purpose and our plot. The matter being afoot, keep your instructions, And hold you ever to our special drift: Though sometimes you do blemish from this to that, As cause doth minister. Go call at Flavins' house, And tell him where I stay; give the like notice To Valentians, Rowland, and to Crassus, And bid them bring the trumpets to the gate; But send me Flavins first.

Fri. P. It shall be speeded well.
[Exit.

Duke. I thank thee, Varrius; thou hast made good haste: Come, we will walk. There's other of our friends Will greet us here anon, my gentle Varrius.
[Exit.

SCENE VI.—Street near the city gate.

Enter Isabella and Mariana.

Isab. To speak so indirectly I am loath: I would say the truth; but to accuse him so,
Enter Friar Peter.

Fri. P. Come, I have found you out a stand most Where you may have such vantage on the duke, [sit,
He shall not pass you. Twice have the trumpets
The generous and gravest city sound; [sounded;
Have bent the gates, and very near upon
The duke is entering; therefore, hence, away!

[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The city gate.

Mariana visited, Isabella, and Friar Peter, at their stand, Enter Duke, Varrius, Lords, Angelo, Escalus, Lucio, Provost, Officers, and Citizens, at several doors.

Duke. My very worthy cousin, fairly met!
Our old and faithful friend, we are glad to see you.

Ang. Happy return be to your royal grace!

Duke. Many and hearty thankings to you both.
We have made inquiry of you; and we hear
Such goodness of your justice, that our soul
Cannot but yield you forth to public thanks,
For running more requital.

Ang. You make my bonds still greater.

Duke. O, your desert speaks loud; and I should Wrong it, to lock it in the wards of covert bosom,
When it deserves, with characters of brass,
A forlorn residence 'gainst the tooth of time
And rack of oblivion, wipe me your hand,
And let the subject see, to make them know
That outward courtesies would fain proclaim
Favours that keep within. Come, Escalus,
You must walk by us on our other hand;
And good supporters are you.

Friar Peter and Isabella come forward.

Fri. P. Now is your time; speak loud and kneel before him.

Isab. Justice, O royal duke! Veil your regard
Upon a wrong'd, I would fain have said, a maid!
A worthy prince, dishonour not me your hand
By throwing it on any other object
Till you have heard me in my true complaint
And given me justice, justice, justice, justice!

Duke. Relate your wrongs: in what? by whom?
be brief.
Here is Lord Angelo shall give you justice:
Reveal yourself to him.

Isab. O worthy duke,
You bid me seek redemption of the devil:
Hear me yourself; for that which I must speak
Must either punish me, or not be believed, [here!
Or wring my tears from you. Hear me. O hear me,
Ang. My lord, her wits. I fear me, are not firm:
She hath been a suitor to me for her brother
Cut off by course of justice,—

Isab. By course of justice!

Ang. And she will speak most bitterly and strangely.

Isab. Most strange, but yet most truly, will I speak:
That Angelo's forsworn, is it not strange?
That Angelo's a murderer: is 't not strange?
That Angelo is an adulterous thief,
An hypocrite, a virgin-violator;
Is it not strange and strange?

Duke. Nay, it is ten times strange.

Isab. It is not truer in Angelo
Than this is all as true as it is strange:
Nay, it is ten times true; for truth is truth
To the end of reckoning.

Duke. Away with her! Poor soul,
She speaks this in the intensity of sense.

Isab. O prince, I conjure thee, as thou believest
There is another comfort than this world,
That thou neglect me not, with that opinion
That I am touch'd with madness! Make not impossible
That which but seems unlike: 'tis not impossible
But one, the wickedest of all, on the ground,
May seem as shy, as grave, as just, as absolute
As Angelo; even so may Angelo.
In all his dressings, characters, titles, forms,
Be an arch-villain; believe it, royal prince:
If he be less, he's nothing; but he's more,
Had I more name for badness.

Duke. By mine honesty,
If she be mad, as I believe no other,—
Her madness hath the oddest frame of sense,
Such a dependency of thing on thing,
As e'er I heard in madness.

Isab. O gracious duke,
Harp not on that, nor do not banish reason
For inequality; but let your reason serve
To make the truth appear where it seems hid,
And hide the false seems true.

Duke. Many that are not mad
Have, sure, more lack of reason. What would you
Isab. I am the sister of one Claudio,
[say? Condemned upon the act of fornication
To lose his head; condemned by Angelo;
I, in probation of a sisterhood,
Was sent to by my brother; one Lucio
As then the messenger.—

Lucio. That's I, an't like your grace:
I came to her from Claudio, and desired her
To try her gracious fortune with Lord Angelo
For her poor brother's pardon.

Isab. That's he indeed.

Duke. You were not bid to speak.

Lucio. No, my good lord;
Nor wish'd to hold my peace.

Duke. I wish you now, then;
Pray you, take note of it: and when you have
A business for yourself, pray heaven you then
Be perfect.

Lucio. I warrant your honour.

Duke. The warrant's for yourself; take heed of 't.

Isab. This gentleman told somewhat of my tale.—

Lucio. Right.

Duke. It may be right; but you are 't the wrong
To speak before your time. Proceed.

Isab. I went
To this pernicious caiffat deputy,—

Duke. That's somewhat madly spoken.

Isab. Pardon it:
The phrase is to the matter.

Isab. In brief, to set the needless process by How I persuad'd, how I pray'd, and kneel'd,
How he refell'd me, and how I replied,—

For this was of much length.—the vile conclusion
I now begin with grief and shame to utter:

73
He would not, but by gift of my chaste body
To his conceivably intemperate lust.
Release my brother; and, after much deputation,
My sister renders counsels with as much
And I did yield to him: but the next morn betimes,
His purpose surfeiting, he sends a warrant
For my poor brother's head.

Duke. This is most likely!

Duke. 0, that it were as like as it is true!

Duke. By heaven, foul wretch, thou know'st not What thou speakest.

Or else thou art a born d'gainst his honour
In hateful practice. First, his integrity
Stands without blemish. Next, it imports no reason
That a veil be对面 this he should pursue
Faults proper to himself: if he had so offended,
He would have weighed thy brother by himself
And not have cut him off. Some one hath set you Confess the truth, and say by whose advice [on:
Thou canst here to complain.

Isab. And is this all?

Then, 0 you blessed ministers above,
Keep me in patience, and with ripen'd time
Unfold the evil which is here warpped up [woe,
In countenance! Heaven shield your grace from
As I, thus wrong'd, hence unbelieved go!

Duke. I know you 'll fail be gone. An officer!
To prophesY with him here in my retirement.
A blasting and a scandalous breath to fall
On him so near us? This needs must be a practice,
Who knew of your intent and coming hither?

Isab. One that I would were here, Friar Lodowick.

Duke. A ghostly father, belike. Who knows
How it may be that Lodowick?

Lucio. My lord, I know him; 'tis a meddling friar;
I do not like the man: had he been my lord,
For certain words he spoke against your grace
In your retirement, I had swing'd him soundly.

Duke. Words against me! this is a good friar, be-
And to set on this wicked woman here [like!
Against our substitute! Let this friar be found.

Lucio. But yesternight, my lord, she and that friar,
I saw them at the prison: a saucy friar,
A very scoundrel fellow.

Fri. P. Bless'd be your royal grace!
I have stood by, my lord, and I have heard
Your royal ear abused. First, hath this woman
Most wrongfully accused your substitute,
Who is as free from touch or soil with her
As she from one ungot.

Duke. We did believe no less.

Know you that Friar Lodowick that she speaks of?

Fri. P. I know him for a man divine and holy;
Not scurvy, nor a temporary meddler,
As he's reported by this gentleman;
And, on my trust, a man that never yet
Did, as he voices, misreport your grace.

Lucio. My lord, most villainously! believe it.

Fri. P. Well, he in time may come to clear him-
But at this instant he is sick, my lord, [self;
Of a strange fever. Upon his mere request,
Being come to knowledge that there was complaint
Intended against Lord Angelo, came I hither,
To speak, as from his mouth, what he doth know
Is true and false: and what he with his oath
And all probation will make up full clear,
Whenceover he's convented. First, for this woman,
To justify this worthy nobleman,
So vulgarly and personally accused,
Her sense rav'd to her eyes, Till she herself confess it.

Duke. Good friar, let 's hear it.

[Isabella is carried off guarded; and Mariana comes forward.

Do you not smile at this, Lord Angelo?
O heaven, the vanity of wretched tools!
Give us some seats. Come, cousin Angelo;
In this I'll be impartial; be you judge
Of your own cause. Is this the witness, friar?

First, let her show her face, and after speak.

Mari. Pardon, my lord; I will not show my face
Until my husband bid me.

Duke. What, are you married?

Mari. No, my lord.

Duke. Are you a maid?

Mari. No, my lord.

Duke. A widow, then?

Mari. Neither, my lord.

Duke. Why, you are nothing then; neither maid,
Widow, nor wife.

Lucio. My lord, she may be a punk: for many of
This kind are neither maid, widow, nor wife. [fane Duke. Silence! that fellow: I would he had some
To prattle for himself.

Lucio. Well, my lord.

Mari. My lord, I do confess I ne'er was married;
And I confess besides I am no maid:
I have known my husband; yet my husband
Knows not that ever he knew me. [better.

Lucio. He was drunk then my lord: it can be no
Duke. For the benefit of silence, would thou wert
Lucio. Well, my lord. [so too.

Duke. This is no witness for Lord Angelo.

Mari. Now I come to it, my lord:
She thinks I have no sense of formality,
In self-same manner doth accuse my husband,
And charges him, my lord, with such a time
When I'll depose I had him in mine arms
With all the effect of love.

Aug. Charges she more than me?

Mari. No, Lord. Not that I know.

Duke. No? you say your husband.

Mari. Why, just, my lord, and that is Angelo,
Who thinks he knows that he ne'er knew my body,
But knows he thinks that he knows Isabel's.

Aug. This is a strange abuse. Let's see thy face.

Mari. My husband bids me: now I will un-

[Unveiling.

This is that face, thou cruel Angelo,
Which once thou sworest was worth the looking on;
This is the hand which, with a vow'd contract,
Was fast belock'd in thine; this is the body
That to my loving matched from Isabel,
And did supply thee at thy garden-house
In her imagined person.

Duke. Know you this woman?

Lucio. Carnally, she says.

Duke. Sirrah, no more!

Lucio. Enough, my lord.

Aug. My lord, I must confess I know this woman:
And five years since there was some speech of marriage

Betwixt myself and her: which was broke off,
Partly for that her promised proportions
Come short of composition, but in chief
For that her reputation was disvalued
In levity: since which time of five years
I never spake with her, saw her, nor heard from her,
Upon my faith and honour.

Mori. Noble prince, [breath,
As there comes light from heaven and words from
As there is sense in truth and truth in virtue,
I am affianced this man's wife as strongly
As words could make up vows: and, my good lord,
But Tuesday night last gone in 's garden-house
He knew me as a wife. As this is true,
Let me in shape of things do me a favour:
Or else for ever be confixed here,
A marble monument.

Aug. I did but smile till now:
Now, good my lord, give me the scope of justice;
My patience here is touch'd. I do perceive
These poor informal women are pitiful
But instruments of some more mightier member
v. MEASURE FOR MEASURE. SCENE I.

Sets them on: let me have way, my lord, and this practice out.

Duke. Ay, with my heart; and punish them to your height of pleasure.

Thou foolish friar, and thou pernicious woman, Comparest in her that’s gone, think’s she thy faults.

[saint, though they would swear down each particular, Were testimonies against his worth and credit

That’s seal’d in approbation? You, Lord Escalus, sit with my cousin; lend him your kind pains To find out this abuse, whence ‘tis derived.

There is another friar that set them on;

Let him be sent for. [deed

Fri. P. Would he were here, my lord! for he in-f HIGH set the women on to this complaint:

Your provost knows the place where he abides And he may fetch him.

And you, my noble and well-warranted cousin, Whom it concerns to hear this matter forth, Do with your injuries as seems you best, In any chastisement: I for a while will leave you; But still I hope you have well determined Upon these slanders.

Escal. My lord, we’ll do it thoroughly.

[Exit Duke.

Signior Lucio, did not you say you knew that Friar Lodowick to be a dishonest person?

Lucio. Aye, sir. ‘Greenbeard, monachum!’ honest in nothing but in his clothes; and one that hath spoke most villainous speeches of the duke.

Escal. We shall entreat you to abide here till he come and enforce them against him: we shall find this friar a notable fellow.

Lucio. As any in Vienna, on my word.

Escal. Call that same Isabel here once again; I would speak with her. [Exit an Attendant.] Pray you, my lord, give me leave to question; you shall see how I’ll handle her.

Lucio. Not better than he, by her own report.

Escal. Say you? Lucio. Marry, sir, I think, if you handled her privately, she would sooner confess: perchance, publicly, she’ll be ashamed.

Escal. I will go darkly to work with her.

Lucio. That’s the way; for women are light at midnight.

Recent Officers with Isabella; and Provost with the Duke in his friar’s habit.

Escal. Come on, mistress; here’s a gentlewoman denies all that you have said.

Lucio. My lord, here comes the rascal I spoke of; here with the provost.

Escal. In very good time: speak not you to him till we call upon you.

Lucio. Mum.

Escal. Come, sir; did you set these women on to slander Lord Angelo? they have confessed you did.

Duke. This is false; thou factum meminisse! honest in nothing but in his clothes; and one that speaks.

Escal. How! know you where you are? [devil

Duke. Respect to your great place! and let the Duke. Boldly, at least. But, O, poor souls, Come you to seek the lamb here of the fox? Good night to your redress! Is the duke gone? Then is your case gone too. The duke’s unjust, Thus to retort your manifold appeal, And put your trial in the villain’s mouth Which here you come to accuse.

Lucio. This is the rascal; this is he I spoke of.

Escal. Why, than unrevenged and unhallowed friar,

Is’t not enough thou hast suborn’d these women To accuse this worthy man, but, in foul mouth And in the witness of his proper ear,

To call him villain? and then to glance from him To the duke himself, to tax him with injustice? Take him hence! and to the rack with him! We’ll tone you

Joint by joint, but we will know his purpose.

What ‘unjust’!

Duke. Be not so hot: the duke Dare no more stretch this finger of mine than he Dare rock his own: his subject am I not, Nor here provincial. My business in this state Made me a looker on here in Vienna, Where I have seen corruption boil and bubble Till it over-run the stew; laws for all faults. But faults so com teethed, that the strong statutes Stand like the forfeits in a barber’s shop,

As much in mock as mark. [prison

Escal. Slander to the state! Away with him to Aug. What can you vouch against him, Signior Is this the man that you did tell us of? [Lucio? Lucio. ‘Tis he, my lord. Come hither, goodman baldacine: doth this fellow prove him to be?

Duke. I remember you, sir, by the sound of your voice: I met you at the prison, in the absence of the duke.

Lucio. O, did you so? And do you remember what you said of the duke?

Duke. Most notably.

Lucio. Do you so, sir? And was the duke a flesh-monger, a fool, and a coward, as you then reported him to be?

Duke. You must, sir, change persons with me, ere you make that my report: you, indeed, spoke so of him; and much more, much worse.

Lucio. O thou damnable fellow! Did not I pluck thee by the nose for thy speeches?

Duke. I protest I love the duke as I love myself.

Aug. Hark, how the villain would close now, after his treasurous abuses!

Escal. Such a fellow is not to be talked withal, Away with him to prison! Where is the provost? Away with him to prison! lay bolts enough upon him: let him speak no more. Away with these giglets too, and with the other confederate companions!

Lucio. Come, sir; come, sir; come, sir; 0h, sir! Why, you baldacine, lying rascal, you must be hooded, must you? Show your knife’s visage, with a pax to you! show your sheep-biting face, and be hanged an hour! Will it not off?

[Pulls off the friar’s hood, and discovers the Duke.

Duke. Thou art the first knave that e’er made a duke.

First, provost, let me bile these gentle three. [To Lucio] Sneak not away, sir; for the friar and Must have a word anon. Lay hold on him. [To Lucio. This may not be false.

Duke. [To Escalus] What have you spoken I pardon; sit you down: [your leave.

We’ll borrow place of him. [To Angelo] Sir, by Haste thou or word, or wit, or impudence. That yet can do thee office? If thou hast, Rely upon it thou mayst not be heard, And hold no longer out.

Aug. O my dread lord, I should be guiltier than my guiltiness, To think I can be undiscernible, When I perceive your grace, like power divine, Hath look’d upon my passes. Then, good prince, No longer session hold upon my shame, But let my trial be mine own confession: Immediate sentence then and sequent death Is all the grace I beg.
ACT V.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.
SCENE I.

Duke.  Come hither, Mariana.  Say, wast thou e'er contracted to this woman?
Mar.  I was, my lord.
Duke.  Go take her hence, and marry her instantly.
Do you the office, friar; which consorts you.
Retire here again.  Go with him, Provost.
[Exit Angelo, Mariana, Friar Peter and Provost.
Recall.  Duke.  My lord, I am more amazed at his dishonour
Than at the strangeness of it.
Duke.  Come hither, Isabel.  Your year is now your prince; as I was then Advancing and holy to your business,
Not changing heart with habit, I am still Attorney'd at your service.
Isab.  O, give me pardon,
That I, your vassal, have employ'd and pain'd
Your unknown sovereignty!
Duke.  You are pardon'd, Isabel:
And now, dear maid, be you as free to us.
Your brother's death, I know, sits at your heart;
And you may marvel why I obscured myself,
Labouring to save his life, and would not rather
Make rash renouncement of my hidden power
Than him so be lost.  O uncle, they say,
It was the swift celerity of his death,
Which I did think with slower foot came on,
That brain'd my purpose.  But, peace be with him!
That life is better life, past fearing death,
Than that which lives to fear: make it your comfort,
So happy is your brother.
I do, my lord.
Recall.  Angelo, Mariana, Friar Peter, and Provost.
Duke.  For this new-arrived man approaching
Whose salt imagination yet hath wrong'd
Here, your well defended honour, you must pardon
For Mariana's sake; but as he adjudged your Being criminal, in double violation
Of sacred chastity and of promise-break
Thereon dependent, for your brother's life,—
The very mercy of the law cries out
Most audible, even from his proper tongue,
'An Angelo for Claudio, death for death!'
Haste still pays haste, and leisure answers leisure;
Like doth quittance, and measure still for measure.
Then, Angelo, thy fault's thus manifested:
'Three times three, and then three:
Which, though thou wouldst deny, denies thee vain.
We do condemn thee to the very block
Stage, Where Claudio stoop'd to death, and with like haste.
Away with him!
Mari.  O my most gracious lord,
I hope you will not mock me with a husband.
Duke.  It is your husband mock'd you with a husbando
Consenting to the safeguard of your honour,
I thought your marriage fit: else imputation;
For that he knew you, might reproach your life
And choke your good to come: for his possessions,
Although by concentration they are ours,
We do instate and widow you withal,
To buy you a better husband.
Mari.  O my dear lord,
I crave no other, nor no better man.
Duke.  Never crave him; we are definite.
Mari.  Gently my liege,—
Kneeling.  You do but lose your labour.
Away with him to death!  [To Lucio] Now, sir, to you.
Mari.  O my good lord! Sweet Isabel, take my part;
Lend me your knees, and all my life to come
I'll lend you all my life to do you service.
Duke.  Against all sense you do importune her:
Should him be there again,
Hiscr Banner's ghost his paved bed would break,
And take her hence in horror.
Mari.  Isabel,
Sweet Isabel, do yet but kneel by me;
Hold up your hands, say nothing; I'll speak all.

They say, best men are moulded out of faults;
And, for the most, become much more the better
For being a little bad: so may my husband.
O Isabel, will you not lend a knee?
Duke.  He dies for Claudio's death.
Isto.  Most bounteous sir, [Kneeling.
Look, if it please you, on this man condition'd,
As if my brother lived: I partly think
A due sincerity govern'd his deeds,
Till he did look on me: since it is so,
Let him not die. My brother had but justice,
In that he did the thing for which he died:
For Angelo,
His act did not o'ertake his bad intent,
And must be buried but as an intent
That perish'd by the way; thoughts are no subjects;
Intentions but merely thoughts.
Mari.  Merely, my lord,
Duke.  Your suit's unprofitable: stand up, I say.
I have bethought me of another fault.
Provost, how came it Claudio was beheaded
At an unusual hour?
Prov.  'Twas it commanded so.
Duke.  Had you a special warrant for the deed?
Prov.  No, my good lord; it was by private message.
Duke.  For which I do discharge you of your office:
Give up your keys.
Prov.  Pardon me, noble lord:
I thought it was a fault, but knew it not;
Yet, it being sent me, after I had done it:
O, my good lord,
Recall.  Provost, with Barnardine, Claudio muffled, and Juliet.
Duke.  Which is that Barnardine?
Prov.  This, my lord.
Duke.  There was a friar told me of this man.
Sirrah, thou art said to have a stubborn soul;
That apprehends no further than this world,
And squares thy life according. Thou 'rt condemn'd;
But, for those earthly faults, I quit them all;
And pray thee take this mercy to provide
For better times to come. Friar, advise him; [that?
I leave him to your hand. What muffled fellow's
Prov.  This is another prisoner that I saved,
Who should have died when Claudio lost his head;
As like almost to Claudio as himself.

[Unmuffles Claudio.
Duke.  [To Isabella] If he be like your brother,
For his sake
Is he pardon'd; and, for your lovely sake,
Give me your hand and say you will be mine,
He is my brother too: but fitter time for that.
By this Lord Angelo perceives he's safe;
Mathinks I see a quickening in his eye.
Well may he; your evil quits you well;
[yours.
Look that you love your wife; her worth worth I find an apt remission in myself;
And yet here's one in place I cannot pardon.
[To Lucio] You, sirrah, that knew me for a fool,
A one of luxury, an ass, a madman;
[coyward,
ACT V.

MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SCENE I.

Lucio. Marrying a punk, my lord, is pressing to death, whipping, and hanging.

Duke. Slandering a prince deserves it.

[Exeunt Officers with Lucio.

She, Claudio, that you wrong'd, look you restore.

Joy to you, Mariana! Love her, Angelo:

I have confess'd her and I know her virtue.

Thanks, good friend Escalus, for thy much good-there's more behind that is more grateulable.

Thanks, provost, for thy care and secrecy:

We shall employ thee in a worthier place.

Forgive him, Angelo, that brought you home

The head of Ragozine for Claudio's:

The offence pardons itself. Dear Isabel,

I have a motion much imports your good;

Whereo if you'll a willing ear incline,

What's mine is yours and what is yours is mine.

So, bring us to our palace; where we'll show

What's yet behind, that's meet you all should know.

[Exeunt.

Lucio.—I warrant, it is: and thy head stands so tickle on thy shoulders, that a milkmaid, if she be in love, may sigh it off.

Send after the duke, and appeal to him.

Claudio.—I have done so, but he's not to be found.

I prithee, Lucio, do me this kind service.

This day my sister should the cloister enter,

And there receive her approbation:

Acquaint her with the danger of my state:

Implore her, in my voice, that she make friends

To the strict deputy; bid herself essay him:

I have great hope in that; for in her youth

There is a prone and speechless dialect,

Such as move men; beside, she hath prosperous art,

When she will play with reason and discourse,

And well she can persuade.—Act I., Scene ii.

SCENE—Ephesus.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—A hall in the Duke’s palace.

Enter Duke, Egeon, Gaoler, Officers, and other Attendants.

Ege. Proceed, my lords, to procure my fall
And by the doom of death end woes and all.

Duke. Merchant of Syracuse, plead no more;
I am not partial to infringe our laws:
The enmity and discord which of late
Sprung from the rancorous outrage of your duke
To merchants, our well-dealing countrymen,
Who wanting guilders to redeem their lives
Have sealed his rigorous statutes with their bloods,
Excludes all pity from our threatening looks.
For, since the mortal and intestine jars
Twist thy sedulous countrymen and us,
It hath in solemn synods been decreed,
Both by the Syracusans and ourselves,
To admit no traffic to our adverse towns:
Nay, more,
If any born at Ephesus be seen
At any Syracusan marts and fairs;
Again: if any Syracusan born
Come to the law of Ephesus, he dies,
His goods confiscate to the duke’s dispose,
Unless a thousand marks be levied,
To quit the penalty and to ransom him.
Thy substance, valued at the highest rate,
Cannot amount unto a hundred marks;
Therefore by law thou art condemn’d to die.

Ege. Yet this my comfort: when your words are My woes end likewise with the evening sun. [Done,

Duke. Well, Syracusan, say in brief the cause
Why thou departest from thy native home
And for what cause thou comest to Ephesus.

Ege. A heavier task could not have been imposed
Than I to speak my griefs unspeakable:
Yet, that the world may witness that my end
Was wrought by nature, not by vile offence,
I’ll utter what my sorrow gives me leave.
In Syracuse was I born, and wed
Unto a woman, happy but for me,
And by me, had not our hap been bad.
With her I lived in joy; our wealth increased
By prosperous voyages I often made
To Epidamnum; till my factor’s death
And the great care of goods at random left

Drew me from kind embracements of my spouse:
From whom my absence was not six months old.
Before herself, almost at fainting under
The pleasing punishment that women bear,
Had made provision for her following me
And soon and safe arrived where I was.
There had she not been long but she became
A joyful mother of two goodly sons;
And, which was strange, the one so like the other
As could not be distinguish’d but by names.
That very hour and in the self-same inn
A meaner woman was deliver’d
Of such a burden, male twins, both alike:
Those, for their parents were exceeding poor,
I bought and brought up to attend my sons.
My wife, not meanly proud of such two boys,
Made daily motions for our home return:
Unwilling I agreed; alas! too soon
We came aboard.

A league from Epidamnum had we sail’d,
Before the always wind-obeying deep
Gave any tragic instance of our harm;
But longer did we not retain much hope;
For what obscured light the heavens did grant
Did but convey unto our fearful minds
A doubtful warrant of immediate death;
Which though myself would gladly have embraced,
Yet the incessant weepings of my wife,
Weeping before for what she saw must come,
And piteous plaintings of the pretty babies,
That mourn’d for fashion, ignorant what to fear,
Forced me to seek delays for them and me.
And this it was, for other means was none:
The sailors sought for safety by our boat,
And left the ship, then sinking-ripe, to us:
My wife, more careful for the latter-born,
Had fasten’d him unto a small spare mast,
Such as scaring men provide for storms;
To him one of the other twins was bound,
Whilst I had been like heedful of the other:
The children thus disposed, my wife and I,
Fixing our eyes on whom our care was fix’d,
Fasten’d ourselves at either end the mast:
And floating straight, obedient to the stream,
Were carried towards Corinth, as we thought.
At length the sun, gazying upon the earth,
Dispersed those vapours that offend’d us;
Scene II.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse, Dromio of Syracuse, and First Merchant.

First Mer. Therefore give out your are of Epidamn-last that your goods too soon be confiscate. [nunn. This very day a Syracusean merchant

Is apprehended for arrival here.
And not being able to buy out his life
According to the statute of the town
Dies ere the lawyer's help can reach.
There is your money that I had to keep.

Ant. S. Go bear it to the Centaur, where we host,
And stay there, Dromio, till I come to thee.
Within this hour it will be dinner-time:
Till that, I'll view the manner of the town,
Peruse the traders, gaze upon the buildings,
And then return and sleep within mine inn,
For with long travel I am stiff and weary.
Get thee away.

Dro. S. Many a man would take you at your word,
And go indeed, having so good a mean.

[Exit. Ant. S. Abstain by yourこちら, that very off,
When I am dull with care and melancholy,
Lightens my humour with his merry jests.
What, will you walk with me about the town,
And then go to my inn and dine with me?

First Mer. I am invited, sir, to certain merchants,
Of whom I hope to make much benefit;
I crave your pardon. Soon at five o'clock,
Please you, I'll meet with you upon the mart
And afterward consort you till bed-time:
My present business calls me from you now.

Ant. S. Farewell till then: I will go lose myself
And wander up and down to view the city.

First Mer. Sir, I commend you to your own content.

[Exit.

Ant. S. He that commends me to mine own credit
Commends me to the thing I cannot get.
I tent to the world am like a drop of water
Tha in the ocean seeks another drop.
Who, falling there to find his fellow forth,
Unseen, inquisitive, contounds himself:
So I, to find a mother and a brother,
In quest of them, unhappy, lose myself.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Here comes the almanac of my true date.
What now? how chance thou art return'd so soon?

Dro. E. Return'd so soon! rather approach'd too
The capon burns, the pig falls from the spit. [late:
The clock hath strucken twelve upon the bell;
My mistress made it one upon my cheek:
She is so hot by the fire, it may be,
The meat is cold because you come not home;
You come not home because you have no stomach;
You have no stomach having broke your fast;
But we that know what 'tis to fast and pray
Are penitent for your default to day.
[pray.

Ant. S. Well, Dromio, tell me this, I,
Where have you the money that I gave you?

Dro. E. O,—sixpence, that I had o' Wednesday
To pay the saddler for my mistres's crupper? [last
The saddler had it, sir: I kept it not.

Ant. S. I am not in a sportive humour now:
Tell me, and dally not, where is the money?
We being strangers here, how dar'st thou trust
So great a charge from thine own custody?

Dro. E. I pray you, jest, sir, as you sit at dinner:
I from my mistress come to you in post;
If I return, I shall be post indeed.
For she will score your fault upon my pate,
Methinks your maw, like mine, should be your clock
And strike you home without a messenger.

Ant. S. Come, Dromio, come, these jests are out of season;
Reserve them till a merrier hour than this.
Where is the gold I gave in charge to thee?

Dro. E. To me, sir? why, you gave no gold to me.

Ant. S. Come on, sir knave, have done your foolishness
And tell me how thou hast disposed thy charge.

Dro. E. My charge was but to fetch you from the mart.
ACT II.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

Scene I.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Neither my husband nor the slave return'd; That in such haste I sent to seek his master! Sure, Luciana, it is two o'clock.

Luc. Perhaps some merchant hath invited him And from the mart he's somewhere gone to dinner. Good sister, let us dine and never fret. A man is master of his liberty: Time is his master, and we must see them time They'll go or come: if so, be patient, sister.

Adr. Why should their liberty than ours be more? Luc. Because their business still lies out of door.

Adr. There's none but asses will be bridled so. Luc. Why, headstrong liberty is lash'd with woe. There's nothing situate under heaven's eye But hath his bound, in earth, in sea, in sky: The beasts, the fishes and the winged fowls Are their mates' subjects and at their controls: Men, more divine, the masters of all these, Lords of the wide world and wild watery seas, Indulged with intellectual sense and souls, Of more precedence than fish and fowls, Are masters to their females, and their lords: Then let your will attend on their accords.

Adr. This servitude makes you to keep unmoved. Luc. Nay, not this, but troubles of the marriage-bed. Adr. But, were you wedded, you would bear some sway. Luc. Ere I learn love, I'll practise to obey.

Adr. How if your husband start some other where?

Luc. Till he come home again, I would forbear.

Adr. T'is patience mov'd! no marvel though she pause. They can be meek that have no other cause. A wretched soul, bruised with adversity, We bid be quiet when we hear it cry; But were we burden'd with like weight of pain, As much or more we should ourselves complain: So thou, that hast no kind Neil to grieve thee, With urging helpless patience wouldst relieve me; But, if thou live to see like right bereft, This fool-beg'rd patience in thee will be left.

Adr. Here comes your man; now is your husband nigh.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus.

Adr. Say, is thy tardy master now at hand?

Dro. Nay, he's at two hands with me, and that my two ears can witness.

Adr. Say, didst thou speak with him? know'st thou his mind?

Dro. Ay, ay, he told me his mind upon mine ear; Bespresh his hand, I scarce could understand it. Luc. Spake he so doubtfully, thou couldst not feel his meaning? Dro. Nay, he struck so plainly, I could too well feel his blows: and withal so doubtfully that I could scarce understand them.

Adr. But say, I prithee, is he coming home? It seems he is such great care to please his wife. [mad.

Dro. Why, mistress, sure my master is horn-mad. Adr. Horn-mad, thou villain!

Dro. I mean not cuckold-mad; But, sure, he is stark mad. When I desired him to come home to dinner, He ask'd me for a thousand marks in gold: 'Tis dinner-time; 'quoth I; 'My gold!' 'quoth he: 'Your meat doth burn,' 'quoth I; 'My gold!' 'quoth he; [lie, 'Will you come home? 'quoth I; 'My gold!' 'quoth Where is the thousand marks I gave thee, villain? ' The pig, 'quoth I, 'is burnt.' 'My gold!' 'quoth he: 'Eat me,' said sir; 'quoth I; 'Hang up thy mistress! I know not thy mistress; out on thy mistress!' Luc. Quoth who?

Dro. Quoth my master:

'I know,' 'quoth he, 'no house, no wife, no mistress.' So that my errand, due unto my tongue, I think'd I should have more hope upon this shoulders; For, in conclusion, he did beat me there. [home.

Adr. Go back again, thou slave, and fetch him.

Dro. Go back again, and be new beaten home For God's sake, send some other messenger. Adr. Back, slave, or I will break thy pate across.

Dro. And he will bless that cross with other Between you I shall have a holy head. [beating: Adr. Hence, prating peasant! fetch thy master home.

Dro. Am I so round with you as you with me, That like a football you do spam me thus? You spam me hence, and he will spam me hence; If I last in this service, you must ease me in leather. [Exit.

Luc. Fie, how impatience loureth in your face! Adr. His company must do his unions grace, Whilst I at home starve for a merry look. Hath he all the while the alluring beauty took From my poor check? then he hath wasted it: Are my discourses dull? barren my wit? If vulpine and sharp discourse be marr'd, Unkindness blunts it more than marble hard; Do their gay vestments his affections bate? That's not my fault; he's master of my state.
ACT II.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

SCENE II.—A public place.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. S. The gold I gave to Dromio is laid up
Safe at the Centaur; and the heedful slave
Is wander'd forth, in care to seek me out
By computation and must host repaire.
I could not speak with Dromio since at first
I sent him from the mart. See, here he comes.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. I did not see you since you sent me hence,
Home to the Centaur, with the gold you gave me.

Ant. S. Villain, thou didst deny the gold's receipt
And told'st me of a mistress and a dinner:
For which, I hope, thou felt'st I was displeased.

Dro. S. I am glad to see thou hast a merry vein;
What means this jest? I pray you, master, tell me.

Ant. S. Yeay, dost thou jest and flout me in the teeth?

Dro. S. Hold, sir, for God's sake! now your jest is Upon what bargain do you give it me? 'tis earnest.

Ant. S. Because that I familiarly sometimes
Do use you for my fool and chaff with you,
Your sauciness will jest upon my love
And make a common of my serious hours.
When the same passion you make sport,
But creep in crannies when he hides his beams.
If you will jest with me, know my aspect
And fashion your demeanour to my looks,
Or I will beat this method in your scorne.

Dro. S. Scone call you it? so you would leave battering? I had rather have it a head; an you use these blows long, I must get a scone for my head and insonce it too; or else I shall seek my wit in my shoulders. But, I pray, sir, why am I beaten?

Ant. S. Dost thou not know?

Dro. S. Nothing, sir, but that I am beaten:

Ant. S. Shall I tell you why?

Dro. S. Ay, sir, and wherefore; for they say every why hath a wherefore.

Ant. S. Why, first,—for floutting me; and then, wherefore,—

For urging it the second time to me.

Dro. S. Was there ever any man thus beaten out of season,
When in the why and the wherefore is neither rhyme nor reason?

Well, sir, I thank you.

Ant. S. Thank me, sir! for what?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, for this something that you gave me for nothing.

Ant. S. I'll make you amend next, to give you nothing for something. But say, sir, is it dinner-time? I thank you.

Dro. S. No, sir; I think the meat wants that I
Ant. S. In good time, sir; what's that? [ Have.

Dro. S. Basting.

Ant. S. Well, sir, then 'twill be dry.

Dro. S. If it be, sir, I pray you, eat none of it.

Ant. S. Lest it make you choleric and purchase me another dry basting.

Ant. S. Well, sir, learn to jest in good time: there's a time for all things.

Dro. S. I durst have denied that, before you were so choleric.

Ant. S. By what rule, sir?

Dro. S. Marry, sir, by a rule as plain as the plain bald pate of father Timon himself.

Ant. S. Let's hear it.

Dro. S. There's no time for a man to recover his hair and not speak with nature.

Ant. S. May he not do it by fine and recovery?

Dro. S. Yes, to pay a fine for a periwig and recover the lost hair of another man.

Ant. S. Why is Time such a niggard of hair, being, as it is, so plentiful an excrement?

Dro. S. Because it is a blessing that he bestows on himself; and what he hath scouted men in hair he hath given them in wit.

Ant. S. Why, but there's a many a man hath more hair than wit.

Dro. S. Not a man of those but he hath the wit to lose his hair.

Ant. S. Why, thou didst conclude hairy men plain dealers without wit.

Dro. S. The plainer dealer, the sooner lost: yet he losteth it in a kind of jollity.

Ant. S. For what reason?

Dro. S. For two; and sound ones too.

Ant. S. Nay, not sound, I pray you.

Dro. S. Sure ones then.

Ant. S. Nay, not sure, in a thing falsing.

Dro. S. Certain ones then.

Ant. S. Name them.

Dro. S. The one, to save the money that he spends in trimming; the other, that at dinner they should not drop in his porridge.

Ant. S. You would all this time have proved there
Is no time for all things.

Dro. S. Marry, and did, sir; namely, no time to recover hair lost by nature.

Ant. S. As for the time it was not substantial, why there is no time to recover.

Dro. S. Thus I mend it: Time himself is bald and therefore to the world's end will have bald followers.

Ant. S. I knew 'twould be a bald conclusion:
But, soft! who wafts us yonder?

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ay, ay, Antipholus, look strange and frown: Some other mistress hath thy sweet aspects; I am not Adriana nor thy wife.

The time I amke when thou unmercifull wouldst vow
That never words were music to thine ear,
That never object pleasing in thine eye,
That never touch well welcome to thy hand,
That never meat sweet-savour'd in thy taste, [thee.

Unless I spake, or look'd, or touched, or caried to

ACT III.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

SCENE I.

How comes it now, my husband, O, how comes it, That thou art thus estranged from thyself? Thyself I call it, being strange to me, That, unlov'd and incorp'rate, And a better than thy dear self's better part, Ah, do not thus condemn me from me! For know, my love, as easy mayst thou fall A drop of water in the breaking gulf And take unmingled thence that drop again, Without addition or diminishing, As take from me thyself and not me too. How lovely would it itself see to the quick, Should'st thou but hear I were licentious And that this body, consecrate to thee, By rufian lust should be contaminat'd! Wouldst thou not spit at me and spurn at me And hurl the name of husband in my face And tear the skin off my harlot-howl And from my false hand cut the wedding-ring And break it with a deep-divouring vow? I know thou canst; and therefore see thou do it. I am possess'd with an adulterate blot; My blood is mingled with the crime of lust: For if we two be one and thou play false, I do digest the poison of thy flesh, Being strumpeted by thy contagion. Keep then fair league and truce with thy true bed; I live unstand'd, then undishonoured. [Exit Ant.]

Ant. S. Plead you to me, fair dame? I know you In Ephesus I am but two hours old, As strange unto your town as to your talk; Who, every word by all my wit being scann'd, Want wit in all one word to understand. [Exit Luc.

Luc. Fie, brother! how the world is changed With when were you wont to use my sister thus? She sent for you by Dromio home to dinner. Ant. S. By Dromio?

Dro. S. By me?

Adr. By thee; and this thou didst return from That he did buffet thee and in his blows [him, Denied my house for his, me for his wife. [woman

Ant. S. Did you converse, sir, with this gentle- What is the course and drift of your compact?

Dro. S. I, sir? I never saw her till this time. Ant. S. Vilhain, thou liest; for even her very words Didst thou deliver to me on the mart.

Dro. S. I never spoke with her in all my life.

Ant. S. Let her thus then call us by our Unless it be by inspiration. [names, Adr. How ill agrees it with your gravity To counterfeit thus grossly with your slave, Abetting him to thwart me in my mood!

If the skin were parchment and the blows you gave were ink, Your own handwriting would tell you what I think. Ant. E. I think thou art an ass. Dro. E. Marry, so doth appear By the wrongs I suffer and the blows I bear.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus, Dromio of Ephesus, Angelo, and Balthazar.

Ant. E. Good Signior Angelo, you must excuse us Many are the shrewish when I keep not hours; [all; Say that I linger'd with you at your shop To see the making of her carcanet And that to-morrow you will bring it home. But here's a villain that would face me down He met me on the mart, and that I beat him And charged him with a thousand marks in gold And that I did away with him. Thou dunkard, thou, what dost thou mean by this?

Dro. E. Say what you will, sir, but I know what I know; That you beat me at the mart, I have your hand to show: Be it my wrong you are from me exempt, But wrong not that wrong with a more contempt. Come, I will fasten on this sleeve of thine: Thou art an em, my husband, I a vine, Whose weakness married to thy stronger state Makes me with thy strength to comminicate: If aught possess thee from me, it is dross, Unswerving, ivy, bitter, or idle moss; Who, all for cost of pruning, with intrusion Infect thy sap and live on thy confusion. [theme

Ant. S. To me she speaks; she moves me for her What is, if married to her in my dream? Or sleep I now and think I hear all this? What error drives our eyes and ears amiss? Until I know this sure uncertainty, I'll entertain the offer'd fallacy. Luc. Dromio, go bid the servants spread for dinner. Dro. S. O, for my heads! I cross me for a sinner. This is the fairy land: O spite of stains! We talk with goldins, owls and sprites: If we obey them not, this will ensue, They'll suck our breath or pinch us black and blue. Luc. Why protest thou to thyself and answert not? Dromio, thou drone, thou snail, thou slug, thou set! Dro. S. I am transformed, master, am I not? Ant. S. I think thou art in mind, and so am I. Dro. S. Nay, master, both in mind and in my shape. Ant. S. Thou hast thine own form. Dro. S. No, I am an ape, Luc. If thou art changed to aught, 'tis to an ass. Dro. S. 'Tis true; she rides me and I long for 'Tis so, I am an ass; else it could never be [grass. But I should know her as well as she knows me. Adr. Come, come, no longer will I be a fool, To put the finger in the eye and weep, Whilst man and master laugh my woes to scorn. Come, sir, to dinner. Dromio, keep the gate. Husband, I'll dine above with you to-day And shrieve you of a thousand idle pranks. Sirrah, if any ask you for your master, Say he dines forth and let no creature enter. Come, sister. Dromio, play the porter well.

Ant. S. Am I in earth, in heaven, or in hell? Sleeping or waking? mad or well-advise'd? Known unto these, and to myself disguised! I'll say as they say, and persever so. And in this name I'll call adventures so. Dro. S. Master, shall I be porter at the gate?

Luc. Ay; and let none enter, lest I break yon pate. Luc. Come, come, Antipholus, we dine too late. [Exit.

[Exeunt.
Ant. E. There is something in the wind, that we cannot get in.

Dro. E. You would say so, master, if your garments were thin.

Your cake there is warm within; you stand here in the cold.

It would make a man mad as a buck, to be so bought and sold.

Ant. E. Go fetch me something; I'll break ope the gate.

Dro. S. [Within] Break any breaking here, and I'll break your knave's gate.

Dro. E. A man may break a word with you, sir, and words are but wind, [hint.]

Ay, and break it in your face, so he break it not be.

Dro. S. [Within] It seems thou want'st breaking: out upon thee, hint!

Dro. E. Here's too much 'out upon thee!' I pray thee, let me in.

Dro. S. [Within] Ay, when fowls have no feathers and fish have no fin.

Ant. E. Well, I'll break in; go borrow me a crow.

Dro. E. A crow without feather? Master, mean you so?

For a fish without a fin, there's a fowl without a
If a crow help us in, sirrah, we'll pluck a crow together.

Ant. E. Go get thee gone; fetch me an iron crow.

Dro. E. Go to hell, jove! let it not be so!

Herein you war against your reputation
And draw within the compass of suspect
The uninvited honour of your wife.

Once this,—your long experience of her wisdom,
Her sober virtue, years and modesty,
Plead on her part some cause to you unknown;
And doubt not, sir, but she will well excuse
Why at this time the doors are made against you.

Be ruled by me: depart in patience,
And let us to the Tiger all to dinner,
And about evening come yourself alone
To know the reason of this strange restraint.

If by strong hand you offer to break in
Now in the stirring passage of the day,
A vulgar comment will be made of it,
And that supposed by the common rout
Against your yet ungauged estimation
That may with foul intrusion enter in
And dwell upon your grave when you are dead;
For slander lives upon succession.

For ever house where it gets possession,—[quiet,

Ant. E. You have prevail'd: I will depart in
And, in despite of mirth, mean to be merry.

I know a wench of excellent discourse,
Pretty and witty, wild and yet, too, gentle:
There will we dine. This woman that I mean,
My wife but,—I protest, without desert—
Hath oftentimes upbraided me withal:
To her will we to dinner. [To Aug.] Get you home
And fetch the chain; by this I know 'tis made:
Bring it, I pray you, to the Porcupine:
For there's the house; that chain will bestow—
Be it for nothing but to spite my wife:
Upon mine hostess there: good sir, make haste.
Since mine own doors refuse to entertain me,
I'll knock elsewhere, to see if they 'll disdain me.
Aug. I'll meet you at that place some hour hence.

Ant. E. Do so. This jest shall cost me some expense.

SCENE II. — The same.

Enter Luciana and Antipholus of Syracuse.

Luc. And may it be that you have quite forgot
A husband's office? shall, Antipholus?
Even in the spring of love, thy love springs rot?
Shall love, in building, grow so ruinous?
If you did wed my sister for her wealth, [mess:

Then for her wealth's sake use her with more kind-

83
Of you like elsewhere, do it by stealth;
Mule your false love with some show of blind—
Let not my sister read it in your eye; [mcss:
Be not thy tongue thy own shame's orator;
Look sweet, speak fair, become disloyalty;
And let her eyes, like waters, weep,
Bear a fair presence, though your heart be taint'd;
Teach sin the carriage of a holy saint;
Be secret-false: what need she be acquainted?
What simple thief bears of his own attain't?
'Tis double wrong, to truant with your bed
And let her read it in thy looks at beard:
Shame hath a bastard fame, well managed;
Ill deeds are doubly evil with an evil word.
Alas, poor woman! make us but believe,
Being compact of credit, that you love us;
Though others have the arm, show us the sleeve;
We in your motion turn and you may move us.
Then, gentle brother, get you in again;
Comfort my sister, cheer her, call her wife:
'Tis holy sport to be a little vain,
When the sweet breath of flattery conquers strife.
Ant. S. Sweet mistress,—what your name is else,
I know not.
Nor by what wonder you do hit of mine,—[not Less in your knowledge and your grace you show
Than our earth's wonder, more than earth divine.
Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;
Lay open to my earthly-green concili
Smile, in your best, secure, smile, weak,
The folded meaning of your words, dext'reous.
Against my soul's pure truth why labour you
To make it wander in an unknown field?
Are you a god? would you create me new?
Transform me then, and to your power I'll yield,
But if that I am 1, then well I know;
Your weeping sister is no wife of mine,
Nor to her bed no homage do I owe:
Far more, far more to you do I decline.
O, train me not, sweet mermaid, with thy note,
To drown me in thy sister's flood of tears:
Sing, siren, for thyself and I will date;
Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs,
And as a bed I'll take them and there lie,
And in that glorious supposition think
He gains by death that hath such means to die:
Let Love, being light, be drowned if she sink!
Luc. What, are you mad, that you do reason so?
Ant. S. Not mad, but madly born. I do not know,
Luc. It is a fault that springeth from your eye.
Ant. S. For gazing on your beams, fairest, being by,
Luc. Gaze where you should, and that will clear your sight. [night.
Ant. S. As go to, winking, sweet love, as look on
Luc. Why call you me love? call my sister so.
Ant. S. Thy sister's sister.
Luc. That's my sister.
Ant. S. No;
It is thyself, mine own self's better part,
Mine eye's clear eye, my dear heart's dearer heart,
My fished glory and my sweet hope's aim
My sole earth's heaven and my heaven's claim.
Luc. All this my sister is, or else should be.
Ant. S. Call thyself sister, sweet, for I am thee.
Thou will I love and with thee lead my life:
Thou hast no husband yet nor I no wife.
Give me thy hand.
Luc. O, soft, sir! hold you still:
I'll fetch my sister, to get her good will. [Exit.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Ant. S. Why, how now, Dromio! where runn'st thou so fast?
Dro. S. Do you know me, sir? am I Dromio? am I your man? am I myself?
Ant. S. Thou art Dromio, thou art my man, thou art thyself.

Dro. S. I am an ass, I am a woman's man and besides myself.
Ant. S. What woman's man? and how besides thyself?
Dro. S. Mary, sir, besides myself, I am due to a woman one that claims me, one that haunts me, one that will have me.
Ant. S. What claim lays she to thee?
Dro. S. Mary, sir, such claim as you would lay to your horse; and she would have me as a beast: not that, I being a beast, she would have me; but that she, being a very beastly creature, lays claim to me.
Ant. S. What is she?
Dro. S. A very reverent body; ay, such a one as a man may not speak of without he say 'Sir-reverence.' I have but lean luck in the match, and yet she is a wondrous fat marriage.
Ant. S. How dost thou mean a fat marriage?
Dro. S. Mary, sir, she's the kitchen wench and all grease: and I know not what use to put her to but to make a lump of her and run from her by her own light. I warrant, her rags and the tallow in them, and her fat, and the rosy must, and a Poland winter: if she lives till doomsday, she'll turn a week longer than the whole world.
Ant. S. What complexion is she of?
Dro. S. Swart, like my shoe, but her face nothing like so clean kept: for why, she sweats; a man may go over with rain and wash the name of.
Ant. S. That's a fault that water will mend.
Dro. S. No, sir, 'tis in grain; Noah's flood could not do it.
Ant. S. What's her name?
Dro. S. Nell, sir; but her name and three quarters, that's an ell and three quarters, will not measure her from hip to hip.
Ant. S. Then she bears some breadth?
Dro. S. No longer from head to foot than from hip to hip; she is spherical, like a globe; I could find out countries in her.
Ant. S. In what part of her body stands Ireland?
Dro. S. Mary, sir, in her buttocks: I found it out by the bogs.
Ant. S. Where Scotland?
Dro. S. I found it by the barrenness; hard in the palm of the hand.
Ant. S. Where France?
Dro. S. In her forehead; armed and reverent, making war against her hair.
Ant. S. Where England?
Dro. S. I looked for the chalky cliffs, but I could find no whiteness in them: but I guess it stood in her chin, by the salt rheum that ran between France and it.
Ant. S. Where Spain?
Dro. S. Faith, I saw it not; but I felt it hot in her breath.
Ant. S. Where America, the Indies?
Dro. S. Oh, sir, upon her nose, all over embellished with carbuncles, carbuncles, supphires, declining their rich aspect to the hot breath of Spain; who sent whole armadoes of caracks to be ballast at her nose.
Ant. S. Where stood Belgium, the Netherlands?
Dro. S. Oh, sir, I did not look so low. To conclude, this drudge, or diviner, lald claim to me; called me Dromio; swore I was assured to her; told me what privy marks I had about me, as, the mark of my shoulder, the mole in my neck, the great wart on my left arm, that I amaz'd ran from her as a witch;
And, I think, if my breast had not been made of faith and my heart of steel,
She had transform'd me to a curtail dog and made me turn i' the wheel.
Ant. S. Go hie thee presently, post to the road:
Enter Second Merchant, Angelo, and an Officer.

Sec. Mer. You know since Pentecost the sum is And since I have not much imported you; [dine, Nor now I had not, but that I am bound To Persia and want guides for my voyage: Therefore make present satisfaction, Or I'll attach you by this officer.

Ang. Even just the sum that I do owe to you Is growing to me by Antipholus. And in the instant that I met with him He had of me a chain: at five o'clock I shall receive the money for the same. Please you walk with me down to his house, I will discharge my bond and thank you too.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus and Dromio of Ephesus from the courtier’s.

Off. That labour may you save: see where he comes. [thou

Ant. E. While I go to the goldsmith’s house, go And buy a rope’s end; that will I bestow Upon my wife and her confederates, For looking me out of my doors by day. But, soft! I see the goldsmith. Get thee gone; Buy thou a rope and bring it home to me.

Dro. E. I buy a thousand pound a year: I buy a rope. [Exit.

Ant. E. A man is well holp up that trusts to you: I promised your presence and the chain; But neither chain nor goldsmith came to me. Belike you thought our love would last too long, If it were chain’d together, and therefore came not.

Ang. Saving your merry humour, here’s the note How much your chain weighs to the utmost carat, The fineness of the gold and chargeful fashion, Which doth amount to three odd ducats more Than I stand doted to this gentleman: I pray you, see him presently discharged, For he is bound to sea and stays but for it.

Ant. E. I am not furnish’d with the present money: Besides, I have some business in the town. Good sir, go, take the stranger to my house And with you take the chain and bid my wife Disburse the sum on the receipt thereof: Perchance I will be there as soon as you. I thought to have ta’en you at the Porpentine: The chain unfinish’d made me stay this long.

Ant. S. What is your will that I shall do with this? Ang. What please yourself, sir: I have made it for you.

Ant. S. Made it for me, sir! I bespoke it not. Ang. Not once, nor twice, but twenty times you have. Go home with it and please your wife withal; And soon at supper-time I’ll visit you And then receive my money for the chain.

Ant. S. I pray you, sir, receive the money now. For fear you see each chain nor money more.

Ang. You are a merry man, sir; fare you well. [Exit.

Ant. S. What I should think of this, I cannot tell: But this I think, there’s no man is so vain That would refuse so fair an offer’d chain. I see a man here needs not live by shifts, When in the streets he meets such golden gifts.

I’ll to the mart and there for Dromio stay: If any ship put out, then straight away. [Exit.

Ang. Well, sir, I will. Have you the chain about

Ant. E. An if I have not, sir, I hope you have;

Or else you may return without your money.

Ang. Nay, come, I pray you, sir, give me the chain:

Both wind and tide stays for this gentleman.

Sec. Mer. My business cannot brook this dalliance.

Good sir, say whether you’ll answer me or no:

I not, I’ll leave him to the officer by.

Ant. E. I answer you! what should I answer you?

Ang. The money that you owe me for the chain.

Ant. E. I owe you none till I receive the chain.

Ang. You know I gave it you half an hour since.

Ant. E. You gave me none: you wrong me much to say so.

Ang. You wrong me more, sir, in denying it:

Consider how it stands upon my credit.

Sec. Mer. Well, officer, arrest him at my suit.

Off. I do; and charge you in the duke’s name to obey me.

Ang. This touches me in reputation.

Either consent to pay this sum for me

Or I attach you by this officer.

Ant. E. Consent to pay thee that I never had!

Arrest me, foolish fellow, if thou darest.

Ang. Here is thy fee: arrest him, officer.

I would not spare my brother in this case, If he should scorn me so apparently.

Off. I do arrest you, sir: you hear the suit.

Ant. E. I do obeys thee till I give thee bail.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

ACT IV.

But, sirrah, you shall buy this sport as dear
As all the metal in your shop will answer.

Ang. Sir, sir, I shall have law in Ephesus,
To your notorious shame; I doubt it not.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse, from the bay.

Dro. S. Master, there is a bark of Epidamnum
That stays but till her owner comes aboard.
And then, sir, she bears away. Our fraughtage, sir,
I have convey'd aboard and I have bought
The oil, the balsamum and aqua-vite.
The ship is in her trim; the merry wind
Blows fair from land; they stay for needful at all
But for their owner, master, and yourself.

Ant. E. How now! a madman! Why, thou peevish
What ship of Epidamnum stays for me? [sleep,
Dro. S. A ship you sent me to, to hire waftage.
Ant. E. Thou drunken slave, I sent thee for a rope
And told thee what purpose and what end.
Dro. S. You sent me for a rope's end as soon:
You sent me to the bay, sir, for a back.
Ant. E. I will debate this matter at more leisure
And teach your ears to list me with more heed.
To Adriana, villain, he thee straight
Give her this key and tell her, in the desk
That's cover'd o'er with Turkish hexametry
There is a purse of ducats; let her send it:
Tell her I am arrested in the street
And that shall bail me: hie thee, slave, be gone!
On, officer, to prison till it come.

[Exit Scene Merchant, Angelo, Officer, and Ant. E.]

Dro. S. To Adriana! that is where we dined,
Where Dowsabel did claim me for her husband:
She is too big, I hope, for me to compass.
Thither I must, although against my will,
For servants must their masters' minds fulfill. [Exit.

SCENE II. — The house of Antipholus of Ephesus.

Enter Adriana and Luciana.

Adr. Ah, Luciana, did he tempt thee so?
Might he then perceive austerely in his eye
That he did plead in earnest? yea or no?
Look'd he or red or pale, or sad or merrily?
What observation modest thou in this case
Of his heart's meteors tilting in his face?
Luc. First he denied you had in him no right.
Adr. He meant he did me none; the more my smile.
Luc. Then swore he that he was a stranger here.
Adr. And true he swore, though yet forsworn he
Luc. Then pleaded I for you. [were.
Adr. And what said he?
Luc. That love I begg'd for you he begg'd of me.
Adr. With what persuasion did he tempt thy love?
Luc. With words that in an honest suit might move,
First he did praise thy beauty, then my speech.
Adr. Didst speak him fair?
Luc. Have patience, I beseech.
Adr. I cannot, nor I will not, hold me still;
My tongue, though not my heart, shall have his will.
He is deform'd, crooked, old and sere,
Ill-fac'd, worse bodied, shapeless everywhere;
Vicious, ungenteel, foolish, blunt, unkind,
Stigmatical in making, worse in mind.
Luc. Who would be jealous then of such a one?
No evil lost is wail'd when it is gone.
Adr. Ah, but I think him better than I say.
And yet would herein others' eyes were worse.
Far from her nest the lapwing cries away:
My heart prays for him, though my tongue do curse.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Here! go; the desk, the purse! sweet, now, make haste.

Luc. How hast thou lost thy breath?
Dro. S. By running fast.

Adr. Where is thy master, Dromio? is he well?
Dro. S. No, he's in Tartar lumber, worse than hell.

A devil in an everlasting garment hath him;
One whose hard heart is bottom'd up with steel;
A fiend, a fury, pitiless and rough;
A wolf, a tiger, worse a felldall in buff: [mends
A back-friend, a shoulder-clapper, one that counter-
The passages of alleys, creeks and narrow lands;
A hound that runs counter and yet draws dry-foot well;

One that before the judgment carries poor souls to
Adr. What is the matter? Tell me at whose suit.
Dro. S. I know not at whose suit he is arrested well;
But he's in a suit of buff which 'rested him, that can
Will you send him, mistress, redemption, the money in his desk?
Adr. Go fetch it, sister. [Exit Luciana.

This I wonder at,
That he, unknown to me, should be in debt.
Tell me, was he arrested on a band?
Dro. S. No, no, on a band, but on a stronger thing;
A chain, a chain! Do you not hear it ring?
Adr. What, the chain?

Dro. S. No, no, the bell; 'tis time that I were gone;
It was two ere I left him, and now the clock strikes one.

Adr. The hours come back! that did I never hear.

Dro. S. O, yes; if any hour meet a sergeant, it turns back for very fear.
Adr. As if Time were in debt! how fondly dost thou reason!

Dro. S. Time is a very bankrupt and owes more that he's worth to passion.
Nay, he's a thief too; have you not heard men say,
That Time comes stealing on by night and day?
If Time be in debt and theft, and a sergeant in the way,
Hath he not reason to turn back an hour in a day?

Re-enter Luciana with a purse.

Adr. Go, Dromio; there's the money, bear it straight,
And bring thy master home immediately.
Come, sister: I am press'd down with conceit —
Conceit, my comfort and my injury. [Exit.

SCENE III.—A public place.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse.

Ant. S. There's not a man I meet but doth salute
As if I were their well-acquainted friend; [me
And every one doth call me by my name,
Some tender money to me; some invite me;
Some other give me thanks for kindnesses;
Some offer me commodities to buy;
Even now a tailor calls me in his shop
And shows me silks that he had bought for me.
And therewithal look measure of my body.
Sure, these are but imaginary wiles
And Lapland sorcerers inhabit here.

Enter Dromio of Syracuse.

Dro. S. Master, here's the gold you sent me for.
What, have you got the picture of old Adam new-apparelled?

[mean?}

Ant. S. What gold is this? what Adam dost thou Dro. S. Not that Adam that kept the Paradise, but that Adam that keeps the prison; he that goes thither, working for a nickel to the Prodigal;
he that came behind you, sir, like an evil angel,
and bid you forsake thy liberty.
THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

SCENE IV.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus and the Officer.

Ant. E. Fear me not, man; I will not break away: I'll give thee ere I leave thee, so much money, to warrant thee, as I am rested for. My wife is in a wayward mood to-day, and will not lightly trust the messenger. That I should be attach'd in Ephesus, I tell you, 'twill sound harshly in her ears.

Enter Dromio of Ephesus with a rope's end.

Here comes my man; I think he brings the money. How now, sir! have you that I sent you for? [all.]

Dro. E. Here's that, I warrant you, will pay them.

Ant. E. But where's the money?

Dro. E. Why, sir, I gave the money for the rope?

Ant. E. Five hundred ducats, villain, for a rope?

Dro. E. I'll serve you, sir, five hundred at the rate.

Ant. E. To what end did I bid thee tie thee home?

Dro. E. To a rope's end, sir; and to that end am I returned.

Ant. E. And to that end, sir, I will welcome you.

[Leaving him.]

Off. Good, sir, be patient.

Dro. E. Nay, 'tis for me to be patient; I am in adversity.

Off. Good, now, hold thy tongue.

Dro. E. Nay, rather persuade him to hold his hands.

Ant. E. Thou whoreson, senseless villain!

Dro. E. I would I were senseless, sir, that I might not feel your blows.

Ant. E. Thou art sensible in nothing but blows, and so is an ass.

Dro. E. I am an ass, indeed; you may prove it by my long ears. I have served him from the hour of my nativity to this instant, and have nothing at his hands for my service but blows. When I am cold, he heats me with beating; when I am warm, he cools me with beating; I am waked with it when I sleep; raised with it when I sit; driven out of doors with it when I go from home: welcomed home with it when I return: may, I bear it on my shoulders, as a beggar wont her brat; and, I think, when he hath harned me, I shall beg with it from door to door.

Ant. E. Come, go along; my wife is coming yon-

Enter Adriana, Luciana, the Courtezan, and Pinch.

Dro. E. Mistress, ' respice finem,' respect your end; or rather, the prophecy like the parrot, ' beware the end.'

Ant. E. Wilt thou still talk? [Beating him.]

Cour. How say you now? is not your husband

Adr. His inequity confirms no less. mad?

Good Doctor Pinch, you are a conjurer;

Establish him in his true sense again.

And I will please you what you will demand.

Luc. Alas, how fiery and how sharp he looks!

Cour. Mark how he trembles in his ecstasy! [pulse.

Pinch. Give me your hand and let me feel your

Ant. E. There is my hand, and let it feel your Cour. I charge thee, Satan, bound within this

To yield possession to my holy prayers.

And to thy state of darkness let thee straight:

I conjure thee by all the saints in heaven!' [mad.

Ant. E. Peace, doting wizard, peace! I am not

Adr. O, that thou wert not, poor distressed soul!

Ant. E. You mock me, you, are these your custom.

Did this companion with the saffron face [ers?

He rush'd into my house and took perfirce

My ring away. This course I fit to choose;

For forty ducats is too much to lose. [Exit.
Revel and feast it at my house to-day,
Whilst upon me the guilty doors were shut
And I denied to enter in my house:— [Home;

Ant. E. Dined at home! Thou villain, what say'st thou?

Dro. E. Sir, sooth to say, you did not dine at home.

Ant. E. Were not my doors lock'd up and I shut out?

Dro. E. Perdie, your doors were lock'd and you

Ant. E. And did not she herself revile me there?

Dro. E. Sans faible, she herself reviled you there.

Ant. E. Did not her kitchen-maid rail, taunt and scorn me?

Dro. E. Certes, shedid; the kitchen-velish scorn'd

Ant. E. And did not I in rage depart from thence?

Ant. E. In verity you did; my bones bear witness,

That since have felt the vigour of his rage.

Adr. Is't good to soothe him in these contraries?

Pleas. It is no shame: the fellow finds his vein

And yielding to him humours well his frenzy. [me.

Ant. E. He tells not that; nor sends me for a pursu

Adr. He came to me and I deliver'd it.

Luc. And I am witness with her that she did.

Dro. E. God and the rope-maker bear me witness

That I was sent for nothing but a rope! [Pleas.

Mistress, both man and master is possess'd; I

Know it by their pale and deadly locks:

They must be bound and laid in some dark room.

Ant. E. Say wherefore dost thou lock me forth to

And why dost thou deny the bag of gold? [day?

Adr. I did not, gentle husband, lock thee forth.

Dro. E. And, gentle master, I received no gold;

But I confess, sir, that we were lock'd out. [both.

Adr. Dissembling villain, thou speak'st false in

Ant. E. Dissembling harlot, thou art false in all

And art confederate with a damned pack

To make a heathens abject scorn of me:

With but these nails I'll pluck out these false eyes

That would behold in me this shameful sport.

Enter three or four, and offer to bind him. He strives.

Adr. O, bind him, bind him! let him not come near me.

[T. Plack. More company! The fiend is strong within

Luc. Ay, poor man, how pale and wan he looks!

Ant. E. What, will you murder me? Thou gaoler,

I am thy prisoner: wilt thou suffer them [thou,

To make a rescue?

Off. Masters, let him go:

He is my prisoner, and you shall not have him.

Plack. Go bind this man, for he is frantic too.

[They offer to bind Dro. E.

Adr. What wilt thou do, thou peevish officer

Dro. E. Hast thou delight to see a wretched man

Do outrage and displeasure to himself?

Off. He is my prisoner: if I let him go,

The debt he owes will be required of me.

Adr. I will discharge thee ere I go from thee:

Bear me forthwith unto his creditor

And, knowing how the debt grows, I will pay it.

Good master doctor, see him safe convey'd

Home to my house. O most unhappy day!

Ant. E. O most unhappy strumpet!

Dro. E. Master, I am here entered in bond for you.

Ant. E. Out on thee, villain! wherefore dost thou send me away?

Dro. E. Will you be bound for nothing? be mad, good-master: cry 'The devil'!

Luc. God help, poor souls, how idly do they talk!

Adr. Go bear him hence. Sister, go you with me.

[Exeunt all but Adriana, Luciana,

Officer and Courtezan.]

Say now, whose suit is he arrested at?

Off. One Angelo, a goldsmith: do you know him?

Adr. I know the man. What is the sum he owes?

Off. Two hundred ducats.

Adr. Say, how grows it due?

Off. Due for a chain your husband had of him.

Adr. He did bespeak a chain of me, but had it not.

Cour. When as your husband all in rage to-day

Came to my house and took away my ring—

The ring I saw upon his finger now—

Straight after did I meet him with a chain.

Adr. It may be so, but I did never see it.

Come, gaoler, bring me where the goldsmith is:

I long to know the truth hereof at large.

Enter Antipholus of Syracuse with his rapier drawn, and Dromio of Syracuse.

Luc. God, for thy mercy! they are loose again.

Adr. And come with naked swords.

Let's call some help to have them bound again.

Off. Away! they'll kill us.

[Exeunt all but Ant. S. and Dro. S.

Ant. S. I see these witches are afraid of swords.

Dro. S. She that would be your wife now ran from you.

Ant. S. Come to the Centaur: fetch our stuff from thence:

I long that we were safe and sound aboard.

Dro. S. Faith, stay here this night; they will surely do us no harm: you saw they speak us fair, give us gold; methinks they are such a gentle nation that, but for the mountain of mad flesh that claims marriage of me, I could find in my heart to stay here still and turn witch.

Ant. S. I will not stay to-night for all the town;

Therefore away, to get our stuff aboard. [Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—A street before a Priory.

Enter Second Merchant and Angelo.

Ang. I am sorry, sir, that I have hinder'd you;

But, I protest, he had the chain of me,

Though most dishonestly he doth deny it.

Sec. Mer. Sir, thou dost know'st I did know'd here in the

Ang. Of very reverend reputation, sir, [city?

Sec. Mer. Of credit infinite, highly beloved,

Second to none that lives here in the city:

His word might bear my wealth at any time.

Sec. Mer. Speak softly: yonder, as I think, he walks.

ACT V.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

SCENE I.

Who, but for staying on our controversy,
Had hoisted sail and put to sea to-day:
This ship you had of me; can you deny it?
Ant. Who think I hoisted never did deny it.
Sec. Mer. Yes, that you did, sir, and forswore it.
Ant. S. Who heard me to deny or forswear it?
Sec. Mer. These ears of mine, thou know'st, did hear thee.
Fie on thee, wretch! 'tis pity that thou livest.
To walk where any hand never did deny it.
Ant. S. Thou art a villain to impeach me thus:
I'll prove mine honour and mine honesty
Against thee presently, if thou dar'st stand.
Sec. Mer. I dare, and do defy thee for a villain.
Try thee draw.

Enter Adriana, Luciana, the Courtezan, and others.

Adr. Hold, hurt him not, for God's sake! he is
Some get with him, take his sword away: [mad.
Bind Dromio too, and bear them to my house.
Dro. S. Run, master, run; for God's sake, take
This is some priory. In, or we are spoil'd!
[Exeunt Ant. S. and Dro. S. to the Priory.

Enter the Lady Abbess.

Abb. Be quiet, people. Wherefore throng you hither?
Adr. To fetch my poor distracted husband hence.
Let us come in, that we may bind him fast
And bear him home for his recovery.
Aug. I knew he was not in his perfect wits.
Sec. Mer. I am sorry now that I did draw on him.
Abb. How long hath this possession held the man?
Adr. This week he hath been heavy, sour, sad,
And much different from the man he was;
But till this afternoon his passion
Ne'er brake into extremity of rage. [sea?
Abb. Hath he not lost much wealth by wreck of Buried some dear friend? Hath not else his eye
Stray'd his affection in unlawful love?
A sin prevailing much in youthful men,
Who give their eyes the liberty of gazng.
Which of these sorrows is he subject to?
Adr. To none of these, except it be the last;
Namely, some love that drew him off from home.
Abb. You should do that have reprehended him.
Adr. Why, so I did.
Abb. Ay, but not rough enough.
Adr. As roughly as my modesty would let me.
Abb. Haply, in private.
Adr. And in assemblies too.
Abb. And, but not enough.
Adr. It was the copy of our conference:
In bed he slept not for my urging it;
At board he fed not for my urging it;
Alone, it was the subject of my theme;
In company I glanced it;
Still did I tell him it was vile and bad.
Abb. And thereof came it that the man was mad:
The venom chamours of a jealous woman
Poisons more deadly than a mad dog's tooth.
It seems his sleepes were hindered by thy railing,
And thereof comes it that his head is light.
Thou sayest his meat was poisoned with thy upbraid-
Unquiet meals make ill digestions; [lings:
Thereof the raging fire of fever bred;
And what's a fever but a fit of madness?
Thou say'st his sports were hinder'd by thy brawls:
Sweet recreation brr, what doth ensue
But moody and dull melancholy?
Kinsman to grim and comfortless despair,
And at her heels a huge infectious troop
Of pale distemperatures and foes to life?
In food, in sport and life-preserving rest
To be disturb'd, would mad or man or beast:
The consequence is then thy jealous fits
Have scared thy husband from the use of wits.
Luc. She never reprehended him but mildly.
When he did misbehave, she took it rough and wildly.
Why bear you these rebukes and answer not?
Adr. She did betray me to my own reprodf.
Good people, enter and lay hold on him.
Abb. No, not a creature enters in my house.
Adr. Then let your servants bring my husband forth.
Abb. Neither: he took this place for sanctuary,
And it shall privilege him from your hands
Till I have brought him to his wits again,
Or lose my labour in assaying it.
Adr. I will attend my husband, be his nurse,
Diet his sickness, as it is my office.
And will have no attorney but myself;
And therefore let me have him home with me.
Abb. Be patient; for I will not let him stir
Till I have used the approved means I have,
With wholesome syrups, drugs and holy prayers,
To make of him a formal man again:
It is a branch and peril of my oath,
A charitable duty of my order.
Therefore depart and leave him here with me.
Adr. I will not hence and leave my husband here:
And ill it doth be seem thy holiness
To separate the husband and the wife.
Abb. Be quiet and depart: thou shalt not have him.
[Exit.
Luc. Complain unto the duke of this indignity.
Adr. Come, go; I will fall prostrate at his feet
And never rise until my tears and prayers
Have won his grace to come in person hither
And take peremptory my demand from the abbess.
Sec. Mer. By this, I think, the dial points at five:
Anon, I'm sure, the duke himself in person
Comes this way to the melancholy vale,
The place of death and sorry execution,
Behind the ditches of the abbey here.
Aug. Upon what cause?
Sec. Mer. To see a reverend Syracusan merchant,
Who put unluckily into this bay
Against the laws and statutes of this town,
Beheaded publickly for his offence. [death.
Aug. See where they come: we will behold his
Luc. Kneel to the duke before he pass the abbey.

Enter Duke, attended; Egeon barbeheaded;
with the Headsman and other Officers.

Duke. Yet once again proclaim it publicly,
If any friend will pay the sum for him,
He shall not die: so much we tender him. [bass!
Adr. Justice, most sacred duke, against the ab-
Duke. She is a virtuous and a reverend lady:
It cannot be that she hath done thee wrong.
Adr. May it please your grace, Antipholus my Whom I made lord of me and all I had, [husband,
At your important letters,—this ill day
A most outrageous fit of madness took him;
That desperately he hurried through the street,—
With him his bondman, all as mad as he,—
Doing displeasure to the citizens
By rushing in their houses, bearing thence Kings, jewels, any thing his rage did like.
Once did I get him bound and sent him home,
Whilst to take order for the wrongs I went
That here and there his fury had committed.
Anon, I wot not by what strong escape,
He broke from those that had the guard of him;
And with his mad attendant and himself,
Each one with drawn swords, met us again and madly bent on us.
Chased us away, till raising of more aid
We came again to bind them. Then they fled
Into this abbey, whither we pursued them:
And here the abbess shuts the gates on us

89
And will not suffer us to fetch him out, Nor send him forth that we may bear him hence. Therefore, most gracious duke, with thy command Let him be brought forth and borne hence for our wars.

Duke. Long since this thy husband served me in my And I to thee engaged a prince's word, When thou didst make him master of thy bed, To do him all the grace and good I could. Go, some of you, knock at the abbey-gate And bid the lady abbess come to me. I will determine this before I stir.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. O mistress, mistress, shift and save yourself! My master and his man are both broke loose, Beaten the men a-row with the wond'ring doctor, Whose beard they have singed off with brands of And ever, as it blazed, they threw on him [fire; Great pails of puddled mire to quench the hair: My master preaches patience to him and the while His man with scissors nicks him like a fool, And sure, unless they send some present help, Between them they will kill the conqueror.

Adv. Peace, fool! thy master and his man are And that is false thou dost report to us. [here, Serv. Mistress, upon my life, I tell you true; I have not breathed almost since I did see it. He cries for you and vows, if he can take you, To search your face and to disfigure you.

Cry within.

Hark! hark! I hear him, mistress: fly, be gone! Duke. Come, stand by me; fear nothing. Guard with halberds!

Adv. Ay me, it is my husband! Witness you, That he is borne about invisible: Even now we housed him in the abbey here; And now he's there, past thought of human reason.

Enter Antipholus of Ephesus and Dromio of Ephesus.

Ant. E. Justice, most gracious duke, O grant me justice! Even for the service that long since I did thee, When I besrid thee in the wars and took Deep scars to save thy life; even for the blood That then I lost for thee, now grant me justice. [Exit. Unless the tear of death did make me deate, I see my son Antipholus and Dromio. [there! Ant. E. Justice, sweet prince, against that woman She whom thou gavest to me to be my wife, That hath abused and dishonour'd me Even in the strength and height of injury! Beyond thy power, unless thou bid me deate, That she this day hath shameless thrown on me. Duke. Discover how, and thou shalt find me just.

Ant. E. This day, great duke, she shut the doors upon me.

White with harlots feasted in my house. [so? Duke. A most base fault! Say, woman, dost thou

Adv. No, my good lord; myself, he and my sister In day did dine together. So befall my soul As this is false he burdens me withal!

Luc. Ne'er may I look on day, nor sleep on night, But she tells to your highness simple truth! Ant. E. My liege, I am advised what I say, Neither disturbed with the effect of wine, Nor heady-rash, provoked with raging ire, Albeit my wrongs might make one wiser mad. This woman lock'd me out this day from dinner; That goldsmith there, were he not pack'd with her, Could witness it, for he was with me then; Who parted with me to go fetch a chain, Promising to bring it to the Porpentine, Where Balthazar and I dined together.

Our dinner done, and he not coming thither, I went to seek him: in the street I met him And in his company that gentleman. There did this perjured goldsmith swear me down That I think'd him yesternight a madman. Which, God he knows, I saw not: for the which He did arrest me with an officer. I did obey, and sent my servant home. For certain doubts: he with none return'd. Then fairly I bespoke the officer To go in company with me to my house. By the way we met My wife, her sister, and a rabble more Of vile confessors. Along with them [lain, They brought one Pinch, a hungry lean-faced vil.- A mere anatomy, a mountebank, A thready juggler and a fortune-teller, A needy, hollow-eyed, sharp-looking wretch, A living-dead man: this pernicious slave, Forsooth, took on him as a conjurer, And, gazing in mine eyes, feeling my pulse, And with no face, as 't were, outface me, Cries out, 'The living dead at hand! You live?' They fell upon me, bound me, bore me thence And in a dark and dankish vault at home There left me and my man, both bound together; Till, gnawing with my teeth my bonds in sunder, I gain'd my freedom and immediately Ran hither to your grace; whom I beseech To give you my sole satisfaction.

For these deep scamps and great indignities, [him, Ant. E. My lord, in truth, thus far I witness That he dined not at home, but was lock'd out. Duke. But had he such a chain of thee or no? Ant. He had, my lord: and when he ran in here, These people saw the chain about his neck. [him: See, Sir. Besides, I will be sworn these cars of Heard you confess you had the chain of him After you first forsook it on the mart: And thereupon I drew my sword on you; And then you fled into this abbey here, From whence, I think, you are come by miracle.

Ant. E. I never came within these abbey-walls, Nor ever didst thou draw thy sword on me: I never saw the chain, so help me Heaven! And this is false you burden me withal.

Duke. Why, what an intricate impostch of this! I think you all have drunk of Cress's cup. If here you housed him, here he would have been; If he were mad he would not plead so coldly: You say he dined at home; the goldsmith here Denies that saying. Sirrah, what say you? [time. Dro. E. Sir, he dined with her there, at the Porpen-

Cour. He did, and from my finger snatched that ring.

Ant. E. 'Tis true, my liege; this ring I had of her. Duke. Saw'st thou him enter at the abbey here? Cour. As sure, my liege, as I do see your grace. Duke. Why, this is strange. Go call the abbess I think you are all mated about this neck. [hither. Ege. Most mighty duke, vouchesafe me speak a Haply I see a friend will save my life [word: And pay the sum that may deliver me. Duke. Speak freely, Syracusan, what thou wilt. Ege. Is not thy name, sir, called Antipholus? And is not that thy bondman, Dromio? Dro. E. Within this hour I was his bondman, sir, But he, I thank him, gaw'd in two my coards: Now am I Dromio and his man unbound. Ege. I am sure you both of you remember me. Dro. E. No, my lord, I never saw your thrice, by you; For lately we were bound, as you are now. You are not Pinch's patient, are you, sir? Ege. Why look you strange on me? you know me well.

Ant. E. I never saw you in my life till now.
ACT V.

THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.

SCENE I.

Ant. E. I came from Corinth, my most gracious lord, —

Dro. E. And I with him.

Ant. E. Brought to this town by that most famous

Duke Menaphon, your most renowned uncle.

Adr. Which of you two did dine with me to-day?

Ant. S. I, gentle mistress.

Adr. And are not you my husband?

Ant. E. No; I say nay to that.

Ant. S. I, and so do I; yet did she call me so:

And this fair gentlewoman, her sister here.

did call me brother. [To Luc.] What I told you

I hope I shall have leisure to make good; [then,

If this be not a dream I see and hear.

Aug. That is the chain, sir, which you had of me.

Ant. S. I think it be, sir; I deny it not.

Ant. E. And you, sir, for this chain arrested me.

Aug. I think I did, sir; I deny it not.

Adr. I sent you money, sir, to be your bail,

By Dromio; but I think he brought it not.

Dro. E. No, none by me.

Ant. S. This purse of ducats I received from you

And Dromio; nor my man did bring them me.

I see we still did meet each other's man,

And I was ta'en for him, and he for me,

And thereupon these errors are arose.

Ant. E. These ducats pawn I for my father here.

Duke. It shall not need: thy father hath his life.

Cour. Thereupon these errors are arose.

Dro. E. Go to with us into the abbey here

And hear at large discoursed all our fortunes:

And all that are assembled in this place,

That by this sympathized one day's error

Have suffer'd wrong, go keep us company,

And we shall make full satisfaction.

Thirty-three years have I but gone in travail

Of you, my sons; and till this present hour

My heavy burden never delivered.

The duke, my husband and my children both,

And you the calendars of their nativity,

Go to a gossips' feast, and go with me;

After so long grief, such festivity!

Duke. With all my heart, I'll gossip at this feast.

[Exeunt all but Ant. S., Ant. E., Dro. S., and

Dro. E.

Dro. S. Master, shall I fetch your stuff from shipboard?

Ant. E. Dromio, what stuff of mine hast thou embark'd?

Dro. S. Your goods that lay at host, sir, in the Centaur.

Ant. S. He speaks to us. I am your master,

Dromio;

Come, go with us: we'll look to that anon:

Embrace thy brother there: rejoice with him.

Dro. S. There is a fat friend at your master's house,

That kitchen'd me for you to-day at dinner:

She now shall be my sister, not my wife.

Dro. E. Methinks you are my glass, and not my hearth.

I see by you I am a sweet-faced youth.

Will you walk in to see their gossiping?

Dro. S. Not I, sir; you are my elder.

Dro. E. That's a question: how shall we try it?

Dro. S. We 'll draw cuts for the senior: till then lead thou first.

Dro. E. Nay, then: thus:

We came into the world like brother and brother;

And now let's go hand in hand, not one before another.

[Exeunt.

Enter Leonato, Hero, and Beatrice, with a Messenger.

Leon. I learn in this letter that Don Pedro of Arragon comes this night to Messina.

Mess. He is very near by this: he was not three leagues off when I left him. [action? Leon. How many gentlemen have you lost in this war's? But few of any sort, and none of name.

Leon. A victory is twice itself when the achiever brings home full numbers. I find here that Don Pedro hath bestowed much honour on a young Florentine called Claudio.

Mess. Much deserved on his part and equally remembered by Don Pedro; he hath borne himself beyond the promise of his age, doing, in the figure of a lamb, the feats of a lion: he hath indeed better bettered expectation than you must expect of me to tell you now.

Leon. He hath an uncle here in Messina will be very much glad of it.

Mess. I have already delivered him letters, and there appears much joy in him: even so much that joy could not show itself modest enough without a badge of bitterness.

Leon. Did he break out into tears?

Mess. In great measure.

Leon. A kind overflow of kindness: there are no faces truer than those that are so washed. How much better is it to weep at joy than to joy at weeping?

Beat. I pray you, is Signior Montanto returned from the wars or no?

Mess. I know none of that name, lady: there was none such in the army of any sort.

Leon. What is he that you ask for, niece?

Hero. My cousin means Signior Benedick of Padua.

Mess. O, he's returned; and as pleasant as ever.

Beat. He set up his bills here in Messina and challenged Cupid at the fight; and my uncle's fowl, reading the challenge, subscribed for Cupid, and challenged him at the birt-bolt. I pray you, how many hath he killed and eaten in these wars? But how many hath he killed? for indeed I promised to eat all of his killing.

Leon. Faith, niece, you tax Signior Benedick too much; but he'll be meet with you. I doubt it not.

Mess. He hath done good service, lady, in these wars.

Beat. You had musty victual, and he hath help to eat it: he is a very valiant trencher-man; he hath an excellent stomach.

Mess. And a good soldier too, lady.

Beat. And a good soldier to a lady: but what is he to a lord?

Mess. A lord to a lord, a man to a man: stuffed with all honourable virtues.

Beat. It is so, indeed; he is no less than a stuffed man: but for the stuffing,—well, we are all mortal.

Leon. You must not, sir, mistake my niece. There is a kind of merry war betwixt Signior Benedick and her: they never meet but there's a skirmish of wit between them.

Beat. Alas! he gets nothing by that. In our last conflict four of his five wits went halting off, and now is the whole man governed with one: so that if he have wit enough to keep himself warm, let him bear it for a difference between himself and his horse; for it is all the wealth that he hath left, to be known a reasonable creature. Who is his companion now? He hath every month a new sworn brother.

Mess. Is't possible?

Beat. Very easily possible: he wears his faith but as the fashion of his hat; it ever changes with the next block [books].

Mess. I see, lady, the gentleman is not in your No; as he were, I would burn my study. But, I pray you, who is his companion? Is there no young squarer now that will make a voyage with him to the devil?

Mess. He is most in the company of the right noble Claudio.

Beat. O Lord, he will hang upon him like a disease: he is sooner caught than the pestilence, and the taker runs presently mad. God help the noble Claudio! If he have caught the Benedick, it will cost him a thousand pound ere a' be cured.

Mess. I will hold friends with you, lady.

Beat. Do, good friend.

Leon. You will never run mad, niece.

Beat. No, not till a hot January.

Mess. Don Pedro is approached.
Enter Don Pedro, Don John, Claudio, Benedick, and Balthasar.

D. Pedro. Good Signior Leonato, you are come to meet your trouble: the fashion of the world is to a happy end.

Leon. Never came trouble to my house in the likeness of your grace: for trouble being gone, comfort should remain; but when you depart from me, sorrow abides and happiness takes his leave.

D. Pedro. You embrace your charge too willingly. I think this is your daughter.

Leon. Her mother hath many times told me so.

Bene. Were you in doubt, sir, that you asked her?

Leon. Signior Benedick, no; for then were you a child.

D. Pedro. You have it full, Benedick: we may guess by this what you are, being a man. Truly, the lady mothers herself. Be happy, lady; for you are like an honourable father.

Bene. If Signior Leonato be her father, she would not have his head on her shoulders for all Messina, as long as he as she is.

Benedick. Be sure what you will still be talking.

Leon. Signior Benedick: nobody marks you. [living?]

Bene. What, my dear Lady Disdain! are you yet best.

Benedick. Is it possible disdain should die while she hath such meat to feed it as Signior Benedick? Courtesy itself must convert to disdain, if you come in a courtesy necessity.

Bene. Then is courtesy a turncoat. But it is certain I am loved of all ladies, only you excepted; and I would I could find in my heart that I had not a hard heart; for truly, I love none.

Benedick. A dear happiness to women: they else would have been troubled with a pernicious suitor. I had lost God and my cold blood. I am of your humour for that: I had rather hear my dog bark at a crow than a man speak he loves me.

Leon. God keep your ladyship still in that mind! So some gentleman or other shall escape a predestinate scratched face.

Benedick. Scratching could not make it worse, an 'twere such a face as yours were.

Bene. Well, you are a rare parrot-teacher.

Benedick. A bird of my tongue is better than a beast of yours.

Bene. I would my horse had the speed of your tongue, and so good a continuer. But keep your way, I'th God's name; I have done.

Benedick. You always end with a jude's trick: I know you of old.

D. Pedro. That is the sum of all, Leonato. Signior Claudio and Signior Benedick, my dear friend Leonato hath invited you all. I tell him we shall stay here at the least a month; and he heartily prays some occasion may detain us longer. I dare swear he is no hypocrite, but prays from his heart.

Leon. If you swear, my lord, you shall not be sworn. [To Don John] Let me bid you welcome, my lord; and, being reconciled to the prince your brother, I owe you all duty.

D. John. I thank you: I am not of many words, but I thank you.

Leon. Please it your grace lead on?

D. Pedro. Your hand, Leonato; we will go together. [Exeunt all except Benedick and Claudio.

Claud. Benedick, didst thou note the daughter of Signior Leonato?

Bene. I noted her not; but I looked on her.

Claud. Is she not a modest young lady?

Bene. Do you question me, as an honest man should, about some true judgment? or would you have me speak after my custom, as being a professor of a true judgment to their sex?

Claud. No: I pray thee speak in sober judgment. Bene. Why, faith, methinks she's too low for a high praise, too brown for a fair praise and too little for a great praise: only this commendation I can afford her, that were she other than she is, she were unhandsome; and being no other but as she is, do not like her.

Claud. Thou art the kindest I am in sport: I pray thee tell me truly how thou likest her. [her?

Bene. Would you buy her, that you inquire after Claudio. Can the world buy such a jewel?

Bene. Yea, and a case to put it into. But speak you this with a sal brawn? or do you play the flouting Jack, to tell us Cupid is a good hard-flinder and Vulcan a rare carpenter? Come, in what key shall a man take you, to go in the song?

Claud. In mine eye she is the sweetest lady that ever I looked on.

Bene. I can see yet without spectacles and I see no such matter: there's her cousin, and she were not possessed with a fury, exceeds her as much in beauty as the first of May doth the last of December. But I hope you have no intent to turn husband, have you?

Claud. I would scarce trust myself, though I had sworn the contrary; if Hero were my wife.

Bene. Is't come to this? In faith, hath not the world one man but he will wear his cap with suspicion? Shall I never see a bachelor of three score again? Go to, I'm faith; and thou wilt needs thrust thy neck into a yoke, wear the print of it and sigh away Sundays. Look: Don Pedro is returned to seek you.

Re-enter Don Pedro.

D. Pedro. What secret hath held you here, that you followed not to Leonato's?

Bene. I would your grace would constrain me to D. Pedro: I charge thee on thy allegiance.

Bene. You hear, Count Claudio: I can be secret as a dumb man; I would have you think so; but, on my allegiance, mark you this, on my allegiance. He is in love. With who? now that is your grace's part. Mark how short his answer is:—With Hero, Leonato's short daughter.

Claud. If this were so, so were it uttered.

Bene. Like the old tale, my lord; 'tis not so, nor 't was not so, but, indeed, God forbid it should be so.'

Claud. If my passion change not shortly, God forbid it should be otherwise.

D. Pedro. Thou wast ever an obstinate heretic in the despite of beauty.

Claud. And never could maintain his part but in the force of his will.

Bene. That a woman conceived me. I thank her; that she brought me up, I likewise give her my humble thanks: but that I will have a reechet winded in my forehead, or hang my bugle in an invisible baldrikk, all women shall pardon me. Because I will not do them the wrong to mistrust any, I will do myself the right to trust none; and the finesse or the which I may go the fitter, I will live a bachelor.

D. Pedro. I shall see thee, ere I die, look pale with love.

Bene. With anger, with sickness, or with hunger, my lord, not with love: prove that ever I lose more blood with love than I will get again with drinking, pick out mine eyes with a ballad-maker’s pen and hang me up at the door of a brothel-house for the sign of blind Cupid.

D. Pedro. Well, if ever thou dost fall from this faith, thou wilt prove a notable argument.

Bene. If so, I do, hang me in a bottle like a cat and shoot at me; and he that hits me, let him be clapped on the shoulder, and called Adam.

D. Pedro. Well, as thou shalt try.

In O, the savage bull doth bear the yoke.’

Bene. The savage bull may; but if ever the sensible Benedick bear it, pluck off the bull’s horns and set them in my forehead: and let me be vilely painted, and in such great letters as they write ‘Here is good horse to hire,’ let them signify under my sign ‘Here you may see Benedick the married man.’

Claud. If this should ever happen, thou wouldst be horn-mad.

D. Pedro. Nay, if Cupid have not spent all his quiver in Venice, thou wilt quack for this shortly.

Bene. I look for an earthquake too, then.

D. Pedro. Nay, mock not, mock not. The body of your discourse is sometime guarded with fragments, and the guards are but slightly bastoned on neither: ere you flout old ends any further, examine your conscience: and so I leave you. [Exit.

Claud. To the tuition of God: From my house, if I had it.—

D. Pedro. The sixth of July: Your loving friend, Benedick.

Bene. Nay, mock not, mock not. The body of your discourse is sometime guarded with fragments, and the guards are but slightly bastoned on neither: ere you flout old ends any further, examine your conscience: and so I leave you. [Exit.

Claud. My liege, your highness now may do me good.

D. Pedro. My love is thine to teach: teach it but And thou shalt see how apt it is to learn Any hard lesson that may do thee good.

Claud. Hath Leonato any son, my lord?

D. Pedro. No child but Hero; she’s his only heir. Dost thou affect her, Claudio?

Claud. O, my lord, When you went onward on this ended action, I look’d upon her with a soldier’s eye, That liked, but had a rouglier task in hand Than to drive liking to the name of love: But now I am return’d and that war-thoughts Have left their places vacant, in their rooms Come thronging soft and delicate desires, All prompting me how fair young Hero is, Saying, I liked her ere I went to wars.

D. Pedro. Thou wilt be like a lover presently And fire the hearer with a book of words. If thou hast love and know how to show it, And I will break with her and with her father And thou shalt have her. Was’t not to this end That thou beganst to twist so fine a story?

Claud. How sweetly do you minister to love, That know love’s grief by his complexion! But lest my liking night too sudden seem, I would have sav’d it with a longer treatise.

D. Pedro. What need the bridge much broader Than the ford?

The fairest grant is the necessity. Look, what will serve is it: ‘t is once, thou lovest, And thou shalt have her. But lest my liking night too sudden seem, I know we shall have revelling to-night: I will assume thy part in some disguise And tell fair Hero I am Claudio, And in her bosom I’ll uncloak my heart And take her hearing prisoner with the force And strong encounter of my amorous tale; Then after to her father will I break; And the conclusion is, she shall be thine. In practice let us put it presently. [Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—A room in Leonato’s house.

Enter Leonato and Antonio, meeting.

Leon. How now, brother! Where is my cousin, thy son? hath he provided this music?

Ant. He is very busy about it. But, brother, I can tell you strange news that you yet dream not of.

Leon. Are they good?

Ant. As the event stamps them: but they have a good cover; they show well outward. The prince and Count Claudio, walking in a thick-pleached alley in mine orchard, were thus much overheard by a man of mine: the prince discovered to Claudio that he loved my niece your daughter and meant to acknowledge it this night in a dance: and if he found her accordant, he meant to take the present time by the top and instantly break with you of it.

Leon. Hath the fellow any wit that told you this?

Ant. A good sharp fellow: I will send for him; and question him yourself.

Leon. No, no; we will hold it as a dream till it appear itself: but I will acquaint my daughter withal, that she may be the better prepared for an answer, if peradventure this be true. Go you and tell her of it. [Enter attendants.] Cousins, you know what you have to do. O, I cry you mercy, friend; go you with me, and I will use your skill. Good cousin, have a care this busy time. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.

Enter Don John and Conrade.

Con. What the good-year, my lord! why are you thus out of measure sad?

D. John. There is no measure in the occasion that breeds; therefore the sadness is without limit.

Con. You should hear reason.

D. John. And when I have heard it, what blessing brings it?

Con. If not a present remedy, at least a patient.

D. John. I wonder that thou, being, as thou say’st, under Saturn, goest about to apply a moral medicine to a mortifying mischief. I cannot hide what I am: I must be sad when I have cause and smile at no man’s jests, eat when I have stomach and wait for no man’s leisure, sleep when I am drowsy and tend on no man’s business, laugh when I am merry and claw no man in his humour.

Con. Yea, but you must not make the full show of this till you may do it without control. You have of late stood out against your brother, and he hath ta’en you newly into his grace; where it is impossible you should bear root, but by the fair weather that you make yourself; it is needful that you frame the season for your own harvest.

D. John. I had rather be a canker in a hedge than a rose in his grace, and it better fits my blood to be disdained of all than to fashion a carriage to rob love from any; in this, though I cannot be said to be a flattering honest man, it must not be denied but I am a plain-dealing villain. I am trusted with a muzzle and enfranchised with a clout; therefore I have decreed not to sing in my cage. If I had my mouth, I would bite; if I had my liberty, I would bite, and by any other time let me be that I am and seek not to alter me.

Con. Can you make no use of your discontent?

D. John. I make all use of it, for I use it only.

Who comes here?
ACT II.

MUCh ADO ABOUt NOtHINg.

SCENE I.—A ball in Leonato's house.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Hero, Beatrice, and others.

Leon. Was not Count John here at supper?

Ant. I saw him not.

Beat. How tartly that gentleman looks! I never can see him but I am heart-burned an hour after.

Hero. He is of a very melancholy disposition.

Beat. He were an excellent man that were made just in the midway between him and Benedick; the one is too like an image and says nothing, and the other too like my lady's eldest son, evermore talking.

Leon. Then half Signior Benedick's tongue in Count John's mouth, and half Count John's melancholy in Signior Benedick's face.

Beat. With a good leg and a good foot, uncle, and money enough in his purse, such a man would win any woman in the world, if a' could get her goodwill.

Leon. By my troth, niece, thou wilt never get thee a husband, if thou be so shrewd of thy tongue.

Ant. In faith, she's too curt.

Beat. Too curtse is more than curtse: I shall lessen God's sending that way; for it is said, 'God sends a curst cow short horns;' but to a cow too curtse he sends none.

Leon. So, by being too curtse, God will send you no horns.

Beat. Just, if he send me no husband; for the which blessing I am at him upon my knees every morning and evening. Lord, I could not endure a husband with a beard on his face: I had rather lie in the woollen.

Leon. You may light on a husband that hath no beard.

Beat. What should I do with him? dress him in my apparel and make him my waiting-gentlewoman? He that hath a beard is more than a youth, and he that hath no beard is less than a man: and he that is more than a youth is not for me, and he that is less than a man, I am not for him: therefore I will even take sixpence in earnest of the beardward, and lead his apes into hell.

Leon. Well, then, go you into hell?

Beat. I will not go; and there will the devil meet me, like an old cuckold, with horns on his head, and say, 'Get you to heaven, Beatrice, get you to heaven; here's no place for you maidis:' so deliver I up my apes, and away to Saint Peter for the heavens; he shows me where the bachelors sit, and there live we as merry as the day is long.

Bora. Being entertained for a perfumer, as I was smoking a misty room, comes me the prince and Claudio, hand in hand, in sad conference: I whipt me behind the arras, and there heard it agreed upon that the prince should woo Hero for himself, and having obtained her, give her to Count Claudio.

D. John. Come, come, let us thither: this may prove food to my displeasure. That you start-up hath all the glory of my overthrow: if I can cross him any way, I bless myself every way. You are both sure, and will assist me?

Con. To the death, my lord.

D. John. Let us to the great supper; their cheer is the greater that I am subdued. Would the cock we of my mind! Shall we go prove what's to be done?

Bora. We'll wait upon your lordship. [Exeunt.]

ACT II.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, Balthasar, Don John, Borachio, Margaret, Ursula, and others, masked.

D. Pedro. Lady, will you walk about with your friend?

Hero. So walk you softly and look sweetly and say nothing. I am yours for the walk; and especially when I walk away.

D. Pedro. With me in your company?

Hero. I may say so, when I please.

D. Pedro. And when please you to say so?

Hero. When I please, or when I like your favour; for God defend the lute should be like the case!

D. Pedro. My visor is Philemon's roof; within the house is Jove.

Hero. Why, then, your visor should be thatched.

D. Pedro. Speak low, if you speak love.

[Drawing her aside.]
ACT II.  MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.  SCENE I.

Balth.  Well, I would you did like me.
Mary.  So would not I, for your own sake: for I have many ill qualities.
Balth.  Which is one?
Mary.  I say my prayers aloud.
Balth.  I love you the better: the hearers may cry, Amen.
Mary.  God match me with a good dancer!
Balth.  Amen.
Bene.  And God keep him out of my sight when the dance is done! Answer, clerk.
Balth.  No more words: the clerk is answered.

Ves.  I know you well enough; you are Signior Antonio.

Ant.  At a word, I am not.
Ves.  I know you by the wrangling of your head.
Ant.  To tell you true, I countervail him.
Ves.  You could never do him so ill-well, unless you were the very man. Here's his dry hand up and down: you are he, you are he.

Ant.  At a word, I am not.

Ves.  Come, come, do you think I do not know you by your excellent wit? can virtue hide itself?  Go to, man, you are he: graces will appear, and there's an end.

Beat.  Will you not tell me who told you so?

Bene.  No, you shall pardon me.

Beat.  Nor will you not tell me who you are?

Bene.  Not now.

Beat.  That I was disdained, and that I had my good wit out of the 'Hundred Merry Tales':—well, this was Signior Benedick that said so.

Bene.  What's he?

Beat.  I am sure you know him well enough.

Bene.  Not I, believe me.

Beat.  Did he never make you laugh?

Bene.  I pray you, what is he?

Beat.  Why, he is the prince's jester: a very dull fool; only his gift is in devising impossible shames: none but libertines delight in him; and the commendation is not in his wit, but in his villany: for he both pleaseth men and angers them, and then they laugh at him and beat him. I am sure he is in the fleet: I would he had boarded me.

Bene.  When I know the gentleman, I'll tell him what you say.

Beat.  I do: he'll but break a comparison or two on me; which, peradventure not marked or not laughed at, strikes him into melancholy; and then there's a partridge wing saved, for the fool will eat no supper that night. [Music.]  We must follow the Bene.  in every good thing.

Beat.  Nay, if they lead to any ill, I will leave them at the next turning.

[Exeunt.  Then except all except Don John, Borachio, and Claudio.

D. John.  Sure my brother is amorous on Hero and hath withdrawn her father to break with him about it.  The ladies follow her and but one visor remains.

Boro.  And that is Claudio: I know him by his bearing.

D. John.  Are not you Signior Benedick?

Claud.  You know me well; I am he.

D. John.  Signior, you are very near my brother in his love; he is enamoured on Hero; I pray you, dissuade him from her: she is no equal for his birth: you may do the part of an honest man in it.

Claud.  How know you he loves her?

D. John.  I heard him swear his affection.

Boro.  So did I too; and he swore he would marry her.

D. John.  Come, let us to the banqueting.

[Exeunt Don John and Borachio.

Claud.  Thus answer I in name of Benedick.

But hear these ill news with the ears of Claudio.  "Tis certain so: the prince woos for himself.

Friendship is constant in all other things

Save in the office and affairs of love:
Therefore all hearts in love use their own tongues:
Let every eye negotiate for itself
And trust no agent; for beauty is a witch
Against whose charms faith melteth into blood.
This is an accident of hourly proof,
Which I mistrusted not.  Farewell, therefore, Hero!

Re-enter Benedick.

Bene.  Count Claudio?

Claud.  Yea, the same.

Bene.  Come, will you go with me?

Claud.  Whither?

Bene.  Even to the next willow, about your own business, county.  What fashion will you wear the garland of about your neck, like an usher's chain, or under your arm, like a lieutenant's war?  You must wear it one way, for the prince hath got your Hero.

Claud.  I wish him joy of her.

Bene.  Why, that's spoken like an honest dowrier: so they sell bullocks.  But did you think the prince would have served you thus?

Claud.  I pray you, leave me.

Bene.  No!  now you strike like the blind man: 'twas the boy that stole your meat, and you'll beat the post.

Claud.  If it will not be, I'll leave you.  [Exit.  Bene.  Alas, poor hurt foul! now will he crease into sedges.  But that my Lady Beatrice should know me, and not know me!  The prince's fool! Ha?  It may be I go under that title because I am merry.  Yea, but so I am apt to do myself wrong; I am not so reputed: it is the base, though bitter, disposition of Beatrice that puts the world into her person, and so gives me out.  Well, I'll be revenged as I may.

Re-enter Don Pedro.

D. Pedro.  Now, signior, where's the count?  did you see him?

Bene.  Truth, my lord, I have played the part of Lady Fame.  I found him here as melancholy as a lodge in a Warren: I told him, and I think I told him true, that your grace had got the good will of this young lady; and I offered him my company to a willow-tree, either to make him a garland, as you desire him, or to bind him up a rod, as being worthy to be whipped.

D. Pedro.  To be whipped!  What's his fault?

Bene.  The flat transgression of a school-boy, who, being overjoyed with finding a bird's nest, shows it his companion, and he steals it.

D. Pedro.  Why, wilt thou have a trust a transgression?  The transgression is in the stealer.

Bene.  Yet it had not been amiss the rod had been made, and the garland too; for the garland he might have worn himself, and the rod he might have bestowed on you, who, as I take it, have stolen his bird's nest.

D. Pedro.  I will but teach them to sing, and restore them to the owner.

Bene.  If their singing answer your saying, by my faith, you say honestly.

D. Pedro.  The Lady Beatrice hath a quarrel to you: the gentleman that danced with her told her she is much wronged by you.

Bene.  O, she misused me past the endurance of a block! an oak but with one green leaf on it would have answered her; my very visor began to assume life and scold with her.  She told me, not thinking to tell me, that I was the prince's jester, that I was droller than a great thaw; challenging jest upon jest with such impossible conveyance upon me that I stood like a man at a mark, with a whole army shooting at me.  She speaks promisaries, and every word stabs: if her breath were as terrible as her terminations, there were no living near her;
she would infect to the north star. I would not marry her, though she were endowed with all thy youth left him before he transgressed: she would have made Hercules have turned spit, yea, and have elb'd his club to make the fire too. Come, talk not of her: you shall find her the infernal Ate in good apparel. I would to God some scholar would conjure her: for certain, while she is here, a man may live as quiet in Hell as in a sanctuary; and people sin upon purpose, because they would go thither: so, indeed, all disquiet, horror and perturbation follows her.

D. Pedro. Look, here she comes.

Enter Claudio, Beatrice, Hero, and Leonato. Bence. Will your grace command me any service to the world's end? I will go on the slightest errand now to the Antipodes that you can devise to send me on; I will fetch you a tooth-picker now from the furthest inch of Asia, bring you the length of Prestor John's foot, fetch you a hair off the great Cham's beard, do you any emblazons to the Pignies, rather than hold three words' conference with this harpy. You have no employment for me?

D. Pedro. None, but to desire your good company.

Bence. O God, sir, here's a dish I love not: I cannot endure your presence.

Exit. Bence. Come, lady, come; you have lost the heart of Signior Benedick.

Beat. Indeed, my lord, he lent me awhile; and I gave him use for it, a double heart for his single one: marry, once before he won it of me with false dice, therefore your grace may well say I have lost it.

D. Pedro. You have put him down, lady; you have put him down.

Beat. So I would not he should do me, my lord, lest I should prove the mother of fools. I have brought Count Claudio, whom you sent me to seek.

D. Pedro. Why, how now, count! where are you that said:

Claud. Not sad, my lord.

D. Pedro. How then? sick?

Claud. Neither, my lord.

Beat. The count is neither sad, nor sick, nor merry, nor well; but civil count, civil as an orange, and something of that feudal complexion.

D. Pedro. I faith, lady. I think your blazon to be true; though, I'll be sworn, if he be so, his conceit is false. Here, Claudio, I have vowed in thy name, and fair Hero is won: I have broke with her father, and his good will obtained; name the day of her marriage, and I will teach you how to joy!

Leon. Count, take of me my daughter, and with her all my fortunes: his grace hath made the match, and all grace say Amen to it.

Beat. Speak, count, 'tis your cue.

Claud. Silence is the perfectest herald of joy: I will say no little happy, if I can say how much. Lady, as you are mine, I am yours: I give away myself for you and dote upon the exchange.

Beat. Speak, count: or, if you cannot, stop his mouth with a kiss, and let not him speak neither.

D. Pedro. In faith, lady, you have a merry heart.

Beat. Yea, my lord; I thank it, poor fool, it keeps on the windy side of care. My cousin tells him in his ear that he is in her heart.

Claud. And so she doth, cousin.

Beat. Good Lord, for alliance! Thus goes every one to the world but I, and I am sunburnt: I may sit in sun, and cry leigh-ho for a husband!

D. Pedro. Lady Beatrice, I will get you one.

Beat. I would rather have one of your father's getting. Hath your grace ne'er a brother like you? Your father got excellent husbands, if a maid could come by them.

D. Pedro. Will you have me, lady?

Beat. No, my lord, unless I might have another for working-days; your grace is too costly to wear every day.

D. Pedro. I beseech your grace, pardon me; I was born to speak all mirth and no matter.

D. Pedro. Your silence most offends me, and to be merry best becomes you; for, out of question, you were born in a merry hour.

Beat. No, sure, my lord, my mother cried: but then there was a star danced, and under that was I born. Cousin Beatrice, give you joy.

Leon. Niece, will you look to those things I told you of?

Beat. I cry you mercy, uncle. By your grace's pardon.

Leon. There's little of the melancholy element in her, my lord: she is never sad but when she sleeps, and not even sad then: for I have heard my daughter say, she hath often dreamed of unhappiness and waked herself with laughing.

D. Pedro. She cannot endure to hear tell of a husband.

Leon. O, by no means: she mocks all her woeers out of suit.

[Exit. D. Pedro. She were an excellent wife for Bence.

Leon. O Lord, my lord, if they were but a week married, they would talk themselves mad.

D. Pedro. Count Claudio, when mean you to go to church?

Claud. To-morrow, my lord: time goes on crutches till love have all his rites.

Leon. Not till Monday, my dear son, which is hence a just seven-night; and a time too brief, too, to have all things answer my mind.

D. Pedro. Come, you shake the head at so long a brev'ling: but, I warrant thee, Claudio, the time shall not go dully by us. I will in the interim undertake one of Hercules' labours: which is, to bring Signior Benedick and the Lady Beatrice into a mountain of affection the one with the other. I would fain have it a match, and I doubt not but to fashion it, if you three will but minister such assistance as I shall give you direction.

Leon. My lord, I am for you, though it cost me ten nights' watchings.

Claud. And I, my lord.

D. Pedro. And you too, gentle Hero?

Hero. I will do any modest office, my lord, to help my cousin to a good husband.

D. Pedro. And Benedick is not the unhopefullest husband that I know. Thus far can I praise him; he is of a noble strain, of approved valour and uncertain fortune, he will teach you how to humour your cousin, that she shall fall in love with Benedick; and, with your two helps, will so practice on Benedick that, in despite of his quick wit and his quassy stomach, he shall fall in love with Beatrice. If we can do this, Cupid is no longer an archer: his glory shall be ours, for we are the only love-gods. Go in with me, and I will tell you my drift.

[Exeunt.}

SCENE II.— The same.

Enter Don John and Borachio.

D. John. It is so; the Count Claudio shall marry the daughter of Leonato.

Borach. Yea, my lord; but I can cross it.

D. John. Any bar, any cross, any impediment will be medicable to me: I am sick in dispencery to him, and whatsoever comes athwart his affection ranges evenly with mine. How canst thou cross this marriage?

Borach. Not honestly, my lord; but so covertly that no dishonesty shall appear to me.

D. John. Show me briefly how.

Borach. I think I told you last year, which much I am in the favour of Margaret, the waiting-gentlewoman to Hero.
ACT II.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE III. — Leonato’s orchard.

Enter Benedick.

Benedick. Boy!

Enter Boy.

Boy. Signior?

Benedick. In my chamber-window lies a book: bring it hither to me in the orchard.

Boy. I am here already, sir.

Benedick. I know that; but I would have thee hence, and here again. [Exit Boy.] I do much wonder that one man, seeing how much another man is a fool when he dedicates his behaviours to love, will, after he hath laughed at such shallow fellows in others, become the argument of his own scorn by falling in love; and such a man is Claudio. I have known when there was no music with him but the drum and the fife; and now had he rather hear the tabor and the pipe: I have known when he would have walked ten mile a-foot to see a good armour; and now will he lie ten nights awake, carving the fashion of a new doublet. He was wont to speak plain and to the purpose, like an honest man and a soldier; and now is he turned orthographic; his words are a very fantastical banquet, just so many strange dishes. May I be so converted and see with these eyes? I cannot tell: I think not: I will not be so changed, but love may transform me to an oyster; but I’ll take my oath on it, till he have made an oyster of me, he shall never make me such a fool. One woman is fair, yet I am well; another is wise, yet I am well; another virtuous, yet I am well; but till all graces be in one woman, one woman shall not come in my grace. Rich she shall be, that’s certain; wise, or I’ll none; virtuous, or I’ll never cheapen her; fair, or I’ll never look on her; mild, or one none mean; noble, or not I for an angel; of good discourse, an excellent musician, and her hair shall be of what colour it please God. Ha! the prince and Monsieur Love! I will hide me in the arbour. [Withdraws.]

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, and Leonato.

Don Pedro. Come, shall we hear this music?

Cloten. Yea, my good lord. How still the evening, as hush’d on purpose to grace harmony! [Singing,] Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, and Leonato.

Don Pedro. Come, Balthasar, we’ll hear that song again.

Balthasar. O, good my lord, tax not so bad a voice To slander music any more than once.

Don Pedro. It is the witness still of excellence To put a strange face on his own perfection.

I pray thee, sing, and let me woo no more.

Balthasar. Because you talk of wooing, I will sing; Since many a wiser youth commencement his suit To her he thinks not worthy, yet he wooes, Yet will he swear he loves.

Don Pedro. Now, pray thee, come; Or, if thou wilt hold longer argument, Do it in notes.

Balthasar. Note this before my notes; There’s not a note of mine that’s worth the noting.

Don Pedro. Why, these are very crotchets that he speaks.

Balthasar. Note, notes, forsooth, and nothing.

Don Pedro. Why, here, now, divine air! now is his soul ravished! Is it not strange that sheeps’ guts should hate souls out of men’s bodies? Well, a horn for my money, when all’s done.

THE SONG.

Balthasar. Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more,

Men were deceived ever,

One foot in sea, one on shore,

To one thing constant never:

Then sigh not so, but let them go,

And be ye blithe and bonny,

Converting all your sounds of woe

Into Hee nunny, nunny,

Sing no more ditties, sing no moe,

Of dumps so dull and heavy;

The fraud of men was ever so,

Since summer first was leafy,

Then sigh not so, &c.

Don Pedro. By my truth, a good song.

Balthasar. And an ill singer, my lord.

Don Pedro. Ha, no, no, faith; thou singest well enough for a shift.

Benedick. An he had been a dog that should have howled thus, they would have hanged him; and I pray God his bad voice bore no mischief. I had as lief I have heard the night-raven, come what plague could have come after it.

Don Pedro. Yea, marry, dost thou hear, Balthasar? I pray thee, get us some excellent music; for to-morrow night we would have it at the Lady Hero’s chamber-window.

Balthasar. The best I can, my lord.

Don Pedro. Do so: farewell. [Exit Balthasar.]

Enter Signior Leonato. What was it you told me of to-day, that your niece Beatrice was in love with Signior Benedick?

ACT II.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE III.

Claud. O, ay: stalk on, stalk on; the foul sits.

I did never think that lady would have loved any man.

Leon. No, nor I neither; but most wonderful that she should so dote on Signior Benedick, whom she hath in all outward behaviours seemed ever to abhor.

Bene. Is't possible? Sits the wind in that corner?

Claud. By my troth, my lord, I cannot tell what to think of it but that she loves him with an enraged affection; it is past the infinite of thought.

D. Pedro. May be she doth but counterfeit.

Claud. Faith, like enough.

Leon. O God, counterfeit! There was never course of passion came so near the light of passion as she discovers it.

D. Pedro. Why, what effects of passion shows she?

Claud. Bait the hook well; this fish will bite.

Leon. What effects, my lord? She will sit you, you heard my daughter tell you how.

Claud. She did, indeed.

D. Pedro. How, how, I pray you? You amaze me: I would have thought her spirit had been invincible against all assaults of affection.

Leon. I would have sworn it had, my lord; especially against Benedick.

Bene. I should think this a gull, but that the white-faced fool who speaks it: knavery cannot, sure, hide himself in such reverence.

Claud. He hath ta'en the infection; hold it up.

D. Pedro. Hath she made her affection known to Benedick?

Leon. No; and swears she never will: that's her torment.

Claud. 'Tis true, indeed; so your daughter says: 'Shall I say she, 'that have so oft encountered him with scorn, write to him that I love him? '

Leon. This says she now when she is beginning to write to him; for she'll be up twenty times a night, and there she will sit in her smock till she have writ a sheet of paper: my daughter tells us all.

Claud. Now you talk of a sheet of paper, I remember a pretty jest your daughter told us of.

Leon. O, when she had writ it and was reading it over, she found Benedict and Beatrice between the sheet.

Claud. That.

Leon. O, she tore the letter into a thousand half-pence; railed at herself, that she should be so immodest to write to one that she knew not about her; 'I measure him,' says she, 'by my own spirit; for though you would dishonour him, if he writ to me, yea, though I love him, I should.'

Claud. Then down upon her knees she falls, weeps, sobs, beats her heart, tears her hair, prays, curses; 'O sweet Benedict! God give me patience!'

Leon. She doth indeed; my daughter says so: and if my lady hath so much overborne her that my daughter is sometime afraid she will do a desperate outrage to herself: it is very true.

D. Pedro. It were good that Benedick knew of it by some other, if she will not discover it.

Claud. To what end? He would make but a sport of it and torment the poor lady worse.

D. Pedro. An he should, it were an aton to hang him. She's an excellent sweet lady; and, out of all suspicion, she is virtuous.

Claud. And she is exceeding wise.

D. Pedro. In everything but in loving Benedick.

Leon. O, my lord, sister like! and some blood combing in so tender a body, we have ten proofs to one that blood hath the victory. I am sorry for her, as I have just cause, being her uncle and her guardian.

D. Pedro. I would she had bestow'd this dotage on me; I would have daff'd all other respects and made her half myself. I pray you, tell Benedick of it, and hear what 'a will say.

Leon. Were it good, think you?

D. Pedro. 'Tis not much good to me: for she says she will die, if he love her not, and she will die, e'er she make her love known, and she will die, if he woo her, rather than she will hate one breath of her accustomed crossness.

D. Pedro. She doth well: if she should make tender of her love, 'tis very possible he'll scorn it; for the more you know her, the more a contrario you'll love her.

Claud. He is a very proper man.

D. Pedro. He hath indeed a good outward happiness.

Claud. Before God! and, in my mind, very wise.

D. Pedro. He doth indeed show some sparks that are like女人.

Claud. And I take him to be valiant.

D. Pedro. As Hector, I assure you: and in the managing of quarrels you may say he is wise: for either he avoids them with great discretion, or undertakes them with a most Christian-like fear.

Leon. If he do fear God, a must necessarily keep peace: if he break the peace, he ought to enter into a quarrel with fear and trembling.

D. Pedro. And so will he do: for the man doth fear God, howsoever it seems not in him by some large jests he will make. Well, I am sorry for your lady: what now?

Leon. We will go seek Benedick, and tell him of her love?

Claud. Never tell him, my lord: let her wear it out with good counsel.

Leon. Nay, that's impossible: she may wear her heart out first.

D. Pedro. Well, we will hear farther of it by your daughter: let it cool the while. I love Benedick well: and I could wish he would modestly examine himself, to see how much he is unworthy so good a lady.

Leon. My lord, will you walk? dinner is ready.

Claud. If he do not come on her upon this, I will never trust my expectation.

D. Pedro. Let there be the same net spread for her: and that must your daughter and her gentlewoman carry. The sport will be, when they hold one an opinion of another's dotage, and no such matter: that's the scene that I would see, which will be merely a dumb-show. Let us send her to call him in to dinner. [Exeunt Don Pedro, Claudio, and Leonato.

Bene. [Coming forward] This can be no trick: the conference was sadly borne. They have the truth of this from Hero. They seem to pity the lady: it seems her affections have their full bent, and she can witness; and I would that it might be required. I hear how I am censured: they say I will bear myself proudly, if I perceive the love come from her; they say too that she will rather die than give any sign of affection. I did never think to marry; I must not seem proud: happy are they that bear their detractions and can put them to mourning. They say the lady is fair: 'tis a truth. I can bear them witness: and virtuous: 'tis so, I cannot reprove it: and wise, but for loving me; by my troth, it is no addition to her wit, nor no great argument of her folly, for I will be horribly in love with her. I may chance have some odd quirks and remnants of wit broken on me, because I have railed so long against marriage; but doth not the appetite alter? a man loves the meat in his youth that he cannot endure in his age, shall quips and sentences and these paper bullets of the brain awe a man from the career of his honour? No she! she is light, and she will not be troubled. When I said I would die a bachelor, I did not think I should live till I were married. Here comes Beatrice. By this day! she's a fair lady: I do spy some marks of love in her.

Enter Beatrice.

Beat. Against my will I am sent to bid you come in to dinner.

ACT III.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE I.—Leonato’s garden.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

_Hero._ Good Margaret, run thee to the parlour; There shalt thou find my cousin Beatrice Proposing with the prince and Claudio: Whisper her ear and tell her, I and Ursula Walk in the orchard and our whole discourse Is all of her; say that thou overhears’t us; And bid her steal into the pleached bower, Where honeysuckles, ripen’d by the sun, Forbid the sun to enter, like favourites, Made proud by princes, that advance their pride Against that power that bred it: there will she hide To listen our purpose. This is thy office; [her, Bear thee well in it and leave us alone.

_Mary._ I’ll make her come, I warrant you, presently. [Exit.

_Hero._ Now, Ursula, when Beatrice doth come, As we do trace this alley up and down, Our talk must only be of Benedick. When I do name him, let it be thy part To praise him more than ever man did merit: My talk to thee must be how Benedick Is sick in love with Beatrice. Of this matter Is little Quin’s cragg’d arrow made, That only wounds by hearsay.

Enter Beatrice, behind.

Now begin: For where shall Beatrice, like a lapwing, runs Close by the ground, to hear our conference.

_Urs._ The pleasantest angling is to see the fish Cut with her golden oars the silver stream, And greedily devour the treacherous bait: So angle we for Beatrice: who even now Is couch’d in the woodbine covert. Fear you not yet the part of the discourse?

_Hero._ Then go ye near her, that her ear lose not Of the false sweet bait that we lay for it. [ing

Approaching the bower.

No, truly, Ursula, she is too disdainful; I know her spirits are as coy and wild As jugglers of the rock.

_Urs._ But are you sure That Benedick loves Beatrice so entirely?

_Hero._ So says the prince and my new-crested lord.

_Urs._ And did they bid you tell her of it, madam?

_Hero._ They did entreat me to acquaint her of it; But I persuaded them, if they loved Benedick, To wish him wrack with affection, And never to let Beatrice know of it.

_Urs._ Why did you so? Doth not the gentleman Deserve as full as fortunate a bed As ever Beatrice shall cough upon?

_Hero._ O god of love! I know he doth deserve As much as may be yielded to a man: But Nature never framed a woman’s heart Of ponder stuff than that of Beatrice; Disdain and scorn ride sparkling in her eyes, Misprizing what they look on, and her wit Values itself so highly that to her All matter else seems weak: she cannot love, Nor take no shape nor project of affection, She is so self-endured.

_Urs._ Sure, I think so; And therefore certainly it were not good She knew his love, lest she make sport at it.

_Hero._ Why, you speak truth. I never yet saw man, How wise, how noble, young, how rarely featured, But she would spell him backward: if fair-faced, She would swear the gentleman should be her sister; If black, why, Nature, drawing of an antique, Made a foul blot; if tall, a lance ill-heeded; If low, an agate very vielle cut. If she speaks, why, a vane blown with all winds; Is silent, why, a block moved with none. So turns she every man the wrong side out And never gives to truth and virtue that Which simplicity and merit purchaseth.

_Urs._ Sure, sure, such cupping is not commendable.

_Hero._ No, not to be so old and from all fashions As Beatrice is, cannot be commendable: But who dare tell her so? If I should speak, She would mock me into air; O, she would laugh me Out of myself, press me to death with wit. Therefore let Benedick, like cover’d fire, Consume away in sighs, waste inwardly: It were a better death than die with mocks, Which is as bad as die with tickling.

_Urs._ Yet tell her of it: hear what she will say.

_Hero._ No; rather I will go to Benedick And counsel him to fight against his passion. And truly, I’ll devise some honest shoulders To stain my cousin with; one doth not know How much an ill word may enpoison liking.

_Urs._ O, do not do your cousin such a wrong. She cannot be so much without true judgment— Having so swift and excellent a wit As she is prized to have—as to refuse So rare a gentleman as Signior Benedick.

_Hero._ He is the only man of Italy, Always excepted my dear Claudio.

_Urs._ I pray you, be not angry with me, madam, Speaking my fancy: Signior Benedick, For shape, for bearing, argument and valour, Goes foremost in report through Italy.

_Hero._ Indeed, he hath an excellent good name.

_Urs._ His excellence did earn it, ere he had it.

When are you married, madam?

_Hero._ Why, every day, to-morrow. Come, go in: I’ll show thee some affairs, and have thy counsel Which is the best to furnish me to-morrow.

_Urs._ She’s limed, I warrant you: we have caught her, madam.

_Hero._ If it proves so, then loving goes by haus: Some Cupid kills with arrows, some with traps. [Exit Hero and Ursula.

_Beat._ [Coming forward.] What fire is in mine ears? Can this be true?

Stand I condemned for pride and scorn so much? Contempt, farewell! and maiden pride, adieu!

No glory lives behind the lack of such,

And, Benedick, love on; I will requite thee,

Taming my wild heart to thy loving hand:

100
If thou dost love, my kindliness shall incite thee
To bind our loves up in a holy band;
For others say thou dost deserve, and I
Believe it better than reporting.

[Exit.]

SCENE II. — A room in Leonato's house.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, Benedick, and Leonato.

D. Pedro, I do but stay till your marriage be consummated, and then go I toward Arragon.

Claud. I'll bring you thither, my lord, if you'll vouchsafe me.

D. Pedro, Nay, that would be as great a soil in the new gloss of your marriage as to show a child his new coat and forbid him to wear it. I will only be hold with Benedick for his company: for, from the crown of his head to the sole of his foot, he is all mirth: he hath twice or thrice cut Cupid's bow-string and the little hang-man dare not shoot at him: he hath a heart as sound as a bell and his tongue is the clapper, for what his heart thinks his tongue speaks.

Bent. Gallants, I am not as I have been.

Leon. So say I: methinks you are sadder.

Claud. I hope he be in love.

D. Pedro. Hang him, truant! there's a true drop of blood in him, to be truly touched with love: if he be not hang him, he wants love.

Bent. I have the toothache.

D. Pedro. Draw it.

Bent. Hang it! [Exeunt.

Claud. You must hang it first, and draw it after.

D. Pedro. What! sigh for the toothache?

Leon. Where is but a humour or a wound.

Bent. Well, every one can master a grief but he that has it.

Claud. Yet say I, he is in love.

D. Pedro. There is no appearance of fancy in him, unless it be a fancy that he hath to strange disguises;
as, to be a Dutchman to-day, a Frenchman to-mor-or, in the shape of two countries at once, as, a German from the waist downward, all slops, and a Spaniard from the hip upward, no doublet. Unless he have a fancy to this foolery, as it appears he hath, he is no fool for fancy, as you would have it appear.

Claud. If he be not in love with some woman, there is no believing old signs; a' brushes his hat
o' mornings; what should that bode?

D. Pedro. Hath any man seen him at the barber's?

Claud. No, but the barber's man hath been seen with him, and the old ornament of his cheek hath already lost his manly looks.

Leon. Indeed, he looks younger than he did, by the loss of a beard.

D. Pedro. Nay, a' rubs himself with civet: can you smell him out by that? [in love.

Claud. That's as much as to say, the sweet youth's
D. Pedro. The greatest note of it is his melancholy.

Claud. And when was he wont to wash his face?

D. Pedro. Ye'd, or to paint himself? for the which,
I hear what they say of him.

Claud. Nay, but his jesting spirit; which is now crept into a bête-string and now governed by stops.

D. Pedro. Indeed, that tells a heavy tale for him:
conclude, conclude he is in love.

Claud. Nay, but I know who loves him.

D. Pedro. That would I know too: I warrant, one that knows him not.

Claud. Yes, and his ill conditions; and, in despite of his fair face, I warrant.

D. Pedro. She shall be buried with her face up.

Bent. Yet is this no charm for the toothache. Old signor, walk aside with me: I have studied eight or nine wise words to speak to you, which these hobby-horses must not hear.

[Exeunt Benedick and Leonato.

D. Pedro. For my life, to break with him about Beatrice.

Claud. 'T is even so. Hero and Margaret have by this played their parts with Beatrice: and then the two bears will not bite one another when they meet.

[Enter Don John.

D. John. My lord and brother. God save you!

D. Pedro. Good den, brother.

D. John. If your leisure served, I would speak with you.

D. Pedro. In private?

D. John. If it please you; yet Count Claudio may hear: for what I would speak of concerns him.

D. Pedro. What's the matter?

D. John. [To Claudio.] Means your lordship to be married to-morrow?

D. Pedro. You know he does. [know.

D. John. I know not that, when he knows what I Claud. If there be any impediment, I pray you discern it.

D. John. You may think I love you not; let that appear hereafter, and aim better at me by that I now will manifest. For my brother, I think he holds you well, and in dearness of heart hath help to effect your ensuing marriage; surely suit ill spent and labour ill bestowed.

D. Pedro. Why, what's the matter?

D. John. I came hither to tell you: and, circumstances shortened, for she has been too long a talking of, the lady is disloyal.

Claud. Who, Hero?

D. John. Even she: Leonato's Hero, your Hero, every man's Hero.

Claud. Dishonour?

D. John. The word is too good to point out her wickedness: I could say she were worse: think you of a worse title, and I will fit her to it. Wonder not till further warrant: go but with me to-night, you shall see her chamber-window entered, even the night before her wedding-day; if you love her then, to-morrow wed her: but it would better fit your honour to change your mind.

Claud. May this be so?

D. Pedro. I will not think it.

D. John. If you dare not trust that you see, confess not that you know: if you will follow me, I will show you enough; and when you have seen more and heard more, proceed accordingly.

Claud. If I see anything to-night which I should not marry her to-morrow, in the congregation, where
I should wed, there will I shame her.

D. Pedro. And may it so be wished for thee to obtain her, I will join with thee to disgrace her.

D. John. I will disarray her no farther till you are my witnesses: hear it coldly but till midnight, and let the issue show itself.

D. Pedro. O day untowardly turned!

D. John. O mischance strangely thwarting!

D. John. O plague right well prevented! so will you say when you have seen the sequel. [Leonato.

SCENE III. — A street.

Enter Dogberry and Verges with the Watch.

Dog. Are you good men and true? Verg. Yea, or else it were pity but they should suffer salvation, body and soul.

Dog. Nay, that were a punishment too good for them, if they should have any allegiance in them, being criers for the prince's watch.

Verg. Well, give them their charge, neighbour Dogberry.

Dog. First, who think you the most desertless man to be constable?

First Watch. Hugh Otecake, sir, or George Scacole: for they can write and read.
ACT III.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE III.

Dog. Come hither, neighbour Seacoile. God hath blessed you with a good name; to be a well-favoured man is the gift of fortune; but to write and read comes by nature.

See Watch. Both which, master constable,—

Dog. You have: I knew it would be your answer. Well, for your favour, sir, why, give God thanks, and make no boast of it; and for your writing and reading, let that appear when there is no need of such vain show. I thought here to be the most senseless and fit man for the constable of the watch: therefore bear you the lantern. This is your charge: you shall comprehend all vagabond men; you are to bid all man stand, in the prince's name.

See Watch. How if it will not stand?

Dog. Why, then, take no note of him, but let him go; and presently call the rest of the watch together and thank God you are rid of a knave.

Very. If he will not stand when he is bidden, he is none of the prince's subjects.

Dog. True, and they are to meddle with none but the prince's subjects. You shall also make no noise in the streets; for, for the watch to babble and to talk is most intolerable and not to be endured.

Watch. We will rather sleep than talk: we know what belongs to a watch.

Dog. Why, you speak like an ancient and most quizzing master: for I cannot see how shrewd you should offend: only, have a care that your bills be not stolen. Well, you are to call at all the ale-houses, and bid those that are drunk get them to bed.

Watch. How if they will not?

Dog. Why, then, let them alone till they are sober: if they make you not then the better answer, you may say they are not the men you took them for.

Watch. Well, sir.

Dog. If you meet a thief, you may suspect him, by virtue of your office, to be no true man; and, for such kind of men, the less you meddle with me, why, the more is for your honesty.

Watch. If we know him to be a thief, shall we not lay hands on him?

Dog. Truly, by your office, you may; but I think they that touch pitch will be defiled: the most peaceable way for you, if you do take a thief, is to let him show himself what he is and steal out of your company.

Dog. True, and he may have always been called a merciful man, partner.

Dog. Truly, I would not hang a dog by my will, much more a man who hath any honesty in him.

Very. If you hear a child cry in the night, you must call to the nurse and bid her still it.

Watch. How if the nurse be asleep and will not hear us?

Dog. Why, then, depart in peace, and let the child wake her with crying: for the ewe that will not hear her lamb when it baes will never answer a call when he bleats.

Very. Tis very true.

Dog. This is the end of the charge:—you, constable, are to present the prince's own person: if you meet the prince in the night, you may stay him.

Very. Nay, by'r lady, that I think I cannot.

Dog. Five shillings to one on't, with any man that knows the statues, he may stay him: narry, not without the prince be willing: for, indeed, the watch ought to offend no man; and it is an offence to stay a man against his will.

Very. By'r lady, I think it be so.

Dog. Ha, ah, ha! Well, masters, good night: an there be any for I cannot tell: carry me: keep your fellows' counsels and your own: and good night. Come, neighbour.

Watch. Well, masters, we hear our charge: let us go sit here upon the church-bench till two, and then all to bed.

Dog. One word more, honest neighbours. I pray you, watch about Signior Leonato's door; for the wedding being there to-norrow, there is a great coil to-night. Adieu: he vigilant, I beseech you.

[Exeunt Dogberry and Verges.]

Enter Borachio and Conrad.

Bora. What, Comrade!

Watch. [Aside] Peace! stir not.

Bora. Comrade, I say!

Con. Here, man; I am at thy elbow.

Bora. Mass, and my elbow itched; I thought there would a scab follow.

Con. I will owe thee an answer for that; and now forward with thy tale.

Bora. Stand thee close, then, under this pent-house, for it drizzles rain; and I will, like a true drunkard, utter all to thee.

Bora. Therefore know I have earned of Don John a thousand ducats.

Con. Is it possible that any villany should be so dear?

Bora. Thou shouldst rather ask if it were possible any villany should be so rich; for when rich villains have need of poor ones, poor ones may make what price they will.

Con. I am a wonder.

Bora. That shows thou art unconfounded. Then knowest thou the fashion of a doublet, or a hat, or a cloak, is nothing to a man.

Con. Yes, it is appared.

Bora. I mean, the fashion.

Con. Yes, the fashion is the fashion.

Bora. Trust! I may as well say the fool's the fool. But seest thou not what a deformed thief this fashion is?

Watch. [Aside] I know that Deformed; a' has been a vile thief this seven year; a' goes up and down like a gentleman; I remember his name.

Bora. Dost thou not hear anybody?

Con. No: 'twas the vane on the house.

Bora. Seest thou not, I say, what a deformed thief this fashion is? how giddily a't turns about all the hot bloods between fourteen and five-and-thirty? sometimes fashioning them like Pararo's soldiers he makes shy fellows, sometime like a brute, like a dog, like a Beel's priests in the old church-window, sometime like the shaven Hercules in the smirched worm-eaten tapestry, where his collique seems as massy as his club?

Con. As this I see; and I see that the fashion wears out more apparel than the man. But art not thou thyself giddy with the fashion too, that thou hast shifted out of thy tale into telling me of the fashion?

Bora. Not so, neither: but know that I have to-night wooed Margaret, the Lady Hero's gentlewoman, by the name of Hero; she leans me out at her mistress' chamber-window, bids me a thousand times good-night,—I tell this tale vily:—I should first tell thee how the prince, Claudio and my master, planted and placed and possessed by my master Don John, say afar off in the orchard this amiable encounter.

Con. And thought they Margaret was Hero?

Bora. Two of them did, the prince and Claudio; but the devil my master knew she was Margaret; and partly by his oaths, which first possessed them, partly by the dark night, which did deceive them, but chiefly by the towne villany, which did confirm any slander that Don John had made, away went Claudio enraged; swore he would meet her, as he was appointed, next morning at the temple, and there, before the whole congregation, shame her with what he saw o'er night and send her home again without a husband.

ACT III.  MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.  SCENE V.

First Watch.  We charge you, in the prince’s name, stand!

Con.  Masters,—Call up the right master constable.  We have here recovered the most dangerous piece of lechery that ever was known in the commonwealth.

First Watch.  And one Deformed is one of them: I know him: a’ wears a lock.

Con.  Masters, masters, masters.

Sec. Watch.  You’ll be made bring Deformed forth, I warrant you.

Act. Watch.  Never speak: we charge you let us obey you to go with us.

Sec. Watch.  We are likely to prove a good commodity, being taken up of these men’s bills.

Con.  A commodity in question, I warrant you.  Come, we’ll obey you.  [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Hero’s apartment.

Enter Hero, Margaret, and Ursula.

Hero.  Good Ursula, wake my cousin Beatrice, and desire her to rise.

Urs.  I will, lady.

Hero.  And bid her come hither.

Urs.  Well.  [Exit.]

Marg.  Truth, I think your other rubato were better.

Hero.  No, pray thee, good Meg, I’ll wear this.

Marg.  By my troth, ’tis not so good; and I warrant your cousin will say so.

Hero.  My cousin’s a fool, and thou art another: I’ll wear none but this.

Marg.  I like the new tire within excellently, if the hair were a thought browner; and your gown’s a most rare fashion, I’ faith.  I saw the Duchess of Milan’s gown that they praise so.

Hero.  O, that exceeds, they say.

Marg.  By my troth, ’tis but a night-gown in respect of yours: cloth o’ gold, and cuts, and laced with silver, set with pearls, down sleeves, side sleeves, and skirts, round underborne with a blush tinsel: but for a fine, quiet, graceful and excellent fashion, yours is worth ten on’t.

Hero.  God give me joy to wear it! for my heart is exceeding heavy.

Marg.  ’Twill be heavier soon by the weight of a Hero.  Fie upon thee! art not ashamed?  [man.

Marg.  Of what, lady? of speaking honourably?  Is not marriage honourable in a beggar?  Is not your beauty honourable without marriage?  I think you would have me say, ’saving your reverence, a husband; an bad thinking do not wrest true speaking, I’ll offend nobody: is there any harm in the heavier for a husband?  None, I think, an it be the right husband and the right wife; otherwise ’twis light, and not heavy: ask my Lady Beatrice else; here she comes.

Enter Beatrice.

Beat.  Good morrow, coz.

Hero.  Good morning, sweet Hero.

Beat.  Why, how now? do you speak in the sick tune?

Beat.  I am out of all other tune, methinks.

Marg.  Clap’s into ‘Light o’ love;’ that goes without a burden: do you sing it, and I’ll dance it.

Beat.  Ye light o’ love, with your heels! then, if you have horses as stable as enough, you’ll see he shall lack no barns.

Marg.  O illegitimate construction! I scorn that with my heels.

Beat.  ’Tis almost five o’clock, cousin; ’tis time you were ready.  By my troth, I am exceeding ill; heigh-ho.

Marg.  For a hawk, a horse, or a husband?

Beat.  For the letter that begins them all.  Hero.  Well, an you be left turned Turk, there’s no more sugar by the star.

Beat.  What means the fool, crow?

Marg.  Nothing I; but God send every one their heart’s desire!

Hero.  These gloves the count sent me; they are an excellent perfume.

Beat.  I am staid, cousin; I cannot smell.

Marg.  A maid, and staid! there’s good catching of cold.

Beat.  O, God help me! God help me! how long have you professed apprehension?

Marg.  Even since you left it.  Doth not my wit become melancholy?

Beat.  It is not seen enough, you should wear it in your cap.  By my troth, I am sick.

Marg.  Get you some of this distilled Carthus Benedictus, and lay it to your heart: it is the only thing for a qualm.

Hero.  There thou priciest her with a thistle.

Beat.  Benedictus! why Benedictus? you have some moral in this Benedictus.

Marg.  Moral! no, by my troth, I have no moral meaning; I meant, plain holy-thistle.  You may think perchance that I think you are in love: nay, by my lady, I know thou hast as little cause to think of my love as I of yours; for I saw not to think what I list nor I list not to think what I can, nor indeed I cannot think, if I would think my heart out of thinking, that you are in love or that you will be in love or that you can be in love.  Yet Benedick was such another, and now is he become a man: he swore he would never marry, and yet now, in despite of his heart, he eats his meat without grudging; and how you may be converted I know not, but methinks you look with your eyes as other women do.

Beat.  What pace is this that thy tongue keeps?

Marg.  Not a false gallop.

Re-enter Ursula.

Urs.  Madam, withdraw: the prince, the count, Signior Benedick, Don John, and all the gallants of the town, are come to fetch you to church.

Hero.  Help to dress me, good coz, good Meg, good Ursula.  [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another room in Leonato’s house.

Enter Leonato, with Dobgberry and Verges.

Leon.  What would you with me, honest neighbour?

Dog.  Marry, sir, I would have some confidence with you that concerns you nearly.

Leon.  Brief, I pray you; for you see it is a busy time with me.

Dog.  Marry, this it is, sir.

Verg.  Yes, in truth it is, sir.

Leon.  What is it, my good friends?

Dog.  Good signior Verges, sir, speaks a little off the matter: an old man, sir, and his wits are not so blunt as, God help, I would desire, they were; but, in faith, honest as the skin between his brows.

Verg.  Yes, I thank God I am as honest as any man living that is an old man and no honest than I.

Dog.  Comparisons are odorous: parabolas, neighbour Verges.

Leon.  Neighbours, you are tedious.

Dog.  It pleasures your worship to say so, but we are the poor duke’s officers: but truly, for mine own part, if I were as tedious as a king, I could find it in my heart to bestow is all of your worship.

Leon.  All thy tediousness on me, ah?

Dog.  Yea, an ‘twere a thousand pound more than ‘tis; for I hear as good exclamation on your worship as of any man in the city; and though I be but a poor man, I am glad to hear it.

Verg.  And so am I.

103
ACT IV.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE I.—A church.

Enter Don Pedro, Don John, Leonato, Friar Francis, Claudio, Benedick, Hero, Beatrice, and Attendants.

Leon. Come, Friar Francis, be brief; only to the plain form of marriage, and you shall recount your particular duties afterwanis. [lady.

Friar. You come hither, my lord, to marry this Claudio. No, Leon. To be married to her: friar, you come to marry her. [count.

Friar. Lady, you come hither to be married to this Hero. I do, Leon. If either of you know any inward impediment why you should not be conjoined, I charge you, on your souls, to utter it.

Claud. O, what men dare do! what, men may do! what men daily do, not knowing what they do? Beca. How now! interjections? Why, then, some be of laughing, as, ah, ha, he! [leave: Claud. Stand thee by, friar. Father, by your Will you with free and unconstrained soul Give me that maid, thy daughter? Leon. As freely, son, as God did give her me.

Claud. And what have I to give you back, whose May countenance this rich and precious gift? [worth D. Pedro. Nothing, unless you render her again.

Claud. Sweet prince, you learn me noble thank- There, Leonato, take her back again: [unfess, Give not this rotten orange to your friend; She's but the sign and semblance of her honour. Behold how like a maid she blushes here! O, what authority and show of truth Can censure sin cover itself with! Comes not that blood as modest evidence To witness simple virtue? Would you not swear, All you that see her, that she were a maid, By these exterior shows? But she is none: She knows the heart of a luxurious bed; Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty. Claud. What do you mean, my lord? Claud. Not to be married, Not to knit my soul to an approved wanton. Leon. Dear my lord, if you, in your own proof, Have vanquished the resistance of her youth, And made defeat of her virginity,— [known her, Claud. I know what you would say: if I have Leon. Take their examination yourself and bring it me: I am now in great haste, as it may appear unto you. Dog. It shall be sufficient. Leon. Drink some wine ere you go: fare you well.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, they stay for you to give your daughter to her husband. Leon. I'll wait upon them: I am ready. [Exit Leonato and Messenger.

Dog. Go, good partner, go, get you to Francis Seacoast: bid him bring his pen and inkhorn to the gaol: we are now to examination these men. Vev. And we must do it wisely, That we will spare no wish I warrant you: here's that shall drive some of them to a noncome: only get the learned writer to set down our excommunication and meet me at the gaol. [Exit.

ACT IV.

You will say she did embrace me as a husband, And extenuate the 'forehand sin: No, I do not. I never tempted her with word too large; But, as a brother to his sister, show'd Bashful sincerity and comely love. Hero. And seem'd I ever otherwise to you? [it: Claud. Out on thee! Seeming! I will write against You seem to me as Dian in her car. As chaste as is the budding lily; But you are more intemperate in your blood Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals That rage in savage sensuality. Hero. Is my lord well, that he doth speak so wide? Friar. Sweet prince, why speak not you? D. Pedro. What should I speak? I stand dishonourd, that have gone about To link my dear friend to a common stale. Leon. Are these things spoken, or do I but dream? D. John. Sir, they are spoken, and these things Leon. This looks not like a mythic. [are true, Hero. True! O God! Claud. Leonato, stand I here? Is this the prince? is this the prince's brother? Is this face Hero's? are our eyes our own? Leon. All this is so: but what of this, my lord? Claud. Let me but move one question to your And, by that laboriously and kindly power daughter; That you have in her, bid her answer truly. Leon. I charge thee do so, as thou art my child. Hero. O, God defend me! how am I beset! What kind of catechising call you this? Claud. To make you answer truly to your name. Hero. Is it not Hero? Who can blot that name With any just reproach? Claud. Marry, that can Hero; Hero itself can blot out Hero's virtue. What man was he talk'd with you yesternight Out at your window between twelve and one? Now, if you are a maid, answer to this, Hero. I talk'd with no man at that hour, my lord. D. Pedro. Why, then are you no maiden. Leonato, I am sorry you must hear; upon mine honour, Myself, my brother and this griefed count Did seem to hear her, as that hour last night Talk with a ruffian at her chamber-window; Who hath indeed, most like a liberal villain, Confess'd the vile encounters they have had A thousand times in secret. [lord, D. John. Fie, fie! they are not to be named, my Not to be spoke of;

104
There is not chastity enough in language
Without offence to utter them. Thus, pretty lady, I am sorry for thy much misgovernment.

Claud. O Hero, what a Hero hast thou been,
If half thy outward graces had been placed
About thy thoughts and counsels of thy heart!
But fare thee well, most foul, most fair! farewell,
Thou falsely and unjustly hurst.
For thee I'll lock up all the gates of love,
And on my eyelids shall conjecture hung,
To turn all beauty into thoughts of harm,
And never shall it more be gracious.

Leon. Hath no man's dagger here a point for me?

Beat. Why, how now, cousin! wherefore sink you down?

D. John. Come, let us go. These things, come thus to light,
Smother her spirits up.

[Exit Don Pedro, Don John, and Claudio.]

Beat. How doth the lady?

Friar! Hero, O Fate! take not away thy heavy hand.
Death is the fairest cover for her shame
That may be wish'd for.

Beat. Now how, cousin Hero!

Friar. Have comfort, lady.

Leon. Dost thou look up?

Friar. Yea, wherefore should she not? [thing
Leon. Wherefore? Why, doth not every earthly Cry shame upon her? Could she here deny
The story that is printed in her blood?
Do not live, Hero: do not one thine eyes:
For, did I think thou wouldst not quickly die, Thought I thy spirits were stronger than thy shames.

Myself, I am on the rearward of reproaches,
Strike at thy life. Grieve I, I had but one
Child I for that at frugal nature's frame:
O, one too much by thee! Why had I one?
Why ever wast thou lovely in my eyes?
Why had I not with charitable hand
 Took up a beggar's issue at my gates,
Who smirch'd thus and mired with infamy,
I might have said: 'No part of it is mine:\nThis shame derives itself from unknown boins?'
But mine and mine I loved and mine I praised
And mine that I was proud on, mine so much
That I myself was half myself not mine,

Valuing of her.—why, she, O, she is fallen
Into a pit of ink, that the wide sea
Hath drops too few to wash her clean again
And salt too little which may season give
To her foul-tainted flesh!

Beat. Sir, sir, be patient.

For my part, I am so attired in wonder,
I know not what to say.

Beat. O, on my soul, my cousin is belied!

Bene. Lady, were you her bedfellow last night?

Beat. No, truly not; although until last night,
I had been a few months her bedfellow.

Leon. Confirm'd, confirm'd? O, that is stronger made
Which was before barr'd up with ribs of iron!
Would the two princes lie, and Claudio lie,
Who loved her so, that, speaking of her foulness,
Washed her with tears? Hence from her! let her die.

Friar. Hear me a little while, for I have only been Silent so long and given way unto
This course of fortune . . .

By noting of the lady I have mark'd
A thousand blushing apparitions
To start into her face, a thousand innocent shames
In angel whiteness beat away those blushes;
And in her eye there hath appear'd a fire,

To burn the errors that these princes hold
Against her maiden truth. Call me a fool;
Trust not my reading nor my observations,
Which with experimental soul doth warrant
The tenour of my book; trust not my age,
My reverence, calling, nor divinity,
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
Under some biting error.

Leon. Friar, it cannot be.
Thou seest that all the grace that she hath left
Is that she will not add to her damnation
A sin of perjury; she not denies it:
Why seek'st thou then to cover with excuse
That which appear'd in proper faces?

Friar. Lady, what man is he you are accused of?

Hero. They know that do accuse me; I know none:
If I know more of any man alive
Than that which maiden modesty doth warrant,
Let all my sins lack mercy! O my father,
Prove thou that any man with me conversed
At hours unmeet, or that I yesternight
Maintain'd the change of words with any creature,
Refuse me, hate me, torture me to death!

Friar. There is some strange misprision in the princes.

Bene. Two of them have the very bent of hon-
And if their wisdoms be mised in this,
The practice of it lives in John the bastard,
Whose spirits toil in frame of villanies;
her,
Leon. I know not. If they speak but truth of These hands shall tear her; if they wrong her hon-
The proudest of them shall well hear it.
That appetite unto a burial.

Friar. Pause awhile,
And let my counsel sway you in this case.
Your daughter here the princes left for dead:
Let her awhile be secretly kept in,
And publish it that she is dead indeed;
Maintain a mourning ostentation
And on your family's old monument
Hang mournful epitaphs and do all rites
That appertain unto a burial.

Leon. What shall become of this? what will this Friar.arry, this well carried shall on her be-

Change slander to remorse; that is some good:
But not for that dream 1 on this strange course,
But on this travall look for greater birth.
The eye dying, as it must be so maintai'n'd,
Upon the instant that she was accused,
Shall be lentened, pitied and excus'd
Of every hearer: for it so falls out
That what we have we prize not to the worth
Whiles we enjoy it, but being lack'd and lost,
Why, then we rack the value, then we find
The virtue that possesseth not not show us.
Whiles it was ours. So will it fare with Claudio:
When he shall hear she died upon his words,
The idea of her life shall sweetly creep
Into his study of imagination,
And every lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparel'd in most pleasing habit,
More more delight in full of life,
Into the eye and prospect of his soul,
Than when she lived indeed; then shall he mourn,
If ever love had interest in his liver,
And wish he had not so accused her.
No, though he thought his accusation true,
Yet he be so, and doubt not but success
Will fashion the event in better shape.
Than I can lay it down in likelihood.
But if all sin but this be level'd false,
The supposition of the lady's death
Will quench the wonder of her infamy:
And if it sort not well, you may conceal her,
As best befits her wounded reputation,
In some reclusive and religious life,
Out of all eyes, tongues, nails and injuries.

And though you know my inwardness and love
Is very much unto the prince and Claudio,
Yet, by mine honour, I will deal in this
As secretly and justly as your soul
Should with your body.

Beatrice.—Being that I flow in grief,
The smallest twine may lead me.

Friar.—'Tis well consented: presently away;
For to strange sores strangely they strain the care.
Come, lady, die to live; this wedding-day
Perhaps is but prolong'd: have patience and endure.
[.Exit all but Benedick and Beatrice.

Benedick,—Lady Beatrice, have you wept all this while?

Beatrice.—Yea, and I will weep a while longer.

Benedick.—I will not desire that.

Beatrice.—You have no reason: I do it freely.

Benedick.—Surely I do believe your fair cousin is wronged.

Beatrice.—Ah, how much might the man deserve of me that would right her!

Benedick.—Is there any way to show such friendship?

Beatrice.—A very even way, but no such friend.

Benedick.—May a man do it?

Beatrice.—It is a man's office, but not yours.

Beatrice.—I do love nothing in the world so well as you: is not that strange?

Benedick.—As strange as the thing I know not. It
Were as possible for me to say I loved nothing so well as you: but believe me not; and yet I lie not; I confess nothing; nor do I deny nothing. I am sorry for my cousin.

Beatrice.—By my sword, Beatrice, thou loves me.

Benedick.—Do not swear, and eat it.

Beatrice.—I will swear by that you love me; and I will make him eat it that says I love not you.

Benedick.—Will you not eat your word?

Beatrice.—With no sauce that can be devised to it. I protest I love thee.

Benedick.—Why, then, God forgive me!

Beatrice.—What offence, sweet Beatrice?

Benedick.—You have stayed me in a happy hour: I was about to protest you.

Beatrice.—And do it with all thy heart.

Benedick.—I love you with so much of my heart that none is left to protest.

Beatrice.—Come, bid me do any thing for thee. o

Benedick.—Kil Claudio.

Beatrice.—That! not for the wide world.

Benedick.—You kill me to deny it. Farewell.

Beatrice.—Tarry, sweet Beatrice.

Benedick.—I am gone, though I am here; there is no love in you: nay, I pray you, let me go.

Beatrice.—Beatrice.

Benedick.—In faith, I will go.

Beatrice.—We'll be friends first.

Benedick.—You dare easier be friends with me than fight with mine enemy.

Beatrice.—Is Claudio thine enemy?

Benedick.—Is he not approved in the height a villain, that is so slaked, scorned, dishonored my kinswoman? O that I were a man! What, bear her in hand until they come to take hands; and then, with public accusation, uncovered slander, unmitigated rancour.—O God, that I were a man! I would eat his heart in the market-place.

Beatrice.—Beatrice. [saying!]

Benedick.—Beat-shaped man out at a window! A proper

Beatrice.—Nay, but, Beatrice.—

Benedick.—Sweet Hero! She is wronged, she is slandered, she is undone.

Beatrice.—Beatrice—

Beatrice.—Princes and counties! Surely, a princely testimony, a goodly count, Count Condict; a sweet gallant, surely! O that I were a man for his sake! or that I had any friend would be a man for my sake!—I counsel you; it melted into courtesies, value in compliment, and men are only turned into tongue, and trim ones too: he is now as valiant as Hercules that only tells a lie and swears it. I cannot be a man with wishing, therefore I will die a woman with grieving.

Beatrice.—Tarry, good Beatrice. By this hand, I love thee.

Benedick.—Use it for my love some other way than swearing by it.

Beatrice.—Think you in your soul the Count Claudio hath wronged Hero?

Benedick.—Yea, as soon as I have a thought or a soul.

Beatrice.—Enough, I am engaged; I will challenge him. I will kiss your hand, and so I leave you. By this hand, Claudio shall render me a dear account. As you hear of me, think of my peace. Go, comfort your cousin; I must say she is dead: and so, farewell.

SCENE II.—A prison.

Enter Dogberry, Verges, and Sexton, in gowns; and the Watch, with Conrad and Borachio.

Dogberry.—Is our whole assembly appeared?

Verges.—Very, O, a stool and a cushion for the sexton.

Sexton.—Which be the malefactors?

Dogberry.—Marry, that am I and my partner.

Verges.—Very, Nay, that's certain; we have the exhibition to examine.

Sexton.—But which are the offenders that are to be examined? let them come before master constable.

Dog.—Yes, marry, let them come before me. What is your name, friend?

Borachio.—Borachio.

Dog.—Pray, write down, Borachio. Yons, sirrah?

Conrade.—I am a gentleman, sir, and my name is Conrade.

Dog.—Write down, master gentleman Conrade.

Masters, do you serve God?

Con.—Yea, sir, we hope.

Borachio.—Write down, that they hope they serve God; and write God first: for God defend but God should go before such villains! Masters, it is proved already that you are little better than false knaves; and it will go near to be thought so shortly. How answer you for yourselves?

Con.—Marry, sir, we say we are none.

Dog.—A marvellous witty fellow, I assure you; but I will go with him. Come you hither, sirrah; a word in your ear: sir, I say to you, it is thought you are false knaves.

Borachio.—Sir, I say to you we are none.

Dog.—Well, stand aside. Fore God, they are both in a tale. Have you writ down, that they are none?

Sexton.—Master constable, you go not the way to examine: you must call forth the watch that are their accusers.

Dog.—Yea, marry, that's the eldest way. Let the watch come forth. Masters, I charge you, in the prince's name, accuse these men.

First Watch.—This man said, sir, that Don John, the prince's brother, was a villain.

Dog.—Write down Prince John a villain. Why, this is flat perjury, to call a prince's brother villain.

Borachio.—Master constable—

Dog.—Pray, fellow, peace: I do not like thy look, I promise thee.
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Before Leonato’s house.

Enter Don Pedro and Claudio.

Don. Come, let them be opinioned.

Clau. God’s day, where’s the sexton? let him write down the prince’s officer coxcomb! Come, bind them. Thou naughty varlet!

Don. Away! you are an ass, you are an ass.

Clau. Dost thou not suspect my place? dost thou not suspect my years? O that he were here to write me down an ass! But, masters, remember that I am an ass: though it be not written down, yet forget not that I am an ass. No, thou villain, thou art full of piety, as shall be proved upon thee by good witness. I am a wise fellow, and, which is more, an officer, and, which is more, a household, and, which is more, as pretty a piece of flesh as any is in Messing, and one that knows the law, go to; and a rich fellow enough, go to; and a fellow that hath had losses, and one that hath two gowns and every thing handsome about him. Bring him away. O that I had been writ down an ass! [Exit.

Enter Don Pedro and Claudio.

Don. Good den, good den.

Claud. Good day to both of you.

Leon. Hear you, my lords.—

Don. We have some haste, Leonato.

Leon. Some haste, my lord! well, fare you well, my lord; you so hastily now? well, all is one.

Don. Nay, do not quarrel with us, good old man.

Leon. If he could right himself with quarrelling, some of us would he low.

Clau. Who wrongs him?

Leon. Marry, thou dost wrong me; then dissembler, thou:

Nay, never lay thy hand upon thy sword; I fear thee not.

Clau. Marry, beshrue my hand.

If it should give your age such cause of fear.

Leon. In faith, my hand meant nothing to my sword.

Clau. Nay, never lay thy hand upon thy sword; I fear thee not.

Leon. Nay, prove me not, as under privilege of age to brag

What I have done being young, or what would

Wore I not old. Know, Claudio, to thy head,

That I am so wrong’d mine innocent child and me.

Leon. But I am forced to lay my reverence by
And, with grey hairs and bruises of many days,

To challenge thee to trial of a man.

Clau. I say thou hast belied mine innocent child;

Thy slander hath gone through and through her heart.

And she lies buried with her ancestors;

O, in a tomb where never scandal slept.

Save this of hers, framed by thy villany!

Clau. My villany?

Leon. Where, Claudio; where do I say, I say.

Don. Say not right, old man.

Leon. My lord, my lord,

I’ll prove it on his body, if he dare,

Despite his nice fence and his active practice,

His May of youth and bloom of lusthood.

Clau. Away! I will not have to do with you.

Leon. Capst, thou so daft me? Thou hast kill’d

My child.

If thou kill’st me, boy, thou shalt kill a man.

Ant. He shall kill two of us, and men indeed:

But that’s no matter; let him kill one first;

Win me and wear me; let him answer me.

Leon. Come, follow me, boy; come, sir boy, come, follow
Sir boy, I'll whip you from your foining fence; Nay, as I am a gentleman, I will.

Leon. Brother,—[niece;
Ant. Content yourself. God knows I loved my And she is dead. slander'd to death by villains, That dare as well answer a man indeed As I dare take a serpent by the tongue; Boys, apes, braggarts, Jacks, milksops!

Leon. Brother Antony,—
Ant. Bold you content. What, man! I know them, yea, And what they weigh, even to the utmost scruple,— Scambling, out-facing, fashion-monging boys, That lie and cog and flout, deprave and slander, Go antically, show outward hideousness, And speak off half a dozen dangerous words, How they might hurt their enemies, if they burst; And this is all.

Leon. But, brother Antony,—
Ant. Come, 'tis no matter: Do not you meddle; let me deal in this.

D. Pedro. Gentlemen both, we will not wake your patience.
My heart is sorry for your daughter's death: But, on my honour, she was charged with nothing But what was true and very full of proof.

Leon. My lord, my lord,—
D. Pedro. I will not hear you.
Leon. My noble brother; away! I will be heard.
Ant. And shall, or some of us will smart for it.

[Enter Leonato and Antonio.

D. Pedro. See, see; here comes the man we went to seek.

Enter Benedick.

Clau. Now, signior, what news?

Bene. Good day, my lord.

D. Pedro. Welcome, signior: you are almost come to part almost a fray.
Clau. We had like to have had our two noses snapped off with two old men without teeth.
D. Pedro. Leonato and his brother. What think-est thou? If we fought, I doubt we should have been too young for them.
Bene. In a false quarrel there is no true value.
I came to seek you both.
Clau. We have been up and down to seek thee; for we are high-proof melancholy and would fain have it beaten away. Wilt thou use thy wit?
Bene. It is in my scabbard: shall I draw it?
D. Pedro. Dost thou wear thy wit by thy side?
Clau. Never any did so, though very many have been beseide their wit. I will bid thee draw, as we do the minions: draw, to pleasure us.
D. Pedro. As I am an honest man, he looks pale.
Art thou sick, or angry?

Clau. What, courage, man! What though care killed a cat, thou hast mettle enough in thee to kill care.
Bene. Sir, I shall meet your wit in the career. an you charge it against me. I pray you choose another subject.
Clau. Nay, then, give him another staff: this last was broke cross.
Bene. By this light, he changes more and more: I think he be angry indeed.
Clau. If he be, he knows how to turn his girdle.
Bene. Shall I speak a word in your ear?

Clau. God bless me from a challenge!

Bene. [Aside to Claudio] You are a villain: I jest not: I will make good how you dare, with what you dare, and when you dare. Do me right, or I will protest your cowardice. You have killed a sweet lady, and her death shall fall heavy on you. Let me hear from you.

Clau. Well, I will meet you, so I may have good cheer.

D. Pedro. What, a feast, a feast?

Clau. I faith, I thank him: he hath bid me to a call's head and a cupon; the which if I do not carve most curiously, say my knife's naught. Shall I not find a coward too?

Bene. Sir, your wit ambles well; it goes easily.

D. Pedro. I'll tell thee how Beatrice praised thy wit the other day. I said, thou hadst a fine wit: 'True,' said she, 'a fine little one.' 'No,' said I, 'a great wit.' 'Right,' says she, 'a great gross one.' 'Nay,' said I, 'a good wit,' 'Just,' said she, 'it hurts nobody,' 'Nay,' said I, 'the gentleman is wise:' 'Certain,' said she, 'a wise gentleman.' 'Nay,' said I, he hath the tongues: 'That I believe,' said she, 'for he were a thing to me on Monday night, which he foresaw on Tuesday morning; there's a double tongue; there's two tongues. Thus did she, an hour together, trans-shape thy particular virtues: yet at last she concluded with a sigh, thou wast the proferest man in Italy.

Clau. For which the which she wont hebetly and said she cared not.

Bene. Yea, that she did; but yet for all that, an if she did not hate him deadly, she would love him dearly: the old man's daughter told us all.

Clau. All, all; and, moreover, God saw him when he was hid in the garden.

D. Pedro. But when shall we set the savage bull's horn on the sensible Benedick's head?

Clau. Yea, and text underneath, 'Here dwells Benedick the married man!'

Bene. Fare you well, boy: you know my mind. I will leave you now to your gossip-like humour: you break jests as braggarts do their blades, which, God be thanked, hurt not. My lord, for your many courtesies I thank you; I must discontinue your company; your brother the bastard is fled from Messina: you have among you a killed and innocent lady. For my Lord Lackbeard there, he and I shall meet: and, till then, peace be with him. [Exit.

D. Pedro. He is in earnest.

Clau. In most profound earnest; and, I'll warrant you, for the love of Beatrice.

D. Pedro. And hath challenged thee.

Clau. Most sincerely.

D. Pedro. What a pretty thing man is when he goeth a wooing!

Clau. We have been up and down to seek thee; for we are high-proof melancholy and would fain have it beaten away. Wilt thou use thy wit?
Bene. It is in my scabbard: shall I draw it?
D. Pedro. Dost thou wear thy wit by thy side?
Clau. Never any did so, though very many have been beseide their wit. I will bid thee draw, as we do the minions: draw, to pleasure us.
D. Pedro. As I am an honest man, he looks pale.
Art thou sick, or angry?

Clau. What, courage, man! What though care killed a cat, thou hast mettle enough in thee to kill care.
Bene. Sir, I shall meet your wit in the career. an you charge it against me. I pray you choose another subject.
Clau. Nay, then, give him another staff: this last was broke cross.
Bene. By this light, he changes more and more: I think he be angry indeed.
Clau. If he be, he knows how to turn his girdle.
Bene. Shall I speak a word in your ear?

Clau. God bless me from a challenge!

Bene. [Aside to Claudio] You are a villain: I jest not: I will make good how you dare, with what you dare, and when you dare. Do me right, or I will protest your cowardice. You have killed a sweet lady, and her death shall fall heavy on you. Let me hear from you.

Clau. Well, I will meet you, so I may have good cheer.

D. Pedro. How now? two of my brother's men bound! Borachio one!

Clau. Hearken after their offence, my lord.

D. Pedro. Officers, what offence have these men done?

Dog. Marry, sir, they have committed false report; moreover, they have spoken untruths; secondarily, they are slanderers; sixth and lastly, they have belied a lady; thriftily, they have verified unjust things; and, to conclude, they are lying knaves.

D. Pedro. First, I ask thee what they have done; then will I ask thee what is their offence; sixth and lastly, why they are committed; and, to conclude, what you lay to their charge.

Clau. Rightly reasoned, and in his own division; and, by my troth, there's one meaning well suited.

D. Pedro. Who have you offended, masters, that you are thus bound to your answer? this learned constable is too cunning to be understood: what's your offence?

Bona. Sweet prince, let me go no farther to mine answer: do you hear me, and let this count kill me.

Leonato. I have received even your very eyes: what your wis­doms could not discover, these shallow tools have brought to light; who in the night overheard me confessing to this man how Don John your brother incensed me to slander the Lady Hero, how you were brought into the orchard and saw me cast Margaret in Hero's garments, how you dis­graced her, when you should marry her: my villany they have upon record; which I had rather seal with my death than repeat over to my shame. The lady is dead upon mine and my master's false accusa­tion: and, briefly, I desire nothing but the reward of it.

D. Pedro. Runs not this speech like iron through your blood?

Claud. I have drunk poison whiles he uttered it.

D. Pedro. But did my brother set thee on to this?

Bona. Yea, and paid me richly for the practice.

D. Pedro. He is composed and framed of treach­ery. And fled he is upon this villany. [Exit.

Claud. Sweet Hero! now thy image doth appear In the rare semblance that I loved it first.

Dog. Come, bring away the plaintiffs: by this time our sexton hath reform'd Signior Leonato of the understanding, and, masters, do not forget to signify, when time and place shall serve, that I am an ass.

Very. Here, here comes master Signior Leonato, and the sexton too.

Re-enter Leonato and Antonio, with the Sexton.

Leon. Which is the villain? let me see his eyes.

That, when I note another man like him, I may avoid him: which of these is he? [Exit.

Bona. If you would know your wronger, look on Leone. Art thou the slave that with thy breath Mine innocent child?

Very. Yea, even I alone.

Leon. No, not so, villain; thou beliest thyself: Here stand a pair of honourable men;

A third is fled, that had a hand in it. I thank you, princes, for my daughter's death:

Record it with your high and worthy deeds;

'Twas largely done. If you think you of it.

Claud. I know not how to pray your patience;

Yet I must speak. Choose your revenge yourself;

Impose me to what penance your invention Can lay upon my sin; yet shan't I not

But in mistaking.

Dog. By my soul, nor I; And yet to satisfy this good old man, I would bend under any heavy weight That he'll enjoin me to.

Leon. I cannot bid you bid my daughter live;

That were impossible: but, I pray you both, Possess the people in Messina here

How innocent she died; and if your love Can labour aught in sad invention,

Hang her an epitaph upon her tomb

And sing it to her bones, sing it to nighttime: To-morrow morning come to my house, And since you could not be my son-in-law,

Be yet my nephew: my brother hath a daughter, Almost the copy of my child that's dead, And she alone is heir to both of us;

Give her the right you should have given her cousin, And so dies my revenge.

Claud. O noble sir,
Your over-kindness doth wring tears from me!

I do embrace your offer; and dispose

For henceforth of poor Claudio.

Leon. To-morrow then I will expect your coming: To-night I take my leave. This naughty man Shall face to face be brought to Margaret,

Who I believe was packed in all this wrong,

Hired to it by your brother.

Bona. No, by my soul, she was not,
Nor knew not what she did when she spoke to me,

But always hath been just and virtuous

In any thing that I do know by her.

Dog. Moreover, sir, which indeed is not under white and black, this plaintiff here, the offender, did call me ass: I beseech you, let it be remembered In his punishment. And also, the watch heard them talk of one Deformed: they say he wares a key in his car and a lock hanging by it, and borrows money in God's name, the which he hath used so long and never paid that now men grow hard-hearted and will lend nothing for God's sake: pray you, examine him upon that point.

Leon. I thank thee for thy care and honest pains.

Dog. Your worship speaks like a most thankful and reverend youth: and I praise God for you.

Leon. There's for thy pains.

Dog. God save the foundation!

Leon. Go, I discharge thee of thy prisoner, and I thank thee.

Dog. I leave an arrant knave with your worship; which I beseech your worship to correct yourself, for the example of others. God keep your worship!

I wish your worship well: God restore you to health! I humbly give you leave to depart; and if a merry meeting may be wished, God prohibit it! Come, neighbour.

[Exeunt Bona and Very.]

Leon. Until to-morrow morning, lords, farewell.

Ant. Farewell, my lords; we look for you today.

D. Pedro. We will not fail. [Exit.

Claud. To-night I'll mourn with Hero.

Leon. [To the Watch] Bring you these fellows on.

We'll talk with Margaret, How her acquaintance grew with this lewd fellow. [Exit, scurrily.]

SCENE II.—Leonato's garden.

Enter Benedick and Margaret, meeting.

Bene. Pray thee, sweet Mistress Margaret, des­erve well at my hands by helping me to the speech of Beatrice.

Mercy. Will you then write me a sonnet in praise of my beauty?

Bene. In so high a style, Margaret, that no man living shall come over it: for, in most comely truth, thou deservest it.

Mercy. To have no man come over me! why, shall I always keep below stairs?

Bene. Thy wit is as quick as the greyhound's mouth; it catches.

Mercy. And yours as blunt as the fencer's foils, which hit, but hurt not.

Bene. A most manly wit, Margaret; it will not hurt a woman: and so, I pray thee, call Beatrice: I give thee the buckler.

Mercy. Give us the swords; we have bucklers of our own.

Bene. If you use them, Margaret, you must put in the pikes with a vice; and they are dangerous weapons for maids.

Mercy. Well, I will call Beatrice to you, who I think hath legs.

Bene. And therefore will come. [Exit Margaret.

[Sings] The god of love,

That sits above.

And knows me, and knows me,

How pitiful I deserve.—

I mean in singing: but in loving, Leander the good swimmer, Troilus the first employer of panders, and a whole bookful of these quondam carpet-mon-

SCENE IV.

Enter Don Pedro, Claudio, and three or four with tapers.

CLAUDIO.

Is this the monument of Leonato?

DON PEDRO.

A Lord. It is, my lord.

CLAUDIO. [Reading out of a scroll]

Done to death by slanderous tongues

Was the Hero that here lies;

Death, in guerdon of her wrongs.

Gives her fame which never dies.

So the life that died with shame

Lives in death with glorious fame.

Hang thou there upon the tomb,

Praising her when I am dumb.

Now, music, sound, and sing your solemn hymn.

SONG.

Pardon, goddess of the night,

Those that slew thy virgin knight;

Him which, in songs of woe,

Round about her tomb they go.

Midnight, assist our mourn;

Help us to sigh and groan,

Heavily, heavily;

Graves, yawn and yield your dead,

Till death be wittered,

Heavily, heavily.

CLAUDIO. Now, unto thy bones good night!

Yearly will I do this rite.

[Exit.

D. PEDRO. Good morrow, masters; put your torches

The wolves have prev'd; and look, the gentle day;

Before the wheels of Phoebus, round about

Dapples the drowsy cast with spots of grey.

Thanks to you all, and leave us: fare you well.

CLAUDIO. Good morrow, masters: each his several way.

D. PEDRO. Come, let us hence, and put on other

And then to Leonato's we will go.

[Exit.

CLAUDIO. And Hymen now with luckier issue speaks,

Than this for whom we render'd up this woe.

[Exit.

SCENE IV. — A room in Leonato's house.

Enter Leonato, Antonio, Benedick, Beatrice,
Margaret, Ursula, Friar Francis, and Hero.

FRIAR. Did I not tell you she was innocent?

LEONA. So are the prince and Claudio, who accused her

Upon the error that you heard debated;

But Margaret was in some fault for this,

Although against her will, as it appears

In the true course of all the question.

ANTONIO. Well, I am glad that all things sort so well.

BENE. And so am I, being else by faith enforced

To call young Claudio to a reckoning for it.

LEONA. Well, daughter, and you gentlewomen all,

Withdraw into a chamber by yourselves,

And when I send for you, come hither mask'd.

[Exeunt Ladies.

The prince and Claudio promised by this hour

To visit me. You know your office, brother:

You must be father to your brother's daughter,

And give her to young Claudio.

ANTONIO. Which I will do with confirm'd countenance.

FRIAR. Friar, I must entreat your pains, I think.

BENE. To do what, signior?

FRIAR. To bind me, or make me: one of them.

SIGNIOR LEONATO. Truth it is, good signior,

Your niece regards me with an eye of favour.

LEONA. That eye my daughter lent her: 'tis most true,

BENE. And I do with an eye of love requite her.
ACT V.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SCENE IV.

Leon. The sight whereof I think you had from me, from Claudio and the prince: But what say you there?
Bene. Your answer, sir, is enigmatical;
But, for my will, my will is your good will
May stand with ours, this day to be conjoin’d
In the state of honourable marriage:
In which, good friar, I shall desire your help.
Leon. My heart is with your liking,
Frier. And my help.
Here come the prince and Claudio.

Enter Don Pedro and Claudio, and two or three others.

D. Pedro. Good morrow to this fair assembly.
Leon. Good morrow, prince; good morrow, Claudio;
We here attend you. Are you yet determined to-day to marry with my brother’s daughter?
Claudio. I’ll hold my mind, were she an Ethiop.
Leon. Call her forth, brother; here’s the friar ready.
[Exit Antonio.

D. Pedro. Good morrow, Benedick. Why, what’s the matter?
That you have such a February face,
So full of frost of storm and cloudiness?
Claudio. I think he thinks upon the savage bull,
Tush, fear not, man: we’ll tip thy horns with gold
And all the world shall rejoice at thee,
As once upon so hot a Jove, when he would play
the noble beast in love.
Bene. Bull Jove, sir, had an amiable bow;
And some such strange bull leap’d thy father’s cow,
And got a calf in that same noble feat.
Much like to you, for you have just his bant.
Claudio. For this I owe you: here come other reckonings.

Re-enter Antonio, with the Ladies masked.

Which is the lady I must seize upon?
Ant. This same is she, and I do give you her.
Claudio. Why, then she’s mine. Sweet, let me see your face.
Leon. No, that you shall not, till you take her hand
Before this friar and swear to marry her.
Claudio. Give me your hand: before this holy friar,
I am your husband, if you like of me.
Bene. And when I lived, I was your other wife:
[Unmasking.
And when you loved, you were my other husband.
Claudio. Another Hero!
Bene. Nothing certain:
One Hero died defied, but I do live,
And surely as I live, I am a maid.
D. Pedro. The former Hero! Hero that is dead!
Leon. She died, my lord, but whilst her slander lived.
Frier. All this amusement can I qualify;
When after that the holy rites are ended,
I’ll tell you largely of fair Hero’s death:
Meanwhile let wonder seem familiar,
And to the chapel let us presently.
Bene. Soft and fair, friar. Which is Beatrice?
Bene. [Unmasking] I answer to that name. What is your will?

Bene. Do not you love me?
Bene. Why, no: no more than reason.
Bene. Why, then your uncle and the prince and Have been deceived: they swore you did. [Claudio
Bene. Do not you love me?
Bene. Troth, no: no more than reason.
Bene. Why, then my cousin, Margaret and Ursula
Are much deceived: for they did swear you did.
Bene. They swore that you were almost sick forme.
Bene. They swore that you were well-nigh dead for love of me?
Bene. ‘Tis no such matter. Then you do not love
Bene. No, truly, but in friendly recompense.
Leon. Come, cousin, I am sure you love the gentleman.

Claudio. And I’ll be sworn upon’t that he loves
For here’s a paper written in his hand, [her
A halting sonnet of his own pure brain,
Fashion’d to Beatrice.

Hero. And here’s another
Writ in my cousin’s hand, stolen from her pocket,
Containing her affection unto Benedick.

Bene. A blank! here’s our own hands against our hearts.
Come, I will have thee; but, by this light,
I take thee for pity.

Bene. I would not deny you; but, by this good day,
I yield upon great persuasion; and partly to save your life,
For I was told you were in a consumption.

Bene. Peace! I will stop your mouth. [Kissing her.
D. Pedro. How dost thou, Benedick, the married man?

Bene. I’ll tell thee what, prince: a college of wit-crackers cannot flout me out of my humour.
Dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? No: if a man will be beaten with brains, I shall wear nothing handsome about him. In brief, since I do purpose to marry, I will think nothing to any purpose that the world can say against it; and therefore never flout at me for what I have said against it: for man is a giddy thing, and this is my conclusion. For thy part, Claudio, I did think to have beaten thee, but in that thou art like to be my kinsman, live unbruised and love my cousin.

Claudio. I had well hoped thou wouldst have denied Beatrice, that I might have cudgelled thee out of thy single life, to make thee a double-dealer; which, out of question, thou wilt be, if my cousin do not look exceeding narrowly to thee.

Bene. Come, come, we are friends: let’s have a dance ere we are married, that we may lighten our own hearts and our wives’ heels.

Leon. We’ll have dancing afterward.

Bene. First, of my word: therefore play, music. Prince, thou art said: get thee a wife, get thee a wife: there is no staff more reverend than one tipped with horn.

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. My lord, your brother John is taken in flight,
And brought with armed men back to Messina.

Bene. Think not on him till to-morrow: I’ll devise thee brave punishments for him. Strike up, pipers.

[Dance.—Exit.}

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The king of Navarre's park.

Enter Ferdinand, King of Navarre, Biron, Longaville, and Dumain.

King. Let fame, that all hunt after in their lives, Live register'd upon our brazen tombs; And then grace us in the disgrace of death; When, spite of cornernot devouring Time, The endeavour of this present breath may buy That honour which shall hate his sceptre's keen edge And make us heirs of all eternity. Therefore, brave conquerors,—for so you are, That war against your own affections And the huge army of the world's desires,— Our late edict shall strongly stand in force; Navarre shall be the wonder of the world; Our court shall be a little Academe, Still and contemplative in living art.

You three, Biron, Dumain, and Longaville, Have sworn for three years' term to live with me— My fellow-schoolmen and to keep those statutes That are recited in this schedule here: [names, Your oaths are pass'd; and now subscribe your That his own hand may strike his honour down That violates the smallest branch herein: If you are arm'd to do as sworn to do, Subscribe to your deep oaths, and keep it too.

Long. I am resolved: 'tis but a three years' fast: The mind shall banquet, though the body pine: Fat jennies have lean pates, and dainty bits Make rich the ribs, but bankrupt quite the wits.

Dum. My loving lord, Dumain is mortified: The grosser manner of these world's delights He throws upon the gross world's lacer slaves: To love, to wealth, to pomp, I pine and die! With all these living in philosophy.

Biron. I can but say their protestation over; So much, dear liege, I have already sworn, That is, to live and study here three years. But there are other strict observances; As, not to see a woman in that term, Which I hope well is not enrolled there; And one day in a week to touch no food And but one meal on every day beside, The which I hope is not enrolled there; And then, to sleep but three hours in the night, And not be seen to wink of all the day— When I was wont to think no harm all night And make a dark night too of half the day— Which I hope well is not enrolled there; O, these are barren tasks, too hard to keep, Not to see ladies, study, fast, not sleep! King. Your oath is pass'd to pass away from these.

Biron. Let me say no, my liege, an if you please: I only swore to study with your grace And stay here in your court for three years' space. King. You swore to that, Biron, and to the rest.

Biron. By yea and nay, sir, then I swore in jest. What is the end of study? let me know.

King. Why, that to know, which else we should not know.

Biron. Things hid and bar'd, you mean, from common sense? King. Ay, that is study's god-like recompense.

Biron. Come on, then; I will swear to study so, To know the thing I am forbid to know: As thus,—to study where I well may dine, When I to feast expressly am forbid; Or study where to meet some mistress fine, When mistresses from common sense are hid; Or, having sworn too hard a keeping oath, Study to break it and not break my troth. If study's gain be thus and this be so, Study knows that which yet it doth not know: Swear me to this, and I will ne'er say no.

King. These be the stops that hinder study quite And train our intellects to vain delight.

Biron. Why, all delights are vain; but that most vain, Which with pain purchased doth inherit pain: As, painfully to pore upon a book To seek the light of truth; while truth the while Doth falsely blind the eyesight of his look: Light seeking light doth light of light beguile: So, ere you find where light in darkness lies, Your light grows dark by losing of your eyes. Study me how to please the eye indeed By fixing it upon a fairer eye, Who dazzling so, that eye shall be his heed And give him light that it was blinded by. Study is like the heaven's glorious sun That will not be deep-search'd with saucy looks.

Small have continual plodders ever won
Save base authority from others' books.
These earthly godfathers of heaven's lights
That give a name to every fixed star
Have no more profit of their shining lights
Than men that walk not where they are.
Too much to know is to know nought but fame;
And every godfather can give a name. [reading!]
King. How well he's read, to reason against
Dumai. Proceeded well, to stop all good proceeding!
Long. He weeds the corn and still lets grow the Weeding that walketh not where it are.
Biron. The spring is near when green geese are Dumai. How follows that?
Biron. Fit in his place and time.
Dumai. In reason nothing.
Biron. Something then in rhyme.
King. Biron is like an envious snapping frost
That bites the first-born infants of the spring.
Biron. Well, say I am; why should proud summer boast
Before the birds have any cause to sing?
Why should I joy in my abortive birth?
At Christmas I no more desire a rose
Than wish a snow in May's new-fangled mirth;
But like of each thing that in season grows.
So you, to study now it is too late,
Climb o'er the house to unlock the little gate.
King. Well, you out; go home, Biron; adieu.
Biron. No, my good lord; I have sworn to stay
with you:
And though I have for barbarism spoke more
Than for that angel knowledge you can say,
Yet confident I'll keep what I have swore
And bide the pittance of each three years' day.
Give me the paper; let me read the same;
And to the strictest decrees I'll write my name.
King. How well this yielding rescues thee from shame!
Biron [reads]. 'Item. That no woman shall come within a mile of my court.' Hath this been pro-Long. Four days ago. [claimed]
Biron. Let 's see the penalty. [Reads] 'On pain of losing her tongue.' Who devised this penalty?
Long. Marry, that did I.
Biron. Sweet lord, and why? [penalty.]
Long. To fright then hence with this dread
Biron. What's the reason against gentility! [Reads] 'Item. If any man be seen to talk with a woman within the term of three years, he shall endure such public shame as the rest of the court can possibly devise.'
This article, my liege, yourself must break;
For well you know here comes in embassy
The French king's daughter with yourself to speak—
A maid of grace and complete majesty—
About surrender up of Aquitaine
To her decrpet, sick and bedrid father:
Therefore this article is made in vain,
Or vanity comes the same princess hither,
King. What say you, lords? why, this was quite
Biron. So study evermore is overshot: [forgot.
While it doth study to have what it would
It doth forget to do the thing it should,
And when it hath the thing it hunteth most,
'Tis won as towns with fire, so won, so lost.
King. We must of force dispense with this decree;
She must lie here on mere necessity.
Biron. Necessity will make us all forsown
Three thousand times within this three years!
For every man with his affects is born, [space;
Not that he hath grace:
If I break faith, this word shall speak for me;
I am forsown on mere necessity.'
So to the laws at large I write my name: [Subscribes.
And he that breaks them in the least degree
Stands in attainer of eternal shame:
Suggestions are to other as to me;
But I believe, although I seem so loath,
I am the last that will last keep his oath.
But is there no quick recreation granted?
King. Ay, what there is. Our court, you know, is haunted
With a refined traveller of Spain;
A man in all the world's new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain;
One whom the music of his own vain tongue
Doth ravish like enchanting harmony.
A man of complements, whom right and wrong
Have chose as umpire of their mutiny:
This child of fancy that Armado hight
For interim to our studies shall relate
In high-born words the worth of many a knight
From savvy Spain lest in the world's debate,
How you delight, my lords, I know not, I;
But, I protest, I love to hear him lie
And I will use him for my minstrelsy.
Biron. Armado is a most illustrious wight,
A man of fire-new words, fashion's own knight.
Therefore Costard and the swain and he shall be our sport;
And so to study, three years is but short.

Enter Dull with a letter, and Costard.
Dull. Which is the Duke's own person?
Biron. This fellow: what wouldst?
Dull. I must self reproof of his own person, for I am his grace's tharborhough; but I would see his own person in flesh and blood.
Biron. This is he.
Dull. Signior Arme—Arme—commends you.
There's villany abroad; this letter will tell you more.
Cost. Sir, the contemptus thereof are as touching me.
King. A letter from the magnificent Armado.
Biron. How low soever the matter, I hope in God for high words.
Long. A high hope for a low heaven: God grant us patience!
Biron. To hear? or forbear laughing?
Long. To hear meekly, sir, and to laugh modestly: or to forbear both.
Biron. Well, sir, be it as the style shall give us cause to clink in the merriness.
Cost. The matter is to me, sir, as concerning Jaquenetta. The manner of it, I am taken with the matter.
Biron. In what manner?
Cost. In manner and form following, sir; all those three: I was seen with her in the manor-house, sitting with her upon the form, and taken following her into the park; which, put together, is in manner and form following. Now, sir, for the manner,—it is the manner of a man to speak to a woman: for the form,—in some form.
Biron. For the following, sir?
Cost. As it shall follow in my correction: and God defend my right!
King. Will you hear this letter with attention? Biron. As we would hear an oracle.
Cost. Such is the simplicity of man to hearken after the flesh.
King [reads]. 'Great deputy, the welkin's vice-general and sole dominator of Navarre, my soul's earth's god, and body's fostering patron.'
Cost. Not a word of Costard yet.
King [reads]. 'So it is.'
Cost. It may be so; but if he say it is so, he is, in telling true, but so.
King. Pet him, sir.
Cost. Be to me and every man that dares not fight.
King. No words!
Cost. Of other men's secrets, I beseech you.
King [reads]. 'So it is, besieged with sable-coloured
ACT I.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

SCENE I.

Enter Armado and Moth.

Arm. Boy, what sign is it when a man of great spirit grows melancholy?

Moth. A great sign, sir, that he will look sad.

Arm. Why, sadness is one and the self-same thing, dear imp.

Moth. No, no; O Lord, sir, no.

Arm. How canst thou part sadness and melancholy, my tender juvenile?

Moth. It is a minor demonstration of the working of my tough senior.

Arm. Why tough senior? why tough senior?

Moth. Why tender juvenile? why tender juvenile?

Arm. I spoke it, tender juvenile, as a congruent epitheton appertaining to thy young days, which was a numbe to tender.

Moth. And I, tough senior, as an appertain title to thy old time, which we may name tough.

Arm. Pretty and apt.

Moth. How mean you, sir? I pretty, and my saying apt? or I apt, and my saying pretty?

Arm. Thou pretty, because little.

Moth. Little pretty, because little. Wherefore Arm. And therefore apt, because quick.

Moth. Speak you this in my praise, master?

Arm. In thy commend praise.

Moth. I will praise an eel with the same praise.

Arm. But, that an eel be ingenious?

Moth. That an eel is quick.

Arm. I do say thou art quick in answers: thou heatest my blood.

Moth. I am answered, sir.

Arm. I love not to be crossed.

Moth. [Aside] He speaks the mere contrary; crosses love not him.

Arm. I have promised to study three years with the duke.

Moth. You may do it in an hour, sir.

Arm. Impossible.

Moth. How many is one thrice told?

Arm. I am ill at reckoning; it titteth the spirit of a tapster.

Moth. You are a gentleman and a gamester, sir.

Arm. I confess both: they are both the varnish of a complete man.

Moth. Then, I am sure, you know how much the gross sum of these amounts to.

Arm. It doth amount to one more than two.

Moth. Which the base vulgar do call three.

Arm. True.

Moth. Why, sir, is this such a piece of study?

Arm. Now here is three studied, ere ye'll thrive wolk: and how easy it is to put 'years' to the word 'three,' and study three years in two words, the dancing horse will tell you.

Arm. A most fine figure!

Moth. To prove you a cipher.

Arm. I will hereupon confess I am in love: and as it is base for a soldier to love, so am I in love with a base wench. If drawing my sword against the humour of affection would deliver me from the reprobate thought of it, I would take Desire prisoner, and ransom him to any French courtier for a footed horse to carry. If I think scorn to sigh: methinks I should outwear Cupid. Comfort me, boy: what great men have been in love?

Moth. Hercules, master.

Arm. Most sweet Hercules! More authority, dear boy, name more: and, sweet my child, let them be men of good repute and carriage.

melancholy, I did commend the black-oppressing humour to the most wholesome physic of thy health-giving air; and, as I am a gentleman, beook myself to walk. The time when. About the sixth hour; I would most graze birds best peck, and men sit down to that nourishment which is called supper: so much for the time when. Now for the ground which; which, I mean, I walked upon; it is yeilded thy park. Then for the place where; where, I mean, I did encounter that obscure and most proverbous event, that dreary from my snow-white pen the ebon-coloured ink, which here thou viewes, beholdest, surveyest, or seest: but to the place where, it standeth north-north-east and by east from the west corner of thy curious-knotted garden: there did I see that low-spirited swain, that base mimow of thy mirth;—

King [reads]. *that unlettered small-knowing

Cost. Me?

King [soul].

King. *that shallow vassal, —

Cost. Still me?

King. *which, as I remember, bight Cost.

King [reads]. *For Jaquenetta, — so is the weaker vessel called which I apprehended with the afore-said swain. — I keep her as a vessel of thy law's fury; and shall, at the least of thy sweet notice, bring her to trial. Thine, in all compliments of devoted and heart-burning heat of duty.

DON ADRIANO DE ARMADO.

Biron. This is not so well as I looked for, but the best that ever I heard. Ay, the best for the worst. But, sirrah, what say you to this?

Cost. Sir, I confess the wench.

King. Did you hear the proclamation?

Cost. I do confess much of the hearing it, but little of the marking of it.

King. It was proclaimed a year's imprisonment, to be taken with a wench.

Cost. I was taken with none, sir: I was taken with a damsel.

King. Well, it was proclaimed 'damsel.'

Cost. This was no damsel neither, sir; she was a virgin.

King. It is so varied too; for it was proclaimed.

Cost. If it were, I deny her virginity; I was taken with a maid.

King. This maid will not serve your turn, sir.

Cost. This maid will serve my turn, sir.

King. Sir, I will pronounce your sentence: you shall fast a week with bran and water.

Cost. I had rather pray a month with mutton and porridge.

King. And Don Armado shall be your keeper.

My Lord Biron, see him deliver'd o'er:

And to the lords to part in praise of that

Which each to other hath so strongly sworn.

[Exeunt King, Longaville, and Domatia.

Biron. I'll lay my head to any good man's hat, These oaths and laws will prove an idle scorn.

Sirrah, come on.

Cost. I suffer for the truth, sir; for true it is, I was taken with Jaquenetta, and Jaquenetta is a girl; and therefore welcome the sour cup of perity! Affliction may one day smile again, till then, sit thee down, sorrow! [Exe.
ACT II.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

SCENE I. — The same.

Enter the Princess of France, Rosaline, Maria, Katharine, Boyet, Lords, and other Attendants.

Boyet. Now, madam, summon up your dearest spirits:
Consider who the king your father sends,
To whom he sends, and what's his embassy:
Yourself, held precious in the world's esteem,
To parley with the sole inheritor
Of all perfections that a man may owe, delight nor no penance; but a' must fast three days a week. For this damsel, I must keep her at the park: she is allowed for the day-woman. Fare you well.

Arm. I do betray myself with blushing. Maid!

Jaq. Man?

Arm. I will visit thee at the lodge.

Jaq. That's hereby.

Arm. I know where it is situate. Jaq. Lord, how wise you are!

Arm. I will tell thee wonders. Jaq. With that face?

Arm. I love thee.

Jaq. So I heard you say,

Arm. And so, farewell.

Jaq. Fair weather after you!

Dull. Come, Jaquenetta, away!

[Exeunt Dull and Jaquenetta.

Arm. Villain, thou shalt fast for thy offences ere thou be pardoned.

Cost. Well, sir, I hope, when I do it, I shall do it on a full stomach.

Arm. Thou shalt be heavily punished.

Cost. I am more bound to you than your fellows, for they are but lightly rewarded.

Arm. Take away this villain; shut him up.

Cost. Come, you transgressing slave; away!

Cost. Let me not be pent up, sir; I will fast, being loose.

Moth. No, sir; that were fast and loose: thou shalt to prison.

Cost. Well, if ever I do see the merry days of desolation that I have seen, some shall see.

Moth. What shall some see?

Cost. Nay, nothing, Master Moth, but what they look upon. It is not for prisoners to be too silent in their words; and therefore I will say nothing: I thank God I have as little patience as another man; and therefore I can be quiet.

[Exeunt Moth and Costard.

Arm. I do affect the very ground, which is base, where her shoe, which is baser, guided by her foot, which is basest, doth tread. I shall be forsworn, which is a great argument of falsehood, if I love. And how can that be true love which is falsely attempted? Love is a familiar; Love is a devil: there is no evil angel but Love. Yet was Samson so tempted, and he had an excellent strength; yet was Solomon so seduced, and he had a very good wit. Cupid's butt-shaft is too hard for Hercules' club; and therefore too much odds for a Spaniard's rapier. The first and second cause will not serve my turn; the passado he respects not, the duello he regards not; his disgrace is to be called boy; but his glory is to subdue men. Adieu, valor! rest, rapier! be still, drum! for your manager is in love; yea, he loveth. Assist me, some extemporal god of rhyme, for I am sure I shall turn sonnet. Devise, wit; write, pen; for I am for whole volumes in folio.

[Exit.
To let you enter his uncoupled house.
Here comes Navarre.

Enter King, Longaville, Dumnain, Biron, and Attendants.

King. Fair princess, welcome to the court of Navarre.

Prior. Fair I give you back again; and we come.I have not yet, the roof of this court is so high to be yours: and welcome to the wide fields too base to be mine.

King. You shall be welcome, madam, to my court.

Prior. I will be welcome, then; conduct me thither.

King. Hear me, dear lady; I have sworn an oath.

Prior. O lady help my lord! He'll be forsworn.

King. Not for the world, fair madam, by my will.

Prior. Why, will shall break it; will and nothing else.

King. Your ladyship is ignorant what it is.

Prior. Were my lord so, his ignorance were wise,

Where now his knowledge must prove ignorance.

I hear your grace hath sworn out house-keeping:

*Tis deadly sin to keep that oath, my lord,

And sin to break it.

But pardon me, I am too sudden-hold:

To teach a teacher ill beseech me.

Vouchsafe to read the promise of my coming,

And suddenly resolve me in my suit.

King. Madam, I will, if suddenly I may.

Prior. You will the sooner, that I were away;

For you'll prove perjured if you make me stay.

Biron. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?

Ros. Did not I dance with you in Brabant once?

Biron. I know you did.

Prior. How needless was it then to ask the question?

Biron. You must not be so quick.

Ros. *Tis long of you that spur me with such questions.

*Biron. You wit's too hot, it_speeds too fast.

Ros. Not till it leave the rider in the mire.

Biron. What time o' day?

Ros. The hour that fools should ask.

Biron. Now fair befall your mask!

Ros. Fair fall the face it covers!

Biron. And send you many covers!

Ros. Amen, so you be none.

Biron. Nay, then will I be gone.

King. Madam, your father here doth intimate

The payment of a hundred thousand crowns;

Being but the one-half of an entire sum

Disbursed by my father in his wars.

But say that he or we, as neither have,

Received that sum, yet there remains unpaid

A hundred thousand more: in surity of the which,

One part of Aquitaine is bound to us,

Although not valued to the money's worth.

If then the king your father will restore

But that one-half which is unsatisfied,

We will give up our right in Aquitaine,

And hold fair friendship with his majesty.

But that, it seems, he little purposeth,

For here he doth demand to have repaid

A hundred thousand crowns: and not demands,

On payment of a hundred thousand crowns,

To have his title live in Aquitaine;

Which we much rather had depart withal

And have the money by our father lent

Than Aquitaine so galled as it is.

Dear prince and peer, we grant his requests so far

From reason's yielding, your fair self should make

A yielding against some reason in my breast

And go well satisfied to France again.

Prior. You do the king my father too much wrong

And wrangle the reputation of your name,

So most unwilling to confess receipt

Of that which hath so faithfully been paid.
ACT III.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

SCENE I.

King. I do protest I never heard of it; And if you prove it, I'll repay it back Or yield up Aquitaine.

Prin. We arrest your word. Boyet, you can produce acquaintances For such a sum from special officers Of Charles his father.

King. Satisfy me so.

Boyet. So please your grace, the packet is not come Where that and other specialties are bound: To-morrow you shall have a sight of them.

King. You shall suffer me: at which interview All liberal reason I will yield unto.

Meantime receive such welcome at my hand As honour without breach of honour may Make tender of to thy true worthiness: You may not come, fair princess, in my gates; But here without you shall be so received As you shall deem yourself lodged in my heart, Though so denied fair harbour in my house. Your own good thoughts excurse me, and farewell: To-morrow shall we visit you again. [Grace.

Biron. Thy own wish I thee I thee in every place! [Exit.

Boyet. To her will, sir, or so.

Biron. You are welcome, sir: adieu.

Boyet. Farewell to me, sir, and welcome to you. [Exit Biron.

Mar. That last is Biron, the merry mad-cap lord: Not a word with him but a jest.

Boyet. And every jest but a word.

Prin. It was well done of you to take him at his word. [Board.

Boyet. I was as willing to grapple as he was to Mar. Two hot sheeps, marry.

Biron. And wherefore not ships? No sheep, sweet lamb, unless we feed on your lips.

Mar. You sheep, and I pasture: shall that finish Boyet. So you grant pasture for me. [The jest? Mar. Not so, gentle beast: My lips are no common, though several they be. Boyet. Belonging to whom?

Mar. To my fortunes and me.

Prin. Good wits will be jangling; but, gentles, agree: This civil war of wits were much better used On Navarre and his book-men: for here it is abused. Boyet. If my observation, which very seldom lies, By the heart's still rhetoric disclosed with eyes, Deceive me not now, Navarre is infected.

Prin. With what?

Boyet. With that which we lovers entitle affected.

Prin. Your reason?

Boyet. Why, all his behaviours did make their To the court of his eye, peeping thorough desire: His heart, like an agate, with your print impress'd, Proud with his form, in his eye pride express'd: His tongue, all impatient to speak and not see, Be mad with taste in his eyesight to be: All senses to that sense did make their repair, To feel only looking on tais of fairest: Mething all his senses were lock'd in his eye, As jewels in crystal for some prince to buy: Who, tendering their own worth from where they were glass'd, Did point you to buy them, along as you pass'd: His face's own margent did quote such amazes That all eyes saw his eyes enchanted with gazes. I'll give you Aquitaine and all that is his, An you give him for my sake but one loving kiss.

Prin. Come to our pavilion: Boyet is disposed.

Boyet. But to speak that in words which his eye hath disclosed, I only have made a mouth of his eye, By adding a tongue which I know will not lie. Ros. Thou art an old love-monger and speakest skillfully.

Mar. He is Cupid's grandfather and learns news of him.

Ros. Then was Venus like her mother, for her father is but grim.

Boyet. Do you hear, my maid wenches?

Mar. No.

Boyet. What then, do you see?

Ros. Ay, our way to be gone.

Boyet. You are too hard for me. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The same.

Enter Armado and Moth.

Arm. Warbles, child; make passionate my sense of hearing.

Moth. Conceived. [Singing.

Arm. Sweet air! Go, tenderness of years: take this key, give enhancement to the swain, bring him festinately hither: I must employ him in a letter to my love. [Brawl.

Moth. Master, will you win your love with a French arm. How meanest thou? brawling in French?

Moth. No, my complete master: but to jig off a tune at the tongue's end, canary to it with your feet, humour it with turning up your eyelids, sigh a note and sing a note, sometime through the throat, as if LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

ACT III.

The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Were still at odds, being but three.

There's the moral. Now the Zvenov.

Moth. I will add the Zvenov. Say the moral as

Arm. The fox, the ape, the humble-bee,
Being but three.

Moth. Until the goose came out of door,
And stay'd the odds by adding four,
Now will I begin your moral, and do you fo with my Zvenov.

The fox, the ape, and the humble-bee,
Being but three.

Moth. Until the goose came out of door.

Cost. Staying the odds by adding four.

Moth. A good Zvenov, ending in the goose: would you desire more?

Cost. The box hath sold him a bargain, a goose,
That's flat.

Sir, your pennyworth is good, and your goose he fat.
To sell a bargain well is as cunning as fast and loose;
Let me see: a fat Zvenov: ay, that's a fat goose.

Arm. Come hither, come hither. How did this argument begin?

Moth. By and by, a costard was broken in a

Then call'd you for the Zvenov.

Cost. True, and I for a plantain: thus came your argument in;

and then the boy's fat Zvenov, the goose that you
And he ended the market.

Arm. By the sweet soul, I mean setting thee at liberty, enfreedoming thy person: thou wast imured, restrained, captivated, bound.

Cost. True, true: and now you will be my purgation and let me loose.

Arm. I give thee thy liberty, set thee from durance:
and, in heat thereof, impose on thee nothing but this: hear this significant [giving a letter] to the country maid Jaquenetta: there is renumeration; for the best ward of mine honour is rewarding my dependents. Moth. follow.

[Exit.]

Moth. Like the sequel. 1. Signior Costard, aloof.

Cost. My sweet ounce of man's flesh! my hony ejew.

[Exit Moth.]

Now will I look to his renumeration. Renumeration!
O, that's the Latin word for three farthings:
three farthings—renumeration.—What's the price of this inkle?—One penny. —No, I 'll give you a renunciation: 'why, it carries it. Renumeration! why, it is a fairer name than French crown.
I will never buy and sell out of this word.

Enter Biron.

Biron. O, my good knave Costard! exceedingly well met.

Cost. Pray you, sir, how much carnation ribbon may a man buy for a renumeration?

Biron. What is a renumeration?

Cost. Marry, sir, halfpenny farthing.

Biron. Why, then, three-farthings worth of silk.

Cost. I thank your worship: God be with you!

Biron. Stay, slave: I must employ thee:
As thou wilt win my favour, good my knave,
Do one thing for me that I shall entreat.

Cost. When would you have it done, sir?

Biron. This afternoon.
ACT IV.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

SCENE I. — The same.

Cost. Well, I will do it, sir: fare you well.
Biron. Thou knowest not what it is.
Cost. I shall know, sir, when I have done it.
Biron. Why, villain, thou must know first.
Cost. I will come to your worship to-morrow morning.

Biron. It must be done this afternoon. Hark, slave, it is but this:
The princess comes to hunt here in the park.
And in her train is a gentle lady: [name,
When tongues speak sweetly, then they name her
And Rosaline they call her: ask for her;
And to her white hand see thou do command
This seal'd-up counsel. There's thy guerdon; go, [Giving him a shilling.

Cost. Cardon, O sweet garden! better than remuneration, a 'then-pence farthing better: most sweet garden! I will do it, sir, in print.
Cardon! Remuneration! [Exit.

Biron. And I, forsooth, in love! I, that have been love's whip;
A very handle to a humorous sigh;
A critic, nay, a night-watch constable;
A domineering pedant o'er the boy;
Than whom no mortal so magnificent!
This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward boy;
This youth's, whoe'er it is, so blameless
for Ilereliy,
Whoe'er it is, I will not praise:
But, should I mean to praise,
Would I not mean to praise? but praise
Her beauty, I am fair that shoot,
And thereupon thou speak'st the fairest shoot.

For. Pardon me, madam, for I meant not so.

Prim. What, what? first praise me and again say
O short-lived pride! not fair? shackle for woe! [nay?
For. Yes, madam, fair.

Prim. Nay, never paint me now:
Where fair is not, praise cannot mend the brow.
Here, good my glass, take this for telling true:
Fair payment for foul words is more than due.
For. Nothing but fair is that which you inherit.
Prim. See, see, my beauty will be saved by merit!
O heresy in fair, fit for these days!
A giving hand, though foul, shall have fair praise.
But come, the bow: now mercy goes to kill,
And shooting well is then accounted ill.
Thus will I save my credit in the shoot:
Not wounding, pity would not let me do it;
If wounding, then it was to show my skill,
That more for praise than purpose meant to kill.
And out of question so it is sometimes,
Glory grows guilty of detested crimes.
When, for fame's sake, for praise, an outward part.
We bend to that the working of the heart;
And I for praise alone now seek to spill
The poor deer's blood, that my heart means no ill.

Boyet. Do not curst withheld that self-sovereignty
Only for praise sake, when they strive to be Lords o'er their lords?

Prim. Only for praise: and praise we may afford
To any haly that subsides a lord.

This senior-junior, giant-dwarf, Dan Cupid;
Regent of love-rhymes, lord of folded arms,
The anointed sovereign of sighs and groans,
Liege of all the passion that can breathe.
Dread prince of plaquetts, king of coquetry,
Soe imperator and great general
Of trotting puritans: — O my little heart!—
And I to be a corporal of his field,
And wear his colours like a tumbler's hoop!
What? If I love? I sue! I seek a wife! —
A woman, that is like a German clock,
Still a-repairing, ever out of frame,
And never going aright, being a watch,
But being watch'd that it may still go right!
Nay, to be perjured, which is worst of all;
And, among three, to love the worst of all;
A wildly wanton with a velvet brow,
With two pitch-balls stuck in her face for eyes;
Ay, and, by heaven, one that will do the deed
Though Argus were her ennuch and her guard:
And I to sigh for her! to watch for her!
To pray for her! To go: it is a plague
That Cupid will impose on a defect.
Of his almighty dreadful little might.
Well, I will love, write, sigh, pray, sue and grom:
Some men must love my lady and some Joan. [Exit.

Boyet. Here comes a member of the commonwealth.

Enter Costard.

Cost. God dig-yaun-den all! Pray you, which is the head lady?
Prim. Thou shalt know her, fellow, by the rest
That have no heads.
Cost. Which is the greatest lady, the highest?
Prim. The thickest and the tallest.
Cost. The thickest and the tallest! it is so; truth
An your waist, mistress, were as slender as my wit.
One o' these maids' girdles for your waist should be fit.
[here.
Are not you the chief woman? you are the thickest?
Cost. What's your will? say what's your will?
Prim. I have a letter from Monsieur Biron to one Lady Rosaline. [of mine
Prim. O, thy letter, thy letter! he's a good friend
Stand aside, good bearer. Boyet, you can carve;
Break up this capon.

Boyet. I am bound to serve.
This letter is mistook, it importeth none here;
It is writ to Jaquinetta.

Prim. We will read it, I swear.
Boyet. [reads. 'By heaven, that thou art fair, is most infaillible: true, that thou art beautiful; truth itself, that thou art lovely. More fairer than fair, beautiful than beauteous, truer than truth itself, have commiseration on thy heriocall vassal! The magnanimous and most illustrious king Cophetua set eye upon the pernicious and inhabitable beggar
Zenephon; and he it was that might rightly say,
Venit, vidi, vici; which to immortalize in the vulgar.—O base and obscure vulgar!—vide dexter.
He came, saw, and overcame: he came, one; saw, two; overcame, three.
Who came? the king? why did he come? to see: why did he see? to overcome: to whom came he? to the beggar: what saw he? the beggar; who overcame he? the beggar. The conclusion is victory: on whose side? the king's. The captive is enriched: on whose side? the beggar's.
The catastrophe is a nuptial: on whose side? the king's: no, on both in one, or one in both.
I am the king: for so stands the comparison: thou the 119
beggar: for so witness thy lowliness. Shall I command thy love? I may: shall I enforce thy love? I could: shall I entreat thy love? I will. What shall thou exchange for rags? robes; for tittles; titles; for thyself? me. Thus, expecting thy reply, I profane my lips on thy foot, my eyes on thy picture, and my heart on thy every part. Thine, in the nearest design of industry.

Don Adriano de Armado.

Thus dost thou hear the Nemean lion roar

'Gainst thee, thou lamb, that standest as his prey.

Submissive fall his princely feet before,

And he from forage will incline to play:

But if thou strive, poorest and poorest art thou then?

Food for his rage, repasture for his den.

Pria. What plume of feathers is he that indited this letter? [better?]

What vane? what weathercock? did you ever hear

Boyet. I am much deceived but I remember the style. [crewhile.

Pria. Else your memory is bad, going o'er it

Boyet. This Armado is a Spaniard, that keeps here in court;

A phantasm, a Monarch, and one that makes sport

To the prince and his bookmates.

Pria. Thou fellow, a word?

Cost. I told you; my lord.

Pria. To whom shouldst thou give it?

Cost. From my lord to my lady.

Pria. From which lord to which lady?

Cost. From my lord Biron, a good master of mine,

To a lady of France that he call'd Rosaline.

Pria. Thou hast mistaken his letter. Come, lords, away.

[To Ros.] Here, sweet, put up this; 'twill be thine another day. [Exit Princess and train.

Boyet. Who is the suitor? who is the suitor?

Ros. Shall I teach you to know?

Boyet. Ay, my continent of beauty.

Ros. Why, she that bears the bow.

Finely put off!

Boyet. My lady goes to kill horns; but, if thou marry

Hang me by the neck, if horns that year miscarry.

Finely put on! Ros. Well, then, I am the shooter.

Boyet. And who is your deer?

Ros. If we choose by the horns, yourself come not near.

Finely put on, indeed!

Mor. You still wrangle with her, Boyet, and she strikes at the brow.

Boyet. But she herself is hit lower: have I hit her now?

Ros. Shall I come upon thee with an old saying, that thou in King Perkin of France was a little boy, as touching the hit it?

Boyet. So I may answer thee with one as old, that was a woman when Queen Guinever of Britain was a little wench, as touching the hit it.

Ros. Thou canst not hit it, hit it, hit it,

Pria. Thou canst not hit it, my good man.

Boyet. An I cannot, cannot, cannot,

An I cannot, another can.

[Exeunt Ros. and Kath.

Cost. By my troth, most pleasant: how both did fit it!

Mor. A mark marvellous well shot, for they both did hit it.

Boyet. A mark! O, mark but that mark! A mark, says my lady! [Be.

Let the mark have a prick in 't, to meet at, if it may

Mor. Wide o' the bow hand! I' faith, your hand is out.

Cost. Indeed, a' must shoot nearer, or he'll ne'er hit the clout.

Boyet. An if my hand be out, then belike your hand is in.

Cost. Then will she get the upshoot by cleaving the pin. [grow foul.

Mor. Come, come, you talk greasily; your lips

Cost. She's too hard for you at pricks, sir: challenge her to bowl.

Boyet. Fear too much rubbing. Good-night, my good owl. [Exit Boyet and Maria.

Cost. By my soul, a swain! a most simple swain! Lord, Lord, how the ladies and I have put him down! O' my troth, most sweet jests! most incoy vulgar wit!

When it comes so smoothly off, so obscenely, as it were, so fit.

Armado o' th' one side,—O, a most dainty man!

To see him walk before a lady and to bear her fan! To see him kiss his hand! and how most sweetly at will swear.

And his page o' t' other side, that handful of wit!

Ah, heavens, it is a most pathetical hit!

Sola, sola! [Shout within.—Exit Costard, running.

Scene II.—The same.

Enter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Nath. Very reverend sport, truly; and done in the testimony of a good conscience.

Hol. The deer was, as you know, sanguis, in blood; ripe as the pomewater, who now hangeth like a jewel in the ear of cado, the sky, the welkin, the heaven; and moon falcheth like a crab on the face of terra, the soil, the land, the earth.

Nath. Truly, Master Holofernes, the epitaphs are sweetly varied, like a scholar at the least: but, sir, I assure ye, it was a lack of the first head.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, hand credo.

Dull. 'T was not a hand credo; 't was a pricket.

Hol. Most barbarous intimation! yet a kind of insinuation, as it were, in via, in way, of explication; facere, as it were, replication, or rather, ostentation; to show, as it were, his inclination, after his undressed, unpolished, uneducated, unpruned, untrained, or rather, unlettered, or rathereft, unconfirmed fashion, to insert again my hand credo for a deer.

Dull. I said the deer was not a hand credo; 't was a pricket.

Hol. Twice-sold simplicity, blest coxcomb! [look!

O thou monster Ignorance, how deformed dost thou

Nath. Sir, thou hast never fed of the dainties that are bred in a book;

he hath not eat paper, as it were; he hath not drunk ink: his intellect is not replenished; he is only an animal, only sensible in the dullest parts:

And such barren plants are set before us, that we thankful could be,

Which we of taste and feeling are, for those parts that do fructify in us more than he.

For as it would ill become me to be vain, indiscreet, or a fool,

So were there a patch set on learning, to see him in a school:

But omnne bene, say I; being of an old father's mind,

Many can brook the weather that love not the wind.

Dull. You two are book-men: can you tell me by your wit

What was a month old at Cain's birth, that's not five weeks old as yet? [man Dull.

Hol. Dietynna, goodman Dull; Dietynna, good-

Dull. What is Dietynna?

Nath. A title to Phoebe, to Luna, to the moon.

Hol. The moon was a month old when Adam was no more.

Cost. And raught not to five weeks when he came to five.

The allusion holds in the exchange. [exchange.

Dull. 'T is true, indeed; the collusion holds in the Hol. God comfort thy capacity! I say, the allusion holds in the exchange.

Dull. And I say, the pollution holds in the exchange: for the moon is never but a month old; and I say beside that, twas a pricket that the princess killed.

Hol. Sir Nathaniel, will you hear an extemporal epitaph on the death of the deer? And, to humour the ignorant, call I the deer the princess killed a pricket.

Nath. Perge, good Master Holofernes, perge; so it shall please you to abrogate strummery.

Hol. I will something affect the letter, for it argues facility.

The greyful princess pierced and prick'd a pretty pleasing pricket.

Some thought a squirrel, but not a sore, till now made sore with shooting.

The dogs did yell; put l. to sore, then sorel jumps from thicket; shooting.

Or pricket sore, or else sorel; the people full a-

It sore be, then l. to sore makes fifty sores one some.

Of one sore I am hundred make by adding but one

Nath. A rare talent!

Dull. [Aside] If a talent be a claw, look how he claws him with a talent.

Hol. This is a gift that I have, simple, simple: a foolish very venement spirit, full of forms, figures, shapes, objects, ideas, apprehensions, motions, revolutions: these are begot in the ventricles of memory, nourished in the womb of pia mater, and delivered upon the mellowing of occasion. But the gift is good in those in whom it is acute, and I am thankful for it.

Nath. Sir, I praise the Lord for you; and so may my parishioners; for their sons are well tutored by you, and their daughters profit very greatly under you: you are a good member of the commonwealth.

Hol. Mehercle, if their sons be ingenuous, they shall want no instruction; if their daughters be capable. I will put it to them: but vir sapit qui paucu loquitur; a soul feminine salmieth us.

Enter Jaquenetta and Costard.

Jaq. God give you good morning, master Parson.

Hol. Master Parson, pray me a person. An if one should be pierced, which is the one?

Cost. Marry, master schoolmaster, he that is likest to a hogshead.

Hol. Piercing a hogshead! a good lustre of conceit in a tuft of earth: fire enough for a flint, pearl enough for a swine: 1 pretty; it is well.

Jaq. Good master Parson, be so good as read me this letter; it was given me by Costard, and sent me from Don Armado: I beseech you, read it.

Hol. Fauste, precor gelida quando pucus omne sub umbra Ruminat,—and so forth. Ah, good old Mantuan! I may speak of thee as the traveller doth of Venice!

Venetia, Venetia,
Chi non t'ide vede non t'etia.
Old Mantuan, old Mantuan! who understandeth thee not, loves thee not. Ut, re, sol, la, mi, fa. Under pardon, sir, what are the contents? or rather, as Horace says in his—What, my soul, verses?—

Nath. Ay, sir, and very learned. [domine.

Hol. Let me hear a staff, a stanzia, a verse; lege, Nath. [reads]

If love make me foresworn, how shall I swear to love?
Ah, never faith could hold, if not to beauty voud'! Though to himself foresworn, to thee I' ll faithful prove;
[bow'd.]
Those thoughts to me were oaks, to thee like osiers
Study his bias leaves and makes his book thine eyes,
Where all these pleasures live that art would comprehend:

If knowledge be the mark, to know thee shall suffice;
Well learned is that tongue that well can thee commended order;
All ignorant that soul that sees thee without with-

Which is to some praise that I thy parts admire: Thy eye Jove's lightning bears, thy voice his dreadful thunder,

Which, not to anger bent, is music and sweet fire. Celestial as thou art, O, pardon love this wrong.

That sings heaven's praise with such an earthy tongue.

Hol. You find not the apostrophas, and so miss the accent: let me supervise the canzonet. Here are only numbers ratified: but, for the elegancy, facility, and golden cadence of poetry, care.

Vividino so was also your sister's device; and why, indeed, Nausicaa, for smelling out the odoriferous flowers of fancy, the jerks of invention? Imbrati is nothing: so doth the hound his master, the ape his keeper, the tied horse his rider. But, damosella virgin, was this directed to you?

Jaq. Ay, sir, from one Monsieur Biron, one of the strange queen's lords.

Hol. I will overglance the superscript: 'To the snow-white hand of the most beauteous Lady Rosas-line.' I will look again on the intellect of the letter, for the nomination of the party writing to the person named: 'Your ladyship's in all desired employment, Biron.' Sir Nathaniel, this Biron is one of the votaries with the king; and here he hath framed a letter to a sequent of the stranger queen's, which accidentally, or by the way of progression, hath miscarried. Trip and go, my sweet; deliver this paper into the royal hand of the king: it may concern much. Stay not thy compliment: I forgive thy duty: adieu. [your life!]

Jaq. Good Costard, go with me. Sir, God save Cost. Have with thee, my girl.

Nath. Sir, you have done this in the fear of God, very religiously, and, as a certain father saith,—

Hol. Sir, tell not me of the father; I do fear col-ourable colours. But to return to the verses: did they please you, Sir Nathaniel?—

Nath. Marvellous well for the pen.

Hol. I do dine to-day at the father's of a certain pupil of mine; where, if, before repast, it shall please you to gratify the table with a grace, I will, on my privilege I have with the parents of the foresaid child or pupil, undertake your ten venuto; where I will prove those verses to be very unlearned, neither savouring of poetry, wit, nor invention: I beseech you the liberty.

Nath. And thank you too; for society, saith the text, is the happiness of life.

Hol. And, certes, the text most infaillibly concludes it. [To Dull] Sir, I do invite you too; you shall not say me nay: paca veria. Away! the gentiles are at their game, and we will to our recreation.

Enter Biron, with a paper.

Biron. The king he is hunting the deer; I am coursing myself; they have pitched a foil; I am toiling in a pitch.—pitch that defiles; defile! a foul word. Well, set thee down, sorrow! for so they say the fool said, and so say I, and I the fool: well proved, wit! By the Lord, this love is as mad as Ajax: it kills sheep; it kills me, I, a sheep; well proved again o' my side! I will not love you: if I do, let me not love thee; it I will not. O, but her eye,—by this light, but for her eye, I would not love her; yes, for her two eyes. Well, I do nothing in the world but lie, and he in my throat. By heaven, I do love; and it hath taught me to rhyme and to be melancholy; and Enter King, with a paper.

KING. Ay me!

BIRON. [Aside] Shot, by heaven! Proceed, sweet Cupid: thou hast thrust him up with thy bird-bolt under the left pap. In faith, secrets!

KING [reads].

So sweet a kiss the golden sun gives not
To those fresh morning drops upon the rose,
As thy eye-beams, when their fresh rays have smote
The night of dew that on my cheeks down flows:
Nor shines the silver moon one half so bright
Through the transparent bosom of the deep,
As doth thy face through tears of mine give light:
Thou shinest in every tear that I do weep:
No drop but as a costly diamond in a facet,
So ridest thou triumphing in my eye.
Do but behold the tears that swell in me,
And they thy glory through my grief will show:
But do not love thyself; then thou wilt keep
My tears for glasses, and still make me weep;
O queen of kings! how fair doth then excel,
No thought can think, nor tongue of mortal tell.
How shall she know my griefs? I'll drop the paper!
Sweet leaves, shade folly. Who is he comes here?

[Steps aside.

What, Longaville! and reading! listen, ear.

BIRON. Now, in thy likeness, one more fool appear!

Enter Longaville, with a paper.

LONG. Ay me, I am forsworn!

BIRON. Why he comes in like a perjurer, wearing papers.

KING. In love, I hope: sweet fellowship in shame!

BIRON. One drunkard loves another of the name.

LONG. Am I the first that have been perjur'd so?

BIRON. I could put thee in comfort. Not by two that I know:

[eyes.

Thou makest the triumvir, the corner-cap of societie,
The shape of love's Tyburn that hangs up in similitude.

LONG. I fear these stubborn lines lack power to O sweet Maria, empress of my love!
These numbers will I tear, and write in prose.

BIRON. O, rhymes are guards on wanton Cupid's Disguise not his skap.

[Reads.

LONG. This same shall go.

Did not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye,
Gainst whom the world cannot hold argument,
Persuade my heart to this false perjury?

Vows for thee broke deserve not punishment.
A woman I forswore: but I will prove,
Thou being a godless, I forswore not thee:
My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love;
Thy grace being gain'd cures all disgrace in me.

Vows are but breath, and breath a vapour is:
Then thou, fair sun, which on my earth dost shine,
Exhale this vapour now: in thee it is:
If broken then, it is no fault of mine:
If by me broke, what fool is not so wise
To lose an oath to win a paradise?

[Deity.

Biron. This is the liver-vein, which makes flesh
A green goose a godless: pure, pure idolatry.
[Way.

God, and mark us, God amen! We are much out o' the LONG. By whom shall I send this?—Company!

[Stay.

Biron. All hid, all hid: an old infant play.

Like a demigod here sit I in the sky,
And wretched fools' secrets heedfully o'er-eye.

More sakes to the mill? O heavens, I have my wish!

Enter Dumas, with a paper.

DUMAIN. Transform'd! four woodcocks in a dish!

Biron. Most munificently comb'd.

DUMAIN. By heaven, the wonder in a mortal eye!

BIRON. By earth, she is not, corporal, there you lie.

DUMAIN. Her amber hair for fuel hath amber quoted.

BIRON. An amber-colour'd raven was well noted.

DUMAIN. As upright as the cedar.

Biron. Stoop, I say;

Her shoulder is with child.

DUMAIN. As fair as day. [Shine.

BIRON. Ay, as some days: but then no sun must DUMAIN. O that I had my wish!

LONG. And I had mine!

KING. And I mine, too, good Lord! [Word.

BIRON. Amen, so I had mine; is not that a good DUMAIN. I would forget her; but a fever she Reigns in my blood and will remember'd be.

BIRON. A fever in your blood! why, then inclusion
Would let her out in sauces: sweet misprision!

DUMAIN. Once more I'll read the ode that I have writ.

BIRON. Once more I'll mark how love can vary

[Reads.

On a day—a slack the day—

Love, whose month is ever May,

Spies a blooming rose in fair:

Playing in the wants air:

Through the velvet leaves the wind,

All unseen, can passage find;

That the lover, sick to death,

Wish himself the heaven's death,

Air, quoth he, thy checks may blow;

Alas! would I might triumph so!

But, slack, my hand is sworn

No'er to pluck thee from thy thorn;

Yow, slack, for youth unmeet;

Youth so apt to pluck a sweet!

Do not call it sin in me,

That I am forsworn for thee;

Thou for whom Jove would swear

Juno but an Ethiope were;

And deny himself for Jove,

Turning mortal for thy love.

This will I send and something else more plain,

That shall express my true love's fasting pain,

O, would the king, Biron, and Longaville,

Were lovers too! Ill, to example ill,

Would from my forehead wipe a perjurd note:

For none offend where all alike do dote.

LONG. [advancing] Dumaun, thy love is far from
That in love's grief desir'est society:

You may look pale, but I should blush, I know,

To be o'erheard and taking napping so.

[Advancing] Come, sir, you blush; as his your case is such;

You shall, if him, offending twice as much:

You do not love Maria: Longaville
Did never sonnet for her sake compile,

Nor never lay his wreathed arms athwart
His loving bosom to keep down his heart.

I have been closely shrouded in this bush
And mark'd you both and for you both did blush:

I heard your guilty rhymes, observed your fashion,

Saw sighs reek from you, noted well your passion:

Ay me! says one: O Jove! the other cries:

One, her hairs were gold, crystal the other's eyes:

[To Long.] You would for paradise break faith and

[To Dumaun.] And Jove, for your love, would infringe

What will Biron say when that he shall hear

Faith so infringed, which such zeal did swear?

How will he scenic! how will he spend his wit!

How will he triumph, leap and laugh at it!

123
For all the wealth that ever I did see,
I would not have him know so much by me.

Biron. Now step forth to whips hypocrisy.

[Advancing,]

Ah, good my liege, I pray thee, pardon me!
Good heart, what grace hast thou, thus to repuru
These worms for loving, that art most in love?
Your eyes do make no coaches; in your tears
There is no certain princess that appears;
You'll not be perplexed, 'tis a hateful thing;
Tush, none but minstrels like of sonnet:
But are you not ashamed? say, are you not,
All three of you, to be thus much o'ershoot?
You found his mote; the king your mote did see;
But I a beam do find in each of three.
O, what a scene of foolery have I seen,
Of sighs, of groans, of sorrow and of teen!
O me, with what strict patience have I sat,
To see a king transform'd to a gaunt!
To see great Hercules whipping a gig,
And profound Solomon to tune a jig,
And Nestor play at push-pin with the boys,
And critic Thimon laugh at idle toys!
Where are thy grief, O, tell me now, Dommain?
And, gentle Longaville, where lies thy pain?
And where my liege's? all about the breast:
A cauldron, ho!

King. Too bitter is thy jest.
Are we betray'd thus to thy over-view?
Biron. I betray'd you, my liege, but I betray'd by you:
I, that am honest; I, that hold it sin
To break the vow I am engaged in;
I am betray'd, by keeping company
With men like men of inconstancy.
When shall you see me write a thing in rhyme,
Or grate for love? or spend a minute's time
In prunin' me? When shall you hear that I will praise a hand, a foot, a face, an eye,
A gait, a state, a brow, a breast, a waist,
A leg, a limb?

King. Soft! whither away so fast?
A true man or a thief that galloys so?
Biron. I post from love: good lover, let me go.

Enter Jaquenetta and Costard.

Jaq. God bless the king!

King. What present hast thou there?
Cost. Some certain treason.

King. What makes treason here?
Cost. Nay, it makes nothing, sir.

King. If it mar nothing neither,
The treason and you go in peace away together.

Jaq. I beseech your grace, let this letter be read:
Our parson misdoubts it: 'twas treason, he said.

King. Biron, read it over. [Giving him the paper,
Where hadst thou it?

Jaq. Of Costard.

King. Where hadst thou it?

Cost. Of Dun Adriamadio, Dun Adriamadio.

Biron. This is the letter.

King. How now! what is in you? why dost thou
Tear it?

Biron. A toy, my liege, a toy: your grace needs not fear it.

Long. It did move him to passion, and therefore let's hear it.

Dum. It is Biron's writing, and here is his name.

Biron. [To Costard] Ah, you whoreson loggerhead!
you were born to do me shame.
Guilty, my lord, guilty! I confess, I confess.

King. What?

Biron. That you three fools lack'd me fool to make up the mess:
He, he, and you, and, you, my liege, and I,
Are pick-purses in love, and we deserve to die.
O, dismiss this audience, and I shall tell you more.

Dum. Now the number is even.

Biron. True, true; we are four.
Will these turtles be gone?

King. [Hence, sirs; away!]

Cost. Walk aside the true folk, and let the traitors stay.

[Exeunt Costard and Jaquenetta.

Biron. Sweet lords, sweet lovers, O, let us embrace!
As true we are as flesh and blood can be:
The sea the ebb and flow, heaven show his face;
Young blood doth not obey an old decree;
We cannot choose the cause why we were born;
Therefore of all hands must we be forgiven.

King. What, did these rent lines show some love of thine?

[by Rosaline.

Biron. Did they, quoth you? Who sees the heaven-
That, like a rude and savage man of Inde,
At the first opening of the gorgeous east,
Bows not his vassal heart, and stricken blind
Kisses the base ground with obedient breast?
What peremptory eagle-sighted eye
Dares look upon the heaven of her brow,
That is not blinded by her majesty?

[Now?

King. What zeal, what fury hath inspired thee
My love, her mistress, is great as the moon;
She an attending star, scarce seen a light.

Biron. My eyes are then no eyes, nor I Biron;
O, but for my love, day would turn to night!

Of all comprehensions the cul'd sovereignty
Do meet, as at a fair, in her fair cheek,
Where several worthies in her eyes make one:
Nothing which wants that want itself doth seek.
Lend me the flourish of all gentle tongues,—
Fie, painted rhetoric! O, she needs it not:
To things of sale a seller's praise belongs,
She passes praise: then praise too short doth blot.
A wight'd hermit, five-score winters worn,
Might shake off fifty, looking in her eye;
Beauty doth parch age, as if new-born,
And gives the crutch the cradle's infancy:
O, 'tis the sun that maketh all things shine.

King. By heaven, thy love is black as ebony,
Biron. Is ebony like her? O wood divine!
A wife of such wood were felicity.
O, who can give an oath? where is a book?
That I may swear beauty doth beauty lack,
If that she learn not of her eye to look:
No face is fair that is not full so black.

King. O beauty, is it the judge of hell,
The line of dungs and the suit of night;
And beauty's crest becomes the heavens well.

Biron. Devils soonest tempt, resembling spirits of
O, it in black my lady's brows be deck'd, [light.
It morns that painting and usurping hair
Should ravish doyers with a false aspect;
And therefore is she born to make black fair.
Her favour turns the fashion of the days,
For native blood is counted painting now;
And therefore red, that would avoid dispair,
Paints itself black, to imitate her brow.

Dum. To look like her are chimney-sweepers black.

Long. And since her time are coffers counted bright.

King. And Ethiopes of their sweet complexion Dun. Dark needs no candles now, for dark is light.

Biron. Your mistresses dare never come in rain,
For fear their colours should be wash'd away.

King. 'T were good, yours did; for sir, to tell you
I'll find a fairer face not wash'd to-day. [plain, Biron. I'll prove her fair, or talk till doomsday here.

[She.

King. Of devil will fright thee then so much as
Dun. I never knew man hold vile stuff so dear.

Long. Look, here's thy love: my foot and her face see.

Biron. O, if the streets were paved with thine eyes,
Her feet were much too dainty for such tread!
ACT V.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

SCENE I.

Enter Holofernes, Sir Nathaniel, and Dull.

Hol. Satis quod sufficit.

Nath. I praise God for you, sir: your reasons at dinner have been sharp and sententious; pleasant without surcility, witty without affectation, audacious without impiety, learned without opinion, and strange without heresy. I did converse this quondam day with a companion of the King's, who is intitled, nominated, or called, Don Adriano de Armado.

Hol. Novi hominem tamquam te: his humour is lofty, his discourse peremptory, his tongue fiery, his eye ambitious, his gait majestic, and his general behaviour vain, ridiculous, and thronomiacal. He is too picked, too spruce, too affected, too odd, as it were, too peregrinary, as I may call it.

Nath. A most singular and choice epitaph.

Hol. He drawer out the thread of his verbosity finer than the staple of his argument. I laboured such fanatical phantasies, such insociable and point-devise conceptions: such makers of orthography, as to speak daintily, fine, when he should say blunt; det, when he should pronoune debt, — d, e, b, t, not d, e, t; he clefteth a calf, cleft: half, half; neighbour vacutur nebar: neighbour abbreviated. This is abominalable, — which he would call abominable: it insinuate: me of insanie: anne intelligis, domine? to make frantie, lunatic.
Nath. Latu Deo, bene intelligo.
Hol. Bon. bon, fort bon, Priscian! a little scrap, quick will serve.
Nath. Videan quis venit?
Hol. Video, et gaudeo.

Enter Armado, Moth, and Costard.

Arm. Chirrah!

Hol. Quare chirrah, non sirrah?
Arm. Men of peace, well encountered.
Hol. Most military sir, salutation.
Moth. [Aside to Costard] They have been at a great feast of languages, and stolen the scraps.
Cost. O, they have lived long on the alms-basket of words. I marvel thy master hath not eaten tice for a word; for thou art not so long by the head as honorificabilitudinitatibus; thou art easier swallowed than a flay-drake.

Hol. Peace! the peal begins.

Arm. [To Hol.] Monsieur, are you not lettered?

Hol. Quis, quis, thou consonant? — nine of the five vowels, if you repeat them; or the fifth, if I.
Hol. I will repeat them,— a, e, i, — [o, u]
Moth. The sheep; the other two concludes it.—
Arm. Now, by the salt wave of the Mediterraneum, a sweet touch, a quick venue of wit! snip, snap, quick and home! it rejoceth my intellect: true wit! [wit-old.
Moth. Offered by a child to an old man; which is Hol. What is the figure? what is the figure?
Moth. Horns. [sig.
Hol. Thou disputest like an infant: go, whip thy Lend me your horn to make one, and I will whip about your infamy circums circums,—a gig of a cuckold’s horn.

Cost. An I had but one penny in the world, thou shouldst have it to buy gingerbread; hold, there is the very remuneration I had of thy master, thou half-pence, which I sold for a pigeon-egg of discretion. O, an the heavens were so pleased that thou wert but my bastard, what a joyful father wouldst thou make me! Go to: thou hast it ad dundhill, at the fingers’ ends, as they say.
Hol. O. I smell false Latin; dunghill for ungenam.
Arm. Artes, we will be singled from the barbarous. Do you not educate youth at the charge-house on the top of the mountain?
Hol. Or moons, the hill.
Arm. At your sweet pleasure, for the mountain.
Hol. I do, sans question.

Arm. Sir, it is the king’s sweet pleasure and affection to congratulate the princess at her jubi-lion in the posteriors of this day, which the rude multitude call the afternoon.
Hol. The posterity of the day, most generous sir, is liable, congruent, and measurable for the afternoon; the word is well called, close, sweet and apt, I do assure you, sir, I do assure.
Arm. Sir, the king is a noble gentleman, and my familiar, I do assure ye, very good friend: for what is inward between us, let it pass. I do beseech thee, remember thy courtesy: I beseech thee, apparel thy head: and among other important and most serious designs, I think now, and I do, indeed, too, but let that pass; for I must tell thee, it will please his grace, by the world, sometime to lean upon my poor shoulder, and with his royal finger; thus, daily with my excrement, with my mustard; but, sweet heart, let that pass. By the world, I recount no fable: some certain special honours it pleaseth his greatness to impart to Armado, a soldier, a man of travel, that hath seen the world; but let that pass. The very all, I say, — but, sweet heart, I do implore secrecy, — that the king would have me present the princess, sweet chuck, with some delightful ostentation, or show, or pageant, or antique, or fire-work. Now, understanding that the curate and your sweet self are good at such eruptions and sudden breaking out of mirth, as it were, I have acquainted you withall, to the end to crave your assistance.

Hol. Sir, you shall present before her the Nine Worthies. Sir, as concerning some entertainment of time, some show in the posterior of this day, to be rendered by our assistants, at the king’s command, and this most gallant, illustrious, and learned gentleman, before the princess; I say none so fit as to present the Nine Worthies.

Nath. Where will you find men worthy enough to present them?
Hol. Josipha, yourself: and this gallant gentleman, Judas Maccabaeus; this swain, because of his great limb or joint, shall pass Pompey the Great; the page, Hercules.—

Arm. Pardon, sir; error: he is not quantity enough for that Worthy’s thumb: he is not so big as the end of his club.
Hol. Shall I assent to this? he will present Hercules in minority: his enter and exit shall be strangling a snake: and I will have an apology for that purpose.
Moth. An excellent device! so, if any of the audience hiss, you may cry: Well done, Hercules! now thou hast the snake! that is the way to make an offence gracious, though few have the grace to do it.

Arm. For the rest of the Worthies? —
Hol. I will play three myself.
Moth. Thrice-worthy gentleman!
Arm. Shall I tell you a thing?
Hol. We attend.
Arm. We will have, if this fudge not, an antique. I beseech you, follow.
Hol. Via, Goodman Dull: thou hast spoken no word all this while.
Dull. Nor play I good none neither, sir.
Hol. Allons! we will employ thee. [play
Dull. I’ll make one on a dance, or so; or I will on the tabor to the Worthies, and let them dance the hay.
Hol. Most dull, honest Dull! To our sport, away!

[Exit.

SCENE II. — The same.

Enter the Princess, Katharine, Rosaline, and Maria.

Prin. Sweet hearts, we shall be rich ere we depart, If fairings come thus plentifully in: A lady well’d about with diamond! Look you what I have from the loving king.
Ros. Madame, came nothing else along with that?
Pria. Nothing but this! yes, as much love in rhyme
As would be cram’d up in a sheet of paper, With both sides the leaf, margnet and all, That he was fain to seal on Cupid’s name.
Ros. That was the way to make his godhead wax, For he hath been five thousand years a boy.
Kath. Ay, and a shrewd unhappy gallows too.
Ros. You’ll never be friends with him; a’ kill’d

Kath. He made her melancholy, sad, and heavy; And so she did: had she been light, like you, Of such a merry, nimble, stirring spirit, She might ha’ been a grandam ere she died:
And so may you; for a light heart lives long.
Ros. What's your dark meaning, mouse, of this light word?
Kath. A light condition in a beauty dark.
Ros. We need more light to find your meaning out.
Therefore I'll darkly end the argument; none minds you.
Kath. Do so not, for you are a light wench.
Ros. Indeed I weigh not you, and therefore light.
Kath. You weigh me not? O, that's you care not for me.
Ros. Great reason: for 'past care is past care.'

Prince. Well handled both: a set of wit well play'd.
But, Rosaline, you have a favour too:
Who sent it? and what is it?
Ros. An if my face were but as fair as yours,
My favour were as great; be witness this.
Nay, I have verses too, I thank Biron:
The numbers true; and, were the numbering too,
I were the fairest goddess on the ground:
I am compared to twenty thousand fairs.
O, he hath drawn my picture in his letter!
Prince. Any thing like?
Ros. Fair is better in their letters: nothing in the praise.
Prince. Beauteous as ink: a good conclusion.
Ros. Were pencils, ho! let me not die your debtor,
My red dominical, my golden letter:
O that your face were not as full of O's!
Kath. A box of that jest! and I bestrew all shaws.
Prince. But, Katharine, what was sent to you from dear Dumnia?
Kath. Madam, this glove.
Prince. Did he not send you twain?
Kath. Yes, madam, and moreover.
Some thousand verses of a faithful lover,
A huge translation of hypocrisy,
Vilely compiled, profound simplicity. [ville:
Mar. This and these pearls to me sent Longa-]
The letter is too long by half a mile.
Prince. I think no less. Best thou not wish in heart
The chain were longer and the letter short?
Mar. Ay, or I would these hands might never part.
Prince. We are wise girls to mock our lovers so.
Ros. They are worse fools to purchase mocking so.
That same Biron I'th torture ere I go,
O the fresh breath in by the week!
How I would make him fawn and beg and seek
And wait the season and observe the times
And spend his prodigal wits in bootless rhymes
And shape his service wholly to my hests
And make him proud to make me proud that jests?
So pertinaciously would I oversway his state
That he should be my fool and I his fate.
Prince. None are so surely caught, when they are caught'd.
As wit turn'd fool: folly, in wisdom hatch'd,
Hath wisdom's warrant and the help of school
And wit's own grace to grace a learned fool.
Ros. The blood of youth burns not with such ex-
As gravity's revolt to wantonness. [cess
Mor. Folly in fools bears not so strong a note
As foolery in the wise, when wit doth dote;
Since all the power thereof it doth apply
To prove, by wit, worth in simplicity.
Prince. Here comes Biron, and mirth is in his face.

Enter Biron.
Biron. O, I am stub'd with laughter! Where's her grace?
Prince. Thy news, Biron?
Biron. Prepare, madam, prepare!
Arm, wench's, arm! encounters mounted are Against your peace: Love doth approach disguised,
Armed in arguements; you'll be surprised;

Muster your wits; stand in your own defence;
Or hide your heads like cowards, and fly hence.
Prince. Saint Denis to Saint Cupid! What are they?
That charge their breath against us? say, scot, say.
Biron. Under the cool shade of a sycamore
I thought to make them more sensible than they.
When, lo! to interrupt my purpose rest,
Toward that shade I might behold address
The king and his companions: warily
I stole into a neighbour thicket by,
And overheard what you shall overhear;
That, in mockery, disguised they will be here.
Their herald is a pretty knavish page,
That well by heart hath commit't his embassage
Action and accent did they teach him there;
'Th roughly, view the king, 'an angel shall thou see;
Yet fear not thou, but speak audaciously.'
The boy reply'd, 'An angel is not evil;
I should have fear'd her had she been a devil.'
With that, all laugh'd and chapp'd him on the shoulder.
Making the bold way by their praises holer:
One rubb'd his elbow thus, and 'er'd and swore
A better speech was never spoke before:
Another, with his finger and his thumb,
Cried, 'Vic! we will do, come what will come:'
The thing's done, and they all goes well;
'The fourth turn'd on the toe, and down he fell.
With that, they all did tumble on the ground,
With such a zealous laughter, so profound,
That in this spicen ridiculous appears,
To check their folly, passion's solemn tears.
Prince. But what, but what, come they to visit us?
Biron. They do, they do; and are apparel'd thus,
Like Masovites or Russians, as I guess.
Their purpose is to parle, to court and dance;
And every one his love-teat will advance
Unto his several mistress, which they'll know
By favours several which they did bestow.
Prince. And will they so? The gallants shall be
For, ladies, we will every one be mask'd; [tisk'd;
And not a man of them shall have the grace,
Despite of suit, to see a lady's face.
Hold, Rosaline, this favour thou shalt wear,
And then the king will court thee for his dear:
Hold, thy face, and give me thine, and give me thine,
So shall Biron take me for Rosaline.
And change you favours too; so shall your loves
Woo contrary, deceived by these removes. [sight.
Ros. Come on, then; wear the favours most in Kath. But in this changing what is your intent?
Prince. The effect of my intent is to cross theirs;
They do it but in mocking tormentin;
And mock for mock is only my intent.
Their several counsels they unsobos shall
To loves mistook, and so be mock'd withal
Upon the next occasion that we meet
With quick revenge displayed, to talk a street.
Ros. But shall we dance, if they desire us to 't?
Prince, No, to the death, we will not move a foot;
Nor to their penn'd speech render we no grace,
But while 't is spoke each turn away her face.
Biron, Why, that contempt, will kill the speaker's heart, and quite divorce his memory from his part.
Prince. Therefore I do it; and I make no doubt
The rest will ne'er come in, if he be out.
There's no such sport as sport by sport o'erthrown,
To make theirs ours and ours none but our own:
So shall we mock by our own, mocking intended game,
And they, well mock'd, depart away with shame.
[Trumpets sound within.
Biron. The trumpet sounds: be mask'd; the maskers come.
[The Ladies mask.
ACT V.

LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

Enter Blackamoors with music; Moth; the King, Biron, Longueville, and Dumain, in Russian habits, and masked.

Moth. All hail, the richest beauties on the earth!—

Biron. Beauties no richer than rich taffeta.

Moth. A holy parcel of the fairest dames.

[The Ladies turn their backs to him.]

That ever turn'd their—backs—to mortal views!

Biron. [Aside to Moth] Their eyes, villain, their eyes.

[views!—]

Moth. That ever turned their eyes to mortal

Out—

Biron. True; out indeed. [safe

Moth. Out of your favours, heavenly spirits, vouch-Not to be hold—

Biron. [Aside to Moth] Once to behold, rogue.

Moth. Once to behold with your sun-beamed eyes,— with your sun-beamed eyes—

Biron. They will not answer to that epithet;

You were best call it 'daughter-beamed eyes.'

Moth. They do not mark me, and that brings me out.

Biron. Is this your perfection? be gone, you rogue!

Ros. What would these strangers? know their minds, Biron?

If they do speak our language, 'tis our will

That some plain man recount their purposes:

Know what they would.

Biron. What would you with the princess?

Ros. Nothing but peace and gentle visitation.

Biron. What would they, say they?

Ros. Nothing but peace and gentle visitation.

Ros. Why, that they have; and bid them so be gone.

Biron. She says, you have it, and you may be gone.

King. Say to her, we have measured many miles

To treat a measure with her on this grass. [a mile

Biron. They say, that they have measured many

To treat a measure with you on this grass.

Ros. It is not so. Ask them how many inches

Is in one mile: if they have measured many,

The measure then of one is easily told. [miles.

Biron. If to come hither you have measured

And many miles, the princess bids you tell

How many inches doth fill up one mile.

Biron. Tell her, we measure them by weary steps.

Biron. She hears herself.

Ros. How many weary steps,

Of many weary miles you have o'ergone,

Are number'd in the travel of one mile? [you:

Biron. We number nothing that we spend for

Our duty is so rich, so infinite,

That we may do it still without accout;

Vouchsafe to show the sunshine of your face,

That we, like savages, may worship it.

Ros. My face is but a moon, and clouded too.

King. Blessèd are clouds, to do as such clouds do!

[shine, Vouchsafe, bright moon, and these thy stars, to

Those clouds removed, upon our watery eye.

Ros. O vain petitioner! beg a greater matter;

Thou now request'st but moonshine in the water.

King. Then, in our measure do but vouchsafe one change.

Thou bid'st me beg; this begging is not strange.

Ros. Play, music, then! Nay, you must do it soon. [Music plays.

Not yet! no dance! Thus change I like the moon.

King. And you not dance? How come you thus erstunged? [changed.

Ros. You took the moon at full, but now she's King. Yet still she is the moon, and I the man.

The music plays; vouchsafe some motion to it.

Ros. Our ears vouchsafe it.

King. But your legs should do it. Ros. Since you are strangers and come here by chance,

We'll not be nice; take hands. We will not dance.

King. Why take we hands then?

Ros. Only to part friends;

Curly, sweet hearts; and so the measure ends.

King. More measure of this measure; be not nice.

Ros. We can afford no more at such a price.

King. Prize you yourselves: what buys your com-

Ros. Your absence only.

[Pay?—

King. That can never be.

Ros. Then cannot we be bought: and so, adieu!

Twice to your visor, and half once to you.

King. If you deny to dance, let's hold more chat.

Ros. In private, then.

King— I am best pleased with that.

[They converse apart.

Biron. White-handed mistress, one sweet word with thee.

Prin. Honey, and milk, and sugar; there is three.

Biron. Nay then, two treys, and if you grow so nice.

Metheglin, wort, and maltmuse: well run, dice!

There's half-a-dozen sweets.

Prin. Seventh sweet, adieu:

Since you can cog, I'll play no more with you.

Biron. One word in secret.

Prin. Let it not be sweet.

Biron. Thou grieve'st my gall.

Prin. Gall! bitter.

Therefore meet.

[They converse apart.

Dian. Will you vouchsafe with me to change a Mere. Name it.

[word?

Dian. Fair lady.—

Mar. Say you so? Fair lord.—

Take that for your fair lady.

Dian. Please it you,

As much in private, and I'll bid adieu.

[They converse apart.

King. What was your wizard made without a tongue?

Long. I know the reason, lady, why you ask,

Kath. O for your reason! quickly, sir; I long.

Long. You have a double tongue within your mask,

And would afford my speechless wizard half.

Kath. Veal, quoth the Dutchman. Is not 'veal?

Long. A calf, fair lady! [a calf?

Kath. No, a fair lord calf.

Long. Let's part the word.

Kath. No, I'll not be your half:

Take all, and wean it; it may prove an ox. [projects.

Long. Look, how you butt yourself in these sharp

Will you give horns, chaste lady? do not so.

Kath. Then die a calf, before your horns do grow.

Long. One word in private with you, ere I die.

Kath. Beat softly then; the butcher bears you cry.

[They converse apart.

Biron. The tongues of mocking wenches are as

As is the razor's edge invisible.

[keen

Cutting a smaller hair than may be seen,

Above the sense of sense; so sensible

Seemeth their conference; their conceits have wings

Fleeter than arrows, bullets, wind, thought, swifter

Things. [break off.

Ros. Not one word more, my maidens; break off.

Biron. By heaven, all dry-beaten with pure scott!—

King. Farewell, mad wenches; you have simple

Prin. Twenty adieux, my frozen Muscovits. [winks.

Exeunt King, Lords, and Blackamoors.

Are these the breed of wits so wonder'd at?

Biron. Tapers they are, with your sweet breaths puff'd out.

[fat.

Ros. Well-liking wits they have; gross, gross; fat,

Prin. O poverty in wit, kingly-poor thou!

Will they not, think you, hang themselves to-night?

127
Or ever, but in vizards, show their faces?
This pert Biron was out of countenance quite.
Rosi. 6, they were all in lamenable cases!
The King was weeping-ripe for a good word.
Let Biron bid women of all suit.
Merr. Dunnain was at my service, and his sword
No point, quoth I; my servant straight was mute.
Kath. Lord Longaville said, I came o'er his heart;
And trow you what he called me?
Kath. Qualm, perhaps.
Kath. Yes, in good faith.
Prià. Go, sickness as thou art!
Ros. Well, better wits have worn plain statute-caps.
But will you hear? the King is my love sworn.
Prià. And quick Biron hath plighted faith to me.
Kath. And Longaville was for my service born.
Merr. Dunnain is nine, as sure as bark on tree.
Boyét. Madam, and pretty mistresses, give ear:
Immediately they will again be here in their own shapes; for it can never be
They will digest this harsh indignity.
Prià. When they return.
Boyét. They will, they will, God knows,
And leap for joy, though they are lame with blows:
Therefore change favours; and, when they repair,
Blow like sweet roses in this summer air.
[stool.
Prià. How blow? how blow? speak to be understood
Longaville, and plighted for mine service.
Dismask'd, their damask sweet commixture shown,
Are angels vailing clouds, or roses blown.
Prià. Avant, perplexity! What shall we do,
If they return in their own shapes to woo?
Ros. Good madam, if by me you'll be advised,
Let's mock them still, as well known as disguised:
Let us complain to them what fools were here,
Disguised like Muscovites, in shapeless gear;
And wonder what they were and to what end
Their shallow shows and prologue vilely penned
And their rough carriage so ridiculous,
Should be presented at our feast to us.
Boyét. Ladies withdraw: the gallants are at hand.
Prià. Whip to our tents, as roses run o'er land.
[Exeunt Princess, Rosaline, Katharine, and Maria.
Re-enter the King, Biron, Longaville, and Dunnain, in their proper habits.
King. Fair sir, God save you! Where's the princess?
Boyét. Gone to her tent. Please it your majesty Command me any service to her thither?
[Exit.
King. That she vouchsafe me audience for one moment.
Boyét. I will; and so will she, I know, my lord.
[Exit.
Biron. This fellow pecks up wit as pigeons pease,
And utters it again when God doth please:
He is wit's pedler, and retails his wares
At wakes and wasstails, meetings, markets, fairs;
And we that sell by gross, the Lord doth know,
Have not the grace to grace it with such show.
This gallant pins the wench's on his sleeve;
Had he been Adam, he had tempted Eve;
At can carve too, and lisp; why, this is he
That kiss'd his hand away in courtesy;
This is the nose of form, monsieur the nice,
That, when he plays at tables, chides the dice
In honourable terms; nay, he can sing
A mean most meanly; and in ushering
Mend him who can: the ladies call him sweet;
The stairs, as he treads on them, kiss his feet:
This is the faculty that smiles on every one,
To show his teeth as white as whale's bone;
And conscience, that will not die in debt,
Pay him the due of honey-tongued Boyet.
King. A bluster on his sweet tongue, with my heart.
That put Armado's page out of his part!
[thuj Biron. See where it comes! Behaviour, what worth Till this madman show'd thee? and what art thou
now?
Re-enter the Princess, ushered by Boyet; Rosaline,
Maria, and Katharine.
King. All hail, sweet madam, and fair time of day!
Prià. 'Fair' in 'all hail' is toul, as I conceive.
King. Construe my speeches better, if you may.
Prià. Then wish me better; I will give you leave.
King. We came to visit you, and purpose now
To lead you to our court; vouchesafe it then.
Prià. This field shall hold me; and so hold your vow:
Nor God, nor I, delights in perjured men.
King. I revoke me not for that which you provoke:
The virtue of your eye must break my oath.
Prià. You nickname virtue; vice you should have spoken;
For virtue's office never breaks men's truth.
Now by my maiden honour, yet as pure
As the unsmir'd lily, I protest,
A world of torrents though I should endure,
I would not yield to be your house guest;
So much as my breaking cause to be.
Of heavenly oaths, wov'd with integrity.
King. O, you have lived in desolation here,
Unseen, unvisited, much to our shame.
Prià. Not so, my lord; it is not so, I swear;
We have had pastimes here and pleasant game:
A mess of Russians left us but late.
King. How, madam! Russians!
Prià. Ay, in truth, my lord;
Trim gallants, full of courtship and of state.
Ros. Madam, speak true; it is not so, my lord;
My lady, to the manner of the days,
In courtesy gives undeserving praise:
We four indeed confronted were with four
In Russian habit: here they stayed an hour,
And talk'd apace; and in that hour, my lord,
They did not bless us with one happy word.
I dare not call them fools: but this I think,
When they are thirsty, fools would fain have drink.
Biron. This jest is dry to me. Fair gentle sweet,
Your wit makes wise things foolish: when we greet,
With eyes best seeing, heaven's fiery eye,
By light we lose sight; your capacity
Is of that nature that to your huge store
Wise things seem foolish and rich things but poor.
Ros. This proveth you wise and rich, for in my eye,— Biron. I am a fool, and full of poverty.
Ros. But that you take what doth to you belong,
It were a fault to snatch words from my tongue.
Biron. O, I am yours, and all that I possess!
Ros. All the fool mine?
Biron.
I cannot give you less.
Ros. Which of the vizards was it that you wore?
Biron. Where? when? what vizard? why demand you this?
[case.
Ros. There, then, that vizard: that superfluous
That hid the worse and show'd the better face.
King. We are descried; they'll mock us now downright.
Dom. Let us confess and turn it to a jest.
[Exit.
Prià. Amazed, my lord? why looks your highness Ros. Help, hold his brows; he'll swoon! Why look you pale?
Sea-sick, I think, coming from Muscovy.
Biron. Thus pour the stars down plagues for perjury.
Can any face of brass bold longer out?
Here stand 1: lady, dart thy skil at me:
Biron. Such stones are some confused with a flat;
Thrust thy sharp wit quite through my ignorance;
Cut me to pieces with thy keen conceit;
And I will wish thee never more to dance,
Nor never more in Russian habit wait.
O, never will I trust to speeches pen'd,
Nor to the motion of a schoolboy's tongue,
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST

ACT V.

Scene II.

Do not yet know my lady's foot by the squier;
And laugh upon the apple of her eye?
And stand between her back, sir, and the fire,
Holding a trecher, jesting merrily?
You put our page out: go, you are allow'd;
For when you will, a smock shall be your shroud.
You lerne now: and do you? there's an eye
Wounds like a leavened sword.

Boyet. Full merrily

Hath this brave manage, this career, been run.
Biron. Lo, he is tilting straight! Peace! I have done.

Enter Costard.

Welcome, pure wit! thou partest a fair fray.
Cost. O Lord, sir, they would know
Whether the three Worthies shall come in or no.
Biron. What are there but three?
Cost. No, sir; but it is very fine
For every one pursents three.
Biron. And three times thrice is nine.
Cost. Not so, sir; under correction, sir; I hope it is not so.
You cannot beg us, sir, I can assure you, sir; we know what we know:
I hope, sir, three times thrice, sir,—
Biron. Is not nine.
Cost. Under correction, sir, we know whereunto it doth amount.
Biron. By Jove, I always took three threes for nine.
Cost. O Lord, sir, it were pity you should get your living by reckoning, sir.
Biron. How much is it?
Cost. O Lord, sir, the parties themselves, the actors, sir, will show whereunto it doth amount: for mine own part, I am, as they say, but to perfect one man in one pool man. Pompiion the Great, sir.
Biron. Art thou one of the Worthies?
Cost. It pleased them to think me worthy of Pompiion the Great: for mine own part, I know not the degree of the Worthy, but I am stand for him.
Biron. Go, bid them prepare.
Cost. We will turn it finely off, sir; we will take some care.

[Exit.]

King. Biron, they will shame us: let them not approach.

Biron. We are shame-proof, my lord: and 'tis some policy [many.
To have one or two of them worse than the king's and his com-
King. I say they shall not come.
Prin. Nay, my good lord, let me o'errule you now:
That sport best pleases that doth least know how:
Where zeal strives to content, and the contents
Dies in the zeal of that which it presents:
Their form confounded makes most form in mirth,
When great things labouring perish in their birth.
Biron. A right description of our sport, my lord.

Enter Armado.

Arm. Anointed, I implore so much expense of thy royal sweet breath as will utter a brace of words.
[Converses apart with the King, and delivers him a paper.

Prin. Doth this man serve God?
Biron. Why ask you?
Prin. He speaks not like a man of God's making.
Arm. That is all one, my fair, sweet, honest moon-arch: for, I protest, the schoolmaster is exceeding fantastical; too too vain, too too vain: but we will put it as they say, to fortuna de la guerra. I wish you the peace of mind, most royal couplement!

[Exit.

King. Here is like to be a good presence of Wor-thes. He presents Hector of Troy: the swain, Pompey the Great; the parish curate, Alexander: Armado's page, Hercules; the pedant, Judas Mac-cabeus.
And if these four Worthies in their first show thrive,
These four will change habits, and present the other

Biron. There is love in the first show. [live.

King. You are deceived; 'tis not so.

Biron. The pedant, the braggart, the hedgehog
Have found the hoy—

Abate thou at nowm, and the whole world again
Cannot pick out five such, take each one in his vein.

King. The ship is under sail, and here she comes again.

Enter Costard, for Pompey.

Cost. I Pompey am,—You lie, you are not he.

Biron. With libbard's head on knee.

Biron. Well said, old mocker: I must needs be friends with thee.

Cost. I Pompeyam, Pompey surnamed the Big,—

Dum, The Great.

Cost. It is, 'Great, sir:—

Pompey surnamed the Great;

That oft in field, with targe and shield, did make My foe to sweat, [by chance; and
And travelling along this coast, I here am come
And lay my arms before the legs of this sweet lass
Of France. [had done.

If your ladyship would say, 'Thanks, Pompey,' I

Prin. Great thanks, great Pompey.

Cost. 'Tis not so much worth; but I hope I was perfect:
I made a little fault in 'Great.'

Biron. My hat to a halfpenny, Pompey proves the best Worthy.

Enter Sir Nathaniel, for Alexander.

Nath. When in the world I lived, I was the world's commander;
By cast, west, north, and south, I spread my conquering might:

My scutcheon plain declares that I am Aliscander,—

Bog. Your nose says, no, you are not; for it stands too right.

Biron. Your nose smells 'no' in this, most tender-smelling knight. [Alexander.

Prin. The conqueror is dismay'd. Proceed, good Nath. When in the world I lived, I was the world's commander. [sander.

Bog. My heart is sight; you were so, Al-

Biron. Pompey the Great,—

Cost. Your servant, and Costard. [sander.

Biron. Take away the conqueror, take away Ali-
Cost. [To Sir Nath.] O, sir, you have overthrown Aliscander the conqueror! You will be scraped out of the painted cloth for this: your lion, that holds his pell axe sitting on a close-stool, will be given to Ajax: he will be the ninth Worthy. A conqueror, and afraid to speak! run away for shame, Aliscander, [Nath. retires] There, 'tis shall please you: a foolish mad man: an honest man, look you, and soon dashed. He is a marvellous good neighbour, faith, and a very good bowler: but, for Aliscander—alas, you see how 'tis,—a little o'pertured. But there are Worthies a-coming will speak their mind in some other sort.

Prin. Stand aside, good Pompey.

Enter Holofernes, for Judas; and Moth, for Hercules.

Hol. Great Hercules is presented by this imp,
Whose club kill'd Cerberus, that three-headed
And when he was a babe, a child, a shrimps, [vulgar;
Then did he strangle serpents in his manus.
Quantum he seemed in his minority.
Ergo I come with this apology.

Keep some state in thy exit, and vanish.

Judas I am,—

[Recites.]

Dum. A Judas!

Hol. Not Iscariot, sir.

Judas I am, eclips'd Maccabæus.

Dum. Judas Maccabæus clipt is plain Judas.

Biron. A kissing traitor. How art thou proved

Judas I am,—

Dum. The more shame for you, Judas.

Hol. What mean you, sir?

Bog. To make Judas hang himself.

Hol. Begu, sir; you are my elder.

Biron. Well followed: Judas was hanged on an

Hol. I will not be put out of countenance.

Biron. Because thou hast no face.

Hol. What is this?

Bog. A citizen-head.

Biron. The head of a bolkin.

Biron. A Death's face in a ring.

Long. The face of an old Roman coin, scarce seen.

Bog. The pommel of Caesar's falshicon.

Dum. The carved-bone face on a flask.

Biron. Saint George's half-cheek in a brooch.

Dum. Ay, and in a brooch of lead.

Biron. Ay, and worn in the cup of a tooth-drawer.

And now forward; for we have put thee in countenance.

Hol. You have put me out of countenance.

Biron. False; we have given thee faces.

Hol. But you have out-faced them all.

Biron. An thou wert a lion, we would do so:

Bog. Nor could we go before, as he is an ass, let him go.

And so adieu, sweet Jude! nay, why dost thou stay?

Dum. For the latter end of his name.

Biron. For the ass to the Jude; give it him:—

Judas, away!

Hol. This is not generous, not gentle, not humble.

Bog. Politic for Monsieur Judas! it grows dark, he may stumble.

[Hol. retires

Prin. Alas, poor Maccabæus, how hath he been baited?

Enter Armado, for Hector.

Biron. Hide thy head, Achilles: here comes Hector in arms.

Dum. Though my mocks come home by me, I will now be merry.

King. Hector was but a Troyan in respect of this.

Bog. But is this Hector?

King. Nay, and his Hector was not so well timbered.

Long. His leg is too big for Hector's.

Dum. Most of it.

Bog. No; he is best in the small.

Biron. This cannot be Hector.

Dum. He's a god or a painter; for he makes faces.

Arm. The armipotent Mars, of lanes the al-cave Hector a gift, [Hector]

Dum. A gilt nutmeg.

Biron. A lemon.

Long. Stuck with cloves.

Dum. No, cloven.

Arm. Peace!—

The armipotent Mars, of lanes the almighty,

Gave Hector a gift, the heir of Ilion;

A man so breathed, that certain he would fight; yea
From morn till night, out of his pavilion.

I am that flower,—

Arm. That mint.

Long. That clove.

Arm. That clove.

Hol. The armipotent Mars, of lanes the almighty.

Arm. Sweet Lord Longaville, rein thy tongue.

Long. I must rather give it the rein, for it runs against Hector.

Dum. Ay, and Hector's a greyhound.

Arm. The sweet wasp-wan is dead and rotten; sweet chucks, beat not the bones of the buried;

When he breathed, he was a man. But I will forward with my device. [To the Princess] Sweet royalty, bestow on me the sense of hearing. [Lighted.

Prin. Speak, brave Hector: we are much de-
LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

ACT V.

Welcome, Mercadé.

Mr. God save you, madam!

Prin. Welcome, Mercadé;

But that you interrupt our merriment.

Merc. I am sorry, madam; for the news I bring is heavy in my tongue.

That king your father—

Prin. Dead, for my life!

Mr. Even so; my tale is told.

Biron. Worthies, away! the scene begins to cloud.

Arm. For mine own part, I breathe free breath.

I have seen the day of wrong through the little hole of discretion, and I will right myself like a soldier.

[Exeunt Worthies.

King. How fares your majesty?

Prin. Boyet, prepare; I will away to-night.

King. Madam, not so; I do beseech you, stay.

Prin. Prepare, I say. I thank you, gracious lords, for all your fair endeavours; and entreat, out of a new-sad soul, that you vouchsafe in your rich wisdom to excuse or hide the liberal opposition of our spirits.

If over-boldly we have borne ourselves in the converse of breath: your gentleness Waxed great in my esteem;

A heavy heart bears not a nimble tongue: Excuse me so, coming too short of thanks For my great suit so easily obtained.

King. The extreme parts of thine extremely forms All causes to the purpose of his speed, And often at his very loose decides That which long process could not arbitrate: And though the mourning brow of progeny Forbid the smiling courtesy of love, The holy suit of love it would convince, Yet, since love's argument was first on foot, Let not the cloud of sorrow justly it From what it purposed; since, to wait friends lost Is not by much so wholesome-profitable.

As to rejoice at friends but newly found.

Prin. I understand you not: my griefs are double.

Biron. Honest plain words best pierce the ear of grief;

And by these badges understand the king.

For your fair sakes have we neglected time,

Play'd foul play with our oaths; your beauty, ladies, Hath much deform'd us, but fashioning our humours

Even to the opposite end of our intents:

And what in us hath seem'd ridiculous,—

As love is full of unbecitting strains,

All wanton as a child, skipping and vain,

Form'd by the eye and therefore, like the eye,

Full of strange shapes and various kinds of Varying in subjects as the eye doth roll

To every varied object in his glance:

Which parti-coated presence of loose love

Put on by us, if, in your heavenly eyes,

Have misconceived our oaths and gravities,

Those heavenly thoughts, that look into these faults,

Suggested us to make. Therefore, ladies,

Our love being yours, the error that love makes Is likewise yours: we to ourselves prove false, By being once false for ever to be true.

To those that make us both,—fair ladies, you:

And even that falsehood, in itself a sin,

Thus purifies itself and turns to grace.

Prin. We have received your letters full of love;

Your favours, the ambassadors of love;

And, in our maiden council, rated them

At courtship, pleasant jest and courtesy,

As bon-bon and as shining to the line;

But more devout than this in our respects

Have we not been; and therefore met your loves

In their own fashion, like a merriment.

[Exeunt.

Dum. Our letters, madam, show'd much more than

Long. So did our looks,

Etc. We did not quote them so.

King. Now, at the latest minute of the hour,

Grant us your loves.

Prin. A time, methinks, too short

To make a world-without-end bargain in.

No, no, my lord, your grace is perjured much,

Full of dear guiltiness; and therefore this:

If for my love, as there is no such cause,

You will do aught, this shall you do for me:

Your oath I will not trust: but go with speed

To some forlorn and naked hermitage,

Remote from all the pleasures of the world;

There stay until the twelve celestial signs

Have brought about the annual reckoning,

If this mustere insoluble life

Change not your offer made in heat of blood:

If frosts and fasts, hard lodging and thin weeds

Nip not the garly blossoms of your love,

But that it bear this trial and last love;

Then, at the expiration of the year,

Come challenge me, challenge me by these deserts,

And, by this virgin palm now kissing thine,

I will be thine; and till that instant shut

My woeful self up in a mourning house,

Raining the tears of lamentation.

For the remembrance of my father's death,

If this thou do deny, let our hands part,

Neither intited in the other's heart.

King. If this, or more than this, I would deny,

To farther up these powers of mine with rest,
Act V.  Love's Labour's Lost.  Scene II.

The sudden hand of death close up mine eye!
Hence ever then my heart is in thy breast.

[Biron.  And what to me, my love?  and what to me?

Ros.  You must be purged too, your sins are rack'd,
You are attain'd with faults and perjury:
Therefore if you my favour mean to get,
A twelvemonth shall you spend, and never rest,
But seek the weary beds of people sick.

Dum.  But what to me, my love?  but what to me?

A wife?

Kath.  A beard, fair health, and honesty:
With three-fold love I wish you all these three.

Dum.  O, shall I say, I thank you, gentle wife?

Kath.  Not so, my lord; a twelvemonth and a day
I'll mark no words that smooth-faced wooers say:
Come when the king doth to my lady come;
Then, if I have much love, I'll give you some.

Dum.  I'll serve thee true and faithfully till then.

Kath.  Yet swear not, lest ye be forsworn again.

Long.  What says Maria?

Mar.  At the twelvemonth's end
I'll change my black gown for a faithful friend.

Long.  I'll stay with patience; but the time is long.

Mar.  The liker you; few taller are so young.

Biron.  Studies my lady! mistrest, look on me;
Behold the window of my heart, mine eye,
What rascal suit attends thy answer there:
Impose some service on me for thy love.

Ros.  Oft have I heard of you, my Lord Biron,
Before I saw you; and the world's large tongue
Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks,
Full of comparisons and wounded blots,
Which you on all estates will execute
That lie within the mercy of your wit.
To weed this wormwood from your fruitful brain,
And therewithal to win me, if you please,
Without the which I am not to be won,
You shall this twelvemonth term from day to day
Visit the speechless sick and still converse
With growing wretches; and your task shall be,
With all the fierce endeavour of your wit
To enforce the pain'd impotent to smile.

Biron.  To move wild laughter in the throat of death?
It cannot be; it is impossible:
Mirth cannot move a soul in agony.

Ros.  Why, that's the way to choke a gibing spirit,
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools:
A jest's prosperity lies in the ear
Of him that hears it, never in the tongue
Of him that makes it: then, if sickly ears,
Deaf'd with the clamours of their own dear groans,
Will hear your idle scorns, continue then,
And I will have you and that fault withal;
But if they will not, throw away that spirit,
And I shall find you empty of that fault,
Right joyful of your reformation.

Biron.  A twelvemonth! well; befal all what will befall,
I'll jest a twelvemonth in an hospital.

Prin.  [To the King] Ay, sweet my lord; and so I take my leave.

King.  No, madam; we will bring you on your way.

Biron.  Our wooing doth not end like an old play;
Jack hath not Jill: these ladies' courtesy
Might well have made our sport a comedy.

King.  Come, sir, it wants a twelvemonth and a day,
And then 'twill end.

Biron.  That's too long for a play.

Re-enter Armado.

Arm.  Sweet majesty, vouchsafe me,—

Prin.  Was not that Hector?

Dum.  The worthy knight of Troy.

Arm.  I will kiss thy royal finger, and take leave.
I am a votary; I have vowed to Juno
To hold the plough for her sweet love three years.  But, most esteemed greatness, will you hear the dialogue
That the two learned men have compiled in praise
Of the owl and the cuckoo?  it should have followed
In the end of our show.

King.  Call them forth quickly; we will do so.

Arm.  Holla!  approach.

Re-enter Holofernes, Nathaniel, Moth, Costard, and others.

This side is Hiems, Winter, this Ver, the Spring;
the one maintained by the owl, the other by the cuckoo.  Ver, begin.

The Song.

Spring.

When daisies pied and violets blue
And lady-smocks all silver-white
And cuckoo-buds of yellow hue:
Do paint the meadows with delight,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men; for thus sings he,

Cuckoo;

Cuckoo, cuckoo: O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear!

When shepherds pipe on oaten straws
And merry larks are ploughmen's clocks,
When turtles tread, and rooks, and daws,
And unidens bleach their summer smoke,
The cuckoo then, on every tree,
Mocks married men; for thus sings he,

Cuckoo;

Cuckoo, cuckoo: O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear!

Winter.

When iceicles hang by the wall
And Dick the shepherd blows his nail
And Tom bears logs into the hall
And milk comes frozen home in pail,
When blood is nipp'd and ways be foul,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
Tu-whit; Tu-whoo,
Tu-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

When all aloud the wind doth blow
And coughing drouns the parson's saw
And birds sit brooding in the snow
And Marian's nose looks red and raw,
When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,
Then nightly sings the staring owl,
Tu-whit; Tu-whoo,
Tu-who, a merry note,
While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

Arm.  The words of Mercury are harsh after the songs of Apollo.  You that way: we this way.

[Exeunt.}

SCENE—Athens, and a wood near it.

[For an Analysis of the Plot of this Play, see Page xlviii.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Athens. The palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, and Attendants.

The. Now, fair Hippolyta, our nuptial hour Draws on apace: four happy days bring in Another moon: but, O, methinks, how slow
This old moon wanes! she ligers my desires,
Like to a step-dame or a dowager.
Long withering out a young man's revenue. [night.
Hipp. Four days will quickly steep themselves in Four nights will quickly dream away the time;
And then the moon, like to a silver bow
New-heat in heaven, shall behold the night
Of our solemnities.

Thee. Go, Philostrate,
Stir up the Athenian youth to merriments;
Awake the pert and nimble spirit of mirth:
Turn melancholy forth to funerals:
The pale companion is not for our pomp.

[Exit Philostrate.

Hippolyta, I woold thee with my sword,
And won thy love, doing thee injuries;
But I will weel thee in another key,
With pomp, with triumph and with reveling.

Enter Egeus, Hermia, Lysander, and Demetrius.

Ege. Happy be Theseus, our renowned duke!
Thee. Thanks, good Egeus: what's the news
with thee?

Ege. Full of vexation come I, with complaint
Against my child, my daughter Hermia.
Stand forth, Demetrius. My noble lord,
This man hath my consent to marry her.
Stand forth, Lysander: and, my gracious duke,
This man hath bewitch'd the bosom of my child:
Thou, thou, Lysander, thou hast given her rhymes
And interchanged love-tokenes with my child:
Thou hast by moonlight at her window sung
With feigning voice verses of feigning love,
And stolen the impression of her fantasy
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gawds, conceits,
Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats, messengers
Of strong prevailment in unharden'd youth;

With cunning hast thou filch'd my daughter's heart,
Turn'd her obedience, which is due to me,
To stubborn harshness; and, my gracious duke,
Be it so she will not here before your grace
Consent to marry with Demetrius,
I beg the ancient privilege of Athens,
As she is mine, I may dispose of her:
Which shall be done for this gentleman,
Or to her death, according to our law
Immediately provided in that case.

Thee. What say you, Hermia? be advised, fair maid:
To you your father should be as a god;
One that composeth your beauties, yea, and one
To whom you are but as a born in wax
By him imprinted and within his power
To leave the figure or disfigure it.

Demetrius is a worthy gentleman.

Her. So is Lysander.

Thee. In himself he is;
But in this kind, wanting your father's voice,
The other must be held the worthier.

Her. I would my father look'd but with my eyes.

Thee. Rather your eyes must with his judgment
Her. I do entreat your grace to pardon me. [look.

I know not by what power I am made bold,
Nor how it may concern my modesty,
In such a presence here to plead my thoughts;
But I beseech your grace that I may know
The worst that may befall me in this case,
If I refuse to wed Demetrius.

Thee. Either to die the death or to abjure
For ever the society of men.

Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires;
Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether, if you yield not to your father's choice,
You can endure the lively of a nun,
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd,
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold fruitless moon,
Thrice-bless'd they that master so their blood,
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage:
But earthlier happy is the rose distill'd,
Than that which withereth on the virgin thorn
Grows, lives, and dies in single blessedness.

Her. So will I grow, so live, so die, my lord,
Ere I will yield my virgin patent up Unto his lordship, whose unwished yoke My soul consents not to give sovereignty.

The. Take time to pause; and, by the next new
The scaling-day betwixt my love and me, [moon—
For ever-lasting bond of fellowship—
Upon that day either prepare to yield
For disobedience to your father's will,
Or else to wed Demetrius, as he would;
Or on Diana's altar to protest
For ayesternight's lost life.

Dem. Relent, sweet Hermia; and, Lysander, yield
They could hold no certain title.
Lys. You have her father's love, Demetrius;
Let me have Hermia's: do you marry him.

Ege. Scornful Lysander! true, he hath my love,
And what is mine my love shall render him.
And she is mine, and all my right of her
I do estate unto Demetrius.

Lys. I am, my lord, as well derived as he,
As well possess'd; my love is more than his;
My fortunes every way as fairly rank'd,
If not with vantage, as Demetrius';
And, which is more than all these boasts can be,
I am beloved by virtuous Hermia.

Why should not I then possessate my right?
Demetrius, I'll avouch it to his head,
Made love to Nedar's daughter, Helena,
And won her soul; and she, sweet lady, dots,
Devonly dotes, dotes in idolatrly.

Upon the spotted and inconsistent man.

The. I must confess that I have heard so much,
And with Demetrius thought to have spoke thereof;
But, being over-full of self-affairs,
My mind did lose it. But, Demetrius, come;
And come, Egeus; you shall go with me.
I have some private schooling for you both.
For you, fair Hermia, I must whet your wit,
To fit your fancies to your father's will:
Or else the law of Athens yields you up—
Which by no means we may extenuate
To death, or to a vow of single life.
Come, my Hippolyta: what cheer, my love?
Demetrius and Egeus, go along:
I must employ you in some business
Against our mutual and confederate with you
Of something nearly that concerns yourselves.

Ege. With duty and desire we follow you.

Lys. How now, my love? why is your cheek so pale?
How chance the roses there do fade so fast?

Her. Befieal for want of rain, which I could well
Beteem them from the tempest of my eyes.

Lys. Ay me! for aught that I could ever read,
Could ever hear by tale or history,
The course of true love never did run smooth;
But, either it was different in blood—
Her. O cross! too high to be enthrall'd to low.
Lys. Or else misgirted in respect of years—
Her. O spite! too old to be engaged to young.
Lys. Or else it stood upon the choice of friends—
Her. 0 hell! to choose love by another's eyes.
Lys. Or, if there were a sympathy in choice,
War, death, or sickness did lay siege to it,
Making it momentary as a sound,
Swift as a shadow, short as any dream;
Brief as the lightning in the coiled night,
That shatters bones, throws heaven and earth,
And ere a man hath power to say 'Beloved!'

Her. If then true lovers have been ever cross'd,
It stands as an edict in destiny:
Their love must teach their trial in force,
Because it is a customary cross,
As due to love as thoughts and dreams and sighs,
Wishes and tears, poor fancy's followers.

Lys. A good persuasion: therefore, hear me,
I have a widow aunt, a dowager—[Hermia.
Of great revenue, and she hath no child:
From Athens is her house remote seven leagues;
And she respects me as her only son.
There, gentle Hermia, may I marry thee;
And to that place the sharp Athenian law
Cannot pursue us. If thou lovest me then,
Steal forth thy father's house to-morrow night;
And in the wood, a league without the town,
Where I did meet thee once with Helena,
To do observance to a morn of May,
There will I stay for thee.

Her. My good Lysander!
I swear to thee, by Cupid's strongest bow,
By his best arrow with the golden head,
By the simplicity of Venus' doves,
By that which knitteth souls and prospers loves,
And by that fire which burns the Carthage queen,
When the false Troyan under sail was seen,
By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever women spoke,
In that same place thou hast appointed me,
To-morrow truly will I meet with thee. [exit.

Lys. Keep promise, love. Look, here comes Hel-

Enter Helena.

Her. God speed fair Helena! whither away?
Hel. Call you me fair? that fair again unsay,
Demetrius loves your fair: O happy fair! [fair
Your eyes are rose-stars; and your tongue's sweet
More tuneful than lark to shepherd's ear.
When wheel is green, when hawthorn buds appear.
Sickness is catching: O, were favour so,
Yours would I catch, fair Hermia, ere I go;
My car should catch your voice, my eye your eye,
My tongue should catch your tongue's sweet melody.
Were you but as you were mindeng bated,
The rest I'd give to be you translated.
O, teach me how you look, and with what art
You sway the motion of Demetrius' heart.
Her. I frown upon him, yet he loves me still.
Hel. O that your frowns would teach my smiles
Such skill!
Her. I give him curses, yet he gives me love.
Hel. O that my prayers could such affection move!
Her. The more I hate, the more he follows me.
Hel. The more I love, the more he hateth me.
Her. His folly, Helena, is no fault of mine. [mine
Hel. None, but your beauty: would any fault were
Her. Take comfort: he no more shall see my face;
Lysander and myself will fly this place.
Before the time I did Lysander see,
Scaped Athens as a paradise to me:
O, then, what graces in my love do dwell,
That he hath turn'd a heaven into a hell!
Lys. Helena, to you our minds we will unfold:
To-morrow night, when Phoebe doth behold
Her silver visage in the watery glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass,
A time that lovers' flights doth still conceal.
Through Athens' gates have we devise to steal.
Her. And in the wood, where often you and I
Upon faint primrose-beds were wont to lie,
Emptying our bosoms of their counsel sweet,
There my Lysander and myself shall meet;
And thence from Athens turn away our eyes,
To see our friends, and all the strange companies.
Farewell, sweet playfellow: pray thou for us;
And good luck grant thee thy Demetrius!
Keep word, Lysander: we must starve our sight
From lovers' food till morrow deep midnight.
Lys. I will, my Hermia. [Exit Herm. Helena, aside:
As you on him. Demetrius dote on you! [Exit.
Hel. How happy some o'er other some can be!
Through Athens I am thought as fair as she.
ACT I.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

SCENE I.

But what of that? Demetrius thinks not so; he will not know what all but he do know: and as he errs, dotting on Hermia's eyes, so 1, admiring of his qualities: things base and vile, holding no quantity, love can transpose to form and dignity: love looks not with the eyes, but with the mind; and therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blind: nor hath Love's mind of any judgment taste; wings and no eyes figure unhappily haste: and therefore is Love said to be a child, because in choice he is so oft beguiled. As waggish boys in game themselves forswear, so the boy Love is perjur'd every where: For ere Demetrius look'd on Hermia's eye, he hail'd down oaths that he was only mine; and when this hail some heat from Hermia felt, so he dissolved, and showers of oaths did melt. I will go tell him of fair Hermia's flight: Then to the wood will he to-morrow night pursue her; and for this intelligence I do make you, my dear expense: but herein mean I to enrich my pain. To have his sight thither and back again. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Athens. Quince's house.

Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Quin. Is all our company here?

Bot. You were best to call them generally, man by man, according to the script.

Quin. Here is the scroll of every man's name, which is thought fit, through all Athens, to play in our interlude before the duke and the duchess, on his wedding-day at night.

Bot. First, good Peter Quince, say what the play treats on, then read the names of the actors, and so grow to a point.

Quin. Marry, our play is, The most lamentable comedy, and most cruel death of Pyramus and Thisby.

Bot. A very good piece of work, I assure you, and a merry. Now, good Peter Quince, call forth your actors by the scroll. Masters, spread yourselves.

Quin. Answer as I call you. Nick Bottom, the weaver.

Bot. Ready. Name what part I am for, and proceed.

Quin. You, Nick Bottom, are set down for Pyramus.

Bot. What is Pyramus? a lover, or a tyrant?

Quin. A lover, that kills himself most gallant for love.

Bot. That will ask some tears in the true performing of it: if I do it, let the audience look to their eyes; I will move storms. I will condole in some measure. To the rest: yet my chief humour is for a tyrant: I could play Ercole rarely, or a part to tear a cat in, to make all split. The raging rocks And shivering shocks Shall break the locks Of prison gates; And Philibius' car Shall shine from far And make and mar The foolish Fates.

This was lofty! Now name the rest of the players.

This is Ercole's vein, a tyrant's vein; a lover is more condoling.

Flute. Francis Flute, the bellows-mender.

Quin. Peter Quince, you must take Thisby on you.

Flute. What is Thisby? a wandering knight?

Quin. It is the lady that Pyramus must love.

Flute. Nay, faith, let not me play a woman; I have a beard coming.

Quin. That's all one: you shall play it in a mask, and you may speak as small as you will.

Bot. An I may hide my face, let me play Thisby too. I'll speak in a monstrous little voice, 'Thine, Thisine; 'Ah Pyramus, my lover dear! Thy Thisby dear, and lady dear!'

Quin. No, no, you must play Pyramus: and, Flute, you Thisby.

Bot. Well, proceed.

Quin. Robin Starveling, the tailor.

Star. Here, Peter Quince.

Quin. Robin Starveling, you must play Thisby's mother. Tom Snout, the tinker.

Snout. Here, Peter Quince.

Quin. You Pyramus's father; myself, Thisby's father. Snug, the joiner; you, the lion's part; and, I hope, here is a play fitted.

Snug. Have you the lion's part written? pray you, if it be, give it me, for I am slow of study.

Quin. You may do it extempore, for it is nothing but roaring.

Bot. Let me play the lion too: I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me; I will roar, that I will make the duke say 'Let him roar again, let him roar again.'

Quin. An you should do it too terribly, you would fright the duchess and the ladies, that they would shriek: and that were enough to hang us all.

All. That would hang us, every mother's son.

Bot. I grant you, friends, that if you should fright the ladies out of their wits, they would have no more discretion but to hang us: but I will aggravate my voice so that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale.

Quin. You can play no part but Pyramus; for Pyramus is a sweet-faced man; a proper man, as one shall see in a summer's day; a most lovely gentleman-like man: therefore you must needs play Pyramus.

Bot. Well, I will undertake it. What beard were I best to play it in?

Quin. Why, what you will.

Bot. I will discharge it in either your straw-colour beard, your orange-tawny beard, your purple-in-grain beard, or your French-crown-colour beard, your perfect yellow.

Quin. Some of your French crowns have no hair at all, and then you will play bare-faced. But, masters, here are your parts; and I am to entreat you, request you and desire you, to com them by to-morrow night; and meet me in the palace wood, a mile without the town, by moonlight; there will we rehearse, for if we meet in the city, we shall be dogged with company, and our devices known. In the meantime I will draw a bill of properties, such as our play wants. I pray you, fail me not.

Bot. We will meet; and there we may rehearse most obscenely and courageously. Take pains; be perfect; adieu.

Quin. At the duke's oak we meet.

Bot. Enough; hold or cut bow-strings. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A wood near Athens.

Enter, from opposite sides, a Fairy, and Puck.

Fairy. How now, spirit! whither wander you?

Puck. Over hill, over dale, through bush, through brier, over park, over pale, through fore, through fire, I do wander everywhere, swifter than the moon’s sphere; and I serve the fairy queen.

Fairy. What, jealous Oberon? Fairies, skip hence: I have forsworn his bed and company.

Puck. Tarri, rash wanton; am I not thy lord?

Fairy. Then I must be thy lady; but I know when thou hast stolen away from fairy land, and in the shape of Corin sat all day, playing on pipes of corn and versing love.

O. Titania, have pity on my sorrow.

Fairy. Come from the farthest steppe of India; but that, forsooth, the bounding Amazon, your buskin’d mistress and your warrior love, to Theseus must be wedded, and you come to give their bed joy and prosperity.

O. How long, how long with this wood intend you stay?

Fairy. Perchance till after Theseus’ wedding-day.
ACT II.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM. SCENE II.

If you will patiently dance in our round And see our moonlight revels, go with us; If not, shun me, and I will spare your haunts. Obe. Give me that boy, and I will go with thee. Thou art for thy father a pungent, merry, away! We shall chide downright, if I longer stay. [Exit Titania with her train.

Obe. Well, go thy way: thou shalt not from this Till I torment thee for this injury, [grove My gentle Puck, come hither. Thou rememberest Since once I sat upon a promontory, Fairies, away! We shall chide downright, if I longer stay. Since once I sat upon a promontory, And heard a mermaid on a dolphin's back Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath That the rude sea grew civil at her song And certain stars shot madly from their spheres, To hear the sea-maid's music.

Puck. I remember.

Obe. That very time I saw, but thou couldst not, Flying between the cold moon and the earth, Cupid all arm'd: a certain aim he took At a fair vestal's throne by the west, And loosed his love-shaft smartly from his bow, As he best knew, whereon them tender hearts; But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft Quench'd in the chaste beams of the watery moon, And the imperial voetras passed on, In maiden meditation, fancy-free.

Yet mark'd I where the boll of Cupid fell: It fell upon a little western flower, Before milk-white, now purple with love's wound, And maidens call it love-in-idleness. Fetch me that flower; the herb I shew'd thee once: The juice of it on sleeping eye-lids laid Will make or man or woman madly dote Upon the next live creature that it sees. Fetch me this herb; and be thou here again Ere the leviathan can swim a league.

Puck. I'll put a girdle round about the earth In forty minutes. [Exit.

Obe. Having once this juice, I'll watch Titania when she is asleep, And drop the liquor of it in her eyes. The next thing then she waking looks upon, Be it on lion, bear, or wolf, or bull, On meddling monkey, or on busy ape, She shall pursue it with the soul of love, And she'll make this charm round of her sight, As I can take it with another herb, I'll make her reader up her page to me. But who comes here? I am invisible; And I will overhear their conference.

Enter Demetrius, Helena, following him.

Dem. I love thee not, therefore pursue me not. Where is Lysander and fair Hermia? The one I'll slay, the other slayeth me. Thou toldst me they were stolen unto this wood; And here am I, and woe within this wood, Because I cannot meet my Hermia. Hence to some other grove, and no more.

Hel. You draw me, you hard-hearted adamant; But yet you draw not iron, for my heart Is true as steel: leave you your power to draw, And I shall have no power to follow you. Dem. Do I entice you? do I speak you fair? Or, rather, do I not in plainest truth Tell you, I do not, nor I cannot love you? Hel. And even for that do I love you the more. I am your spaniel; and, Demetrius, The more you beat me, I will fawn on you: Use me but as your spaniel, spur me, strike me, Neglect me, lose me: only give me leave, Unworthy as I am, to follow you. What worse service can I beg in your love,— And yet a place of high respect with me,— Than to be used as you use your dog?

Dem. Temp't not too much the hatred of my spirit. For I am sick when I do look on thee. Hel. And I am sick when I look not on you. Dem: You do impeach your modesty too much. To leave the city and commit yourself Into the hands of one that loves you not; To trust the opportunity of night And the ill counsel of a desert place With the rich worth of your virginity. Hel. Your virtue is not my privilege: for that It is not night when I do see your face, Therefore I think I am not in the night; Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company, For you in my respect are all the world: Then how can it be said I am alone, When all the world is here to look on me? Dem. I'll run from thee and hide me in the brakes, And leave thee to the mercy of wild beasts. Hel. The wildest hath not such a heart as you. Run when you will, the story shall be changed: Apollo flies, and Daphne holds the chase: The dove puts on her beauty's hue; the hawk Makes speed to catch the tiger: bootless speed, When cowardice pursues and valour flies. Dem. I will not stay thy questions; let me go: Or, if thou follow me, do not believe But I shall do thee mischief in the wood. Hel. Ay. In the temple, in the town, the field, You do me mischief, Puck. Demetrius! Your wrongs do set a scandal on my sex; We cannot fight for love, as men may do; We should be woo'd and were not made to woo. I'll follow thee and make a heaven of hell, To die upon the hand I love so well. [Exit Dem.

Obe. Fare thee well, nymph! ere he do leave this Thou shalt fly him and he shall seek thy love. [grove, Rec-enter Puck.

Puck. Hast thou the flower there? Welcome, wanderer. Ay, there it is. Obe. I pray thee, give it me. I know a bank where the wild thyme blows, Where oxlips and the nodding violet grows; Quite over-canopied with luscious woodbine, With sweet musk-rose and with eglantine; There sleeps Titania sometime of the night, Lull'd in these flowers with dances and delight; And there the snake throws her enamell'd skin, Weed wide enough to wrap a fairy in; And with the juice of this I'll streak her eyes, And make her full of hateful fantasies. Take thou some of it, and seek through this grove: A sweet Athenian lady is in love With a disdainful youth: anoint his eyes; But do it when the next thing he espies May be the lady: thou shalt know the man By the Athenian garments he hath on. Effect it when thou seest that he the more More fond on her than she upon his love: And look thou meet me ere the first cock crow.

Puck. Fear not, my lord, your servant shall do so. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Another part of the wood.

Enter Titania, with her train.

Tit. Come, now a roundel and a fairy song; Then, for the third part of a minute; hence, Some to kill rankers in the mask-rose buds, Some war with rees-mice for their heathen wings, To make my small eaves coats, and some keep back The clamorous owl that nightly hoots and wonders At our quaint spirits. Sing me now aspleen; Then to your offices and let me rest.
Despised the Athenian maid;
And here the maiden, sleeping sound,
On the dank and dirty ground.
Pretty soul! she durst not lie
Near this lack-love, this kill-courtesy.
Come not near our fairy queen.
All the powerthis charm doth owe,
When thou wakest, let love forbide
Sleep his seat on thy eyelid;
So awake when I am gone;
For I must now to Oberon. [Exit.

Enter Demetrius and Helena, running.
Hel. Stay, though thou kill me, sweet Demetrius.
Dem. I charge thee, hence, and do not haunt me thus.
Hel. O, wilt thou darling leave me? do not so,
Dem. Stay, on thy peril: I alone will go. [Exit.
Hel. O, I am out of breath in this fond chase!
The more my prayer, the lesser is my grace.
Happy is Hermia, wheresoe'er she lies;
For she hath blessed and attractive eyes.
How came her eyes so bright? Not with salt tears:
It so, my eyes are often wash'd than hers.
No, no, she seems rather as a bear.
For beasts that meet me run away for fear:
Therefor no marvel though Demetrius
Do, as a monster, fly my presence thus.
What wicked and dissembling glass of mine
Made me compare with Hermia's sphere eye?
But who is here? Lysander! on the ground!
Dead? or asleep? I see no blood, no wound.
Lysander, if you live, good sir, awake.
Lys. [waking] And run through fire I will for thy sweet sake.
Transparent Helen! Nature shows art,
That through thy bosom makes me see thy heart.
Where is Demetrius? O, how fit a word
Is that vile name to perish on my sword!
Hel. Do not say so, Lysander: say not so,
What though he love your Hermia? Lord, what though?
Yet Hermia still loves you: then be content.
Lys. Content with Hermia! No; I do repent
The tedious minutes I with her have spent.
Not Hermia but Helen I love:
Who will not change a raven for a dove?
The will of man is by his reason sway'd;
And reason says you know not what you kill.
Things growing are not ripe mail their season:
So I, being young, till now ripe to reason;
And touching now the point of human skill,
Repose becomes the marshal to my will
And leads me to your eyes, where I overlook
Love's stories written in love's richest book.
Hel. Wherefore was I to this keen mockery born?
When at your hands did I deserve this scorn?
Is 't not enough, 's t not enough, young man,
That I did never, no, nor never can,
Descry a sweet look from Demetrius' eye,
But you must dont my insufficiency?
Good truth, you do me wrong, good sooth, you do,
In such disdainful manner me to woo.
But fare you well; perforce I must confess
I thought you lord of more true gentleness.
O, that a lady, of one man refused,
Should of another therefore be abused! [Exit.

Lys. She sees not Hermia. Hermia, sleep thou there:
And never mayst thou come Lysander near!
For as a surfeit of the sweetest things
The desiring nothing to the stomach brings,
Or as the heresies that men do leave
Are hated most of those they did deceive,
So thou, my surfeit and my heresy,
Of all be hated, but the most of me!
And, all my powers, address your love and might
To honour Helen and to be her knight! [Exit.
Her. [Awaking] Help me, Lyndard, help me!
Do thy best
To pluck this crawling serpent from my breast!
Ay me, for pity! what a dream was here!
Lyndard, look how I do quake with fear:

Methought a serpent eat my heart away,
And you sat smiling at his cruel prey.
Lysander! what, removed? Lysander! lord!
What, out of hearing? gone? no sound, no word?
Alack, where are you? speak, an if you hear;
Speak, of all loves! I swoon almost with fear.
No? then I well perceive you are not nigh:
Either death or you I'll find immediately. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The wood. Titania lying asleep.

Enter Quince, Snug, Bottom, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Bot. Are we all met?
Quin. Pat, put; and here’s a marvellous convenient place for our rehearsal. This green plot shall be our stage, this hawthorn-branch our tire-house;
and we will do it in action as we will do it before the Bot. Peter Quince.
Quin. What sayest thou, bully Bottom?
Bot. There are things in this comedy of Pyramus and Thisby that will never please. First, Pyramus must draw a sword to kill himself; which the ladies cannot abide. How answer you that?
Snout. By’tר lakin, a pavilion fear.
Bot. Believe we must leave the killing out, when all is done.
Bot. Not a whit: I have a device to make all well.
Write me a prologue; and let the prologue seem to say, we will do no harm with our swords and that Pyramus is not killed indeed; and, for the more likely assurance, tell them that I Pyramus am not Pyramus, but Bottom the weaver: this will put them out of fear.
Quin. Well, we will have such a prologue; and it shall be written in eight and six.
Bot. No, make it two more; let it be written in eight and eight.
Snout. Will not the ladies be afraid of the lion?
Sith. I fear it, I promise you.
Bot. Masters, you ought to consider with your-svlces; to bring in—God shield us!—a lion among ladies, is a most dreadful thing: for there is not a more fearful wild-fowl than your lion living; and we ought to look to’t.
Snout. Therefore another prologue must tell he is not a lion.
Bot. Nay, you must name his name, and half his face must be seen through the lion’s neck; and he himself must speak through, saying thus, or to the same effect,—‘Ladies,—or ‘Fair ladies,—I would wish you,—or ‘I would request you,—or ‘I would entreat you,—not to fear, not to tremble: my life for yours. If you think I come hither as a lion, it were pity of my life: no, I am no such thing: I am a man as other men are; and there indeed let him name his name, and tell them plainly he is Sany the joiner.
Quin. Well, it shall be so. But there are two hard things; that is, to bring the moonlight into a cham-er; for, you know, Pyramus and Thisby meet by moonlight. [我们的 play?
Bot. Doth the moon shine that night we play?
Bot. A calendar, a calendar! look in the almanac;
find out moonshine, find out moonshine.
Quin. Yes, it doth shine that night.
Bot. Why, then may you leave a casement of the great chamber-window, where we play, open, and the moon may shine in at the casement.
Quin. Ay; or else one must come in with a bush of thorns and a lantern, and say he comes to disfigure, or to present, the person of Moonshine. Then, there is another thing: we must have a wall in the great chamber; for Pyramus and Thisby, says the story, did talk through the chink of a wall.
Snout. You can never bring in a wall. What say you, Bottom?
Bot. Some man or other must present Wall: and let him have some plaster, or some loam, or some roughcast about him, to signify wall; and let him hold his fingers thus, and through that cranny shall Pyramus and Thisby whisper.
Quin. If that may be, then all is well. Come, sit down, even mother’s son, and release your parts.
Pyramus, you begin: when you have spoken your speech, enter into that brake: and so every one according to his cue.

Enter Puck behind.

Puck. What heenam home-spuns have wassagger-
So near the cradle of the fairy queen? [Ing here,
What, a play towards! ’T'll be an auditor;
An actor too perhaps, if it I see cause.
Bot. Thisby, the flowers of odious savours sweet,
Quin. Odious savours sweet.
Bot. — odours savours sweet:
So lath thy breath, my dearest Thisby dear.
But hark, a voice! stay thou but here awhile.
And by and by I will to thee appear. [Exit.
Puck. A stranger Pyramus than e’er played here. [Exit.
Flu. Must I speak now?
Quin. Ay, marry, must you; for you must understand he goes but to see a noise that he heard, and is to come again.
Flu. Most radiant Pyramus, most lily-white of hue,
Of colour like the red rose on triumphant brier,
Most briskly hucknial and eke most lovely Jew.
As true as trusty horse that yet would never tire,
I’ll meet thee, Pyramus, at Ninny’s tomb.
Quin. ’Nnus’s tomb,’ man: why, you must not speak that ye’t; that you answer to Pyramus: you speak all your part at once, cues and all.
Pyramus enter: your cue is past; it is, ‘never tire.’
Flu. O,—As true as trusty horse, that yet would never tire.

Re-enter Puck, and Bottom with an ass’s head.

Bot. If I were fair, Thisby, I were only thine.
Quin. O monstrous! O strange! we are haunted.
Pray, masters! fly, masters! Help!
[Exeunt Quince, Snug, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.
Puck. I’ll follow you, I’ll lead you about a round,
Through bog, through bush, through brake,
through brier;
Sometime a horse I’ll be, sometime a hound,
A hog, a headless bear, sometime a fire;
And neigh, and bark, and grunt, and roar, and burn,
Like horse, hound, hog, bear, fire, at every turn.
[Exit.
Bot. Why do they run away? this is a knavery of them to make me afeard.

Re-enter Snout.

Snout. O Bottom, thou art changed! what do I see on thee?
ACT III.  A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.  SCENE II.

Bot. What do you see? you see an ass-head of your own, do you?

[Exit Swat.]

He enter Quince.

Quin. Bless thee, Bottom! bless thee! thou art translated.

[Exit.]

Bot. See their knavery: this is to make an ass of me; to fright me, if they could. But I will not stir from this place, do what they can: I will walk up and down here, and I will sing, that they shall hear I am not afraid.

[Songs.

The osel cock so blacke of hue,
With orange-tawny bill,
The throstle with his note so true, —

Tit. [Awaking] What angel wakes me from my flowery bed?

Bot. [Songs]

The finch, the sparrow and the lark,
The plain-song eucanoo gray,
Whose note full many a man doth mark,
And dares not answer now: —

for, indeed, who would set his wit to so foolish a bird? who would give a bird the lie, though he cry 'eucanoo' never so?

Tit. I pray thee, gentle mortal, sing again:
Mine ear is much enamour’d of thy note;
So is mine eye enthralled to thy shape;
And thy fair virtue’s force perforce doth move me
On the first view to say, to swear, I love thee.

Bot. Methinks, mistress, you should have little reason for that: and yet, to say the truth, reason and love keep little company together now-a-days; the more the pity that some honest neighbours will not make them friends. Nay, I can gleek upon occasion.

Tit. Thou art as wise as thou art beautiful.

Bot. Be it so, neither; but if I had wit enough to get out of this wood, I have enough to serve mine own turn.

Tit. Out of this wood do not desire to go:
Thou shalt remain here, whether thou wilt or no.
I am a spirit of no common rate;
The summer still doth tend upon my state;
And I do love thee: therefore, go with me;
I’lI give thee fairies to attend on thee,
And they shall fetch thee jewels from the deep,
And sing while thou on pressed flowers dost sleep:
And I will purge thy mortal grossness so
That thou shalt like an airy spirit go.

Peaseblossom! Cobweb! Moth! and Mustardseed!

Enter Peaseblossom, Cobweb, Moth, and Mustardseed.

Pens. Ready.
Cob. And I.
Moth. And I.
Musr. And I.
All. Where shall we go?
Tit. Be kind and courteous to this gentleman
Hop in his walks and gambol in his eyes;
Feed him with apricocks and dewberries,
With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries;
The honey-bags steal from the humble-bees,
And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs
And light them at the fiery glow-worm’s eyes,
To have my love to bed and to arise:
And pluck the wings from painted butterflies
To fan that tender passion from his sleeping eyes:
Not to him, elves, and do him courtesies.

Pens. Hail, mortal!
Cob. Hail!
Moth. Hail!
Musr. Hail!
Bot. I cry your worship’s mercy, heartily: I beseech your worship’s name.

Cob. Cobweb.

Bot. I shall desire you of more acquaintance, good Master Cobweb: if I cut my finger, I shall make bold with you. Your name, honest gentle-

Pens. Peaseblossom.

Bot. I pray you, commend me to Mistress Squash, your mother; and to Master Peascod, your father.

Good Master Peaseblossom, I desire you of more acquaintance too. Your name, I beseech you, sir?

Musr. Mustardseed.

Bot. Good Master Mustardseed, I know your patience well: that same cowardly, giant-like oxed hath devoured many a gentleman of your house: I promise you your kind heart hath made my eyes water ere now. I desire your more acquaintance, good Master Mustardseed.

Tit. Come, wait upon him; lead him to my bower.
The moon methinks looks with a watery eye;
And when she weeps, weeps every little flower,
Lamenting some enforced chastity.
Tie up my love’s tongue, bring him silently.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE II.—Another part of the wood.

Enter Oberon.

Obe. I wonder if Titania be awakened;
Then, what it was that next came in her eye,
Which she must dote on in extremity.

Enter Puck.

Here comes my messenger.
How now, mad spirit!

What night-rule now about this haunted grove?

Puck. My mistress with a monster is in love.
Near to her close and consecrated bower,
While she was in her dall and sleeping hour,
A crew of other rude unpolish’d sprites,
That work for bread upon Athenian stalls,
Were met together to rehearse a play
Intended for great Theseus’ nuptial-day.
The shallowest thick-skin of that barren sort,
Who Pyramus presented, in their sport
Forsook his scene and enter’d in a brake:
When I did him at this advantage take,
An ass’s note I fixed on his head:
Anon his Thisbe must be answered,
And forth my mimic comes. When they him spy,
As wild geese that the creeping Fowler eye,
For rais’d their immiuns, to their own thoughts,
Rising and caving at the gun’s report,
Sever themselves and madly sweep the sky,
So, at his sight, away his fellows fly;
And, at our stamp, here o’er and o’er one falls;
His murdercries and help from Athens call’d; [strong]
Their sense thus weak, lost with their fears thus Made senseless things begin to do them wrong;
For briars and thorns at their apparel snatch;
Some sleeves, some hats, from yielders all things
I led them on in this distracted fear, [catch.
And left sweet Pyramus translated there:
When in that moment so it came to pass,
Titania waked and straightway loved an ass.

Obe. This falls out better than I could devise.
But last thou yet lifeth the Athenian’s eye
With the love-juice, as I did bid thee do?

Puck. I took him sleeping.—that is finish’d too,—
And the Athenian woman by his side:
That, when he waked, of force she must be eyed.

Enter Hermia and Demetrius.

Obe. Stand close: this is the same Athenian.
Puck. This is the woman, but not this the man.

Dem. O, why rebuke you him that loves you so?

Lax breath so bitter on your latter foe.
Her. Now I but chide; but I should use thee worse,
For thou, I fear, hast given me cause to curse.
If thou hast slain Lysander in his sleep,
Being o'er shoes in blood, plunge in the deep,
And kill me too.
The sun was not so true unto the day
As he to me; would he have stolen away
From sleeping Hermia? I'll believe as soon
This whole earth may be bore and that the moon
May through the centre creep and so displease
Her brother's noontide with the Antipodes.
It cannot be but thou hast murder'd him;
So should a murderer look, so done, so grim.
Dem. So should the murder'd look, and so should I,
Pierced through the heart with your stern cruelty:
Yet you, the murderer, look as bright, as clear,
As yonder Venus in her glimmering sphere.
Her. What's this to my Lysander? where is he?
Ah, good Demetrius, wilt thou give him me?
Dem. I had rather give his carcass to my hounds.
Her. Out, dog! out, cur! thou drivest me past the bounds
Of maiden's patience. Hast thou slain him, then?
Henceforth be never number'd among men!
O, once tell true, tell true, even for my sake!
Durst thou have looked upon him thus long awake,
And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O brave touch!
Could not a worm, an adder, do so much?
An adder did it; for with doubler tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.
Dem. You spend your passion on a misprised mood: I am not guilty of Lysander's blood;
Nor is he dead, for aught that I can tell.
Her. I pray thee, tell me then that he is well.
Dem. An if I could, what should I get therefore?
Her. A privilege never to see me more.
And from thy hated presence I do
See me no more, whether he be dead or no. [Exit.
Dem. There is no following her in this fierce vein:
Here therefore for a while I will remain.
So sorrow's heaviness doth heavier grow
For debt that bankrupt sleep doth sorrow owe;
Which now in some slight measure it will pay,
If for his tender here I make some stay.
[Dies down and sleeps.
Obe. What hast thou done? thou hast mistak'en quite
And laid the love-juice on some true-love's sight:
Of thy misprision must perforce ensue
Some tree of error and not false turn'd true.
Puck. Then fate o'er-rules, that, one man holding troth,
A million fail, confounding oath on oath.
Obe. About the wood go swifter than the wind,
And Helena of Athens look thou find:
All fancy-sick she is, and pale of cheer;
With sighs of love, that costs the fresh blood dear:
By some illusion see thou bring her here:
I'll charm his eyes against she do appear.
Puck. I go, I go; look how I go,
Swifter than arrow from the Tartar's bow. [Exit.
Obe. Fluer of this purple dye,
Hilt with Cupid's archerie,
Sink in apple of his eye.
When his love he doth espy,
Let her shine as gloriously
As the Venus of the sky.
When thou wak'st, if she be by,
Beg of her for remedy.

Re-enter Puck.
Puck. Captain of our fairy band,
Helena is here at hand;
And the youth, mistook by me,
Pleading for a lover's ease;
Shall we their fond pageant see?
Lord, what fools these mortals be!
Obe. Stand aside; the noise they make
Will cause Demetrius to awake.

Puck. Then will two at once woo one;
That must needs be sport alone;
And those things do best please me
That befall preposterously.

Enter Lysander and Helena.

Lys. Why should you think that I should woo in Scorn and derision never come in tears: [scorn?
Look, when I vow, I weep; and vows so born,
In their nativity all truth appears.
How can these things in Demetrius born to you,
Bearing the badge of faith, to prove them true?
Hel. You do advance your cunning more and more.
When truth kills truth, O devilish-holy fray!
These vows are Hermia's: will you give her o'er?
Weigh oath with oath, and you will nothing weigh;
Your vows to her and to me in two scales,
Will even weigh, and both as light as talcs.

Lys. I had no judgment when to her I swore.
Hel. Nor none in my mind, now you give her o'er.
Lys. Demetrius loves her, and he loves not you.

Dem. [Awakening] O Helen, goddess, nymph, perfect, to what, my love, shall I compare thine eye?

Crystal is dimmy. O, how rife in show
Thy lips, those kissing cherries, tempting grow!
That pure congealed white, high Taurus' snow,
Fann'd with the eastern wind, turns to a crown
When thou hast dry'd thy true-love's kiss
This priceless of pure white, this seal of bliss!

Hel. O spate! O hell! I see you all are bent
To set against me for your errand:
If you were civil and knew courtesy,
You would not do me thus much injury.
Can you not hate me, as I know you do,
But you must join in souls to mock me too?
If you were men, as men you are in show,
You would not use a gentle lady so;
To vow, and swear, and superpraise my parts,
When I am sure you hate me with your hearts.
You both are rivals, and love Hermia;
And now both rivals, to mock Helena:
A trim exploit, a manly enterprise,
To conjure tears up in a poor maid's eyes
With your derision! none of noble sort
Would so offend a virgin and extort
A poor soul's patience, all to make you sport.

Lys. You are making these so not so:
For you love Hermia; this you know I know:
And here, with all good will, with all my heart,
In Hermia's love I yield you up my part;
And yours of Helena to be repaid,
Whom I do love and will do till my death.

Hel. Never more to take the breath.

Dem. Lysander, keep thy Hermia; I will none:
If e'er I loved her, all that love is gone.
My heart to her but as guest-wise sojourn'd,
And now to Helen is it home return'd,
There to remain.

Lys. Helen, it is not so.

Dem. Disparage not the faith thou dost not know,
Lest, to thy peril, thou aby it dear.

Look, where thy love comes; yonder is thy dear.

Re-enter Hermia.

Herm. Dark night, that from the eye his function takes,

The ear more quick of apprehension makes;
Wherein it both impair the seeing sense,
It pays the hearing double recompense.
Thou art not by mine eye, Lysander, found;
Mine ear, I thank it, brought me thy sound.
But why unkindly didst thou leave me so? [to go?

Lys. Why should he stay, whom love doth press
Her. What love could press Lysander from my side?

Lys. Lysander's love, that would not let him bide,
ACT III.
A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

SCENE II.

Fair Helena, who more engilds the night Than all you fery oes and eyes of light, Why seek'st thou me? could not this make thee know The hate I bear thee made me leave thee so?

Her. You speak not as you think: it cannot be.

Hel. Lo, she is one of this confederacy!

Now I perceive they have conjoin'd all three To fashion this false sport, in spite of me. Injuries Hermia! most ungrateful said! Have you conspired, have you with these contriv'd To bait me with this foul derision?

Is all the counsel that we two have shared, The sisters' vows, the hours that we have spent, When we have chill'd the hasty-footed time For parting us,--Or is it all forgot? All look each other; how this sweet innocence? We, Hermia, like two artificial gods, Have with our needles created both one flower, Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion, Both warbling of one song, both in one key, As if our hands, our sides, voices and minds, Had been incorporate. So we grew together, Like to a double cherry, seeming parted, But yet an union in partition;

Two lovely berries moulded on one stem; So, with two seeming bodies, but one heart;

Two of the first, like costs in heraldry, Due to a woman, and the other to a youth, And will you rent our ancient love asunder. To join with men in scorning your poor friend?

It is not friendly, 'tis not maidenly. Our sex, as well as I, may chide you for it, Though I alone do feel the injury.

Hel. Ay, by my life; And never did desire to see thee more, Therefore be out of hope, of question, of doubt;

Be certain, nothing truer; 'tis no jest That I do hate thee and love Helena.

Her. O me! you juggling! you canker-blossom! You yield of love what you have not by night And stolen my love's heart from him?

Hel. Fine, i' faith! Have you no modesty, no maiden shame, No touch of bashfulness? What, will you tear Impatient answers from my gentle tongue?

Her. You amaze! counterfeit me! You.

Her. Puppet? why so? ay, that way goes the game. Now I perceive that she hath made compare Between our statures; she hath urged her height;

And with her personage, her tall personage, Her height, forsooth, she hath prevail'd with him. And are you grown so high in his esteem, Because I am so dwarfish and so low?

How low am I, thou painted morpale? speak? How low am I? I am not yet so low But that my nails can reach unto thine eyes.

Hel. I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen, Let her not hurt me: I was never curst;

But misery most, to love unloved! I am a right maid for my cowardice:

Let her not strike me. You perhaps may think, Because she is something lower than myself, That I can match her.

Her. Lower! hark, again.

Hel. Good Hermia, do not be so bitter with me. I evermore did love you, Hermia, Did ever keep your consinels, never wrong'd you;

Save that, in love unto Demetrius, I told him of your stealth unto this wood. He follow'd you: for love I follow'd him;

But he hath chid me hence and threatened me To strike me, spurn me, nay, to kill me too:

And now, so you will let me quiet go, To Athens will I bear my folly back

And follow you no further: let me go:

You see how simple and how fond I am. You?

Her. Why, get you gone: who is 't that binds

Hel. A foolish heart, that I leave here behind.

Her. What, with Lysander?

Hel. With Demetrius.

Lys. Be not afraid; she shall not harm thee,

Her. [sigh.]

Dem. Not she, she shall not, though you take her.

Hel. O, when she 'sangry, she is keen and shrewd!

She was a vixen when she went to school;

And though she be but little, she is fierce.

Her. 'Little' again! nothing but 'low' and 'little!'
ACT III.

A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.

SCENE II.

Why will you suffer her to flout me thus?

Let me come to her.

Ly. Get you gone, you dwarf; you minimus, of hindering knot-grass made; you head, you acorn.

Dem. You are too officious in her behalf that scour your services. Let her alone; speak not more, take not her part; for, if thou dost intend never so little show of love to her, thou shalt aby it.

Ly. Now she holds me not; now follow, if thou dar'st, to try whose right, or thine or mine, is most in Helen.

Dem. Follow! may. I'll go with thee; check by jole.

[Exit Lysander and Demetrius.

Her. You, mistress, all this coil is 'long of you. Nay, go not back.

Hel. I will not trust you, I, nor longer stay in your crust company. Your hands than mine are quicker for a fray, my legs are longer though, to run away. [Exit. Her. I am amazed, and know not what to say.

Obe. This is thy negligence: still thou mistakest, or else commis'st thy knavery without.

Puck. Believe me, king of shadows, I mistook.

Did not you tell me I should know the man By the Athenian garments he had on? And so far blameless proves my enterprise, That I have 'pointed an Athenian's eyes; And so far am I glad it so did sort.

As this their jangling, the groves imprompt. Obe. Thou seest these lovers seek a place to fight: He therefore, Robin, overcast the night; The starry welkin cover thou anon With drooping fog as black as Acheron, And lead these testy rivals so astray As one come not within another's way, Like to Lysander sometime frame thy tongue, Then stir Demetrius up with bitter wrong; And sometime rail thou like Demetrius; And from each other look thou lead them thus, Till o'er their brows death-counterfeiting sleep With leaden legs and batty wings doth creep: Then crush this herb into Lysander's eye; Whose liquor hath this virtuous property, To take from thence all error with his might, And make his eyeballs roll with wonted sight.

When they next wake, all this derision Shall seem a dream and frivous willion. And back to Athens shall the lovers Wend, With league whose date till death shall never end. Whilest I in this affair do thee employ, I'll to my queen and beg her Indian boy; And then I will her charmed eye release From monster's view, and her legs shall be peace.

Puck. My fair lord, this must be done with haste, For night's swift dragons cut the clouds full fast, And yonder shines Aurora's harbinger; [there, At whose approach, ghosts, wandering here and Troop home to churchyards: dunned spirits all, That in crossways and highways have burial, Already to their wormy beds are gone; For fear lest day should look their shame upon, They willfully themselves exile from light And must for aye consort with black-brow'd night.

Obe. But we are spirits of another sort: I wish the morning's love have off made sport, And, like a forester, the graces tread, Even till the eastern gate, all fiery-red. Opening on Neptune with fair blessed beams, Turns into yellow gold his salt green streams. But, notwithstanding, haste; make no delay; We may expect this business yet ere day. [Exit. Puck. Up and down, up and down, I will lead them up and down.

I am fear'd in field and town: Goblin, lead them up and down. Here comes one.

Re-enter Lysander.

Ly. Where art thou, proud Demetrius? speak thou now.

Puck. He is, villain; drawn and ready. Where art thou?

Ly. I will be with thee straight.

Puck. Follow me, then. To plain'ner ground. [Exit Lysander, as following the voice.

Re-enter Demetrius.

Dem. Lysander! speak again:

Thou runaway, thou coward, art thou fled? Not in some bush? Where dost thou hide thy head?

Puck. Thou coward, art thou bragging to the stars, Telling the buses that thou lookest for wars, And wilt not come? Come, recreant; come, thou I'll whip thee with a rod; he is defiled [child];

That draws a sword on thee.

Re-enter Lysander.

Ly. He goes before me and still dares me on;

When I come where he calls, then he is gone. The villain is much lighter-heel'd than I: I follow'd fast, but faster he did fly;

That fallen am I in dark uneven way, And here will rest me. [Exit Down. Come, thou gentle day!

For if but once thou show me thy grey light, I'll find Demetrius and revenge this spite. [Sleeps.

Re-enter Puck and Demetrius.

Puck. Ho, ho, ho! Coward, why comest thou not?

Dem. Abide me, if thou dar'st: for well I wot Thou runn'st before me, shifting every place, And darst not stand, nor look me in the face. Where art thou now?

Puck. Come hither: I am here, Dem. Nay, then, thou mock'st me. Thou shalt not buy this dear.

If ever I thy face by daylight see:

Now, go thy way, Faintness constraineth me To measure out my length on this cold bed. By day's approach look to be visited. [Lies down and sleeps.

Re-enter Helena.

Hel. O weary night, O long and tedious night,

Abate thy hours! Shines comfort from the east. That I may back to Athens by daylight.

From these that my poor company detest:

And sleep, that sometimes shuts up sorrow's eye, Steal me awhile from mine own company. [Lies down and sleeps. Puck. Yet but three? Come one more; Two of both kinds makes up four. Here she comes, curt and sad: Cupid is a knavish lad, Thus to make poor females mad.

Re-enter Hermia.

Her. Never so weary, never so in we. Bedabbed with the dew and torn with briers, I can no further crawl, no further go; My legs can keep no pace with my desires. Here will I rest me till the break of day. Heavens shield Lysander, if they mean a fray! [Lies down and sleeps. Puck. On the ground, Sleep sound: 143
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The same. Lysander, Demetrius, Helena, and Hermia lying asleep.

Enter Titania and Bottom; Peaseblossom, Cobweb, Moth, Mustardseed, and other Fairies attending; Oberon behind unseen.

Tit. Come, sit thee down upon this flowery bed, While I thy amiable cheeks do toy, And stick musk-roses in thy sleek smooth head, And kiss thy fair large ears, my gentle joy.

Bo. Where’s Peaseblossom?

Pea. Ready.

Bo. Scratch my head, Peaseblossom. Where’s Monniseur Cobweb?

Cob. Ready.

Bo. Monniseur Cobweb, good monniseur, get you your weapons in your hand, and kill me a red-humped humble-bee on the top of a thistle; and, good monniseur, bring me the honey-jug. Do not fret yourself too much in the action, monniseur; and, good monniseur, have a care the honey-jug break not; I would be loth to have you overflown with a honey-jug, signior. Where’s Monniseur Mustardseed?

Mos. Ready.

Bo. Give me your neaf, Monniseur Mustardseed. Pray you, leave your courtesy, good monniseur.

Mos. What’s your will?

Bo. Nothing, good monniseur, but to help Cavalry Cobweb to scratch. I must to the barber’s, monniseur; for methinks I am marvellous hairy about the face; and I am such a tender ass, if my hair do but tickle me, I must scratch.

Tit. What, wilt thou hear some music, my sweet love?

Bo. I have a reasonable good ear in music. Let’s have the tongs and the bones.

Tit. Or say, sweet love, what thou desirest to eat.

Bo. Truly, a peck of provender: I could munch your good dry oats. Methinks I have a great desire to a bottle of hay; good hay, sweet hay, hath no fellow.

Tit. I have a venturous fairy that shall seek The squirrel’s ha’rd, and fetch thee new nuts.

Bo. I had rather have a handful or two of dried peas. But, I pray you, let none of your people stir me: I have an exposition of sleep come upon me.

Tit. Sleep thou, and I will wind thee in my arms. Fairies, be gone, and be all ways away.

[Exeunt fairies. So doth the woodbine the sweet honeysuckle Gently entwist; tie female ivy so Enrings the barks of the elm. O, how I love thee! how I dote on thee! [They sleep.

Enter Puck.

Ob. [Advancing] Welcome, good Robin. See’st thou this sweet sight? Her doteage now I do begin to pity: For, meeting her of late behind the wood, Seeking sweet favours for this hateful fool, I did upbraided her and fall out with her;

Of thy former lady’s eye; And the country proverb known, That every man should take his own, In your waking shall be shown: Jack shall have Jill; Nought shall go ill; The man shall have his mare again, and all shall be well. [Exit.

For she his hairy temple then had rounded With coronet of fresh and fragrant flowers; And that same dew, which sometime on the buds Was wont to swell like round and orient pears, Stood now within the pretty flowerets’ eyes Like tears that did their own disgrace bewail. When I had at my pleasure taunted her And she in mild terms begs’d my patience, I then did ask of her her changeling child; Which straight she gave me, and her fairy sent To bear him to mybower in fairy land. And now I have the boy, I will undo This hateful imperfection of her eyes; And, gentle Puck, take this transformed scalp From off the head of this Athenian swain; That, he awakening when the other do, May all to Athens back again repair And think no more of this night’s accidents But as the fierce vexation of a dream. But first I will release the fairy queen. Be as thou wast wont to be; See as thou wast wont to see; Dian’s bud o’er Cupid’s flower Hath such force and blessed power. Now, my Titania: wake you, my sweet queen. Tit. My Oberon! who’s there? I have seen! Methought I was enamour’d of an ass. Ob. There lies your love.

Tit. How came these things to pass? O, how mine eyes do loathe his visage now! Ob. Silence awhile. Robin, take off this head. Titania, unmask caly; and strike more dead Than common sleep of all these five the sense. Tit. Music, ho! music, such as charment sleep! [Music, still.

Puck. Now, when thou wakst, with thine own fool’s eyes peep, [with me, Ob. Sound, music! Come, my queen, take hands And rock the ground whereon these sleepers be. Now thou and I are new in amity And will to-morrow midnight solemnly Dance in Duke Theseus’ house triumphantly And bless it to all fair prosperity: There shall the pairs of faithful lovers be Wedded, with Theseus, all in jollity. Puck. Fairy king, attend, and mark: I do hear the morning hark. Ob. Then, my queen, in silence sad, Trip we after the night’s shade: We the globe can compass soon, Swifter than the wandering moon. Tit. Come, my lord, and in our flight Tell me how it came this night That I sleeping here was found With these mortals on the ground.

[Exeunt. [Horns winded within.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Theseus, and train. The. Go, one of you, find out the forester; For now our observation is perform’d; And since we have the favour of the day, My love shall hear the music of my hounds.
Uncouple in the western valley; let them go: Dispatch, I say, and find the forestier.

[Exit an Attendant.

We will, fair queen, up to the mountain's top And mark the musical confusion Of hounds and echo in conjunction.

Flute. I was with Hercules and Cadmus once, When in a wood of Crete they lay'd the bear With hounds of Sparta: never did I hear Such gallant chiding; for, besides the groves, The skies, the fountains, every region near Seem'd all one mutual cry: I never heard So musical a discord, such sweet thunder.
The hounds are bred of the Spartan kind So few'd, so sanded, and their heads are hung With ears that sweep away the morning dew Crook-knee'd, and dew-lapp'd like Thessalian bulls; Slow in pursuit, but match'd in mouth like bells, Each under each. A cry more tunable Was never heard to, nor cheer'd with horn, In Crete, in Sparta, nor in Thessaly: [these? Judge when you hear. But, soft! what nymphs are Ege. My lord, this is my daughter here asleep; And this, Lyssander; this Demetrius is;

This Helena, old Nebur's Helena: I wonder of their being here together. The. No doubt they rose up early to observe The rite of May, and, hearing our intent, Came here in grace of our solemnity. But speak, Egeus: is not this the day That Hermia should give answer of her choice? Ege. It is, my lord. The. Go, bid the huntsman wake them with their horns. [Horns and shout within. Lys., Dem., Hel., and Her., wake and start up. Good morrow, friends. Saint Valentine is past; Begin these wood-birds but to couple now! Lys. Parlon, my lord. Thee. I pray you all, stand up. I know you two are rival enemies: How comes this gentle concord in the world, That hatred is so far from jealousy, To sleep by hate, and fear no enmity? Ege. My lord, I shall reply amazely. Half sleep, half waking: but as yet, I swear, I cannot truly say how I came here; But, as I think,—for truly would I speak, And now I do betheke, so it is,— I came with Hermia hither: our intent Was to see how far we might, Without the peril of the Athenian law.

Ege. Enough, enough, my lord: you have enough; I beg the law, the law, upon his head. [trius, They would have stolen away; they would, Demetrius, to have defeated you and me, You of your wife and me of my consent, Of my consent that she should be your wife. Dem. My lord, fair Helen told me of their stealth, Of this their purpose hither to this wood; And I in fury hither follow'd them, Fair Helen in fancy following me, But, my good lord, I wot not by what power,— But by the power it is,— my love to Hermia, Melted as the snow, seems to me now As the remembrance of an idle gaud Which in my childhood I did dote upon; And all the faith, the virtue of my heart, The object and the pleasure of mine eye, Is Helen, who was I betroth'd ere I saw Hermia: But, like in sickness, did I loathe this foul; But, as in health, come to my natural taste, Now I do wish it, love it, long for it, And will for evermore be true to it. The. They fortunately met: Of this discourse we more will hear anon. Egeus, I will overbear your will; For in the temple, by and by, with us These couples shall eternally be knit: And, for the morrow now is something worn, Our purposed hunting shall be set aside. Away with us to Athens; three and three, We'll hold a feast in great solemnity.

Come, Hippolyta. [Exeunt Thea., Flute., Ege., and train.

Dem. These things seem small and indistinguishable Like far-off mountains turned into clouds. [able, Her. Methinks I see these things with parted eye, When every thing seems double. Hel. So methinks: and I have found Demetrius like a jewel, Mine own, and not mine own.

Dem. Are you sure That we are awake? It seems to me That yet we sleep, we dream. Do not you think The duke was here, and bid us follow him? Her. Yea, and my father. And Hippolyta. Lys. And he did bid us follow to the temple. Dem. Why, then, we are awake: let's follow him; And by the way let us recount our dreams. [Exeunt. But. [Speaking] When my eye comes, call me, and I will answer: my next is, 'Most fair Pyramus.' Heigh-ho! Peter Quince! Flute, the bellows-mender! Snout, the tinker! Starveling! God's my life, stolen hence, and left me asleep! I have had a most rare vision. I have had a dream, just the wit of man to say what dream it was: man is but an ass, if he go about to expound this dream. Methought I was—there is no man can tell what. Methought I was,—and methought I had,—but man is but a patched fool, if he will offer to say what methought I had. The eye of man hath not heard, the ear of man hath not seen, man's hand is not able to taste, his tongue to conceive, nor his heart to report, what my dream was. I will get Peter Quince to write a ballad of this dream: it shall be called Bottom's Dream, because it hath no bottom: and I will sing it in the latter end of a play, before the duke: peradventure, to make it the more gracious, I shall sing it at her death. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Athens. Quince's house.

Enter Quince, Flute, Snout, and Starveling.

Quin. Have you sent to Bottom's house? is he come home yet? [Transported.

Star. He cannot be heard of. Out of doubt he is Flute. If he come not, then the play is marred: it goes not forward, doth it? Quin. It is not possible: you have not a man in all Athens able to discharge Pyramus but he. Flute. No, he hath simply the best wit of any hand-kerchief man in Athens. Quin. Yea, and the best person too; and he is a very paramour for a sweet voice. Flute. You must say 'paramour': 'a paramour is, God bless us, a thing of naught.

Enter Snug.

Snug. Masters, the duke is coming from the temple, and there is two or three lords and ladies more married: if our sport had gone forward, we had all been made men.

Flute. O sweet belfry Bottom! Thus hath he lost sixpence a day during his life; he could not have 'scaped sixpence a day: an the duke had not given him sixpence a day for playing Pyramus, I'll be hanged; he would have deserved it: sixpence a day in Pyramus, or nothing.

Enter Bottom.

Bot. Where are these lads? where are these hearts?
ACT V.

SCENE I.—Athens. The palace of Theseus.

Enter Theseus, Hippolyta, Philostrate, Lords, and Attendants.

Thuc. More strange than true: I never may believe These antique fables, nor these fairy toys.

The poet's eye, in a fine frenzy rolling,

Doth glance from heaven to earth, from earth to

And as imagination body forth [heaven; The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen Turns them to shapes and gives to airy nothing A local habitation and a name.

That, if it would but apprehend some joy,

Or in the night, imagining some fear,

How easy is a bush supposed a bear! But all the story of the night told over,

More wits the wiser than fancy's images

And grows to something of great constancy;

But, howsoever, strange and admirable.

These. Here come the lovers, full of joy and mirth.

Enter Lysander, Demetrius, Hermia, and

Joy, gentle friends! joy and fresh days of love Accompany your hearts!

Lys. More than to us

Wait in your royal walks, your bower, your bed! The. Come now; what masques, what dances shall we have.

To wear away this long age of three hours

Between our after-supper and bed-time?

What recusals are in hand? Is there no play,

To ease the anguish of a torturing hour?

Call Philostrate.

Phil. Here, mighty Theseus.

Thuc. Say, what abridgment have you for this evening?

What masque? what music? How shall we beguile The long half-hour, if not with some delight?

Phil. There is a brief how many sports are ripe: Make choice of which your highness will see first.

[Giving a paper]

The. [Reads] 'The battle with the Centaurs, to be sung By an Athenian eunuch to the harp,'

We'll none of that: that have I told my love, In glory of mykinsman Hercules.

[Reads] 'The riot of the tipsy Bacchanals, to your pumps; meet presently at the palace; every man look o'er his part; for the short and the long is, our play is preferred. In any case, let Thisby have clean linen; and let not him that plays the lion pare his nails, for they shall hang out for the lion's claws. And, most dear actors, eat no onions or garlic, for we are to utter sweet breath; and I do not doubt but to hear them say, it is a sweet comedy. No more words: away! go, away! [Exit.]

Tearing the Thracian singer in their rage.' That is an old device; and it was play'd When I from Thessaly came last a conqueror. [Reads] 'The thrice three Muses mourning for the Of Learning, late deceased in bevy,' [death That is some satire, keen and critical, Not sorting with a nuptial ceremony.

[Reads] 'A tedious brief scene of young Pyramus And his love Thisbe; very tragical mirth.' Merry and tragical! tedious and brief! That is, hot ice and wondrous strange snow.

How shall we find the concord of this discord?

Phil. A play there is, my lord, some ten words long, Which is as brief as I have known a play; But by ten words, my lord, it is too long, Which makes it tedious; for in all the play There is not one word apt, one player fitted:

And tragical, my noble lord, it is;

For Pyramus therein doth kill himself.

[Reads] 'When I saw rehearsal, I must confess, Made mine eyes water; but more merry tears The passion of loud laughter never shed.

Phil. Hard-handed men that work in Athens here, Which never labour'd in their minds till now, And now have toil'd their unbreath'd memories With this same play, against your nuptial.

The. And we will hear it.

Phil. No, my noble lord; It is not for you: I have heard it over, And it is nothing, nothing in the world; Unless you can find sport in their intents, Extremely stretch'd and confound'd with cruel pain, To do you service.

The. I will hear that play;

For never anything can be amiss, When simplicity and duty tender it.

Go, bring them in: and take your places, ladies.

[Exit Philostrate.]

[Reads] 'Love not to see wretchedness o'ercharged And all in his service perish'd.

The. Why, gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.

Phil. He says they can do nothing in this kind. The. The kinder we, to give them thanks for nothing.

Our sport shall be to take what they mistake: And what poor duty cannot do, noble respect Takes it in might, not merit.

Where I have come, great clinks have purposed To meet me with premeditated welcomes; Where I have seen them shiver and look pale, Make ABCs in the midst of sentences, Throttle their practis'd accent in their fears And in conclusion dumbly have broke off, Not paying me a welcome. Trust me, sweet, Out of this silence yet I pick'd a welcome; And in the modesty of fearful duty I read as much as from the rattling tongue Of saucy and audacious eloquence.

Love, therefore, and tongue-tied simplicity In least speak most, to my capacity.
Enter Pyramids and Thisbe, Wall, Moonshine, and Lion.

Pro. Gentles, perchance you wonder at this show; But wonder on, till truth make all things plain. This man is Pyramus, if you would hear; This beauteous lady Thisby is certain. This man, with line and rough-cast, doth present Wall, that vile Wall which did these lovers surrender; And through Wall's chink, poor souls, they are To whisper. At the which let no man wonder. This man, with lanthorn, dag, and bush of thorn, Presenteth Moonshine; for, if you will know, By moonshine did these lovers think no scorn 'To meet at Ninnus' tomb, there, there to woo. This grisly beast, which Lion hight by name, The trusty Thisby, coming first by night, Did scare away, or rather did affright: And, as she fled, her mantle she did fell, Which Lion vile with bloody mouth did stain. Anon comes Pyramus, sweet youth and tall, And finds his trusty Thisby's mantle slain: Wherein this bloody blade, with bloody blankest blade, He bravely brooch'd his boiling bloody breast; And Thisby, tarrying in mulberry shade, His dagger drew, and did die. For all the rest, Let Lion, Moonshine, Wall, and lovers twain At large discourse, while here they do remain.

Enter Prologue, Thisbe, Lion, and Moonshine.

Pro. I wonder if the lion be to speak.

Dem. No wonder, my lord; one lion may, when many assos do.

Wall. In this same interlude it doth befall That I, one Sount by name, present a wall; And such a wall, as I would have you think, That had in it a cranied hole or chink. Through which the lovers, Pyramus and Thisby, Did whisper often very secretly.

This loom, this rough-cast and this stone doth show That I am that same wall; the truth is so: And this the cranny is, right and sinister. Through which the fearful lovers are to whisper.

Pro. Thee, would you desire line and hair to speak better?

Dem. It is the wittiest partition that ever I heard discourse, my lord.

Enter Pyramids.

Pro. O grim-book'd night! O night with hue so O night, which ever art when day is not! [black] O night, O night! slack, slack, slack,

I fear my Thisby's promise is forgot! And thou, O wall, O sweet, O lovely wall, [mine! That stand'st between her father's ground and Thou wall, O wall, O sweet and lovely wall.

Show me thy chink, to blink through with mine eye! [Wall holds up his fingers.

Thanks, courteous wall; Jove shield thee well for But what see I? No Thisby do I see. [this! O wicked wall, through whom I see no bliss!

Cursed be thy stones for thus deceiving me!

Wall. The wall, methinks, being sensible, should curse again.

Thisbe. This, O wall, full often hast thou heard my For parting my fair Pyramus and me! [moans,

My cherry lips have often kiss'd thy stones, Thy stones with lime and hair knit up in thee.

Pro. I see a voice: now will I to the chink, To spy an I can hear my Thisby's face.

Thisby!

This. My love thou art, my love I think.

Pro. Think what thou wilt, I am thy lover's And, like Limander, am I trusty still. [grace;

This. And I like Helen, till the Fates may kill.

Pro. Not Shafalus to Procrus was so true.

This. As Shafalus to Procrus, I to you. [wall!

Pro. O, kiss me through the hole of this vile shrine.

This. I kiss the wall's hole, not your lips at all.

Pro. Wilt thou at Niny's tomb meet me straightway?

This. 'Tis life, 'tis death, I come without delay.

Pro. At present Pyramids and Thisbe.

Wall. Thus have I, Wall, my part discharged so; And, being done, thus Wall away doth go. [Exit.

The. Now is the mural down between the two neighbours.

Dem. No remedy, my lord, when walls are so willful to hear without warning.

Pro. This is the silliest stuff that ever I heard.

This. The best in this kind are but shadows; and the worst are no worse, if imagination amend them.

Pro. It must be your imagination then, and not theirs.

This. If we imagine no worse of them than they of themselves, they may pass for excellent men. Here come two noble beasts in, a man and a lion.

Enter Lion and Moonshine.

Lion. You, ladies, you, whose gentle hearts do fear [floor,

The smallest monstrous mouse that creeps on May now perchance both quake and tremble here, When lion rough in wildest rage doth roar.

Then know that I, one snug the warmer, am A lion-dell, nor else no lion I am; For, if I should as lion come in strife Into this place, 'tis pity on my life. [science.

This. A very gentle beast, and of a good count.

Dem. The very best at a beast, my lord, that ever I saw.

Pro. This lion is a very fox for his valour.

This. True; and a goose for his discretion.

Dem. Not so, my lord; for his valour cannot carry his discretion: and the fox carries the goose.

This. His discretion, I am sure, cannot carry his valor; for the goose carries not the fox. It is well: leave it to his discretion, and let us listen to the moon.

[sent:—

Moon. This lantern doth the horned moon presage.

Dem. He should have worn the horns on his head.
The. He is no crescent, and his horns are invisible within the circumference. [sent;]

Moon. This lanthorn doth the horned moon prepare the man I the moon do seem to be.

The. This is the greatest error of all the rest: the man should be put into the lanthorn. How is it else the man in the moon?

Dem. He dares not come there for the candle; for, you see, it is already in snuff. [change!]

Hipp. I am aware of this moon: would he would

The. It appears, by his small light of discretion, that he is in the wane: but yet, in courtesy, in all reason, we must stay the time.

Lys. Proceed, Moon.

Moon. All that I have to say, is, to tell you that the lanthorn is the moon; I, the man in the moon; this thorn-bush, my thorn-bush; and this dog, my dog.

Dem. Why, all these should be in the lanthorn; for all these are in the moon. But, silence! here comes Thisbe.

Enter Thisbe.

This. This is old Ninny's tomb. Where is my love?

Lion. [Roaring] Oh — [Thisbe runs off.]

Dem. Well roared, Lion.

The. Well run, Thisbe.

Hipp. Well shone, Moon. Truly, the moon shines with a good grace.

[The Lion shakes Thisbe's mantle, and exit.]

The. Well moused, Lion.

Lys. And so the lion vanished.

Dem. And then came Pyramus.

Enter Pyramus.

Pyr. Sweet Moon, I thank thee for thy sunny beams;
I thank thee, Moon, for shining now so bright;
For, by thy gracious, golden, glittering gleams,
I trust to take of truest Thisby sight.

But stay, O spite!
But mark, poor knight,
What dreadful dole is here!
Eyes, do you see?
How can it be?
O dainty duck! O dear!
Thy mantle good,
What, stain'd with blood?
Approach, ye Furies fell!
O Fates, come, come,
Cut thread and thrum;
Quail, crush, conclude, and quell!

The. This passion, and the death of a dear friend, would go near to make a man look sad.

Hipp. Beshrew my heart, but I pity the man.

Pyr. O wherefore, Nature, didst thou lions frame?
Since lion vile hath here deflower'd my dear:
Which is — no, no — which was the fairest dame
That lived, that loved, that liked, that look'd
With cheer.

Come, tears, confound;
Out, sword, and wound
The pap of Pyramus;
Ay, that left pap,
Where heart doth hop; [Stabs himself.]

Thus die I, thus, thus, thus.
Now am I dead,
Now am I fled;

My soul is in the sky:
Tongue, lose thy light;

Moon, take thy flight: [Exit Moonshine.]

Now die, die, die, die, die. [Dies.]

Dem. No die, but an ace, for him; for he is but one.

Lys. Less than an ace, man; for he is dead; he is nothing.

The. With the help of a surgeon he might yet recover, and prove an ass.

Hipp. How chance Moonshine is gone before Thisbe comes back and finds her lover?

The. She will find him by starlight. Here she comes; and her passion ends the play.

Re-enter Thisbe.

Hipp. Methinks she should not use a long one for such a Pyramus: I hope she will be brief.

Dem. A mote will turn the balance, which Pyramus, the Thisbe, is better to, he for a man, God warrant us, for a woman, God bless us. [eyes.]

Lys. She hath spied him already with those sweet
Dem. And thus she means, videlicet: —

This. Asleep, my love?

What, dead, my dove?

O Pyramus, arise!

Speak, speak: Quite dumb?

Dead, dead? A tomb

Must cover thy sweet eyes.

These lily lips,

This cherry nose,

These yellow cowslip cheeks,

Are gone, are gone:

Lovers, make moon:

His eyes were green as beaks.

O Sisters Three,

Come, come to me,

With hands as pale as milk;

Lay them in gorse:

Since you have shore

With shears his thread of silk.

Tongue, not a word:

Come, trusty sword;

Come, blade, my breast imbue: [Stabs herself.]

And farewell, friends;

Thus Thisby ends:

Adieu, adieu, adieu. [Dies.]

The. Moonshine and Lion are left to bury the dead.

Dem. Ay, and Wall too.

Bot. [Starting up] No, I assure you; the wall is down that parted their fathers. Will it please you to see the epilogue, or to hear a Bergomask dance between two of our company?

The. No epilogue, I pr'y for; for your play needs no excuse. Never excuse: for when the players are all dead, there need none to be blamed. Marry, if he this night it had played Pyramus and Thisbe's garter, it would have been a fine tragedy; and so it is, truly; and very notably discharged. But, come, your Bergomask: let your epilogue alone.

[A dance.]

The iron tongue of midnight hath told twelve:

Lovers, to bed; 'tis almost fairy time.

I fear we shall out-sleep the coming morn

As much as we this night have overwatch'd.

This palatable gross play hath well beguiled

The heavy guilt of night. Sweet friends, to bed.

A fortnight hold we this solemnity,
In nightily revels and new jollity. [Exeunt.]

Enter Puck.

Puck. Now the hungry lion roars,
And the wolf beholds the moon;
Whilst the heavy ploughman snares,
All with weary task forlorn.
Now the wasted brands do glow,
Whilst the screech-owl, screeching loud,
Puts the wretch that lies in woe
In remembrance of a shroud.

Now it is the time of night

That the graves all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his sprite
In the church-way paths to glide;
And we fairies, that do run
By the triple Hecate's team,
ACT V.
A MIDSUMMER-NIGHT'S DREAM.
SCENE I.

From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolic; not a mouse
Shall disturb this hallow'd house;
I am sent with broom before,
To sweep the dust behind the door.

Enter Oberon and Titania with their train.

Oberon. Through the house give gimmering light,
By the dead and drowsy fire:
Every elf and fairy sprite
Hop as light as bird from brier;
And this ditty, after me,
Sing, and dance it trippingly.

Titania. First, rehearse your song by rote,
To each word a warbling note:
Hand in hand, with fairy grace,
Will we sing, and bless this place.

[Song and dance.

Oberon. Now, until the break of day,
Through this house each fairy stray,
To the best bride-bed will we,
Which by us shall blessed be;
And the issue there create
Ever shall be fortunate.
So shall all the couples three Ever true in loving be;
And the blots of Nature's hand
Shall not in their issue stand;

Never mole, bare lip, nor scar,
Nor mark prodigious, such as are Despised in nativity,
Shall upon their children be.
With this field-dew consecrate,
Every fairy take his gait;
And each several chamber bless,
Through this palace, with sweet peace;
And the owner of it bless.
Ever shall in safety rest.
Trip away; make no stay;
Meet me all by break of day.

[Exit Oberon, Titania, and train.

Puck. If we shadows have offended,
Think but this, and all is mended,
That you have but slumber'd here,
While these visions did appear.
And this weak and silly theme,
No more yielding but a dream,
Gentles, do not reprehend:
If you pardon, we will mend;
And, as I am an honest Puck,
If we have unearned luck
Now to 'scape the serpent's tongue,
We will make amends ere long;
Else the Puck a liar call:
So, good night unto you all.
Give me your hands, if we be friends,
And Robin shall restore amends.
[Exit.

Hermia.—Out, dog! out, cur! thou driv'st me past the bounds
Of maiden's patience. Hast thou slain him then?
Henceforth be never numbered among men!
O! once tell true, tell true, 'e'en for my sake;
Durst thou have look'd upon him, being awake,
And hast thou kill'd him sleeping? O brave touch!
Could not a worm, an adder, do so much?
An elder did it; for with doubler tongue
Than thine, thou serpent, never adder stung.

Demetrius.—You spend your passion on a mispris'd mood:
I am not guilty of Lysander's blood,
Nor is he dead, for anguish that I can tell.—Act III., Scene ii.

The Duke of Venice.
The Prince of Morocco,
The Prince of Arragon,
Antonio, a merchant of Venice.
Bassanio, his friend, suitor likewise to Portia.
Salanio,
Salarino,
Gratiano,
Salanio,
Salerio,
Lorenzo, in love with Jessica.
Shylock, a rich Jew.
Tubal, a Jew, his friend.
Launcelot Gobbo, the clown, servant to Shylock.

Old Gobbo, father to Launcelot.
Leonardo, servant to Bassanio.

MAGNIFICENCES OF VENICE, Officers of the Court of Justice, Gaoler, Servants to Portia, and other Attendants.

SCENE—Partly at Venice, and partly at Belmont, the seat of Portia, on the Continent.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Venice. A street.

Enter Antonio, Salarino, and Salanio.

Ant. In sooth, I know not why I am so sad: It wearies me; you say it wearies you; But how I caught it, I found it, or came by it, What stuff 'tis made of, whereof it is born, I am to learn; And such a want-wit sadness makes of me, That I have much ado to know myself.

Salar. Your mind is tossing on the ocean; There, where your argosies with portly sail, Like signiours and rich burghers on the flood, Or, as it were, the pageants of the sea, Do overpeer the petty traffickers, That curtsy to them, do them reverence, As they fly by them with their woven wings.

Salario. Believe me, sir, had I such venture forth, The better part of my affections would Be with my hopes abroad. I should be still Pucking the grass, to know where sits the wind, Peering in maps for ports and piers and roads; And every object that might make me fear Misfortune to my ventures, out of doubt Would make me sad.

Salar. My wind cooling my broth, Would blow me to an ague, when I thought What harm a wind too great at sea might do. I should not see the sundry hour-glass run, But I should think of shallows and of flats, And see my wealthy Andrew dock'd in sand, Vailing her high-top lower than her ribs To kiss her burial. Should I go to church And see the holy edifice of stone, And not rebuke me straight of dangerous rocks, Which touching but my gentle vessel's side, Would scatter all her spices on the stream, Enrobe the rearing waters with my silks, And, in a word, but even now worth this, And now worth nothing? Shall I have the thought To think on this, and shall I lack the thought That such a thing bechance would make me sad? But tell not me: I know, Antonio Is sad to think upon his merchandise.

Ant. Believe me, no: I thank my fortune for it,
ACT I.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE I.

Gra.

Let me play the fool:
With mirth and laughter let old wrinkles come,
And let my liver rather heat with wine
Than my heart cool with over-long alarms.
Why should a man, whose blood is warm within,
Sit like his grandsire cut in alabaster?
Sleep when he wakes and creep into the jaundice
By being peevish?  I tell thee what, Antonio—
I love thee, and it is my love that speaks—
Therefore I put thee not to school in dreams.
Do cream and mantle like a standing pond,
And do a swift stillness entertain,
With purpose to be dress'd in an opinion
Of wisdom, gravity, profound conceit,
As who should say 'I am Sir Oracle,
And the most profound in the great dark!'
O my Antonio, I do know of these
That therefore only are reputed wise
For saying nothing, when I am very sure,
If they should speak, would almost damn those ears
Which, hearing them, would call their brothers
I'll tell thee more of this another time: [fools,
But if I stand with you yourself, still do,
For this fool gageun, this opinion.
Come, good Lorenzo. Fare ye well awhile;
I'll end my exhortation after dinner.

Lor.
Well, we will leave you then till dinner-time;
I must be one of these damn'd wise men,
For I have never learned to furnish the world.

Gra.
Well, keep me company but two years more,
Then shalt not know the sound of thine own tongue.

Ant.
Well, tell me now what lady is the same
To whom you swore a secret pilgrimage,
That you to-day promised to tell me of?

Bass.
'Tis not unknown to you, Antonio,
How much I was to be desir'd of
By something showing a more swelling port
Than my faint means would grant continuance:
Nor do I now make mean to be abridged
From such a noble rate; but my chief care is to come fairly off from the great debts
Wherein my time something too prodigal
Hath left me gaged. To you, Antonio,
I owe the most, in money and in love,
And from your love I have a warranty
To unburden all my plots and purposes
How to get clear of all the debts I owe.

Ant.
I pray you, good Bassanio, let me know it;
And as far as I am able, shall do
Within the eye of honour, be assured,
My purse, my person, my extremest means,
Lic all unknown to your occasions.

Bass.
In my school-days, when I had lost one
I shot his fellow of the selfsame flight, [shaft,
The selfsame way with more advised watch.
To find the other forth, and by adventuring both
I ought found both: I urge this childhood proof,
Because what follows is pure innocence.
I owe you much, and, like a willful youth,
That which I owe is lost: but if you please
To shoot another arrow that self way
Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt,
As I will watch the aim, or to find both
Or bring your latter hazard back again
And thankfully rest debtor for the first.

Ant.
You know me well, and herein spend but
To wind about my love with circumstance;
And out of doubt you do me now more wrong
In making question of my utterance
Than if you show it were all of me I have;
Then do but say to me what I should do
That in your knowledge may be me done,
And I am prest unto it: therefore, speak.

Bass.
In Belmont is a lady richly left;
And she is fair and, fairer than that word,
Of wondrous virtues: sometimes from her eyes
I did receive fair speechless messages:
Her name is Portia, nothing undervalued
To Cato's daughter, Brutus' Portia:
Nor is the wide world ignorant of her worth,
For the four winds blow in from every coast
Known and unknown, and her sunny locks
Hang on her temples like a golden fleece:
Which makes her seat of Belmont Colchos' strand,
And many Jasons come in quest of her.
O my Antonio, had I but the means
To hold a rival place with one of them,
I have a mind presages me such thing,
That I should strive to excel at once!

Ant.
Thou know'st that all my fortunes are at sea;
Neither have I money nor commodity
To raise a present sum: therefore go forth;
Try what my credit can in Venice do:
That shall be rank'd, even to the uttermost,
To furnish thee to win Portia.

Bass.
Go, presently inquire, and so will I:
Where money is, and I no question make
To have it of my trust or for my sake.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II. — Belmont.

A room in Portia's house.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por.
By my troth, Nerissa, my little body is awary of this great world.

Ner.
You would be, sweet madam, if thy miseries were in the same abundance as your good fortunes are; and yet for aught I see, they are as sick that suffred with too much as they that starve with nothing. It is no mean happiness therefore, to be seated in the mean: superlivity comes sooner by white hairs, but competency lives longer.

Por.
Good sentences and well pronounced.

Ner.
They will be so, when they are followed.

Por.
If to do were as easy as to know what were good to do, chapels had been churches and poor men's cottages princes' palaces. It is a good divine that follows his own instructions: I can easier teach twenty what were good to be done, than be one of the twenty to follow mine own counsel. The brain may devise laws for the blood, but the hot temper leaps o'er a cold decree: such a hare is madness the youth, to skip o'er the meshes of good counsel the cripple. But this reasoning is not in the fashion to choose me a husband. O me, the word 'choose!'
I may neither choose whom I would nor refuse whom I dislike: so is the will of a living daughter curbed by the will of a dead father. Is it not hard,
Nerissa, that I cannot choose one nor refuse none?

Ner.
Your father was ever virtuous; and holy men at their death have good inspirations:
therefore the lottery, that he hath devised in these three chests of gold, silver and lead, whereby who chooses his meaning chooses you, will, no doubt, never be chosen by any rightly but one who shall rightly love.
But what warmth is there in your affection towards any of these princely suitors that are already come?

Por.
I pray thee, over-name them; and as thou namest them, I will deject them, and according to my description, level at my affection.

Ner.
First, there is the Neapolitan prince.

Por.
Ay, that's a colt indeed, for he doth nothing but talk of his horse; and he makes it a great propriation to his own good parts, that he can shoe him himself. I am much afeard my lady his mother played false with a smith.

151

Ne] Then there is the County Palatine.

Por. He doth nothing but frown, as who should say 'If you will not have me, choose:' he hears merry tales and smiles not: I fear he will prove the weeping philosopher when he grows old, being so full of unnaturally sadness in his youth. I had rather he married to a moth-scat with a bone in his mouth than to either of these. God defend me from these two!

Ner. How say you by the French lord, Monsieur Le Bon?

Por. God made him, and therefore let him pass for man. In truth, I know it is a sin to be a mocker; but, he! why, he hath a horse better than the Neapolitan's, a better bad habit of frowning than the Count Palatine; he is every man in no man; if a throstle sing, he falls straight a cawing: he will fence with his own shadow: if I should marry him, I should marry twenty husbands. If he would despise me, I would forgive him, for if he love me to madness, I shall never requite him.

Ner. What say you, then, to Falconbridge, the young baron of England?

Por. You know I say nothing to him, for he understands neither Latin, French, nor Italian, and you will come into the court and swear that I have a poor pennyworth in the English. He is a proper man's picture, but, alas, who can converse with a dumb-story? How oddly he is suited! I think he bought his doublet in Italy, his round hose in France, his bonnet in Germany and his behaviour everywhere.

Ner. What think you of the Scottish lord, his neighbour?

Por. That he hath a neighbourly charity in him, for he borrowed a box of the ear of the Englishman and sworn he would pay him again when he was able: I think the Frenchman became his suery and sealed under for another.

Ner. How like you the young German, the Duke of Saxony's nephew?

Por. Very vilely in the morning, when he is sober, and most vilely in the afternoon, when he is drunk: when he is best, he is a little worse than a man, and when he is worst, he is little better than a beast; an the worst fall th'at ever fell. I hope I shall make shift to go without him.

Ner. If he should offer to choose, and choose the right casket, you should refuse to perform your father's adventure. If you should refuse to accept him.

Por. Therefore, for fear of the worst, I pray thee, set a deep glass of rhenish wine on the contrary casket, for if the devil be within and that temptation without, I know he will choose it. I will do any thing. Nerissa, ere I'll be married to a sponge.

Ner. If he need not fear, lady, the having any of these lords; they have acquainted me with their determinations: which is, indeed, to return to their home and to trouble you with no more suit, unless you may be won by some other sort than your father's imposition depending on the caskets.

Por. If I live to be as old as Sibylla, I will die as chaste as Diana, unless I be obtained by the manner of my father's will. I am glad this parcel of wooers are so reasonable, for there is not one among them but I dole on his very absence, and I pray God grant them a fair departure.

Ner. True, madam: he, of all the men that ever my foolish eyes looked upon, was the best deserving a fair lady.

Por. I remember him well, and I remember him worthy of thy praise.

Enter a Serving-man.

Now how! what news?

Serv. The four strangers seek for you, madam, to take their leave: and there is a forrecomer come from a fifth, the Prince of Morocco, who brings the prince his master will be here to-night.

Por. If I could bid the fifth welcome with so good a heart as I can bid the other four farewell, I should be glad of his approach; if he have the condition of a saint and the complexion of a devil, I had rather he should shrive me than wive me.

Come, Nerissa. [Exeunt.

While we shut the gates upon one wooer, another knocks at the door.

SCENE III.—Venice. A public place.

Enter Bassanio and Shylock.

Shy. Three thousand ducats; well.

Bass. Ay, sir, for three months.

Shy. For three months; well.

Bass. For the which, as I told you, Antonio shall

Shy. Antonio shall become bound; well.

Bass. Your answer to that.

Shy. Antonio is a good man. [tray?] Have you heard any imputation to the effect of this? Shy. Oh, no, no, no: my meaning in saying he is a good man is to have you understand me that he is sufficient. Yet his means are in supposition: he hath an argosy bound to Tripolis, another to the Indies: I understand, moreover, upon the Rialto, he hath a third at Mexico, a fourth for England, and other ventures he hath, squandered abroad. But ships are but boards, sailors but men: there be land-rats and water-rats, water-thieves and land-thieves, I mean pirates, and then there is the peril of waters, winds and rocks. The man is, notwithstanding, sufficient. Three thousand ducats; I think I may take his bond.

Bass. Be assured you may.

Shy. I will be assured I may; and, that may I be assured, I will betheke me. May I speak with Antonio?

Bass. If it please you to dine with us. [tonio?] Shy. Yes, to smell pork; to eat of the habitation which you call the Nazarite conjured the devil into. I will buy with you, sell with you, talk with you, walk with you, and so following, but I will not eat with you, drink with you, nor pray with you. What news on the Rialto? Who is he comes here?

Enter Antonio.

Bass. This is Signior Antonio. [looks! Shy. [Aside] How like a fawning publican he I hate him for he is a Christian, but more for that in low simplicity he lends out money gratis and brings down the rate of usance here with us in Venice. If I can catch him once upon the hip, I will feed fat the ancient grudge I bear him. He hates our sacred nation, and he rails, even there where merchants most do congregate, on me, my bargains and my well-won thrift, which he calls interest. Cursed be my tribe, if I forgive him!

Bass. Shylock, do you hear?

Shy. I am debating of my present store, and, by the near guess of my memory, I cannot instantly raise up the gross of full three thousand ducats. What of that?

Tubal, a wealthy Hebrew of my tribe,
SCENE I.—Belmont. A room in Portia’s house.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the Prince of Morocco and his train; Portia, Nerissa, and others attending.

Mor. Dislike me not for my complexion, The shadow’d livery of the burnish’d sun,

What should I say to you? Should I not say ‘Hath a dog money? is it possible
A cur can lend three thousand ducats? Or Shall I bend low and in a bondman’s key,
With bated breath and whispering humbleness, Say this;
‘Fair sir, you spit on me on Wednesday last; You spurn’d me such a day; another time
You call’d me dog; and for these courtesies
I’ll lend you this much moneys? ’

Ant. I am as like to call thee so again,
To spit on thee again, to spurn thee too.
If thou wilt lend this money, lend it not
As to thy friends; for thus did friendship take
A breed for barren metal of his friend?
But lend it rather to thine enemy,
Who, if he break, thou mayst with better face
Exact the penalty.

Shy. Why, look yon, how you storm! I would be friends with you and have your love,
Forget the shame that you have stain’d me with,
Supply your present wants and take no doit
Of usance for my moneys, and you’ll not hear me:
This is kind I offer.

Bass. This was kindess.

Shy. Go with me to a notary, seal me there
Your single bond; and, in a merry sport,
If you repay me not on such a day,
In such a place, such sum or sums as are Express’d in the condition, let the forfeit
Be nominated for an equal pound
Of your fair flesh, to be cut off and taken
In what part of your body pleaseth me.

Ant. Content, i’ faith; I’ll seal to such a bond
And say there is much kindness in the Jew.

Bass. You shall not seal to such a bond for me;
I’ll rather dwell in my necessity.

Ant. Why, fear not, master; I will not forfeit it;
Within these two months, that’s a month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond.

Shy. O father Abram, what these Christians are,
Whose own hard dealings teach them suspect
The thoughts of others! Pray you, tell me this;
If he should break his day, what should I gain
By the execution of the forfeit?
A pound of man’s flesh taken from a man
Is not so estimable, profitable neither,
As flesh of nations, beasts, or geats, I say,
To buy his favour, I extend this friendship:
If he will take it, so; if not, alack!
And, for my love, I pray you wrong me not.

Ant. Yes, Shylock, I will seal unto this bond.

Shy. Than meet me forthwith at the notary’s;
Give him direction for this merry bond,
And I will go and purrse the ducats straight,
See to my house, left in the fearful guard
Of an authority knife, and presently
I will be with you.

The Hebrew will turn Christian: he grows kind.

Bass. I like not fair terms and a villain’s mind.

Ant. Come on: in this there can be no dismay;
My ships come home a month before the day.

[Exeunt.]
Hath fear’d the valiant: by my love, I swear
The best-regarded virgins of our clime
Have loved it all, and I will not be false to this hue.
Except I stand your thoughts, my gentle queen.

Por. In terms of choice I am not solely led
By nice direction of a maiden’s eyes; besides,
Besides, the lottery of my destiny
Bars me the right of voluntary choosing:
But if my father had not scanted me
And hedges me by his will, to yield myself
His wife who wins me by that means I told you,
Yourself, renowned prince, then stood as fair
As any comer I have looked on yet
For my affection.

Mor. Even for that I thank you:
Therefore, I pray you, lead me to the caskets
To try my fortune. By this simulacrum
That slew the Sophia and a Persian prince
That won three fields of Sultan Solyma,
I would outstare the sternest eyes that look,
Outbrave the heart most daring on the earth,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-bear,
Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady. But, alas the while!
If Hercules and Lichas play at dice
Which is the better man, the greater throw
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Meliboeus by his hazard.
And so may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that which one unworthier may attain,
And die with grieving.

Por. You must take your chance,
And either not attempt to choose at all
Or swear before you choose, if you choose wrong
Never to speak to lady afterward.

Mor. Nor will not. Come, bring me unto my chance.

Por. First, forward to the temple: after dinner
Your hazard shall be made.

Mor. Good fortune then!

To make me blest or cursed’st among men.

[Corants, and cavant.

SCENE II.—Venice. A street.

Enter Launcelot.

Lau. Certainly my conscience will serve me to run from this Jew my master. The fiend is at mine elbow and tempts me saying to me ‘Gobbo, Launcelot Gobbo, good Launcelot,’ or ‘gobbo, or’ good Launcelot Gobbo, use your legs, take the start away.’ My conscience says ‘No’; take head, honest Launcelot; take head, honest Gobbo, or, as aforesaid, honest Launcelot Gobbo: do not run; scorn running with thy heels.’ Well, the most courageous fiend bids me pack: ‘Yea!’ says the fiend; ‘away!’ says the fiend; ‘for the heavens, raise up a brave wind,’ says the fiend; ‘and run.’ Well, my conscience, hugging about the neck of my heart, says very wisely to me ‘My honest friend Launcelot, being an honest man’s son,’ or rather an honest woman’s son: for, indeed, my father did something smack, something grow to, he had a kind of taste; well, my conscience says, ‘Launcelot, budge not.’ ‘Budge,’ says the fiend. ‘Budge not,’ says my conscience. ‘Conscience,’ say I, ‘you counsel well;’ ‘Friend,’ say I, ‘you counsel well:’ to be ruled by my conscience, I should stay with the Jew my master, who, God bless him, is a kind of devil, and, to run away from the Jew, I should be ruled by the fiend, who, saying your reverence, is the devil himself. Certainly the Jew is the very devil incarnate; and, in my conscience, my conscience is but a kind of hard conscience, to offer to counsel me to stay with the Jew. The fiend gives the more friendly counsel: I will run, fiend; my heels are at your command; I will run. Enter old Gobbo, with a basket.

Gob. Master young man, you, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew’s?

Lau. [Aside] O heavens, this is my true-begotten father! who, being more than sand-blind, high-gravel blind, knows me not: I will try confusions with him.

Gob. Master young gentleman, I pray you, which is the way to master Jew’s?

Lau. Turn up on your right hand at the next turning, but, at the next turning of all, on your left; marry, at the very next turning, turn of no hand, but turn down indirectly to the Jew’s house.

Gob. By God’s soul, ’twill be a hard way to hit. Can you tell me whether one Launcelot, that dwells with him, dwell with him or no?

Lau. Talk you of young Master Launcelot? [Aside] Mark me now; now will I raise the waters. Talk you of young Master Launcelot?

Gob. No master, sir, but a poor man’s son: his father, though I say it, is an honest exceeding poor man and, God be thanked, well to live.

Lau. Well, let his father be what a’ will, we talk of young Master Launcelot.

Gob. Your worship’s friend and Launcelot, sir.

Lau. He’s your worship’s friend and, old man, ergo, I beseech you, talk you of young Master Launcelot?

Gob. Of Launcelot, ain’t pleasure your mastership.

Lau. Ergo, Master Launcelot, Talk not of Master Launcelot, father, for the young gentleman, according to Pates and Destinies and such odd sayings, Master Launcelot, and such branches of learning, is indeed deceased, or, as you would say in plain terms, gone to heaven.

Gob. Marry, Good forbid! the boy was the very staff of my age, my very prop.

Lau. Do I look like a cudgel or a horse-post, a staff or a prop? Do you know me, father?

Gob. Alack the day, I know you not, young gentleman; but, I pray you, tell me, is my boy, God rest his soul, alive or dead?

Lau. Do you not know me, father?

Gob. Alack, sir, I am sand-blind; I know you not.

Lau. Nay, indeed, if you had your eyes, you might fail of the knowing me; it is a wise father that knows his own child. Well, old man, I will tell you news of your son: give me your blessing: truth will come to light; murder cannot be hid long: a man’s son may, but at the length truth will come out, and it shall be cried, ‘Huzza!’

Gob. Pray you, sir, stand up: I am sure you are not Launcelot, my boy.

Lau. Pray you, let’s have no more fooling about it, but give me your blessing: I am Launcelot, your boy that was, your son that is, your child that shall be.

Gob. I cannot think you are my son.

Lau. I know not what I shall think of that: but I am Launcelot, the Jew’s man, and I am sure Marjory your wife is my mother.

Gob. Her name is Marjory, indeed: I’ll be sworn, if thou be Launcelot, thou art mine own flesh and blood. Lord worshipped might he be! what a bearded hast thou got! then hast got more hair on thy chin than Dobbim my fill-horse has on his tail.

Lau. It should seem, then, that Dobbim’s tail grows backward! I am sure he had more hair of his tail than I have of my face when I last saw him.

Gob. Lord, how art thou changed! How dost thou and thy master agree? I have brought him a present. How ’gree you now?

Lau. Well, well: but, for mine own part, as I have set up my rest to run away, so I will not rest
THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE IV.

Enter Bassanio, with Leonard and other followers.

Bass. You may do so; but let it be so hasted that supper be ready at the farthest by five of the clock. See these letters delivered; put the liveries to making, and desire Gratiano to come anon to my lodging. [Exit a Servant.]

Lau. To him, father.

Gob. God bless your worship!

Bass. Gramercy! wouldst thou anger me?

Gob. Here's my son, sir, a poor boy.

Lau. Not a poor boy, sir, but the rich Jew's man; that would, sir, as my father shall specify—

Bass. To hath a great infection, sir, as one would say, to serve.

Lau. Indeed, the short and the long is, I serve the Jew, and have a desire, as my father shall specify—

Gob. His master and he, saving your worship's reverence, are scarce cater-consumers—

Lau. The truth is, that the Jew, having done me wrong, doth cause me, as my father, being, I hope, an old man, shall frustrate unto you—

Gob. I have here a dish of doves that I would bestow upon your worship, and my suit is—

Lau. In very brief, the suit is impertinent to myself, as your worship shall know by this honest old man; and, though I say it, though old man, yet poor man, my father.

Bass. One speak for both. What would you?

Lau. Serve you, sir.

Gob. That is the very defect of the matter, sir.

Bass. I know thee well; thou hast obtain'd thy Shylock thy master spoke with me this day. A suit: And had prefer'd thee, if it be preferment To leave a rich Jew's service, to become The follower of so poor a gentleman.

Lau. The old proverb is very well parted between my master Shylock and you, sir: you have the grace of God, sir, and he hath enough. [son]

Bass. Thou speak'st it well. Go, father, with thy take leave of thy old master and inquire My lodging out. Give him a lively More guarded than his fellows': see it done.

Lau. Father, in. I cannot get a service, no; I have never a tongue in my head. Well, if any man in Italy have a fairer table which doth offer to swear upon a book, I shall have good fortune. Go to, here's a simple line of life: here's a small tribe of wives: alas, fifteen wives is nothing! eleven widows and nine maidis is a simple coming-in for one man; and then to scape among threes, and to be in peril of my life with the edge of a feather-bed; here are simple scapes. Well, if Fortune be a woman, she's a good wench for this gear. Father, come; I'll take my leave of the Jew in the twinkling of an eye. [Exit Launcelot and old Gobbo.]

Bass. I pray thee, good Leonato, think on this: These things being bought and orderly bestowed, Return in haste, for I do feast to-night My best-esteem'd acquaintance; bide thee, go. Lenin. My best endeavours shall be done herein.

Enter Gratiano.

Gra. Where is your master?

Leon. Yonder, sir, he walks. [Exit.]

Gra. Signior Bassanio! Bass. Gratiano!
ACT II.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE VI.

Lor. I know the hand: in faith 'tis a fair hand; And whiter than the paper it writ on Is the fair hand that writ.

Gra. Love, news, in faith.

Laun. By your leave, sir.

Lor. Whither goest thou, sir?

Laun. Marry, sir, to bid my old master the Jew to sup to-night with my new master the Christian.

Lor. Hold here, take this: tell gentle Jessica I will not fail her; speak it privately.

Go, gentlemen. [Exit Launcelot.

Will you prepare you for this masque to-night? I am provided of a torch-bearer.

Salar. Ay, marry, I'll be gone about it straight.

Salan. And so will I.

Lor. Meet me and Gratiano At Gratiano's lodging some hour hence.

Salar. 'Tis good we do so. [Exit Salan. and Salan.

SCENE V. — The same. Before Shylock's house.

Enter Shylock and Launcelot.

Shy. Wert thou thou sall see, thy eyes shall be thy judge.

The difference of old Shylock and Bassanio: —

What, Jessica! — thou shalt not command me, As thou hast done with me: — What, Jessica! —

And sleep and snore, and read apparel out: —

Why, Jessica, I say! —

Why, Jessica!

Laun. Your worship was wont to tell me that I could do nothing without bidding.

Enter Jessica.

Jes. Call you, what is your will?

Shy. I am bid forth to supper, Jessica: There are my keys. But wherefore should I go? I am not bid for love; they flatter me: But yet I'll go in hate, to feed upon The prodigal Christian. Jessica, my girl, Look to my house. I am right loth to go; There is some ill a-brewing towards my rest, For I did dream of money-bags to-night.

Laun. I beseech you, sir, go: my young master doth expect your reproach.

Shy. So do I his.

Laun. An they have conspired together, I will not say you shall see a masque; but if you do, then it was not for nothing that my nose fell a-bleeding on Black-Monday last at six o' clock i' the morning, falling out that year on Ash-Wednesday was four year in the afternoon.

Jes. What, are there masques? Hear you me, Jessica?

Shy. Lock up my doors; and when you hear the drum And the vile squealing of the wry-neck'd fife, Clamber not you up to the casements then, Nor thrust your head into the public street To gaze on Christian fools with varnish'd faces, But stop my house's ears. I mean my casements: Let not the sound of shallow toppery enter My sober house. By Jacob's staff, I swear, I have no mind of feasting forth to-night:

But I will go. Go you before me, sirrah; Say I will come.

Laun. I will go before, sir. Mistress, look out at window, for all this;

There will come a Christian by, —

Will be worth a Jewess' eye. [Exit.

Shy. What says that fool of Hagar's offspring, ha? —

Jes. His words were ' Farewell mistress,' ' nothing

Shy. The patch is kind enough, but a huge feeder; Snail-slow in profit, and he sleeps by day More than he did in Venice. Have you not with me; Therefore I part with him, and part with him To one that I would have him help to waste His borrow'd purse. Well, Jessica, go in: Perhaps I will return immediately;

Do as I bid you; shut doors after you: Fast bind, fast find;

A proverb never stale inithy mind. [Exit.

Jes. Farewell; and if my fortune be not crost, I have a father, you a daughter, lost. [Exit.

SCENE VI. — The same.

Enter Gratiano and Salarino, masqued.

Gra. This is the pent-house under which Lorenzo Desired us to make stand.

Salar. His hour is almost past.

Gra. And it is marvel how it dwells his hour, For lovers ever run before the clock.

Salar. O, ten times faster Venus' pigeons fly To seal love's bonds new-made, than they are wont To keep oblied faith unforfeited!

Shy. That ever holds: who riseth from a feast With that keen appetite that he sits down? Where is the horse that doth unread again His tedious measures with the melting fire That he did pace them first? All things that are, Are with more spirit chased than enjoy'd. How like a younger or a prodigal The scarfed bark puts from her native bay, Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind! How like the prodigal doth she return, With over-weather'd ribs and ragged sails, Lean, rent and beggar'd by the strumpet wind!

Salar. Here comes Lorenzo: more of this hereafter.

Enter Lorenzo.

Lor. Sweet friends, your patience for my long Not I, but my affairs, have made you wait: [abode; When you shall please to play the thieves for wives, I'll watch as long for you then. Approach; Here dwells my father Jew. Ho! who's within?

Enter Jessica, above, in boy's clothes.

Jes. Who are you? Tell me, for more certainty, Albeit I'll swear that I do know your tongue.

Lor. Lorenzo, and thy love.

Jes. Lorenzo, certain, and my love indeed, For who love I so much? And who knows But you, Lorenzo, whether I am yours? [thou art.

Lor. Heaven and thy thoughts are witness that Jes. Here, catch this casket; it is worth the I am glad 'tis night, you do not look on me, [pains. For I am much ashamed of my exchange: But love is blind and lovers cannot see The pretty faces that they make their own; For if they could, Cupid himself would blush To see me thus transformed to a boy.

Lor. Descend, for you must be my torch-bearer. Jes. What, must I hold a candle to my shame? They in themselves, good sooth, are too too light. Lor. Why, it is an office of discovery, love; And I should be obscured.

Lor. So are you, sweet, Even in the lovely garnish of a boy.

But come at once;
ACT II.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE VIII.

For the close night doth play the runaway,
And we are stay'd for at Bassanio's feast.

Jes. I will make fast the doors, and gild myself
With some more ducats, and be with you straight.
[Exit above.]

Gra. Now, by my hood, a Gentlele and no Jew.
Lor. Deshrew me but I love her heartily;
For if I love her, who amongst these
And fair she is, if that mine eyes be true,
And true she is, as she hath proved herself,
And therefore, like herself, wise, fair and true,
Shall she be placed in my constant soul.

Enter Jessica, below.

What, art thou come? On, gentlemen; away! Our masquing mates by this time for us stay.
[Exit with Jessica and Salario.

Enter Antonio.

Ant. Who's there?
Gra. Signior Antonio!
Ant. Fie, fie, Gratiano! where are all the rest?
'Tis nine o'clock; our friends all stay for you.
No masque to-night: the wind is come about;
Rassiano presently will go aboard;
I have sent twenty out to seek for you.

Gra. I am glad on't: I desire no more delight.
Than to be under sail and gone to-night. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—Belmont. A room in Portia's house.

Flourish of cornets. Enter Portia, with the Prince of Morocco, and their trains.

Por. Go draw aside the curtains and discover
The several caskets to this noble prince.
Now make your choice.

Mor. The first, of gold, who this inscription bears,
'Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire.'
The second, silver, which this promise carries,
'Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves.'
This third, dull lead, with warning all as blunt,
'Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath.'
How shall I know if I do choose the right?

Por. The one of them contains my picture, prince;
If you choose that, then I am yours withal. [see;]
Mor. Some god direct my judgment! Let me
I will survey the inscriptions back again.
What says this leaden casket? [hath.]
'Who chooseth me shall give and hazard all he must give: for what? for lead? hazard for lead? This casket threatens. Men that hazard all
Do it in hope of fair advantages:
A golden mind stomps not to shows of dross;
I'll then nor give nor hazard aught for lead.
What says the silver with her virgin hue?
'Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves.'
As much as he deserves? Pause there, Morocco,
And weigh thy value with an even hand;
If thou best rated by thy estimation,
Thou dost deserve enough; and yet enough
May not extend so far as to the lady:
And yet to be afraid of my deserving
Were but a weak disabling of myself.
As much as I desire! Why, that's the lady:
I do in birth deserve her, and in fortunes,
In graces and in qualities of breathing;
But more than these, in love I do deserve.
What if I stray whose better judgment here?
Let's see now more this saying graved in gold;
'Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire.'
Why, that's the lady; all the world desires her;
From the four corners of the earth they come,
To kiss this shrine, this mortal-breathing saint:
The Hyrcanian deserts and the distant wilds
Of wide Arabia are as throughfares now

For princes to come view fair Portia:
The watery kingdom, whose ambitions head
Spits in the face of heaven, is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits, but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia.
One of these three contains her heavenly picture.
Is't like that lead contains her? 'T were damnation
To think such a thought: she is not too gross
To rib her cencloth in the obscure grave.
Or shall I think in silver she's immersed,
Being ten times undervalued to tried gold?
O sinful thought! Never so rich a gem
Was set in worse than gold. They have in England
A coin that bears the figure of an angel
Stamped in gold, but that's insculp'd upon;
But here an angel in a golden bed
Lies all within. Deliver me the key:
Here do I choose, and thrive I as I may! [there;]
Por. There, take it, prince; and if my form lie
Then I am yours. [O hell! what have we here?]
A carrion Death, within whose empty eye
There is a written scroll! I'll read the writing.
[Reads] All that glister is not gold;
Often have you heard that told: My heart hath twenty out to seek for you.
But my outside to behold:
Gilded tombs do worms infold.
Had you been as wise as bold,
Young in limbs, in judgment old,
Your answer had not been inscriv'd:
Ere you well; your suit is cold.
Cold, indeed; and labour lost:
Then, farewell, heat, and welcome, frost!
Portia, adieu. I have too grieved a heart
To take a tedious leave: thus losers part.
[Exit with his train. Flourish of cornets.

Por. A gentle riddance. Draw the curtains, go,
Let all of his complexion choose me so. [Exeunt.

SCENE VIII.—Venice. A street.

Enter Salario and Salarino.

Salar. Why, man, I saw Bassanio under sail:
With him is Gratiano gone along;
And in their ship I am sure Lorenzo is not.
Salario. The villain Jew with outcries raised the duke,
Who went with him to search Bassanio's ship.
Salar. He came too late, the ship was under sail:
But there the duke was given to understand
That in a gondola were seen together
Lorenzo and his amorous Jessica:
Besides, Antonio certified the duke
They were not with Bassanio in his ship.
Salar. I never heard a passion so confused,
So strange, outrageous; [he unlocks the golden casket
As the dog Jew did utter in the streets:
'My daughter! O my ducats! O my daughter!
Fled with a Christian! O my Christian ducats!
Justice! the law! my ducats, and my daughter!
A scaled bag, two sealed bags of ducats,
Of double ducats, stolen from me by my daughter!
And jewels, two stones, two rich and precious stones,
Stolen by my daughter! Justice! and the girl;
She hath the stones upon her, and the ducats,
Salar. Why, all the boys in Venice follow him,
Crying, his stones, his daughter, and his ducats.
Salar. Let good Antonio look he keep his day,
Or he shall pay for this.
Salar. Marry, well remember'd.
I reason'd with a Frenchman yesterday,
Who told me, in the narrow seas that part
The French and English, there miscarried
A vessel of our country richly fraught:
I thought upon Antonio when he told me;
And wish'd in silence that it were not his.
SCENE IX.—Delmont.  A room in Portia’s house.

Enter Nerissa with a Servitor.

Ner. Quick, quick, I pray thee; draw the curtain straight:
The Prince of Arragon hath ta’en his oath,
And comes to his election presently.

Flourish of cornets.  Enter the Prince of Arragon,
Portia, and their train.

Por. Behold, there stand the caskets, noble prince;
If you choose that wherein I am contained,
Straight shall our nuptial rites be solemnized:
But if you fail, without more speech, my lord,
You must be gone from hence immediately.

Ar. I am enjoin’d by oath to observe three things:
First, never to unfold to any one
Which casket ’twas I chose; next, if I fail
Of the right casket, never in my life
To woo a maid in way of marriage:
Lastly, If I do fail in fortune of my choice,
Immediately to leave you and be gone.

Por. To these injunctions every one doth swear
That comes to hazard for my worthless self.

Ar. And so have I. Address me, fortune now
To my heart’s hope!  Gold; silver; and base lead.
Who chooseth me must give and hazard all he hath,
You shall look fairer, ere I give or hazard,
What says the golden chest?  ha! let me see;
Who chooseth me shall gain what many men desire,
What many men desire!  that ‘many’ may be meant
By the fool multitude, that choose by show;
Not learning more than the fool eye doth teach;
Which prises not to the interior, but, like the martlet,
Builds in the weather on the outward wall,
Even in the force and road of custom,
I will not choose what many men desire,
Because I will not jump with common spirits
And rank me with the barbarous multitudes.
Why, then to thee, thou silver treasure-house;
Tell me once more what title thou hast bear’d;
Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves;
And well said too; for who shall go about
To cozen fortune and be honourable
Without the stamp of merit?  Let none presume
To wear an undeserved dignity.

O, that estates, degrees and offices
Were not derived corruptly, and that clear honour
Were purchased by the merit of the wearer!
How many then should cover that stand bare!
How many be commanded that command!
How much low prosperity would then be glean’d
From the true seed of honour!  and how much honour
Fick’d from the chaff and ruin of the times
To be new-varnish’d!  Well, but to my choice:
‘Who chooseth me shall get as much as he deserves.’
I will assume desert.  Give me a key for this,
And instantly unlock my fortunes here.

[He opens the silver casket.

Por. Too long a pause for that which you find there.

Ar. What’s here?  the portrait of a blinking idiot,
Presenting me a schedule!  I will read it.
How much unlike art thou to Portia!
How much unlike my hopes and my deservings!
‘Who chooseth me shall have as much as he deserves.’

Did I desire no more than a fool’s head?
Is that my prize?  are my deserts no better?
Por. To offend, and judge, are distinct offices
And of opposed natures.

Ar. What is here?

[Reads] The fire seven times tried this:
Seven times tried that judgment is,
That did never choose amiss.
Some there be that shadows kiss,
Such have but a shadow’s bliss:
There be fools alive, I wis,
Silver’d o’er; and so was this.
Take what wife you will to bed,
I will ever be your head:
So be gone: you are sped.

Still more fool shall I appear
By the time I linger here:
With one fool’s head I came to woo,
But I go away with two.
Sweet, adieu.  I’ll keep my oath,
Patiently to bear my wroth.

[Exeunt Arragon and train.

Por. Thus hath the candle sing’d the moth.
O, these deliberate fools!  when they do choose,
They have the wisdom by their wit to lose.

Ner. The ancient saying is no heresy,
Hanging and wiving goes by destiny.

Por. Come, draw the curtain, Nerissa.

Enter a Servant.

Ser. Where is my lady?

Por. Here; what would my lord?

Ser. Madam, there is an ambassador at your gate
A young Venetian, one that comes before
To signify the approaching of his lord;
From whom he bringeth sensible regrets,
To wit, besides commend and courteous breath,
Gifts of rich value.  Yet I have not seen
So likely an ambassador of love:
A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly summer was at hand,
As this fore-spurren comes before his lord.

Por. No more, I pray thee; I am half afraid
Thou wilt say anon he is some kin to thee,
Thou spendst such high-day wit in praising him.
Come, come, Nerissa; for I know to see
Quick Cupid’s post that comes so mannerly.

Ner. Bassanio, lord Love, if thy will it be!

[Exeunt.
ACT III.

SCENE I.—Venice. A street.

Enter Salanio and Salario.

SALANIO. Now, what news on the Rialto?

SALARIO. Why, yet it lives there unchecked that Antonio hath a ship of rich lading wrecked on the narrow seas; the Goodwins, I think they call the place; a very dangerous flat and fatal, where the carcases of men and beasts lie buried, as they say, if my gossip Report be an honest woman of her word.

SALANIO. I would she were as lying a gossip in that as ever knapped ginger or made her neighbours believe she wept for the death of a third husband. But it is true, without any ships of prolixity or crossing the plain highway of talk, that the good Antonio, the honest Antonio,—O that I had a title good enough to keep his name company! —

SALARIO. Come, the full stop.

SALANIO. Ha! what sayest thou? Why, the end is, he has lost a ship.

SALARIO. It would it might prove the end of his losses.

SALANIO. Let me say 'tamen' betimes, lest the devil cross my prayer, for here he comes in the likeness of a Jew.

Enter Shylock.

SHYLOCK. How now, Shylock! what news among the merchants?

SALANIO. You knew, none so well, none so well as you, of my daughter's flight.

SALARIO. That's certain: I, for my part, knew the tailor that made the wings she flew withal.

SALANIO. And Shylock, for his own part, knew the bird was fledged; and then it is the complexion of them all to leave the dam.

SHYLOCK. She is damned for it.

SALANIO. That's certain, if the devil may be her.'

SALARIO. My own flesh and blood to rebel! — [Judge.

SALANIO. Out upon it, old carnabal! rebel it at these years?

SHYLOCK. I say, my daughter is my flesh and blood.

SALANIO. There is more difference between thy flesh and hers than between jet and ivory; more between thy bloods than there is between red wine and rhenish. But tell us, do you hear whether Antonio have had any loss at sea or no?

SHYLOCK. There I have another hand match: a bankrupt, a prodigal, who dare scarce show his head on the Rialto; a beggar, that was used to come so snug upon the mart; let him look to his bond: he was wont to call me usurer; let him look to his bond: he was wont to lend money for a Christian creditor; let him look to his bond.

SALANIO. Why, I am sure, if he forfeit, thou wilt not take his flesh: what's that good for?

SHYLOCK. To bait dish withal: if it will feel nothing else, it will feel my revenge. He hath disgraced me, and hindered me half a million; laughed at my losses, mocked at my gains, scorned my nation, thwarted my bargains, cooled my friends, heated mine enemies; and what's his reason? I am a Jew. Hath not a Jew eyes? hath not a Jew hands, organs, dimensions, senses, affections, passions? fed with the same bread, and clothed with the same cloths, fit in the same bed, walk in the same street; which account for itself no less than for any part of my stock? Is it not so with you? Then if I am so like you in the rest, we will resemble you in that. If a Jew wrong a Christian, what is his humility? Revenge. If a Christian wrong a Jew, what should his sufferance be by Christian example? Why, revenge. The villain you teach me, I will execute, and it shall go hard but I will better the instruction.

Enter a Servant.

SALANIO. Servant, Gentlemen, my master Antonio is at his house and desires to speak with you both.

SALARIO. We have been up and down to seek him.

Enter Tubal.

TUBAL. Salanio. Here comes another of the tribe: a third cannot be matched, unless the devil himself turn Jew.

[Servant. Salanio, Servant, and Servant.

SALANIO. How now, Tubal! what news from Genoa? hast thou found my daughter?

TUBAL. I often came where I did hear of her, but cannot find her.

SHYLOCK. Why, there, there, there, there! a diamond gone, cost me two thousand ducats in Frankfort! The curse never fell upon our nation till now: I never felt it till now: two thousand ducats in that; and other precious, precious jewels. I would my daughter were dead at my foot, and the jewels in her ear! would she were hearsed at my foot, and the ducats in her coffin! No news of them? Why, so; and I know not what's spent in the search: why, thou loss upon loss! the thief gone with so much, and so much to find the thief; and no satisfaction, no revenge; nor no ill luck stirring but what lights on my shoulders; no sighs but of my breathing; no tears but of my shedding.

TUBAL. Hath an argosy cast away, coming from Tripolis?

SHYLOCK. I thank God. I thank God. Is't true? is't true?

TUBAL. I spoke with some of the sailors that escaped the wreck.

SHYLOCK. I thank thee, good Tubal; good news, good news! ha, ha! where? in Genoa?

TUBAL. Your daughter spent in Genoa, as I heard, in one night fourscore ducats.

SHYLOCK. Thou stickiest a dagger in me: I shall never see my gold again: fourscore ducats at a sitting! fourscore ducats!

TUBAL. There came divers of Antonio's creditors in my company to Venice, that swear he cannot choose but break.

SHYLOCK. I am very glad of it: I'll plague him: I'll torture him: I am glad of it.

TUBAL. One of them showed me a ring that he had of your daughter for a monkey.

SHYLOCK. Out upon her! Thou torturest me, Tubal: it was my turquoise: I had it of Leah when I was a bachelor: I would not have given it for a wilderness of monkeys.

TUBAL. But Antonio is certainly undone.

SHYLOCK. Nay, that's true, that's very true. Go, Tubal, fee me an officer: bespeak him a fortnight before. I will have the heart of him, if he forfeit: for, were he out of Venice, I can make what merchandise I will. Go, go, Tubal, and meet me at our synagogue: go, good Tubal; at our synagogue, Tubal.

[Exeunt.]
ACT III.

"THE MERCHANT OF VENICE."

SCENE II.

I would not lose you; and you know yourself,
Hate counsels not in such a quality.
But lest you should not mutiny, and stand well,—
And yet a maiden hath no tongue but thought,—
I would detain you here some month or two Before you venture for me. I could teach you
How to choose right, but I am then forsown;
So will I never be: so may you miss me;
But if you cannot, we have none a sin,
That I had been forsown. Beswred your eyes,
They have o’erlook’d me and divided me;
One half of me is yours, the other half yours,
Mine own, I would say; but if mine, then yours,
And so all yours. O, these naughty times
Put to work to work with their own rights!
And so, though yours, not yours. Prove it so,
Let fortune go to hell for it, not I.
I speak too long; but ‘tis to peize the time,
To eke it and to draw it out in length,
To stay you from election.

Bass. Let me choose;

Por. For as I am, I live upon the rack.

Bass. Upon the rack, Bassanio! then confess
What treason there is mingled with your love.

Bass. None but that ugly treason of mistrust,
Which makes me fear the enjoying of my love:
There may as well be anxious and life

"Twixt snow and fire, as treason and my love.

Por. Ay, but I fear you speak upon the rack,
Where men enforced do speak anything.

Bass. Promise me life, and I’ll confess the truth.

Por. Well then, confess and live.

Bass. Confess! and ‘love!’

Had been the very sum of my confession:
O happy torment, when my torturer
Doth teach me answers for deliverance!
But let me to my fortune and the caskets.

Por. Away, then! I am lock’d in one of them:
If you do love me, you will find me out.

Erissa and the rest, stand all aloof.

Let music sound while he doth make his choice;
Then, if he lose, he makes a swan-like end,
Failing in music: that the comparison
May stand more proper, my eye shall be the stream
And watery death-bed for him. He may win;
And music is music then: that music is Even as the flourish when true subjects bow
To a new-crowned monarch: such it is

As are those dulcet sounds in break of day
That creep into the dreaming bridewell’s ear
And summon him to marriage. Now he goes,
With no less pride but more love, than young Alcides, when he did redeem
The virgin tribute paid by howling Troy
To the sea-monster: I stand for sacrifice;
The rest aloft are the Dardanian wives,
With beauteous visages, come forth to view
The issue of the exploit. Go, Hercules!

Live thou, I live; with much much more dismay
I view the fight than thou that makest the fray.

Music, whilst Bassanio comments on the caskets to himself.

SONG.

Tell me where is fancy bred,
Or in the heart or in the head?
How begot, how nourished?
Reply, reply.
It is engender’d in the eye,

With gazing fed and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies.

Let us all ring fancy’s knell:
I’ll begin it,—Ding, dong, bell.

All. Ding, dong, bell.

Bass. So may the outward show be last them—
The world is still deceived with ornament,
In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt

But, being seasoned with a gracious voice,
Obscures the show of evil? In religion,
What dark and sordid, but a fair renown!
Will bless it and approve it with a text,
Hiding the grossness with fair ornament?
There is no vice so simple but assumes
Some mark of virtue on its outward parts:
How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false
As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their cliff
The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars.
Who, inward search’d, have livres white as milk;
And these assume but valour’s excrement

To render them redoubled! Look on beauty,
And you shall see ‘tis purchased by the weight;
Which in the flesh doth work but to their rights!
Making them lightest that wear most of it:
So are those crisp’d snaky golden locks
Which make such wanton gambols with the wind,
Upon supposed fairness, often known
To be the dowry of a second head,
The skull that bred them in the sepulchre.
Thus ornament is but the guarded shore
To a most dangerous sea; the beauteous scarf
Veiling an Indian beauty; in a word,
The seeming truth which cunning times put on
To entrap the wise. Therefore, thou gaunt guilt,
Hard food for Mihals, I will none of thee.
Nor now a false idol, a common drudge
’Tween man and man: but thou, thou meagre lead,
Which rather threateneth than dost promise aught,
Thy paleness moves me more than eloquence;
And here choose I: joy be the consequence!

Por. [Aside] How all the other passions fled to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash-embraced despair,
And shuddering fear, and green-eyed jealousy!
O love,
Be moderate; alay thy ecstasy;
In measure rein thy joy: scent this excess.
I feel too much thy blessing: make it less,
For fear I surfeit.

Bass. What find I here?

[Opening the leaden casket.]

Fair Portia’s counterfeit! What demi-god
Hath come so near creation? Move these eyes?
Or whether, riding on the backs of mine
Seem the thoughts motion? Yet are several lips,
Parted with sugar breath: so sweet a dart
Should sunder such sweet friends. Here in her hairs
The painter plays the spider and hath woven
A golden mesh to entrap the hearts of men
Faster than grats in cobwebs: but her eyes,—
How e’er they were press’d and press’d, and press’d the more,
Methinks it should have power to steal both his
And leave itself unburnish’d. Yet look, how far
The substance of my praise doth wrong this shadow
In underprizing it, so far this shadow
Doth limp behind the substance. Here’s the scroll,
The continent and umbrage of my fortune.

[Reads] You that choose not by the view,
Chance as fair and choose as true!
Since this fortune falls to you,
Be content and seek no new.
If you be well pleased with this
And hold your fortune for your bliss,
Turn you where your lady is
And claim her with a loving kiss.

A gentle scroll. Fair lady, by your leave;
I come by note, to give and to receive.
Like one of two contending in a prize,
That the choice hath done one’s eyes;
Hearing applause and universal shout,
Giddy in spirit, still gazing in a doubt
Whether those peals of praise be his or no;
So, thrice-fair lady, stand I, even so;
As doubtful whether what I see be true,
Until confirm’d, sign’d, ratified by you.

Por. You see me, Lord Bassanio, where I stand,

ACT III.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE II.

Such as I am: though for myself alone
I would not be ambitious in my wish,
To wish myself much better; yet, for you
I would be trebled twenty times myself;
A thousand times more fair, ten thousand times
More generous.

That only to stand high in your account,
I might in virtues, beauties, living, friends,
Exceed account; but the full sum of me
Is sum of something, which, to term in gross,
Is an unlesson'd girl, unschool'd, unpractised;
Happy then, she is now married.
But she may learn; happier than this,
She is not bred so dull but she can learn;
Happiest of all is that her gentle spirit
Commits itself to yours to be directed,
As from her lord, her governor, her king.
Myself and what is mine to you and yours
Is now converted; but now I was the lord
Of this fair mansion, master of my servants,
Queen o'er myself; and even now, but now,
This house, these servants and this same myself
Are yours, my lord: I give them with this ring;
Which, when you can, will give away,
Let it presage the ruin of your love
And be my vantage to exclaim on you.

Bass. Madam, you have bereft me of all words,
Only my blood speaks to you in my veins;
And there is such confusion in my powers,
As I am undone, as I am faithless fair.
By a beloved prince, there doth appear
Among the buzzing pleased multitude;
Where every something, being blent together,
Turns to a wild of nothing; save of joy,
Express'd and not express'd. But when this ring
Parts from this finger, then parts life from hence:
O, then be bold to say Bassanio's dead!

Ner. My lord and lady, it is now our time,
That have stood by and seen our wishes prosper,
To cry, good joy: good joy, my lord and lady!

Gra. My lord Bassanio and my gentle lady,
I wish you all the joy that you can wish;
For I am sure you can wish none from me:
And when your honours mean to solemnize
The bargain of your faith, I do beseech you,
Even at that time I may be married too.

Bass. With all my heart, so thou canst get a wife.

Gra. I thank your lordship; I have got me one.
My eyes, my lord, can look as swift as yours:
You saw the ninestre, I beheld the maid:
You loved, I loved for intercession.

No more pertains to me, my lord, than you.
Your fortune stood upon theasket there,
And so did mine too, as the matter falls;
For wooing here until I saw the rain.

And swearing till my very roof was dry
With oaths of love, at last, if promise last,
I got a promise of this fair one here
To have her love, provided that your fortune
Accomplish her mistress.

Por. Is this true, Nerissa?

Ner. Madam, it is, so you stand pleased withal.

Bass. And do you, Gratiano, mean good faith?

Gra. Yes, faith, my lord.

Bass. Our feast shall be much honour'd in your marriage.

Gra. We'll play with them the first boy for a thousand ducats.

Ner. What, and what stake down?

Bass. No, we shall ne'er win at that sport; and
But who comes here? Lorenzo and his infidel?
What, and my old Venetian friend Salerio?

Enter Lorenzo, Jessica, and Salerio, a Messenger from Venice.

Bass. Lorenzo and Salerio, welcome hither;
If that the youth of my new interest here
Have power to bid you welcome. By your leave,
I bid my very friends and countrymen,
Sweet Portia, welcome.

Por. They are entirely welcome.

Lor. I thank your honour. For my part, my lord,
My purpose was not to have seen you here;
But meeting with Salerio by the way,
He did entreat me, past all saying now,
To come with him along.

Saler. I did, my lord; and I have reason for it. Signor long,
Commends him to you. [Gives Bassanio a letter.

Bass. Ere I ope his letter, I pray you, tell me how my good friend doth.

Saler. Not sick, my lord, unless it be in mind,
Nor well, unless in mind: his letter there

Your hand, Salerio: what's the news from Venice?
How doth that royal merchant, good Antonio?
I know he will be glad of our success;
We are the Jasons, we have won the fleece.

Saler. I would you had won the fleece that he Bath lost.

Por. Thar are some shrewd contents in you same
That steals the colour from Bassanio's check:
Some dear friend dead: else nothing in the world
Could turn so much the constitution
Of any constant man. What, worse and worse!
With leave, Bassanio; I am half myself,
And must I freely have the half of any thing
That this same paper brings you.

Bass. O sweet Portia, here are a few of the unpleasant'st words
That ever blotted paper! Gentle lady,
When I did first impart my love to you,
I freely told you, all the wealth I had
Ran in my veins, I was a gentleman;
And then I told you true: and yet, dear lady,
Hatting myself at nothing, you shall see
How much I was a braggart. When I told you
My state was nothing, I should then have told you
That I was worse than nothing: for, indeed,
I have engaged myself to a dear friend,
Engaged my friend to his mere enemy,
To feed my means. Here is a letter, lady;
The paper as the body of my friend,
And every word in it a graceful wound;
Issuing life-blood. But is it true, Salerio?
Have all his ventures fail'd? What, not one hit?
From Tripolus, from Mexico and England,
From Lisbon, Barbary and India?
And not one vessel 'scape the dreadful touch
Of merchant-marrying rocks?

Saler. No, not one, my lord.

Besides, it should appear, that if he had
The present money to discharge the Jew,
He would not take it. Never did I know
A creature, that did bear the shape of man,
So keen and so acquisitive, had
Plies the duke at morning and at night,
And doth impeach the freedom of the state,
If they deny him justice: twenty merchants,
The duke himself, and the magnificoes
Of greatest port, have all perswaded with him;
But none can drive him from the ominous plea
Of forfeiture, of justice and his bond.

Jes. When I was with him I have heard him swear
To Tubal and to Chus, his countrymen,
That he would rather have Antonio's flesh
Than twenty times the value of the sum
That he did owe him: and my lord, my lord,
If law, authority and power deny not,
It will go hard with poor Antonio.

Por. Is it your dear friend that is thus in trouble?

Bass. The dearest friend to me, the kindest man,
ACT III.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE IV.

The best-condition'd and unwearied spirit
In doing courtesies, and one in whom
The ancient Roman honour more appears
Than any that draws breath in Italy.

Por. What sum owes he the Jew?
Bass. For me three thousand ducats.
Por. What, no more?
Pay him six thousand, and deface the bond;
Double six thousand, and then treble that,
Before a friend of this description
Shall lose a hair through Bassanio's fault.
First to my room, and call me wife,
And then away to Venice to your friend;
For never shall you lie by Portia's side
With an unquiet soul. You shall have gold
To pay the petty debt twenty times over:
When it is paid, bring your true friend along.
My maid Nerissa and I at that meantime
Will live as maids and widows. Come, away!
For you shall hence upon your wedding-day:
Bid your friends welcome, show a merry cheer:
Since you are dear bought, I will love you dear.
But let me hear the letter of your friend.

Shy. Enter Salarino, Antonio, and Gaoler.

Shy. Gaoler, look to him: tell not me of mercy;
This is the fool that lent out money gratis:
Gaoler, look to him.

Ant. Hear me yet, good Shylock.

Shy. I'll have my bond; speak not against my bond;
I have sworn an oath that I will have my bond.
Thou call'dst me dog before thou hast a cause;
But, since thou art my subject, let me tell thee,
The duke shall grant me justice, I do wonder,
Thou naughty gaoler, that thou art so fond
To come abroad with him at his request.

Ant. I pray thee, hear me speak.

Shy. I'll have my bond; I will not hear thee speak:
I'll have my bond; and therefore speak no more.
I'll not sit made a soft and bl billionaire fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors. Follow not;
I'll have no speaking: I will have my bond. [Exit.

Sol. It is the most impenetrable cur
That ever kept with men.

Ant. Let him alone;
I'll follow him no more with bootless prayers.
He seeks my life: his reason well I know:
I oft deliver'd from his forfeitures
Many that have at times made moan to me;
Therefore he hates me.

Sol. I am sure the duke
Will never grant this forfeiture to hold.

Ant. The duke cannot deny the course of law;
For the commodity that strangers have
With us in Venice, if it be denied,
Will much bewitch the justice of his state;
Since that the trade and profit of the city
Consisteth of all nations. Therefore, go;
These griefs and losses have so hagetered me,
That I shall hardly spare a pound of flesh
To-morrow to my bloody creditor.

Well, gaoler, on. Pray God, Bassanio come
To see me pay his debt, and then I care not! [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Belmont. A room in Portia's house.

Enter Portia, Nerissa, Lorenzo, Jessica, and Balthasar.

Por. Madam, although I speak it in your presence,
You have a noble and a true conceit
Of god-like unity, which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your lord.
But if you knew to whom you show this honour,
How true a gentleman you send relief!
How dear a lover of my lord your husband,
I know you would be prouder of the work
Than customary bounty can enforce you.

Por. I never did repent for doing good,
Nor shall not now: for in companions
That do converse and waste the time together,
Who bear a character of love,
There must be needs a like proportion
Of lineaments, of manners and of spirit;
Which makes me think that this Antonio,
Being such a basebom lover of his friend,
Must needs be like my lord. If it be so,
How little is the cost I have bestowed
In purchasing the semblance of my soul
From out the state of hellish misery!
This comes too near the praising of myself;
Therefore no more of it. But to other things.
Lorenzo, I commit into your hands
The husbandry and manage of my house
Until my lord's return: for mine own part,
I have toward heaven breathed a secret vow
To live in prayer and contemplation,
Only attended by Nerissa here.

Por. Until his husband and my lord's return:
There is a monastery two miles off;
And there will we abide. I do desire you
Not to deny this imposition;
The which my love and some necessity
Now lays upon you.

Por. Madam, with all my heart;
I shall obey you in all fair commands.

Por. My people do already know my mind,
And will acknowledge you and Jessica
In place of Lord Bassanio and myself.
And so farewell, till we shall meet again.

Lor. Sir, my thoughts and happy hours attend you on
And Jessica. I wish your ladyship all heart's content.

Por. I thank you for your wish, and am well pleased
To wish it back on you: fare you well, Jessica.
[Exeunt Portia and Lorenzo.

Now, Balthasar.

As I have ever found thee honest-true,
So let me find thee still. Take this same letter,
And use thou all the endeavours of a man
In speed to Padua: see thou render this Into my cousin's hand, Doctor Bellario;
And, look, what notes and garments thou givest him
Bring them, I pray thee, with lordly speed,
Unto the troncet, to the common ferry.
Which trades to Venice. Waste no time in words,
But get thee gone: I shall be there before thee.

Balth. Madam, I go with all convenient speed.

Por. Come on, Nerissa; I have work in hand
That you yet know not of: we'll see our husbands
Before they think of us.

Ner. Shall they see us?
Por. They shall, Nerissa; but in such a habit,
That they shall think we are accomplished
With that we lack. I'll hold thee any wager,
When we are both accosted like young men,
I'll prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And wear my dagger with the braver grace,
And speak between the change of man and boy,
With a reed voice, and turn two mincing steps
Into a main stride, and speak of frayns
Like a fine bragging youth, and tell quaint lies,
How honourable ladies sought my love,
Which I denying, they fell sick and died;
I could not do withal; then I'll repent,
And wish, for all that, that I had not kill'd them;
And twenty of these puny lies I'll tell,
That men shall swear I have discontinued school
Above a twelvemonth. I have within my mind
A thought and raw tricks of these bragging Jacks,
Which I will practise.

[Enter Launcelot and Jessica.

Lau. Yes, truly; for, look you, the sins of the father are to be laid upon the children: therefore, I promise ye, I fear you. I was always plain with you, and so now I speak my agitation of the matter; therefore be of good cheer, for truly I think you are damned. There is but one hope in it that can do you any good; and that is but a kind of bastard hope neither.

Jes. And what hope is that, I pray thee?

Lau. Marry, you may partly hope that your father got you not, that you are not the Jew's daughter. But shall you not, that you are not the Jew's daughter.

Jes. That were a kind of bastard hope, indeed; so the sins of my mother should be visited upon me.

Lau. Truly then I fear you are damned both by father and mother: thus when I shun Scylla, your father, I fall into Charybdis; your mother, well: you are gone both ways.

Jes. I shall be saved by my husband; he hath made me a Christian.

Lau. Truly, the more to blame he: we were Christians e'en before; e'en as many as could well live, one by another. This making of Christians will raise the price of hogs: if we grow all to be pork-eaters, we shall not shortly have a rasher on the coals for money.

[Enter Lorenzo.

Lau. I'll tell my husband, Launcelot, what you say: here he comes.

Lor. I shall grow jealous of you shortly, Launcelot; if you thus get my wife into corners.

Jes. Nay, you need not fear us. Lorenzo: Launcelot and I are out. He tells me that, there is no mercy for me in heaven, because I am a Jew's daughter: and he says, you are no good member of the commonwealth, for in converting Jews to Christians, you raise the price of pork.

Lau. I shall answer that better to the commonwealth that I can get the negro's belly: the Moor is with child by you, Launcelot.

Lau. It is much that the Moor should be more than reason: but if she be less than an honest woman, she is indeed more than I took her for.

Lau. How every fool can play upon the word! I think the best grace of wit will shortly turn into silence, and discourse grow commendable in none only but parrots. Go in, sirrah; bid them prepare for dinner.

Lau. That is done, sir: they have all stomachs.

Lor. Goodly Lord, what a wit-snapper are you! then bid them prepare dinner.

Lau. That is done too, sir; only 'cover' is the word.

Lau. Will you come then, sir?

Lau. Not so, sir, neither; I know my duty.

Lor. Yet more quarrelling with occasion! Wilt thou show the whole wealth of thy wit in an instant? I pray thee, understand a plain man in his plain meaning: go to thy fellows; bid them cover the table, serve in the meat, and we will come in to dinner.

Lau. For the table, sir, it shall be served in; for the meat, sir, it shall be covered; for your coming in to dinner, sir, why, let it be as humours and conceits shall govern.

[Exit.
Lor. O dear discretion, how his words are suited!
The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words: and I do know
A many tools, that stand in better place,
Garnish'd like him, that for a trickcy word
Dey the matter. How cheer'st thou, Jessica?
And now, my sweet, say thy opinion,
How dost thou like the Lord Bassanio's wife?
Jes. Past all expressing. It is very meet
The Lord Bassanio live an upright life;
For, having such a blemish in his lady,
He finds the joys of heaven here on earth;
And if on earth he do not mean it, then
In reason he should never come to heaven.
Why, if two gods should play some heavenly match
And on the wager lay two earthly women,
And Portia one, there must be something else
Paw'd with the other, for the poor rude world
Hath not her fellow.

Lor. Even such a husband
Hast thou of me as she is for a wife.

Jes. Nay, but ask my opinion too of that.

Lor. I will mean: first, let us go to dinner.

Jes. Nay, let me praise you while I have a stomach.

Lor. No, pray thee, let it serve for table-talk:
Then, howso'er thou speak'st, 'mong other things
I shall digest it.

Jes. Well, I'll set you forth.
[Exeunt.

[Enter the Duke, the Magnificoes, Antonio, Bassanio, Gratiano, Salerio, and others.

Duke. What is Antonio here?

Ant. Ready, so please your grace.

Duke. I am sorry for thee: thou art come to an
A stony adversary, an handful of rattrch
Uncapable of pity, void and empty
From any dram of mercy.

Ant. I have heard
Your grace hath ta'en great pains to qualify
His rigorous course; but since he stands obdurate

ACT IV.

And that no lawful means can carry me
Out of his envy's reach, I do oppose
My patience to his fury, and an arm'd
To suffer, with a quietness of spirit,
The very tyranny and rage of his.

Duke. Go one, and call the Jew into the court.

Saler. He is ready at the door: he comes, my lord.

[Enter Shylock.

Duke. Make room, and let him stand before our Shylock, the world thinks, and I think so too.
[Face.
That thou but lead'st this fashion of thy nature
To the last hour of act; and then 'tis thought
Thou 'rt show thy mercy and remorse more strange
Than is thy strange apparent cruelty;
And where thou now exact'st the penalty,
Which is a pound of this poor merchant's flesh,
Thou wilt not only loose the forfeiture,
But, touch'd with human gentleness and love,
Porgy, with forty thousand ducats,
Gaining an eye of pity on his losses,
That have of late so huddled on his back,
Know to press a royal merchant down
And pluck commisservation of his state
From brassy bosoms and rough hearts of flirt,
From which, if wind and Tartars, never train'd
To offices of tender courtesy.
We all expect a gentle answer, Jew. [pose;
Shy. I have possess'd your grace of what I pur.
And by our holy Sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond:
If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter and your city's freedom.
You'll ask me, why I rather choose to have
A weight of carrion flesh than to receive
Three thousand ducats: I'll not answer that;
But, say, it is my humour: is it answer'd?
What if thou wert to trouble a time's cat?
And I be pleased to give ten thousand ducats
To have it baned? What, are you answer'd yet?
Some men there are love not a gaping pig;
Some, that are mad if they behold a cat;
And others, when the hangpipe sings to the nose,
Cannot contain their wine: for affection,
Mistress of passion, sways it to the mood
Of what it likes or loathes. Now, for your answer:
As there is no firm reason to render'd,
Why he cannot abide a gaping pig;
Why he, a harmless necessary cat;
Why he, a woolen bag-pipe, rather than force
Must be sold to such inevitable shame
As to offend, himself being offended;
So can I give no reason, nor I will not,
More than a lodged hate and a certain loathing
I bear Antonio, that I follow thus
A losing suit against him. Are you answer'd?
Boz. This is no answer, thou unfeeling man,
To excuse the current of thy cruelty. [swers.
Shy. I am not bound to please thee with my an.
Boz. Do all men kill the things they do not love?
Shy. Hates any man the thing he would not kill?
Boz. Every offence is not a hate at first. [twice;
Shy. 'Tis not, that thou hast not in thee to make
Ant. I pray you, think you question with the Jew;
You may as well go stand upon the beach
And bid the main flood bathe his usual height;
You may as well use question with the wolf
Why he hath made the ewe beat for the lamb;
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops and to make no noise,
When they are fretten with the gusts of heaven;
You may as well do any thing most hard,
As seek to soften that,—than which what's harder—
His Jewish heart: therefore, I do beseech you,
Make no more offers, make no further terms,
But with all brief and plain convenience
Let me have judgment and the Jew his will.
Boz. For thy three thousand ducats here is six.
Shy. If every ducat in six thousand ducats
Were in six parts and every part a ducat,
I would not draw them: I would have my bond.
Boz. How shall thou hope for mercy, rendering none?
[wrong]
Shy. What judgment shall I dread, doing no
You have among you many a purchased slave,
Which, like your asses and your dogs and mules,
You can not touch, wouldst thou be arsenal's
Because you bought them: shall I say to you,
Let them be free, marry them to your heirs?
Why sweat they under burden? 'tis let their beds
Be made as soft as yours and let their palates
Be season'd with such viands? You will answer
'The slaves are ours': so do I answer you:
'The pound of flesh, which I demand of him,
Is dearly bought: 'tis mine and I will have it.
If you deny me, lie upon your law!
There is no force in the decrees of Venice;
I stand for judgment: answer; shall I have it?
Duke. Upon my power I may dismiss this court,
Unless Bellario, a learned doctor,
Whom I have sent for to determine this,
Come here to-day.
My lord, here stays without
A messenger with letters from the doctor,
New come from Padua.
Boz. Bring us the letters: call the messenger.
Boz. Good cheer, Antonio! What, man, courage
yet!
The Jew shall have my flesh, blood, bones and all,
Ere thou shalt lose for me one drop of blood.
Ant. I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Mectest for death: the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground; and so let me:
You cannot better be employed, Bassanio,
Than to live still and write mine epitaph.

Enter Nerissa, dressed like a lawyer's clerk.
Duke. Came you from Padua, from Bellario?
Ner. From both, my lord. Bellario grecets your grace,
Boz. Presenting a letter.
Boz. Why dost thou show what thy knife is earnestly
Shy. To cut the forfeiture from that bankrupt
there.
Gra. Not on thy sole, but on thy soul, harsh Jew,
Thou makest thy knife keen; but no metal can
No, not the hangman's axe, bear half the keeness
Of thy sharp envy, which shows thee sharp as a knife;
Still I be sure that thou hast wit enough to make
Gra. O, be thou damn'd, inexorable dog!
And for thy life let justice be accused.
Thou almost makest me waver in my faith
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves
Into the trunks of men: thy currish spirit
Govern'd a wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
Even from the gallows did his fell soul fleet,
And, whilst thou lay'st in thy unhallow'd dam,
Infused itself in thee; for thy desires
Are wolivish, bloody, starv'd and reuinous.
So hast thou left the salt to seal off from my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud:
Repair thy wit, good youth, or it will fall
To careless ruin. I stand here for law.
Duke. This letter from Bellario doth commend
A young and learned doctor to our court.
NER. Where is he?
He attendeth here hard by.
To know your answer, whether you'll admit him.
Duke. With all my heart. Some three or four of Go give him courteous conduct to this place. [you
Meanteine the court shall hear Bellario's letter.
But you shall understand that at the receipt of your letter I am very sick: but in the instant that your messenger came, in loving visitation was with me a young doctor of Rome;
his name is Balthasar. I acquainted him with the cause in controversy between the Jew and Antonio that omitted not to censure me: for; he is furnished with my opinion; which, lettered with his own learning, the greatness whereof I cannot enough commend, comes with him, at my importance, to fill up your grace's request in my stead. I beseech you, let his lack of years be no impediment to his commendation; for I never knew so young a body with so old a head. I leave him to your gracious acceptance, whose trial shall better publish his commendation.
Duke. You hear the learned Bellario, what he
And here, I take it, is the doctor come.

Enter Portia, dressed like a doctor of laws.

Give me your hand. Come you from old Bellario?

Por. I did, my lord.

Duke. You are welcome: take your place.

Are you acquainted with the difference
That holds this present question in the court?

Por. I do, by the cause.

Which is the merchant here, and which the Jew?

Duke. Antonio and old Shylock, both stand forth.

Por. Is your name Shylock?

Shy. Shylock is my name.

Por. Of a strange nature is the suit you follow:

Yet in such rule that the Venetian law

Cannot impugn as you do proceed.

You stand within his danger, do you not?

Ant. Ay, so he says.

Por. Do you confess the bond?

Ant. I do.

Then must the Jew be merciful.

Shy. On what compulsion must I? tell me that.

Por. The quality of mercy is not strain'd,

It droppeth as the gentle rain from heaven

Upon the place beneath; it is twice blest:

It blesseth him that gives and him that takes:

‘Tis mightier by far than the law of vengeance.

The latter moulteth faster than his crown;

His sceptor shows the force of temporal power,

The attribute to awe and majesty,

Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings;

But mercy is above this sceptred sway;

It is enthroned in the hearts of men;

And earthly power doth then show likest God's

When mercy seasons justice. Therefore, Jew,

Though justice be thy plea, consider this,

That, in the course of justice, none of us

Should see salvation: we do pray for mercy;

And that same prayer doth teach us all to render

The deeds of mercy. I have spoke thus much

To mitigate the justice of thy plea:

Which it thou follow, this strict court of Venice

Must needs give sentence 'gainst the merchant there.

Shy. My deeds upon my head! I crave the law,

The penalty and forfeit that he pays your debt;

For if the Jew do cut but deep enough,

I'll pay it presently with all my heart.

Bass. Antonio, I am married to a wife

Which is as dear to me as life itself;

But life itself, my wife, and all the world;

Are not with thee so dear as my life;

I would lose all, ay, sacrifice them all

Here to this devil, to deliver you.

Por. Your wife would give you little thanks for

If she were by, to hear you make the offer.

Gra. I have a wife, whom, I protest, I love;

I would she were in heaven, so she could

Entreat some power to change this currish Jew.

Xer. ‘Tis well you offer it behind her back;

The wish would make else a maugret house.

Shy. These be the Christian husbands.

I have a wife

Would any of the stock of Barabas

And had been her husband rather than a Christian!

Aside. We trifle time: I pray thee, pursue sentence.

Por. A pound of that same merchant's flesh is thine:

The court awards it, and the law doth give it.

Shy. Most righteous judge!

Por. And you must cut this flesh from off his

The law allows it, and the court awards it.

Shy. Most learned judge! A sentence! Come, prepare!

Por. Tarry a little; there is something else.

This bond doth give thee here no jot of blood;
The words expressly are 'a pound of flesh';
Take then thy bond, take thy pound of flesh;
But, in the cutting it, if thou dost shed
One drop of Christian blood, thy lands and goods
Are, by the laws of Venice, confiscate.

Unto the state of Venice,
Gra. O upright judge! Mark, Jew: O learned
Shy. Is that the law?
Por. Thyself shalt see the act:
For, as thou urgest justice, be assured
Thou shalt have justice, more than thou desirest.

Gra. O learned judge! Mark, Jew: a learned judge!
Shy. I take this offer, then: pay the bond thrice
And let the Christian go.

Here is the money.
Por. Soft!

The Jew shall have all justice: soft! no haste:
He shall have nothing but the penalty.

Gra. O Jew! an upright judge, a learned judge!
Por. Therefore prepare thee to cut off the flesh,
Shed thou no blood, nor cut thou less nor more
But just a pound of flesh: if thou cut'st more
Or less than a just pound, be it but so much
As makes it light or heavy in the substance,
Or the division of the twenty parts
Of one poor scruple, say, if the scale do turn
But in the estimation of a hair,
Thon diest and all thy goods are confiscate.

Gra. A second Daniel, a Daniel, Jew!
Now, infidel, I have you on the hip: for feiture.
Por. Why doth the Jew pause? take thy for
Shy. Give me my principal, and let me go.

Por. I have it ready for thee: here it is.
Por. He hath refused it in the open court:
He shall have merely justice and his bond.

Gra. A Daniel, still say I, a second Daniel!
I thank thee, Jew; for learning that word.
Shy. Shall I not have barely my principall
Por. Thou hast nothing but the forfeiture,
To be so taken at thy peril, Jew.
Shy. Why, then the devil give him good of it!
I'll stay no longer question.
Por. Tarry, Jew:
The law hath yet another hold on you.
It is enacted in the laws of Venice,
If it be proved against an alien
That by direct or indirect attempts
He seek the life of any citizen,
The party 'gainst the which the both contrive
Shall seize the half his goods; the other half
Comes to the privy coffer of the state:
And the offender's life lies in the mercy
Of the duke only, 'gainst all other voice,
In which predicament, I say, thou stand'st;
For it appears, by manifest proceeding,
That indirectly and directly too
Thou hast contrived against the very life
Of the defendant; and thou hast incurred
The danger formerly by me rehearsed.
Down therefore and beg mercy of the duke.

Gra. Beg that thou mayest have leave to hang Myself:
And yet, thy wealth being forfeit to the state,
Thou hast not left the value of a cord;
Therefore thou must be hang'd at the state's charge.

Duke. That thou shalt see the difference of our Pardon thee thy life before thou ask it: [spiritus,
For here thou art no Antonio's;
The other half comes to the general state,
Which humbleness may drive unto a fine.

Por. Ay, for the state, not for Antonio.

Shy. Nay, take my life and all; pardon not that:
You take or haunt when you do take the prop
That doth sustain my house, you take my life
When you do take the means whereby I live.

Por. What mercy can you render him, Antonio?

Gra. A halter gratis; nothing else, for God's sake.

Ant. So please my lord the duke and all the court
To quit the fine for one-half of his goods,
I am content: so he will let me have
The other half in use, to render it,
Upon his death, unto the gentleman
That lately stole his daughter.

Duke. He shall do this, or else I do recant
The bounty that I late pronounced here:
Shy. Art thou content, Jew? what dost thou
Por. I am content.

Por. Clerk, draw a deed of gift.
Shy. I pray you, give me leave to go from hence;
I am not well: send the deed after me,
And I will sign it.

Duke. Get thee gone, but do it.

Gra. In christening shalt thou have two god fathers;
Had I been judge, thou shouldst have had ten more,
To bring thee to the gallows, not the font.

Duke. Sir, I entreat you home with me to dinner.
Por. I humbly do desire your grace of pardon;
I must away this night toward Padua,
And it is meet I presently set forth.

Duke. I am sorry that your leisure serves you not.
Antonio, gratify this gentleman.
For, in my mind, you are much bound to him.

[Exit Duke and his train.

Por. Most worthy gentleman, I and my friend
Have by your wisdom been this day acquitted
Of grievous penalties; in heu whereof,
Three thousand ducats, due unto the Jew,
We freely cropy our courteous patron,
[Exit Shylock.

Duke. I am sorry that your leisure serves you not.

Por. He is well paid that is well satisfied;
And I, delivering you, am satisfied
And therin do account myself well paid:
My mind was never yet more mercurial.
I pray you, know me when we meet again:
I wish you well, and so I take my leave.

Duke. Dear sir, of force I must attempt you further:
Take home remembrance of us, as a tribute,
Not as a谢; grant me two things, I pray you,
Not to deny me, and to pardon me.

Por. You press me far, and therefore I will Give me your gloves, I'll wear them for Your sake,

[To Bass.] Give me your mantles; I'll take this ring
From you.

Por. Do not drive back your hand: I'll take no more;
And you in love shall not deny me this.

Duke. This ring, good sir, alas, it is a trifle!
I will not shame myself to give you this.

Por. I will have nothing else but only this;
And now methinks I have a mind to it.

Bass. There's more depends on this than on the
The dearest ring in Venice will I give you,
And find it out by proclamation:
Only for this, I pray you, pardon me.

Por. I see, sir, you are liberal in offers:
You say to me, sir, I am the first teacher
You teach me how a beggar should be answer'd.

Bass. Good sir, this ring was given me by my
And when she put it on, she made me vow [wife;
That I should neither sell nor give nor lose it.

Por. That's sense serves many men to save their

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE I.

Enter Gratiano.

Gra. Fair sir, you are well o’terta’en: My Lord Bassanio upon more advice Hath sent you here this ring, and doth entreat Your company at dinner.

Por. That cannot be:

His ring I do accept most thankfully:

And so, I pray you, tell him: furthermore,

I pray you, show my youth old Shylock’s house.

Gra. That will I do.

SIR I, would speak with you.

[Aside to Por.] I see if I can get my husband’s ring, Which I did make him swear to keep for ever.

Por. [Aside to Ner.] Thou madst, I warrant.

We shall have old swearing

That they did give the rings away to men:

But we’ll outface them, and outwear them too.

[Howl] Away! make haste: thou know’st where I will tarry. [House.—Exeunt.

NER. Come, good sir, will you show me to this

ACT V.

SCENE I.—Belmont. Avenue to Portia’s house.

Enter Lorenzo and Jessica.

Lor. The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,

When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees

And they did make no noise, in such a night

Troits melodious muttered the Trojan walls

And sigh’d his soul toward the Grecian tents,

Where Cressid lay that night.

Jes. In such a night

Did Thisea fearfully o’ertrip the dew

And saw the lion’s shadow ere himself

And ran dismay’d away.

Lor. In such a night

Stood Dido with a willow in her hand

Upon the wild sea banks and waltz her love

To come again to Carthage.

Jes. In such a night

Medea gather’d the enchanted herbs

That did renew old Ezra.

Lor. In such a night

Did Jessica steal from the wealthy Jew

And with an unthrifty love did run from Venice

As far as Belmont.

Jes. In such a night

Did young Lorenzo swear he loved her well,

Stealing her soul with many vows of faith

And he’er a true one.

Lor. In such a night

Did pretty Jessica, like a little shrew,

Slender her love, and he forgave it her.

Jes. I would out-night you, did no body come;

But, hark, I hear the footing of a man.

Enter Stephano.

Lor. Who comes so fast in silence of the night?

Steph. A friend.

Lor. A friend! what friend? your name, I pray you, friend?

Steph. Stephano is my name; and I bring word

My mistress will before the break of day

Be here at Belmont: she doth stray about

By holy crosses, where she kneels and prays

For happy wedlock hours.

Lor. Who comes with her?

Steph. None but a holy hermit and her maid.

I pray you, is my master yet return’d?

Lor. He is not, nor we have not heard from him.

But go we in, I pray thee, Jessica,

And ceremoniously let us prepare

Some welcome for the mistress of the house.

Enter Launcelot.

Laun. Sola, sola! we ha, ho! sola, sola!

Lor. Who calls?

Laun. Sola! did you see Master Lorenzo? Master Lorenzo, sola, sola!

Lor. Leave hollaing, man: here.

Laun. Sola! sola! where? where?

Lor. Here.

Laun. Tell him there’s a post come from my master, with his horn full of good news: my master will be here ere morning. [Exit.

Lor. Sweet soul, let’s in, and there expect their coming.

And yet no matter: why should we go in?

My friend Stephano, signify, I pray you,

Within the house, your mistress is at hand;

And bring your music forth into the air.

[Exit Stephano.

How sweet the moonlight sleeps upon this tank!

Here will we sit and let the sounds of music

Creepe in our ears: soft stillness and the night

Become the touches of sweet harmony.

Sit, Jessica. Look how the floor of heaven

Is thick inlaid with patines of bright gold;

There’s not the smallest orb which thou behold’st

But in his motion like an angel sings,

Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubins;

Such harmony is in immortal souls;

But whilst this muddy vesture of decay

Doth grossly close it in, we cannot hear it.

Enter Musicians.

Come, ho! and wake Diana with a hymn;

With sweetest touches pierce your mistress’ ear

And draw her home with music. [Music.

Jes. I am never merry when I hear sweet music.

Lor. The reason is, your spirits are attentive;

For do but note a wild and wanton herd,

Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,

Petching mad bounds, bewailing and neighing loud,

Which is the hot condition of their blood;

If they but hear perchance a trumpet sound,

Or any air of music touch their ears,

You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,

Their savage eyes turn’d to a modest gaze

By the sweet power of music: therefore the poet

Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones and floods;

167
Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature.
The man that hath no music in himself,
Nor is not moved with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems and spoils;
The motions of his spirit are dull as night
And his affections dark as Erebus.
Let no such man be trusted. Mark the music.

Enter Portia and Nerissa.

Por. That light we see is burning in my hall.
How far that little candle throws his beams!
So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

Ner. When the moon shines, we did not see the candle.

Por. So doth the greater glory dim the less:
A substitute shines brightly as a king
Until a king be by, and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Music! hark!

Ner. It is your music, madam, of the house.

Por. Nothing is good, I see, without respect;
Methinks it sounds much sweeter than by day.

Ner. Silence bestows that virtue on it, madam.

Por. The crow doth sing as sweetly as the lark
When neither is attended, and I think
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When every goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren.
How many things by season season'd are
To their right praise and true perfection!

Peace, ho! the moon sleeps with Emeldamion
And would not be awaked. [Music ceases.

Lor. That is the voice,
Or I am much deceived, of Portia. [cuckoo.
Por. He knows me as the blind man knows the
By the bad voice.

Lor. Dear lady, welcome home.
Por. We have been praying for our husbands' healths,
Which speed, we hope, the better for our words.
Are they return'd?

Lor. Madam, they are not yet;
But there is come a messenger before,
To signify their coming.

Por. Go in, Nerissa;
Give order to my servants that they take
No note at all of our being absent hence;
Nor you, Lorenzo; Jessica, nor you,

Lor. Your husband is at hand; Theem's horn trumpet;
We are no tell-tales, madam; fear you not.

Por. This night methinks is but the day-light sick;
It looks a little paler: 'tis a day
Such as the day is when the sun is hid.

Enter Bassanio, Antonio, Gratiano, and their followers.

Bass. We should hold day with the Antipodes,
If you would walk in absence of the sun.

Por. Let me give light, but let me not be light;
For a little while doth make a heavy husband;
And never be Bassanio so for me: [lord.
But God sort all! Your are welcome home, my Bass. I thank you, madam. Give welcome to my

This is the man, this is Antonio; [friend.
To whom I am so infinitely bound.

Por. You should allow me much more bound to
As I hear, he was much bound for you. [him,
Ant. No more than I am well acquainted of.

Por. Sir, you are very welcome to our house:
It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore I sent this breathing courtesy.

Grat. [To Ner.] Bawd, if you send your son in faith, I gave it to the judge's clerk; [me wrong;
Would he be gelt that had it, for my part,
Since you do take it, love, so much at heart.

Por. A quarrel, ho, already! What's the matter?

Gra. About a hoop of gold, a palty ring
That she did give me, whose posy was
For all the world like curter's poetry
Upon a knife, 'Love me, and leave me not.'

Ner. What talk you of the posy or the value?
You swore to me, when I did give it you,
That you would wear it till your hour of death
And that it should lie with you in your grave:
Though not for me, yet for your vehement oaths,
You should have been respective and have kept it.
Gave it a judge's clerk! no, God's my judge.
The clerk will ne'er wear hair on 's face that had it.

Gra. My Lord Bassanio gave his ring away
Unto the judge that begg'd it and indeed
Deserved it too; and then the boy, his clerk,
That took some pains in writing, he begg'd mine;
And neither man nor master would take aught
But the two rings.

Por. What ring gave you, my lord?
Not that, I hope, which you received of me.

Bass. If I could add a lie unto a fault,
I would deny it; but you see my finger
Hath not the ring upon it; it is gone.

Por. Even so void is your false heart of truth.
By heaven, I will ne'er come in your bed
Until I see the ring.

Ner. Nor I in yours
Till I again see mine.

Bass. Sweet Portia,
If you did know to whom I gave the ring,
If you did know for whom I gave the ring,
And would conceive for what I gave the ring,
And how unwillingly I left the ring,
When ought would be accepted but the ring,
You would abate the strength of your displeasure.

Por. You had knowed the virtue of the ring,
Or half her worthiness that gave the ring,
Or your own honour to contain the ring,
You would not then have parted with the ring.
What man is there so much unreasoning,
If you had plead for you to be released at it
With any terms of zeal, wanted the modesty
To urge the thing held as a ceremony?

Nerissa teaches me what to believe:
I'll die for't but some woman had the ring.

Bass. No, by my honour, madam, by my soul,
No woman wed, but I be civil doctor
Which did refuse three thousand ducats of me
And begg'd the ring; the which I did deny him
And suffer'd him to go displeased away;
Eyen he that did uphold the very life
Of my dear friend. What should I say, sweet lady?
I was once lost in my discourse of her name.
I was beset with shame and courtesy;
My honour would not let ingratitude
So much besmear it. Pardon me, good lady;
ACT V.

THE MERCHANT OF VENICE.

SCENE I.

For, by these blessed candles of the night,
If you have been, I think you would have begg'd
The ring of me to give the worthy doctor.
Bass. Were you the doctor and I knew you not?"
For, let not that doctor ever come near my house:
For if I do, I'll mar the young clerk's pen.
Bass. Portia, forgive me this enforced wrong;
And, in the hearing of these many friends,
I swear to thee, even by thine own fair eyes,
Wherein I see myself —
Portia. Mark you but that!
In both my eyes he doubly sees himself;
In each eye, one: swear by your double self,
And there's an oath of credit.
Bass. Nay, but hear me: Pardon this fault, and by my soul I swear
I never more will break an oath with thee.
Ant. I once did lend my body for his wealth;
Which, but for him that had your husband's ring,
Had quite miscarried: I dare be bound again,
My soul upon the forfeit, that your lord
Will never more break faith advisedly.
Portia. Then you shall be his surety. Give him this
And bid him keep it better than the other.
Ant. Here, Lord Bassanio; swear to keep this ring,
Bass. By heaven, it is the same I gave the doctor!
Portia. I had it of him: pardon me, Bassanio;
For, by this ring, the doctor lay with me.
Are you the clerk that is to make me cuckold?
Portia. Ay, but the clerk that never means to do it,
Unless he live until he be a man.
Bass. Sweet doctor, you shall be my bedfellow:
When I am absent, then lie with my wife,
Ant. Sweet lady, you have given me life and living;
For here I read for certain that my ships
Are safely come to road.
Portia. How now, Lorenzo!
My clerk hath some good comforts too for you.
Ant. Ay, and I'll give them him without a fee.
There do I give to you and Jessica.
From the rich Jew, a special deed of gift,
After his death, of all he dies possess'd of.
Lorenzo. Fair ladies, you drop manna in the way
Of starved people.
Portia. It is almost morning,
And yet I am sure you are not satisfied
Of these events at full. Let us go in;
And charge us there upon inter'gatories,
And we will answer all things faithfully.
Gratiano. Let it be so: the first interrogatory
That my Nerissa shall be sworn on is,
Whether till the next night she had rather stay,
Or go to bed now, being two hours to day:
But were the day come, I should wish it dark,
That I were conversing with the doctor's clerk.
Well, while I live I'll fear no other thing
So sore as keeping safe Nerissa's ring.

[Exit Portia.

Bassanio. I never heard a passion so confus'd,
So strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As the dog Jew did utter in the streets:
"My daughter! — O my ducats! — O my daughter!
Fled with a Christian! — O my Christian ducats!
Justice! the law! my ducats, and my daughter!"

ACT I.

SCENE I. — Orchard of Oliver's house.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Orl. As I remember, Adam, it was upon this fashion bequeathed me by will but poor a thousand crowns, and, as thou sayest, charged my brother, on his blessing, to breed me well; and there begins my sadness. My brother Jaques he keeps at school, and report speaks goldenly of his profit: for my part, he keeps me rustically at home, or, to speak more properly, stays me here at home unkept; for call you that keeping for a gentleman of my birth, that differs not from the stalling of an ox? His horses are bred better; for, besides that they are fair with their feeding, they are taught their management, and to that end rider dearly hired: but I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth; for the which his animals on his dunghills are as much bound to him as I. Besides this nothing that he so plentifully gives me, the something that nature gave me his countenance seems to take from me: he lets me feed with his hinds, bars me the place of a brother, and, as much as in him lies, mines my gentility with my education. This is it, Adam, that grieves me; and the spirit of my father, which I think is within me, begins to mutiny against this servitude; I will no longer endure it, though yet I know no wise remedy how to avoid it.

Adam. Yonder comes my master, your brother. Orl. Go apart, Adam, and thou shalt hear how he will shake me up.

Enter Oliver.

Orl. Shall I keep your hogs and eat husks with them? What prodigal portion have I spent, that I should come to such penury?
my old master! he would not have spoke such a word.

[Enter Orlando and Adam.]

Oli. Is it even so? Begin you to grow upon me?

I will physic your rankines, and yet give no thousand crowns leither. Holla, Dennis!

Enter Dennis.

Dcn. Calls your worship?

Oli. Was not Charles, the duke’s wrestler, here to speak with me?

Dcn. So please you, he is here at the door and importunes access to you.

Oli. Call him in. [Exit Dennis.] ‘T will be a good way; and to-morrow the wrestling is.

Enter Charles.

Chn. Good morrow to your worship.

Oli. Good Monsieur Charles, what’s the new news at the new court?

Chn. There’s no news at the court, sir, but the old news: that is, the old duke is banished by his younger brother the new duke; and three or four loving lords have put themselves into voluntary exile with him, whose lands and revenues enrich the new duke; therefore he gives them good leave to wander.

Oli. Can you tell if Rosalind, the duke’s daughter, be banished with her father?

Chn. O, no; for the duke’s daughter, her cousin, so loves her, being banished from their cradles togeth-er, that she would have followed her exile, or have died to stay behind her. She is at the court, and no less beloved of her uncle than his own daughter; and never two ladies loved as they do.

Chn. Where will the old duke here?

Chn. They say he is abroad in the forest of Arden, and a many merry men with him; and there they live like the old Robin Hood of England: they say many young gentlemen flock to him every day, and fleet the time carelessly, as they did in the golden world.

What, what, you wrestle to-morrow before the new duke?

Chn. Marry, do I, sir; and I came to acquaint you with a matter. I am given, sir, secretly to understand that your younger brother Orlando hath a disposition to come in disguise against me to try a noble work for my credit; and I hope that escapes me without some broken limb shall acquit him well. Your brother is but young and tender; and, for your love, I would be fain to foil him, as I must, for my own honour, if he come in: therefore, out of my love to you, I came hither to acquaint you withal, that either you might stay him from his intention or brook such disgrace as he shall run into, in that it is a thing of his own search and altogether against my will.

Oli. Charles, I thank thee for thy love to me, which thou shalt find I will most kindly requite. I had my selfe notice of my brother’s purpose herein and leave by underhand means laboured to dissuade him from it, but he is resolute. I’ll tell thee, Charles: it is the stubbornest young fellow of France, full of ambition, an envious emulator of every man’s good parts, a secret and villainous contriver against me his natural brother; therefore use thy discretion; I had as lief thou didst break his neck as his finger. And thou wert best look to’t: for if thou dost him any slight disgrace or if he do not mightily grace himself on thee, he will practise against thee by poison, entrap thee by some treacherous devise and never leave thee till he hath ta’en thee by some direst means or other: for I assure thee, and almost with tears I speak it, there is not one so young and so villainous this day living, I speak but brotherly of him: but should I ana-imize him to thee as he is, I must blush and weep and thou must look pale and wonder.

Chn. I am heartily glad I came hither to you. If he come to-morrow, I’ll give him my payment; if ever he go alone again, I’ll never wrestle for prize more: and then I speak with your worship.

Oli. Farewell, good Charles. [Exit Charles.] Now will I stir this gamester: I hope I shall see an end of him; for my soul, yet I know not why, hates nothing more than he. Yet he’s gentle, never schooled and yet learned, full of noble device, of all sorts enriching himself, and doth so much in the heart of the world, and especially of my own people, who best know him, that I am altogether misprised: but it shall not be so long; this wrestler shall clear all: nothing remains but that I kindle the boy thither; which now I’ll go about. [Exit.

SCENE II.—Lawn before the Duke’s palace.

Enter Celia and Rosalind.

Cel. I pray thee, Rosalind, sweet my coz, be merry.

Ros. Dear Celia, I show more mirth than I am mistress of; and would you yet I were merrier. Unless you could teach me to forget a banished father, you must not learn me how to remember any extraordinary pleasure.

Cel. Herein I see thou lovest me not with the full weight that I love thee. If my uncle, thy banished father, had been but here, while the duke my father, so soon had he the will still with me, I could have taught my love to take thy father for mine: so wouldst thou, if the truth of thy love to me were so righteously tempered as mine is to thee.

Ros. Well, I will forget the condition of my estate, to rejoice in yours.

Cel. You know my father hath no child but I, nor none is like to have: and, truly, when he dies, thou shalt be his heir, for what he hath taken away from thy father perforce, I will render thee again in affection; by mine honour, I will; and when I break that oath, let me turn monster: therefore, my sweet Rosaline, be merry.

Ros. From henceforth I will, coz, and devise sports. Let me see: what think you of falling in love?

Cel. Marry, I prithee, do, to make sport withal: but love no man in good earnest; nor no further in sport neither than with safety of a pure blush thou mayst in honour take of again.

Ros. What shall our sport, then?

Cel. Let us sit and mock the good housewife Fortune from her wheel, that her gifts may henceforth be bestowed equally.

Ros. I would we could do so, for her benefits are mightily misapplied, and the beautiful blind woman doth most mistake in her gifts to women.

Cel. ‘T is true: for those that she makes fair she scarce makes honest, and those that she makes honest she makes very ill-favoured.

Ros. Nay, now thou goest from Fortune’s office to Nature’s: Fortune reigns in gifts of the world, not in the lineaments of Nature.

Enter Touchstone.

Cel. No? when Nature hath made a fair creature, may she not by Fortune fall into the fire? Though Nature hath given us wit to flout at Fortune, hath not Fortune sent in this foot to cut off the argument?

Ros. Indeed, there is Fortune too hard for Nature, when Fortune makes Nature’s natural the cutter-off of Nature’s wit.

Cel. Peradventure this is not Fortune’s work neither: but our Natural wit and our natural wit too dull to reason of such goddesses and hath sent this natural for our whetstone: for always the dulness of the foot is the whetstone of the wits. How now, wit! whither wander you? [father.

Touch. Mistress, you must come away to your

Cel. Were you made the messenger?

SCENE II.

Ros. But is there any else longs to see this broken music in his sides? is there yet another dots upon rib-breaking? Shall we see this wrestling, cousin?

Le Beau. You must, if you stay here; for here is the place to think of for the wrestling, and they are ready to perform it.

Cel. Yonder, sure, they are coming: let us now stay and see it.

FLOURISH. Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, Orlando, Charles, and Attendants.

Duke F. Come on: since the youth will not be entreated, his own peril on his forwardness.

Ros. Is yonder the man?

Le Beau. Even he, madam. [fully.

Cel. Alas, he is too young! yet he looks success-

Duke F. Do so; I'll not be by.

Le Beau. Monsieur the challenger, the princesses call for you.

Orl. I attend them with all respect and duty.

Ros. Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?

Orl. No, fair princess; he is the general chal-

Cel. Young gentleman, your spirits are too bold for your years. You have been cruel proof of this man's strength: if you saw yourself with your eyes or knew yourself with your judgment, the fear of your adventure would counsel you to a more equal enterprise. We pray you, for your own sake, to embrace your own safety and give over this attempt.

Ros. Do, young sir; your reputation shall not therefore be misprised: we will make it our suit to the duke that the wrestling might not go forward.

Orl. I beseech you, punish me not with your hard thoughts; wherein I confess me much guilty, to deny so fair and excellent ladies any thing. But you, young man, that are my friend, and wish to go with me to my trial: wherein if I be foiled, there is but one shamed that was never gracious; if killed, but one dead that is willing to be so; I shall do my friends no wrong, for I have none to lament me, the world no injury, for in it I have nothing; only in the world's fill how now, daughter and cousin! are you cren hitherto to see the wrestling?

Ros. Ay, my liege, so please you give us leave.

Duke F. You will take little delight in it, I can tell you; there is such odds in the man. In pity of the challenger's youth I would fain dissuade but he will not be entreated. Speak to him, ladies; see if you can move him.

Cel. Call him hither, good Monsieur Le Beau.

Duke F. Do so: I'll not be by.

Le Beau. Monsieur the challenger, the princesses call for you.

Orl. I attend them with all respect and duty.

Ros. Young man, have you challenged Charles the wrestler?

Cel. Young gentleman, your spirits are too bold for your young years. You have been cruel proof of this man's strength: if you saw yourself with your eyes or knew yourself with your judgment, the fear of your adventure would counsel you to a more equal enterprise. We pray you, for your own sake, to embrace your own safety and give over this attempt.

Ros. Do, young sir; your reputation shall not therefore be misprised: we will make it our suit to the duke that the wrestling might not go forward.

Orl. Yes, I beseech your grace: I am not yet well breathed.
Duke F. How dost thou, Charles?
Le Beau. He cannot speak, my lord.
Duke F. Bear him away. What is thy name, young man?
Orl. Orlando, my liege: the youngest son of Sir Rowland de Boys.

Scene III.—A room in the palace.

Enter Celia and Rosalind.

Cel. Why, cousin! why, Rosalind! Cupid has not been merry! not a word?
Rosalind. Not one to throw at a dog.
Cel. No, thy words are too precious to be cast away upon ears; throw some of them at me; come, lame me with reasons.
Rosalind. Then there were two cousins laid up: when the one should be lame with reasons and the other mad without any.
Cel. But is all this for your father?
Rosalind. No, some of it is for my child's father. O, how full of briers is this working-day world!
Cel. They are but burs, cousin, thrown upon thee in holiday-yellow, if we walk not in the troubled paths, our very petals will catch them.
Rosalind. I should shake them off my coat; these burs are in my heart.
Cel. Hem them away.
Rosalind. [him.] Would I could try 'em and have
Cel. Come, come, wrestle with thy affections.
Rosalind. O, they take the part of a better wrestler than myself!
Cel. O, a good wish upon you! you will try in time, in spite of a fall. But, turning these jests out of service, let us talk in good earnest: is it possible, on such a sudden, you should fall into an strong a liking with old Sir Rowland's youngest son?
Rosalind. The duke my father loved his father dearly.
Cel. Doth it therefore ensue that you should love his son dearly? By this kind of chase, I should hate him, for my father hated his father dearly; yet I hate not Orlando.
Rosalind. No, faith, hate him not, for my sake.
Cel. Why should I not? doth he not deserve well?
Rosalind. Let me love him for that, and do you love him because I do. Look, here comes the duke.
Cel. With his eyes full of anger.

Enter Duke Frederick, with Lords.

Duke F. Mistress, dispatch you with your safest And get you from our court. [haste Rosalind. Me, uncle?
Duke F. You, cousin:
Within these ten days if that thou be'st found So near an public court as twenty miles, Thou diest for it.
Rosalind. I do beseech your grace,
Let me the knowledge of my fault bear with me:
If with myself I hold intelligence
Or have acquaintance with mine own desires,
If that I do not dream or do not work,
As I do trust I am not,—then, dear uncle,
Never so much as in a thought unborn
Did I offend your highness.
Duke F. Thus do all traitors:
If their purgation did consist in words,
They are as harmless as grace itself:
Let it suffice thee that I trust thee not.
Rosalind. Yet your mistrust cannot make me traitor: Tell me whereon the likelihood depends. [enough.
Duke F. Thon art thy father's daughter; there's Rosalind. So was I when your highness look'd his duke So was I when your highness look'd him: [dom;
Treason is not inherited, my lord;
Or, if we did derive it from our friends,
What's that to me? my father was no traitor:
Then, good my liege, mistake me not so much
To think my poverty is treacherous.

Cel. Dear sovereign, hear me speak.

Duke. Ay, Celia; we stay'd her for your sake,
Else had she with her father ranged along.

Cel. I did not then entract to have her stay,
It was your pleasure and your own remorse:
I was too young that time to value her;
But now I know her: if she be a traitor,
Why so am I; we still have slept together,
Rose at an instant, learn'd, play'd, eat together,
And whereas'er we went, like Juno's swans,
Still we went coupled and inseparable.

Duke. She is too subtle for thee: and her
Her very silence and her patience—smoothness,
Speak to the people, and they pity her.
Thou art a fool: she robs thee of thy name;
And thou wilt show more bright and seem more victorious.

When she is gone. Then open not thy lips:
Firm and irrevocable is my doom
Which I have passed upon her; she is banish'd.

Cel. Pronounce that sentence then on me, my
I cannot live out of her company.

[liege:]

Duke. You are a fool. You, niece, provide your-
If you outstay the time, upon mine honour, self;
And in the greatness of my word, you die.

[Exeunt Duke Frederick and Lords.

Cel. O my poor Rosalind, whither wilt thou go?
Wilt thou change fathers? I will give thee mine.
I charge thee, be not thou more grieved than I am.

Ros. I have more cause.

Cel. Thou hast not, cousin; Prichhee, be cheerful: know'st thou not, the duke
Hath banish'd me, his daughter?

Ros. That he hath not.

Cel. No, hath not? Rosalind lacks then the love
Which teacheth thee that thou and I am one:
Shall we be sunder'd? shall we part, sweet girl?

No: let my father seek another heir.
Therefore devise with me how we may fly,
Whither to go and what to bear with us;
And do protest to take your change upon you,
To bear your griefs yourself and leave me out;
For, by this heaven, now at our sorrows pale,
Say what thou canst, I'll go along with thee.

Ros. Why, whither shall we go?

Cel. To seek my uncle in the forest of Arden.

Ros. Alas, what danger will it be to us,
Maids as we are, to travel forth so far!
Beauty provoketh thieves sooner than gold.

Cel. I'll put myself in poor and mean attire
And with a kind ofumber smirth my face;
The like do you: so shall we pass along
And never stir assailants.

Ros. Were it not better,
Because that I am more than common tall,
That I did suit me all points like a man?
A gallant curte-axe upon my thigh,
A bear-spear in my hand; and—in my heart
Lie there what hidden woman's fear there will—
We'll have a swashbuckling and a martial outside,
As many other manly cowards have
That do outface it with their semblances.

Cel. What shall I call thee when thou art a man?

Ros. I'll have no worse a name than Jove's own
And therefore look you call me Ganymede.
[page; But what will you be call'd?]

Cel. Something that hath a reference to my state;
No longer Celia, but Alcina.

Ros. But, cousin, what if we assay'd to steal
The clown's fool out of your father's court?
Would he not be a comfort to our travel?

Cel. He'll go along over the wide world with me;
Leave me alone to woo him. Let's away,
And get our jewels and our wealth together,
Devise the fittest time and safest way
To hide us from pursuit that will be made
After my flight. Now go we in content
To liberty and not to banishment.

[Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Duke senior, Amiens, and two or three Lords, like foresters.

Duke S. Now, my co-mates and brothers in exile,
Hath not old custom made this life more sweet
Than that of painted pomp? Are not these woods
More free from peril than the envious court?
Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The seasons' difference, as the lazy fang
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind,
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Even till I shrink with cold, I smile and say
'This is no flattery: these are counsellors
That feelingly persuade me what I am.'
Sweet are the uses of adversity,
Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head:
And this our life exempt from public haunt
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running brooks,
Sermons in stones and good in every thing,
I would not change it.

And, that
Can translate the stubborness of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style.

Duke S. Come, shall we go and kill us venison?
And yet it irks me the poor dappled foals,
Being native burgurers of this desert city,
Should in their own confines with forked heads
Have their round haunches gored.

First Lord. Indeed, my lord,
The melancholy Jaques grieves at that,
And, in that kind, sweares you do more usurp
Than doth your brother that hath banish'd you.
To-day my Lord of Amiens and myself
Did steal behind him as he lay along
Under an oak whose antique root peeps out
Upon the brook that brawls along this wood:
To the which place a poor sequester'd stag,
That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to languish, and indeed, my lord,
The wretched animal heaved forth such groans
That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat
Almost to bursting, and the big round tears
Coursed one another down his innocent nose
In piteous chase; and thus the hairy fool,
Much marked of the melancholy Jaques,
Stood on the extremest verge of the swift brook,
Augmenting it with tears.

Duke S. But what said Jaques?
Did he not moralize this spectacle?

First Lord. O, yes, into a thousand similes.
First, for his weeping into the needless stream;
You do, quoth he, take your chamber a testament,
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more alone,
To that which had too much: 't was then, being there
Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends,
'Tis right: 'quoth he, thus misery doth part
The flux of company,' anon a careless herd,
Full of the pasture, jumps along by him

SCENE IV.

And never stays to greet him: ‘Ay, quoth Jaques, ‘Sweep on, you fat and greasy citizens; ‘Tis but the fashion: wherefore do you look Upon that poor and broken bankramp there? ’

Thus most inventively he pierceth through The keenest eye, with hasty tongue. Yea, and of this our life, swearing that we Are mere usurpers, tyrants and what’s worse, To fright the animals to and from them In their ass’n’d native dwellings-place. (t ammunition)

Duke S. And did you leave him in this contemplation?Scene I. We did, my lord, weeping and com-}

Upon the sobbing deer. (menting)

Duke S. Show me the place.

I love to cope him in these sullen fits, For then he’s full of matter.

First Lord. I’ll bring you to him straight. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A room in the palace.

Enter Duke Frederick, with Lords.

Duke F. Can it be possible that no man saw them? It cannot be; some villains of his court Are of consent and suffering in this.

First Lord. I cannot hear of any that did see her. The ladies, her attendants of her chamber, Saw her a-bed, and in the morning early They found the bed untreasured of their mistress. Scence I. When sent to call her, who? What clown, at whom so Your grace was wont to laugh, is also missing. [Is hisperia, the princess’ gentlewoman, Confesses that she secretly o’erheard Your daughter and her cousin much command The parts and graces of the wrestler That did but lately fold the shifty Charles; And she believes, wherever they are gone, That youth is surely in their company. [hither

Duke F. Send to his brother; [them.]

If he be absent, bring his brother to me; I’ll make him find him: do this suddenly, And let not search and inquiry quail To bring again these foolish runaways. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—Before Oliver’s house.

Enter Orlando and Adam, meeting.

Orl. Who’s there?

Adam. What, my young master? O my gentle O my sweet master! O you memory Of old Sir Rowland! why, what make you here? Why are you virtuous? why do people love you? And wherefore are you gentle, strong and valiant? Why would you be so fond to over come The bonny priser of the humorous duke? Your praise is come too swiftly home before you. Know you not, master, to some kind of men Their graces serve them but as enemies? No more do yours; your virtues, gentle master, Are sanctified and holy traitors to you, O, what a world is this, when what is come Envenoms him that bears it!

Orl. Why, what’s the matter?

Adam. O unhappy youth! Come not within these doors; within this roof The enemy of all your graces lives. Your brother—no, no brother; yet the son— Yet not the son, I will not call him son Of him I was about to call his father— Hath heard your praises, and this night he means To burn the lodging where you use to lie And you within it; if he fall of that, He will by other means to cut you off. I overheard him and his practices. This is no place; this house is but a butcher’s: Abhor it, fear it, do not enter it. [go?

Orl. Why, whither, Adam, wouldst thou have me

Adam. No matter whither, so you come not here. Orl. What, wouldst thou have me go and beg my food? Or with a base and boisterous sword enforce A thievish living on the common road? This I might do, or know what I will do: Yet this I will not do, do how I can; I rather will subject me to the malice Of a diverted blood and bloody brother, [crowns, Adam. But do not so. I have five hundred The thrifty hire I saved under your father, Which I did store to be my festival. When service should in my old limbs lie tamed And unregard in age in corners thrown: Take that, and he that doth the ravens feed, Yea providently calers for the sparrow. Be comfort to my age! Here is the gold: All this I give you. Let me be your servant; Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty; For in my youth I never did apply Hot and rebellious ligours in my blood, Nor did not with unashamed head woo The means of weakness and debility; Therefore my age is as a lusty winter, Frosty, but kindly: let me go with you; I’ll do the service of a younger man In all your business and necessities.

Orl. O good old man, how well in thee appears The constant service of the antique world, And how much with the age thou art agreeable When sent to call her, who? What clown, at whom so Your grace was wont to laugh, is also missing. [Is hisperia, the princess’ gentlewoman, Confesses that she secretly o’erheard Your daughter and her cousin much command The parts and graces of the wrestler That did but lately fold the shifty Charles; And she believes, wherever they are gone, That youth is surely in their company. [hither

If he be absent, bring his brother to me; I’ll make him find him: do this suddenly, And let not search and inquiry quail To bring again these foolish runaways. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Forest of Arden.

Enter Rosalind, for Ganymede, Celia for Aliena, and Touchstone.

Ros. O Jupiter, how weary are my spirits! I care not for my spirits, if my legs were not weary.

Ros. I could find in my heart to disgrace my man’s apparel and to cry like a woman; but I must content the weaker vessel, as double and base, and must have the courage to petticoat: therefore courage, good Aliena! Celia, I pray you, bear with me; I can go no further.

Touch. For my part, I had rather bear with you than bear you; yet I should bear no cross if I did bear you, for I think you have no money in your purse.

Ros. Well, this is the forest of Arden.

Touch. Ay, now am I in Arden; the more fool I; when I was at home, I was in a better place: but travellers must be content.

Ros. Ay, be so, good Touchstone.

Enter Corin and Silvius.

Look you, who comes here; a young man and an old in solemn talk.
Cor. That is the way to make her scorn you still.
Sil. O Corin, that thou knowest how I love her!
Cor. I partly guess; for I have loved ere now.
Sil. No, Corin, being old, thou canst not guess,
Though in thy youth thou wast as true a lover
As ever sigh'd upon a midnight pillow:
But if thy love were ever like mine—
As sure I think did ever man love so—
How many actions most ridiculous
Hast thou been drawn to by thy fantasy?
Cor. Into a thousand that I have forgotten.
Sil. O, thou didst then 'ne'er love so heartily!
If thou remember'st not the slightest folly
That ever love did make thee run into,
Thou hast not loved:
Or if thou hast not sat as I do now,
Weary thy hearer in thy mistress' praise,
Thou hast not loved:
Or if thou hast not broke from company
Abruptly, as my passion now makes me,
Thou hast not loved.
O Phèbe, Phèbe, Phèbe! [Exit.
Ros. Alas, poor shepherd! searching of thy wound,
I have by hard adventure found mine own.
Touch. And I mine. I remember, when I was in love I broke my sword upon a stone and bid him take that for coming a-night to Jane Smile; and I remember the kissing of her batlet and the cows' dugs that her pretty chop't hands had milk'd; and I remember the wooting of a peasod instead of her, from whom I took two cogs and, giving her them again, said with weeping tears: 'Wear these for my sake! We, that are true lovers run into strange capers; but as all is mortal in nature, so is all nature in love mortal in folly.
Ros. Thou speakest wiser than thou art ware of.
Touch. Nay, I shall 'ne'er be ware of mine own wit till I break my shins against it.
Ros. John! This love! This passionIs much upon my fashion.
Touch. And mine; but it grows something stale
with me.
Cor. I pray you, one of you question yond man
If he for gold will give us any food:
I faint almost to death.
Touch. Holla, you clown! Who calls?
Cor. Your betters, sir.
Ros. Peace, fool: he's not thy kinsman.
Cor. Who calls?
Touch. And to you, gentle sir, and to you all.
Ros. I prithee, shepherd, if that love or gold
Can in this desert place buy entertainment,
Bring us where we may rest ourselves and feed;
Here's a young maid with travel much oppressed'd
And faints for succour.
Cor. Fair sir, I pity her
And wish, for her sake more than for mine own,
My fortunes were more able to relieve her;
But I am shepherd to another man
And do not shear the fleeces that I graze;
My master is of churlish disposition
And little recks to find the way to heaven
By doing deeds of hospitality:
Besides, his cote, his flocks and bounds of feed
Are now on sale, and at our sheepe'stote now,
By reason of his absence, there is nothing
That you will find on; but what is, come see,
And in my voice most welcome shall you be.
Ros. What is he that shall buy his flock and pasture?
Cor. That young swain that you saw here but
That little cares for buying anything.
Ros. I pray thee, if it stand with honesty,
Buy thou the cottage, pasture and the flock,
And thou shalt have to pay for it of us.

Cor. And we will mend thy wages. I like this
And willingly could waste my time in it. [place;
Ros. And the thing is to be said;
Go with me: if you like upon report
The soil, the profit and this kind of life,
I will your very faithful feeder be
And buy it with your gold right suddenly, [Exit.

SCENE V. — The forest.
Enter Amiens, Jaques, and others.

SONG.

Ami. Under the greenwood tree
Who loves to lie with me,
And turn his merry note
Unto the sweet bird's throat,
Come hither, come hither, come hither:
Here shall he see
No enemy
But winter and rough weather.

Jaq. More, more, I prithee, more.
Ami. It will make you melancholy, Monsieur Jaques.

Jaq. I thank it. More, I prithee, more. I can mock melancholy out of a song, as a weasel sucks eggs. More, I prithee, more.
Ami. My voice is rag'd: I know I cannot please you.
Jaq. I do not desire you to please me; I do desire you to sing. Come, more; another stanza: call you 'em stanzas?
Ami. What you will, Monsieur Jaques.

Jaq. Nay, I care not for their names; they owe me nothing. Will you sing?
Ami. More at your request than to please myself.
Jaq. Well then, if ever I thank any man, I'll thank you. But that they call compliment is like the encounter of two dog-apes, and when a man thanks me heartily, methinks I have given him a penny and he renders me the beggarly thanks. Come, sing; and you that will not, hold your tongues.
Ami. Well. I'll eat the song. Sirs, cover the while; the duke will drink under this tree. He hath been all this day to look you.
Jaq. And I have been all this day to avoid him.
He is too disputable for my company: I think of as many matters as he, but I give heaven thanks and make no boast of them. Come, warble, come.

SONG.

Who doth ambition shun [All together here.
And loves to live i' the sun,
Seeking the food he eats
And pleased with what he gets,
Come hither, come hither, come hither:
Here shall he see
No enemy
But winter and rough weather.

Jaq. I'll give you a verse to this note that I made yesterday in derision of my invention.

Ami. And I'll sing it.
Jaq. Thus it goes:—

If it do come to pass
That any man turn ass,
Taking his wealth and ease,
A stubborn ass, to please,
Dudcrame, dudcrame, dudcrame;
Here shall he see
Gross fools as he,
An if he will come to me.

Ami. What's that 'dudcrame'?Jaq. 'Tis a Greek invocation, to call fools into a circle. I'll go sleep, if I can; if I cannot, I'll rail against all the first-born of Egypt.
And I'll go seek the duke; his banquet is prepared. [Exit seerally.

SCENE VI.—The forest.

Enter Orlando and Adam.

Adam. Dear master, I can go no further: O, I die for food! Here lie I down, and measure out my grave. Farewell, kind master.

Orl. Why, how now, Adam! no greater heart in thee? Live a little; comfort a little; cheer thyself a little. If this uncoth forest yield me anything save my food, I will feel for if or bring it for food to thee. Thy conceit is nearer death than thy powers. For my sake be comfortable; hold death awhile at the arm's end: I will here be with thee presently; and if I bring thee not something to eat, I will give thee leave to die: but if thou diest before I come, thou art a mocker of my labour. Will said! thou lookest cheerily, and I'll be with thee quickly. Yet thou liest in the bleak air: come, I will bear thee to some shelter; and thou shalt not die for lack of a dinner, if there live any thing in this desert. Cheerly, good Adam! [Exit.

SCENE VII.—The forest.

A table set out. Enter Duke senior, Amiens, and Lords like outlaws.

Duke S. I think he be transform'd into a beast; For I can no where find him like a man.

First Lord. My lord, he is but even now gone Here was he merry, hearing of a song. [hence:

Duke S. If he, compact of jars, grow musical, We shall have shortly discord in the spheres. Go, seek him: tell him I would speak with him.

Enter Jaques.

First Lord. He saves my labour by his own approach. [is this,

Duke S. Why, how now, monsieur! what a life That your poor friends must woo your company? What, you look merry?

Jaq. A fool, a fool! I met a fool in the forest, A motley fool: a miserable world! As I do live by food, I met a fool; Who laid him down and bask'd him in the sun, And said I on Lady Fortune in good terms, In good set terms and yet a motley fool. 'Good morn, my master,' quoth he; 'I have a hair,' quoth he, 'Call me not fool till heaven hath sent me fortune:' And then he drew a dial from his poke, And, looking on it with lack-lustre eye, Says very wisely, 'tis ten o'clock. Thus we may see, quoth he, 'how the world wags: This is but an hour ago since it was noon; And after one hour more 't will be eleven; And so, from hour to hour, we ripe and ripe, And then, from hour to hour, we rot and rot; And thereby hangs a tale.' When I did hear The motley fool thus moral on the time, My limbs began to crow like chattering, That fools should be so deep-contemplative, And I did laugh sans intermission An hour by his dial. O noble fool! A worthy fool! Motley's the only wear.

Duke S. What fool is this? [Tier,

Jaq. O worthy fool! One that hath been a courtier, And says, if ladies be but young and fair, They have the gift to know it: and in his brain, Which is as dry as the remainder biscuit After a voyage, he hath strange places cramm'd With observation, the which he vents In mangled forms. O that I were a fool! I am ambitious for a motley coat.

Duke S. Thou shalt have one.

Jaq. It is my only suit; Provided that you weed your better judgments Of all opinion that grows rank in them That I am wise. I must have liberty Withal, as large a charter as the wind, To blow on whom I please: for so fools have; And they that have not been called wise, They most must laugh. And why, sir, must they so? The 'why' is plain as way to parish church: He that a fool doth very wisely hit Doth very foolishly, although he smart, Not to seem senseless of the bold: if not, The wise man's folly is as the fool's wise Even by the squandering glances of the fool. Invest me in my motley; give me leave To speak my mind, and I will through and through Cleanse the foul body of the infected world, If they will patiently receive my medicine. [no.

Duke S. Fie on thee! I can tell what thou wouldst

Jaq. What, for a counter, would I do but good?

Duke S. Most mischievous foul sin, in chiding For thou thyself hast been a libertine, [sin: As sensual as the brutish sting itself; And all the embossed sores and head-cuts, That thou with license of true fool fast caught, Wouldst throughst disgorge into the general world. What comes here?

Enter Orlando, with his sword drawn.

Orl. Forbear, and eat no more.

Jaq. Why, I have eat none yet. [Orl.

Orl. Nor shalt not, till necessity be served.

Jaq. Of what kind should this cock come of?

Duke S. A foul clow'd man, by thy or Else a rude despiser of good manners, [dread. In that civility thou seem'st so empty? [point

Orl. You touch'd my vein at first: the thorny Of bare distress hath ta'en from me the show Of smooth civility: yet an I inland bred And know some nurture. But forbear, I say: He dies that touches any of this fruit Till I and my affaires are answered.

Jaq. An you will not be answered with reason I must die,

Duke S. What would you have? Your gentle ness shall force

More than your force move us to gentleness. [Orl.

Orl. I almost die for food; and let me have it.

Duke S. Sit down and feed, and welcome to our table.

Orl. Speak you so gently? Pardon me. I pray you: I thought that all things had been savage here And therefore put I on the countenance Of stern commandment. But what's e'er you are That in this desert inaccessible, Under the shade of melancholy boughs, Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time; If ever you have look'd on better days, If ever been where bells have knoll'd to church,
If ever sat at any good man's feast,
If ever from your eyelids wiped a tear,
And know what 'tis to pity and be pitied,
Let gentleness my strong enforcement be:
In the which hope I blush, and hide my sword.

Duke S. True is it that we have seen better days,
And have with holy bell been knoll'd to church
And sat at good men's feasts and wiped our eyes
Of drops that sacred pity hath engender'd;
And therefore sit you down in gentleness
And take upon command what help we have
That to your wanting may be minister'd.

O'th. Then but forbear your food a little while,
Whiles, like a doe, I go to find my fawn
And give it food. There is an old poor man,
Who after me hath manny a weary step
Limp'd in pure love: till he be first sufficed,
Oppress'd with two weak evils, age and hunger,
I will not touch a bit.

Duke S. Go find him out,
And we will nothing waste till you return.

O'th. I thank ye; and be blest for your good comfort!

[Exit.]

Duke S. Thou seest we are not all alone unhappy:
This wide and universal theatre
Presents more woeful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play in.

Jaq. All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players:
They have their exits and their entrances:
And one man in his time plays many parts,
His acts being seven ages. At first the infant,
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms.
And then the whining school-boy, with his satchel
And shining morning face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school. And then the lover,
Sighing like furnace, with a woeful ballad
Made to his mistress' eye now. Then a soldier,
Full of strange oaths and bearded like the pard,
Jealous in honour, sudden and quick in quarrel,
Seeking the bubble reputation
Even in the cannon's mouth. And then the justice,
In fair round belly with good capon lined,
With eyes severe and beard of formal cut,
Full of wise saws and modern instances;
And so he plays his part. The sixth age shifts
Into thebeck and shampan Election,
With spectacles on nose and pouch on side,
His youthful hose, well saved, a world too wide
For his shrunk shank; and his big manly voice,
Turning again toward childish treble, pipes
And whistles this sound. Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness and mere oblivion,
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing.

Re-enter Orlando, with Adam.

Duke S. Welcome. Set down your venerable
And let him feed. [Barth.]

Adam. So had you need:
I scarce can speak to thank you for myself.

Duke S. Welcome; fall to: I will not trouble you
As yet, to question you about your fortunes.
Give us some music; and, good cousin, sing.

SONG.

Aun. Blow, blow, thou winter wind,
Thou art not so unkind
As man's ingratitude;
Thy tooth is not so keen,
Because thou art not seen,
Although thy breath be rude.

Heigh-ho! sing, heigh-ho! unto the green holly:
Most friendship is declining, most loving mere folly:
Then, heigh-ho, the holly!
This life is most jolly.

Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
That dost not bite so nigh
As benefits forget:
Though thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As friend remember'd not.

Heigh-ho! sing, &c.

Duke S. If that you were the good Sir Rowland's
As you have whisper'd faithfully you were, [son
And as mine eye doth his elligent witness
Most truly limned and living in your face,
Be truly welcome hither: I am the duke
That loved your father: the residue of your fortune,
Go to my cave and tell me. Good old man,
Thou art right welcome as thy master is.
Support him by the arm. Give me your hand,
And let me all your fortunes understand. [Exeunt.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A room in the palace.

Enter Duke Frederick, Lords, and Oliver.

Duke F. Not see him since? Sir, sir, that cannot be:
But were I not the better part made mercy,
I should not seek an absent argument
Of my revenge, thou present. But look to it:
Find out thy brother, wheresoe'er he is;
Seek him with candle; bring him dead or living
Within this twelvemonth, or turn thou no more
To seek a living in our territory.
Thy lands and all things that thou dost call thine
Worth seizure do we seize into our hands,
Till thou canst quitt thee by thy brother's mouth
Of what we think against thee.
If this be so, know my heart in this!
I never loved my brother in my life.

Duke F. More villain thou. Well, push him out of doors;
And let my officers of such a nature
Make an extent upon his house and lands:
Do this expediently and turn him going. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The forest.

Enter Orlando, with a paper.

O're. Hang there, my verse, in witness of my love:
And them, thrice-crowned! queen of night, survey
With thy chaste eye, from thy pale sphere above.
Thy huntress' name that my full life doth carry.
O Rosalind! these trees shall be my books
And in theirarks my thoughts I'll character;
That every eye which in this forest looks
Shall see thy virtue witness'd everywhere.
Run, run, Orlando; carve on every tree
The fair, the chaste and unexpressive she. [Exit.

Enter Corin and Touchstone.

Cor. And how like you this shepherd's life, Master Touchstone?

Touch. Truly, shepherd, in respect of itself, it is a good life; but in respect that it is a shepherd's life, it is naught. In respect that it is solitary, I like it very well; but in respect that it is private, it is a very vile life. Now, in respect it is in the fields, it pleaseth me well; but in respect it is not in the court, it is tedious. As it is a spare life, look you, it fits my humour well; but as there is no more plenty in it, it goes much against my stomach. Hast any philosophy in thee, shepherd?
ACT III.  AS YOU LIKE IT.  SCENE II.

Cor. No more but that I know the more one sickens the worse at ease he is; and that he that wants money, means and content is without three good friends; that the property of rain is to wet and dry to burn; that good pasture makes fat sheep; and that a great cause of the night is lack of the sun; that he that hath learned no wit by nature nor art may complain of good breeding or comes of a very dull kindred.

Touch. Such a one is a natural philosopher. Waste ever in court, shepherd?

Cor. No, truly.

Touch. Then thou art damned.

Cor. Nay, I hope.

Touch. Truly, thou art damned like an ill-roasted egg, all on one side.

Cor. For not being at court? Your reason.

Touch. Why, if thou never wast at court, thou never sawest good manners; if thou never sawest good manners, then thy manners must be wicked; and wickedness is sin, and sin is damnation. Thou art in a jocular state, shepherd.

Cor. Besides, those that are good manners at the court are as ridiculous in the country as the behaviour of the country is most mockable at the court. You told me you salute not at the court, but you kiss your hands: that courtesy would be uncleanly, if courtiers were shepherds.

Touch. Instance, briefly; come, instance.

Cor. Why, we are still handling our eyes, and their fells, you know, are greasy.

Touch. Why, do not your courtier's hands sweat? and is not the grease of a mutton as wholesome as the sweat of a man? Shallow, shallow. A better instance, I say, come.

Cor. Besides, our hands are hard.

Touch. Your lips will feel them the sooner. Shallow again. A more sounder instance, come.

Cor. And they are often tarred over with the surgery of our sheep; and would you have us kiss the cow's head? The courtier's hands are perfumed with civet.

Touch. Most shallow man! thou worms-meat, in respect of a good piece of flesh indeed! Learn of the wise, and appropriate: civet is of a baser birth than tar, the very uncleanness of a flux at a man; read the instance, shepherd.

Cor. You have too courtly a wit for me: I'll rest.

Cor. Sir, I am a true labourer: I earn that I eat, get that I wear, owe no man hate, envy no man's happiness, glad of other men's good, content with my own. Not that the greatest of my pride is to see my eyes graze and my lamb's suck.

Touch. That is another simple sin in you, to bring the eyes and the rams together and to offer to get your living by the copulation of cattle; to be hawd to a bell-wether, and to betray a she-lamb of a twelve-month to a crooked-tailed, old, awkward ram, out of all reasonable match. If thou beest not damned for this, the devil himself will have no shepherds; I cannot see else how thou shouldst 'scape.

Cor. Here comes young Master Ganymede, my new mistress's brother.

Enter Rosalind, with a paper, reading.

Ros. From the east to western Ind, No jewel is like Rosalind. Her worth, being mounted on the wind, Through all the world bears Rosalind. All the pictures fairest lined Are but black to Rosalind.

Cor. Let no fair be kept in mind But the fair of Rosalind.

Touch. I'll rhyme you so eight years together, dinners and suppers and sleeping-hours excepted: it is the right butter-women's rank to market.

Ros. Out, fool!

Touch. For a taste:
If a hart do lack a hind,
Let the buck seek out Rosalind.
If the cat will after kind,
So be sure will Rosalind.
Winter garments must be lined,
So must slender Rosalind.
They that reap must sheaf and bind;
Then to court with Rosalind.
Sweetest nut hath sourest rind,
Such a nut is Rosalind.
He that sweetest rose will find
Must find love's prick and Rosalind.

This is the very false gallop of verses: why do you infect yourself with them?

Ros. Peace, you dull fool! I found them on a tree.

Touch. Truly, the tree yields bad fruit.

Ros. I'll graft it with you, and then I shall graft it with a medlar: then it will be the earliest fruit in the country: for you'll be rotten ere you be half ripe. No, and that's the right virtue of the medlar.

Touch. You have said; but whether wisely or no, let the forest judge.

Enter Celia, with a writing.

Ros. Peace! Here comes my sister, reading: stand aside.

Cel. [Reads] Why should this a desert be?
For it is unpeopled? No;
Tongues I'll hang on every tree,
That shall civil sayings show:
Some, how brief the life of man
Rums his earring pilgrimage,
That the stretching of a span
Buckles in his sun of age;
Some, of violated vows
Twixt the souls of friend and friend:
But upon the fairest boughs,
O! on every sennet's head,
Will I Rosalind write,
Teaching all that read to know
The quintessence of every sprite
Heaven would in little show;
Therefore Heaven Nature charged
That one body she should fill:
With all graces wide-enlarged:
Nature presently distill'd
Helena's cheek, but not her heart,
Cleopatra's majesty,
Athalanta's better part,
Sappho's modesty.
Thus Rosalind of many parts
By heavenly synod was devised,
Of many faces, eyes and hearts,
To have the touches dearest prized.
Heaven would that she these gifts should have,
And I to live and die her slave.
Ros. O most gentle pulpitcr! what tedious homily of love have you wearied your parishioners withal, and never cried 'Have patience, good people!' Cel. How now! back, friends! Shepherd, go off a little. Go with him, sirrah.

Touch. So, shepherd, let us make an honourable retreat: though not with bag and baggage, yet with scrip and scrippage.

[Exeunt Corin and Touchstone.]

Cel. Didst thou hear these verses?

Ros. O, yes. I heard them all, and more too: for some of them had in them more feet than the verses would bear.
ACT III.

AS YOU LIKE IT.

SCENE II.

Cel. That's no matter: the feet might bear the verses.

Cel. Ay, but the feet were lame and could not bear themselves without the verse and therefore stood lamely in the verse.

Cel. But didst thou hear without wondering how thy name should be hanged and carved upon these trees?

Cel. I was seven of the nine days out of the wonder before you came: for look here what I found on a palm-tree. I was never so bemused since Pythagoras' time, that I was an Irish rat, which I can hardly remember.

Cel. Tryon who hath done this?

Ros. Some vagrant, some man of violence.

Cel. And a chain, that you once wore, about his neck. Change you colour?

Ros. I prithee, who?

Cel. O Lord, Lord! it is a hard matter for friends to meet; but mountains may be removed with earthquakes and so encounter.

Ros. Nay, but who is it?

Cel. Is it possible?

Ros. Nay, I prithee now with most petitionary vehemence, tell me who it is.

Cel. O wonderful, wonderful, and most wonderful! and yet again wonderful, and after this, or at all shipping!

Ros. Good my complexion! dost thou think, though I am caparisoned like a man, I have a doublet and hose in my disposition? One inch of delay more is a South-sea of discovery; I prithee, tell me who is it quickly, and speak apiece. I would thou couldst remember, that thou mightst pour this concealed man out of thy mouth, as wine comes out of a narrow-mouthed bottle, either too much at once, or none at all. I prithee, take the cork out of thy mouth that I may drink thy tidings.

Cel. So you may put a man in your belly.

Ros. Is he of God's making? What manner of man? Is his head worth a hat, or his chin worth a

Cel. Nay, he hath but a little beard. [beard]

Ros. Why, God will send more, if the man will be thankful: let me stay the growth of his beard, if thou delay me not the knowledge of his chin.

Cel. It is a wise old Orlando, that tripped up the wrestler's heels and your heart both in an instant.

Ros. Nay, but the devil take mocking: speak, sad brow and true maid.

Cel. I, faith, coz, 'tis he.

Ros. Orlando?

Cel. Orlando.

Ros. A has the day! what shall I do with my doublet and hose? What did he when thou sawest him? What said he? How looked he? Wherein went he? What makes he here? Did he ask for me? Where remains he? How parted he with thee? and when shall thou see him again? Answer me in one word.

Cel. You must borrow me Gargantua's mouth first: 'tis a word too great for any mouth of this age's size. To say ay and no to these particulars is more than to answer in a catechism.

Ros. But doth he know that I am in this forest and in man's apparel? Looks he as freshly as he did the day he wrestled?

Cel. It is as easy to count atoms as to resolve the propositions of a lover; but take a taste of my finding him, and relish it with good observance. I found him under a tree, like a dropped acorn.

Cel. That's called Jove's tree, when it drops forth such fruit.

Cel. Give me audience, good madam.

Ros. Proceed.

Cel. There lay he, stretched along, like a wounded knight.

Ros. Though it be pity to see such a sight, it well becomes the ground.
because he cannot study and the other lives merely by buttoning his coat to his chin, the one lacking the time of lean and wasteful learning, the other knowing no burden of heavy tedious penury; these Time ambles withal.

Orl. Who doth he gallop within?

Ros. With a thief to the galleries, for though he go as softly as foot can fall, he thinks himself too Orl. To his legs, is it? I'll lend a guinea; I'll try them.

Ros. With lawyers in the vacation; for they sleep between term and term and then they perceive not how Time moves.

Orl. Where dwell you, pretty youth?

Ros. With this shepherdess, my sister; here in the vale: I am a little wild with her.

Orl. Are you native of this place? [is kindled.

Ros. As the cow that you see dwell where she Orl. Your accent is something finer than you could purchase in so removed a dwelling.

Ros. I have been told so of many; but indeed an old religious uncle of mine taught me to speak, who was in his youth an inland man; one that knew courtship too well, for there he fell in love. I have heard him read many lectures against it, and I thank God I am not a woman, to be touched with so many girly offences as he hath generally taken a whole sex withal.

Orl. Can you remember any of the principal evils that he laid to the charge of women?

Ros. There were none principal; they were all like one another as half-pence are, every one fault seeming monstrous till his fellow-fault came to match it.

Orl. I prithee, recount some of them.

Ros. No, I will not cast away my physic but on those that are sick. There is a man haunts the forest, that abuses our young plants with carving 'Rosalind' on their barks; hangs odes upon haw-thorns and elegies on brambles, all forsooth, defying the name of Rosalind. I would make my fancy revile him. I should give him some sound counsel, for he seems to have the quotidian of love upon him.

Orl. I am he that is so love-shaked: I pray you, tell me your remedy.

Ros. There is none of my uncle's marks upon your young plants, but I will teach you how to know a man in love; in which cage of rushes I am sure you are not pris-

Orl. What were his marks? [oner.

Ros. A lean cheek, which you have not, a blue eye and sunken, which you have not, an unquestionable spirit, which you have not, a beard neglected, which you have not, a touch-ply, which you have not; for simply your having in beard is a younger brother's revenue: then your nose should be unba-tered, your bonnet unbraided, your sleeve untun-toned, your shoe unmitied and every thing about you demonstrating a careless desolation: but you and I are such men as are rather point-device in your accoutrements as loving yourself than seeming the lover of any other.

Orl. Fair youth, I would I could make thee believe I love.

Ros. Me believe it! you may as soon make her believe that you love believe it: which, I warrant, she is apter to do than to confess she does: that is one of the points in which the women still give the lie to their consciences. But, in good sooth, are you he that hangs the verses on the trees, wherein Rosalind is so admired?

Orl. By me, by thee, youth, by the white hand of Rosalind. I am that he, that unfortunate he.

Ros. But are you so much in love as your rhymes speak?

[unmch.

Orl. Neither rhyme nor reason can express how Ros. Love is merely a madness, and, I tell you, deserves as well a dark house and a whip as mad men do; and the reason why they are not so pun-ish’d and cured is, that the lunacy is so ordinary that the whippers are in love too. Yet I profess curing it by counselling.

Orl. Did you ever cure any so?

Ros. Yes, one, and in this manner. He was to imagine me his love, his mistress; and I set him every day to woo me: at which time would I, being but a moonish youth, grieve, be effeminate, changeable, longings and hikings, proud, fantastical, apish, shallow, incessant, full of tears, full of smiles, for every passion something and for no passion truly any thing, as boys and women are for the most part cullable of this colour; would now like him, now loathe him; then entertain him, then forswear him: I would keep him, then spurn at him; that I draw my suitor from his mad humour of love to a living humour of madness; which was, to forswear the full stream of the world and to live in a neok merely monastic. And thus I cured him: and this way will I take upon me to wash your liver as clean as a sound sheep’s heart, that there shall not be one spot of love in’t.

Orl. I would not be cured, youth.

Ros. I would cure you, if you would but call me Rosalind and come every day to my cote and woo me.

Orl. Now, by the faith of my love, I will: tell me what it is.

Ros. Go with me to it and I’ll show you it; and by the way you shall tell me where in the forest you live. Will you go?

Orl. With all my heart, good youth.

Ros. Nay, you must call me Rosalind. Come, sister, will you go?

[Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey; Jaques behind.

Touch. Come apace, good Audrey; I will fetch to your friend the same meat you had made me the other day: is the man yet? doth my simple feature content you? And. Your features! Lord warrant us! what features?

Touch. I am here with thee and thy goats, as the most capacious poet, honest Ovid, was among the Goths.

Aud. [aside] O knowledge ill-inhabited, worse than Jove in a thatched house!

Touch. When a man’s verses cannot be understood, nor a man’s good wit seconded with the forward child Understanding, it strikes a man more dead than a great reckoning in a little room. Truly, though I would the gods had made me poetical; that I draw my suitor from his mad humour of love to a living humour of madness; which was, to forswear the full stream of the world and to live in a neok merely monastic. And thus I cured him: and this way will I take upon me to wash your liver as clean as a sound sheep’s heart, that there shall not be one spot of love in’t.

Aud. Do you wish then that the gods had made me Touch. I do, truly: for thou swearest to me thou art honest: now, if thou wert a poet, I might have some hope thou didst feign.

Aud. Would you not have me honest?

Touch. No, truly: unless thou wert hard-favoured; for honesty coupled to beauty is to have honey a sauce to sugar.

Aud. [aside] A material fool!

Touch. Well, I am not hair; and therefore I pray the gods make me honest.

Aud. Then, to cast away honesty upon a foul slut were to put good meat into an unclean dish.

Touch. I am not a slut, though I thank the gods I am foul.

Aud. Well, praised be the gods for thy foulness! shittiness may come hereafter. But be it as it may be, I will marry thee and to that end I have been with Sir Oliver Martext, the vieur of the next village, who hath promised to meet me in this place of the forest and to couple us.

_Jaq._ [Aside.] I would往年 see this meeting.

_Aud._ Well, the gods give us joy.

_Brun._ A man may, if he were of a fearful heart, stagger in this attempt; for here we have no temple but the wood, no assembly but horn-beasts. But what though? Courage! As horns are odious, they are necessary. It is said, "many a man knows no end of his goods:" right; many a man has good horns, and knows no end of them. Well, that is the dowry of his wife: 'tis none of his own getting. Horns? Even so. Poor men alone? No, no; the noblest deer hath them as huge as the rascal. Is the single man therefore blessed? No: as a walled town is more worshipful than a city, so is the forehead of a married man more honourable than the bare brow of a bachelor; and by how much defence is better than no skill, by so much is a horn more precious to want. Here comes Sir Oliver.

_Enter Sir Oliver Martext._

Sir Oliver Martext, you are well met: will you dispatch us here under this tree, or shall we go with you to your chapel?

_Sir Oli._ Is there none here to give the woman? _Jaq._ I will not take her on of any man. _Sir Oli._ Truly, she must be given, or the marriage is not lawful. _Jaq._ [Advancing] Proceed, proceed: I'll give her. _Touch._ Good even, good Master What-ye-call't: how do you, sir? You are very well met. _Jaq._ God bid you for your last company: I am very glad to see you: even a boy in hand here, sir; may pray be cov. _Jaq._ Will you be married, master? [cried. _Touch._ As the ox hath his bow, sir, the horse his curb and the falcon her bells, so man hath his desires; and as pigeons bill, so weldock would be nibbling. _Jaq._ And will you, being a man of your breeding, be married under a bush like a beggar? Get you to church, and have a good priest that can tell you what marriage is: this fellow will but join you together as they join wainscot; then one of you will prove a shrunken panel and, like green timber, warp, warp.

Touch. [Aside.] I am not in the mind but I were better to be married of him than of another: for he is not like to marry me well; and not being well married, it will be a good excuse for me hereafter to leave my wife.

_Jaq._ What is the matter? [I will not, and let me counsel thee. _Touch._ Come, sweet Audrey: We must be married, or we must live in badwry. Farewell, good Master Oliver: not,—O sweet Oliver, O brave Oliver, Leave me not behind thee: but,— Wind away, Begone, I say, I will not to wedding with thee. _Exeunt Jaques, Touchstone and Audrey.

_Sir Oli._ 'Tis no matter: nce'e a fantastical knife of them all shall flout me out of my calling. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the forest.

_Enter Rosalind and Celia._

_Ros._ Never talk to me; I will weep.

_Cel._ Do, I prithee; but yet have the grace to consider that tears do not become a man.

_Ros._ But have I not cause to weep? [weep.

_Cel._ As good cause as one would desire; therefore _Ros._ His very hair is of the dissembling colour. _Cel._ Something browner than Judas's; marry, his kisses are Judas's own children.

_Ros._ If faith, his hair is of a good colour. _Cel._ An excellent colour: your chestnut was ever the only colour. _Ros._ He hath bought a pair of cast lips of Diana: a mun of winter's sisterhood kisses not more religiously; the very ice of chastity is in them. _Cel._ But why did he swear he would come this morning, and comes not? _Cel._ And certainly, there is no truth in him. _Ros._ Do you think so? _Cel._ Yes: I think he is not a pick-purse nor a horse-stealer, but for his verity in love, I do think him as conceave as a covered goblet or a worm-caten. _Ros._ Not true in love? [bait. _Cel._ Yes, when he is; but I think he is not in. _Ros._ You have heard him swear downright he was. _Cel._ Was 'is not 'is: besides, the oath of a lover is no stronger than the word of a taster: they are both the confirmer of false reckonings. He attends here in the forest on the duke your father.

_Ros._ He did not. I have said I, and had much question with him: he asked me of what parentage I was; I told him, of as good as he; so he laughed and let me go. But what talk we of fathers, when there is such a man as Orlando?

_Cel._ O, that's a brave man! He writes brave verses, speaks brave words, swear brave oaths, and breaks them bravely, quite traverse, atavish the heart of his lover; as a pusly filter, that spurs his horse but on one side, breaks his staff like a noble goose: but all's brave that young mounts and folly guides. Who comes here?

_Enter Corin._

_Cor._ Mistress and master, you have oft inquired After the shepherd that complain'd of love, Who you saw sitting by me on the turf, Praising the proud disdainful shepherdess That was his mistress.

_Cel._ Well, and what of him? _Cor._ If you will see a pageant truly played, Between the pale complexion of true love And the red glow of scorn and proud disdain, Go hence a little and I shall conduct you, If you will mark it.

_Ros._ O, come, let us remove: The sight of lovers feedeth those in love. Bring us to this sight, and you shall say I'll prove a busy actor in their play. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Another part of the forest.

_Enter Silvius and Phoebe._

_Sil._ Sweet Phebe, do not scorn me; do not, Say that you love me not, but say not so [Phebe; In bitterness. The common executioner, Whose heart the accusator's sight of death makes Falls not the axe upon the humbled neck [hard, But first begs pardon: will you sterner be Than he that dies and lives by bloody drops?

_Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Corin, behind._

_Phe._ I would not be thy executioner: I fly thee, for I would not injure thee. Thou tell'st me there is murder in mine eye: 'Tis pretty, sure, and very probable, That eyes, that are the fruit's and softest things, Who shut their coward gates on atonies, Should be call'd tyrants, butchers, murderers! Now I do brown on thee with all my heart: And if mine eyes can wound, now let them kill thee: Now counterfeit to swoon; why now fall down; Or if thou canst not, O, for shame, for shame, Lie not, to say mine eyes are murderers. Now show the wound mine eye hath made in thee: Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains
Some scar of it; lean but upon a rush,
The electric and capable impression.
Thy palm some moment keeps; but now mine eyes,
Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not,
Nor, I am sure, there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt.
Sld. O dear Phebe,
If ever,—as that ever may be near,—
You meet in some fresh check the power of fancy,
Then shall you know the wounds invisible
That love's keen arrows make.

Phe. But till that time
Can not thou meet me: and when that time comes,
Afflict me with thy mocks, pity me not;
As till that time I shall not pity thee. [mother,
Ros. And why, I pray you? Who might be your
That you insult, exult, and all at once, [beauty,—
Over the wretched? What though you have no
As, by my faith, I see no more in you
Than without cand'ly may go dark to bed—
Must you be therefore proud and pitiless?
Why, what means this? Why do you look on me?
I see no more in you than in the ordinary
Of nature's sale-work. 'Od's my little life,
I think she means to tangle my eyes too!
No, faith, proud mistress, hope not after it:
'T is not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your hude eyeballs, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship.
You foolish shepherd, wherefore do you follow her,
Like fogggy south pulling with wind and rain?
You are a thousand times a proper man
Than she a woman: 't is such fools as you
That makes the world full of ill-favour'd children:
'T is not her glass, but you, that flatters her;
And out of you she sees herself more proper
Than any of her lineaments can show her.
But, mistress, know yourself; down on your knees,
And thank heavy, fastening, for a good man's love:
For I must tell you friendly in your ear,
Sell when you can; you are not for all markets;
Cry the man mercy; love him; take his offer:
Foul is most foul, being foul to be a scoffer.
So take her to thee, shepherd: fare you well.

Phe. Sweet youth, I pray you, chide a year together:
I had rather hear you chide than this man woo.
Ros. He's fallen in love with your fullness and She'll fall in love with my anger. If it be so, as fast as she answers thee with browning looks, I'll sauce her with bitter words. Why look you so upon Phe. For no ill-will I bear you. [me?
Ros. I pray you, do not fall in love with me,
For I am falser than vows made in wine:
Besides, I like you not. If you will know my house,
'Tis at the tuft of olives here hard by.
Will you go, sister? Shepherd, ply her hard.
Come, sister. Shepherdesse, look on him better,
And be not proud: though all the world could see,
None could be so abused in sight as he.
Come, to our flock.

[Exeunt Rosalind, Celia and Corin.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—The forest.

Enter Rosalind, Celia, and Jaques.

Jaqu. I prithee, pretty youth, let me be better acquainted with thee.
Ros. They say you are a melancholy fellow.
Jaqu. I say, I do love it better than laughing.
Ros. Those that are in extremity of either are abominable fellows and betray themselves to every modern censure worse than drunks.

Ros. Dead shepherd, now I find thy saw of might,
'T was ever loved that loved not at first sight?
Sld. Sweet Phebe,—
Phe. Ha, what say'st thou, Silvius?
Sld. Sweet Phebe, pity me.
Phe. Why, I am sorry for thee, gentle Silvius.
Sld. Wherever sorrow is, relief would be:
If you do sorrow at my grief in love,
By giving love your sorrow and my grief
Were both exterminated.
Phe. Thou hast my love: Is not that neighbourly?
Sld. I would have you.
Phe. Why, that were covetousness.
Silvius, the time was that I hated thee,
And yet it is not that I bear thee love;
But since that thou canst talk of love so well,
Thy company, which erst was irksome to me,
I will endure, and I'll employ thee too:
But do not look for further recompense
Than thine own gladness that thou art employ'd.
Sld. So holy and so perfect is my love,
And I in such a poverty of grace,
That I shall think it a most plocents crop
To glean the broken ears after the man
That the main harvest reaps: loose now and then
A scatter'd smile, and that I'll live upon, [while?
Phe. Know'st thou the youth that spoke to me ere-
Sld. Not very well, but I have met him oft;
And he hath bought the cottage and the bounds
That the old carlot once was master of.
Phe. Think not I love him, though I ask for him;
'T is but a peevish boy; yet he talks well:
But what care I for words? yet words do well
When he that speaks them pleases those that hear.
It is a pretty youth: not very pretty;
But, sure, he's proud, and yet his pride becomes him:
He'll make a proper man: the best thing in him
Is not but his face, and that's his tongue.
Did make offence his eye did heal it up.
He is not very tall; yet for his years he's tall:
His leg is but so; and yet 't is well:
There was a pretty redness in his lip,
A little riper and more lusty red: [hereence
Than that mix'd in his cheek: it was just the dif-
Betwixt the constant red and mingled damask.
There be some women, Silvius, had they mark'd him in parcels as I did; would have gone near
To fall in love with him; but, for my part,
I love him not nor hate him not; and yet
I have more cause to hate him than to love him:
For what had he do to chide you, I?
He said mine eyes were black and my hair black;
And, now I am remember'd, scorn'd at me:
I marvel why I answer'd not again:
But that's all one: omittance is no quittance.
I'll write to him a very taunting letter,
And thou shalt hear it: wilt thou, Silvius?
Sld. Phebe, with all my heart.
Phe. I'll write it straight;
The matter's in my head and in my heart:
I will be better with him and passing short.
Go with me, Silvius. [Exeunt.

Jaqu. Why, 't is good to be sad and say nothing.
Ros. Why then, 't is good to be a post.

Jaqu. I have neither the scholar's melancholy, which is emulation, nor the musician's, which is fantastical, nor the courtier's, which is proud, or the soldier's, which is ambitious, nor the lawyer's, which is politic, nor the lady's, which is wise, or the lover's, which is all these: but it is a melancholy of mine own, compounded of many simples, extracted from many objects, and indeed the sundry contemplation of my travels, in which my often numina tion wraps me in a most humorous sadness.

Ros. A traveller! By my faith, you have great reason to be sad: I fear you have sold your own hands to see other men's; then, to have seen much and to have nothing, is to have rich eyes and poor hands.

Joy. For I have gained my experience.

Ros. And yours, peradventure, makes you sad: I had rather have a fool to make me merry than experience to make me sad; and to travel for it too!

Enter Orlando.

Orl. Good day and happiness, dear Rosalind!

Joy. Nay, then, God be wi' you, an you talk in blank verse. [Exit.]

Ros. Farewell, Monsieur Traveller: look you limp and wear strange suits, disable all the benefits of your own country, be out of love with your nativity and almost chide God for making you that countenance you are, or I will scarce think you have swain in a gondola. Why, how now, Orlando! where have you been all this while? You a lover! An you serve me such another trick, never come in my sight more.

Orl. My fair Rosalind, I come within an hour of my promise.

Ros. Break an hour's promise in love! He that will divide a minute into a thousand parts and break but a part of the thousandth part of a minute in the affairs of love, it may be said of him that Cupid hath clapped him on the shoulder, but I'll warrant him.

Orl. Pardon me, dear Rosalind. [Heart-whole.

Ros. Ay, an you be so tardy, come no more in my sight: I had as lief be wood of a small.

Orl. Of a small?

Ros. Ay, of a small; for though he comes slowly, he carries his house on his head; a better jointure, I think, than you make a woman: besides, he brings his destiny with him, one of the patterns of love.

Orl. What's that?

Ros. Why, horns, which such as you are fain to be beholding to your wives for: but he comes armed in his fortune and prevents the slander of his wife.

Orl. Virtue is no horn-maker; and my Rosalind is Ros.

And I am your Rosalind. [Virtuous.

Orl. It pleases him to call you so; but he hath a Rosalind of a better leer than you.

Ros. Come, woo me, woo me, for now I am in a holiday humour and like enough to consent. What would you say to me now, an I were your very very

Orl. I would kiss before I spoke. [Rosalind? Ros.

Ros. Ay, that were their best way first, and when you were gravelled for lack of matter, you might take occasion to kiss. Very good orators, when they are out, they will spit; and for lovers lacking — God warn us! — matter, the cleanliest shift is to

Orl. How if the kiss be denied?

Ros. Then it is your business to entreat, and there begins new matter.

Orl. Who could be out, being before his beloved mistress?

Ros. Marry, that should you, if I were your mistress, or I should think my honesty ranker than my

Ros. Not out of your apparel, and yet out of your suit.

Am not I your Rosalind?

Orl. I take some joy to say you are, because I would be talking of her.

Ros. Well in her person I say I will not have you. Orl. And you have not the meanest grudge in the world.

Ros. No, faith, die by attorney. The poor world is almost six thousand years old, and in all this time there was not any man died in his own person, vili dicet, in a love-curse. Troilus had his brains dashed out with a Grecian club; yet he did what he could to die before his love. Leander, he would have lived many a fair year, though Hero had turned nun, if it had not been for a hot midsummer night: for, good youth, he went but forth to wash him in the Hellespont and being taken with the current was drowned: and the foolish cornermen of that age found it was 'Hero of Sestus.' But these are all lies: men have died from time to time and worms have eaten them, but not for love.

Orl. I would not have my right Rosalind of this mid, for I will protest, her frown might kill me.

Ros. By this protestation, it will not kill me. By come, now I will be your Rosalind in a more coming-on disposition, and ask me what you will, I will grant it.

Orl. Then love me, Rosalind.

Ros. Yes, faith, will I, Fridays and Saturdays

Orl. And will thou have me? [and all.

Ros. Ay, and twenty that.

Orl. What sayest thou?

Ros. Are you not good?

Orl. I hope so.

Ros. Why then, can one desire too much of a good thing? Come, sister, you shall be the priest and marry us. Give me your hand, Orlando. What do you say, sister?

Orl. Pray thee, marry us.

Ros. I cannot say the words.

Orl. You must begin, 'Will you, Orlando—'

Orl. Go to. Will you, Orlando, have to wife this Rosalind? [Rosalind?

Ros. Ay, but when?

Orl. Why now? as fast as she can marry us.

Ros. Then you must say 'I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.'

Orl. I take thee, Rosalind, for wife.

Ros. I might ask you for your commission; but I do take thee, Orlando, for my husband: there's a girl goes before the priest; and certainly a woman's thought runs before her actions.

Orl. So do all thoughts; they are winged.

Ros. Now tell me how long you would have her after you have possessed her.

Orl. For ever and a day.

Ros. Say 'a day,' without the 'ever.' No, no, Orlando: men are April when they woo, December when they wed: maids are May when they are maids, but the sky changes when they are wives. I will be more jealous of thee than a Barbary cock-pigeon over his hen, more clamorous than a jarred against rain, more new-fangled than an ape, more giddy in my desires than a monkey: I will weep for nothing, like Diana in the fountain, and I will do that when you are disposed to be merry; I will laugh like a lilyn, and that when thou art inclined to sleep.

Orl. And will it be the case with the Rosalind?

Ros. By my life, she will do as I do.

Orl. O, but she is wise.

Ros. Or else she could not have the wit to do this: the wise, the waywarder: make the doors upon a woman's wit and it will out at the casement; shut that and it will out at the keyhole: stop that, 'twill fly with the smoke out of the chimney.

Orl. A man that had a wife with such a wit, he might say 'Wit, whither wit?'

Ros. Nay, you might keep that check for it till you met your wife's wit going to your neighbour's.

Orl. And what wit could wit have to excuse

Rosalind. Marry, to say she came to seek you there. You shall never take her without her answer, unless you take her without her tongue. O, that woman that cannot make her fault her husband's occasion, let her have her child herself, for she will breed it like a fool!

Orl. For these two hours, Rosalind, I will leave thee.

[hours.

Ros. Alas! dear love, I cannot lack thee two

Orl. I must attend the duke at dinner: by two o'clock this again.

Ros. Ay, go your ways, go your ways; I knew what you would prove: my friends told me as much, and I thought no less; that flattering tongue of yours won me: 'tis but one cast away, and so, come, death! Two o'clock is your hour?

Orl. Ay, sweet Rosalind.

Rosal. By my troth, and in good earnest, and so God send me, and by all pretty oaths that are not dangerous, if you break one jot of your promise or come one minute behind your hour, I will think you the most pathetical break-promise and the most hollow lover and the most unworthy of your call Rosalind that may be chosen out of the gross band of the unfaithful: I therefore beware your censure and keep your promise.

Orl. With no less religion than if thou wert indeed my Rosalind: so adieu.

Rosal. Well, Time is the old justice that examines all such offenders, and let Time try: adieu.

Cel. You have simply misused our sex in your love-prate: we must have your doublet and hose plucked over your head, and show the world what the bird hath done to her own nest.

Rosal. O coz, coz, coz, my pretty little coz, that thou dost know how many fathom deep I am in love! But it cannot be sounded; for my sensation hath an unknown bottom, like the bay of Portugal.

Cel. Or rather, bottomless, that as fast as you pour affection in, it runs out.

Rosal. No, that same wicked bastard of Venus that was begot of thought, conceived of spleen and born of madness, that blind rascal boy that abuses every one's eyes because his own are out, let him be judge how deep I am in love. I'll tell thee, Aliena, I cannot be out of the sight of Orlando: I'll go find a shadow and sigh till he come.

Cel. And I'll keep a watch.

[Exeunt Orlando and Rosalind.

SCENE II. The forest.

Enter Jaques, Lords, and Foresters.

Jaq. Which is he that killed the deer?

Lords. A Lord, sir, it was I.

Jaq. Let's present him to the duke, like a Roman conqueror; and it would do well to set the deer's horns upon his head, for a branch of victory. Have you no song, forester, for this purpose?

Lords. Yes, sir.

Jaq. Sing it: 'tis no matter how it be in tune, so it make noise enough.

SONG.

For.

What shall he have that kill'd the deer? His leather skin and horns to wear. Then sing him home: [Enter Jaques. The riot shall bear this burden. Take thou no scorn to wear the horn; It was a crest ere thou wast born: Thy father's father wore it, And thy father bore it: The horn, the horn, the lusty horn Is not a thing to laugh to scorn. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. The forest.

Enter Rosalind and Celia.

Rosal. How say you now? Is it not past two o'clock? and here much Orlando?

Cel. I warrant you, with pure love and troubled brain, he hath ta'en his bow and arrows and is gone forth to sleep. Look, who comes here.

Enter Silvius.

Silv. My errand is to you, fair youth; My gentle Phebe bid me give you this: I know not the contents: but, as I guess By the stern brow and waspish action Which she did use as she was writing of it, It bears an angry tenour: pardon me; I am but a a guiltless messenger.

Ros. Patience herself would startle at this letter And play the swaggerer; bear this, bear all: She says I am not fair, that I lack manners; She calls me proud, and that she could not love me, Were I a man and she a phoenix. Odd's my will! Her love is not the hare that I do hunt: Why writes she so to me? Well, shepherd, well, This is a letter of your own device.

Sil. No, I protest, I know not the contents: Phebe did write it. Come, come, you are a fool And turn'd into the extremity of love, I saw her hand: she has a leathern hand, A freestone-colour'd hand; I verily did think That her old gloves were on, but 'twas her hands: She has a huswife's hand: but that's no matter: I say she never did invent this letter: This is a man's invention and his hand.

Sil. Sure, it is hers.

Rosal. Why, 'tis a boisterous and a cruel style, A style for challengers: why, she defies me. Like Turk to Christian: women's gentle brain Could not drop forth such grand-rude invention, Such 'Tis love that makes a lover's heart by his effect Than in their countenance. Will you hear the letter?

Sil. So please you, for I never heard it yet; Yet heard too much of Phebe's cruelty.

Rosal. She Phebe me: mark how the tyrant writes. [Reads. Art thou god to shepherd turn'd, That a maiden's heart hath burn'd?

Can a woman call thus?

Sil. Call you this railing?

Rosal. [Reads] Why, thy godhead laid apart, Warr'st thou with a woman's heart?

Did you ever hear such railing?

Sil. While's the eye of man did woo me, That could do no vengeance to me.

Meaning me a beast. If the scorn of your bright eye Have power to raise such love in mine, Alack, in me what strange effect Would they work in mild aspect! Whiles you chid me, I did love; How then might your prayers move! He that brings this love to thee Little knows this love in me: And by her seal up thy mind; Whether that youth and kind Will the faithful offer take Of me and all that I can make; Or else by him my love deny. And then I'll study how to die.

Sil. Call you this chiding?

Cel. Alas, poor shepherd!

Rosal. Do you pity him? no, he deserves no pity. Wilt thou love such a woman? What, to make thee an instrument and play false strings upon thee? not to be endured! Well, go your way to her, for I see love hath made you a tame snipe, and say this to her: that if she love me, I charge her to love thee; if she will not, I will never have her unless thou entreat for her. If you be a true lover, hence, and not a word; for here comes more company. [Exit Silvius.

Enter Oliver.

Oli. Good morrow, fair ones: pray you, if you know, Where in the purlieus of this forest stands A sheep-cote fenced about with olive trees?

Cel. West of this place, down in the neighbour bottom:

The rank of osiers by the murmuring stream Left on your right hand brings you to the place; But at this house the house doth keep itself; There's none within.

Oli. If that an eye may profit by a tongue,

SCENE I.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. We shall find a time, Audrey; patience, gentle Audrey.

Aud. Ay, I know who 'tis; he hath no interest in the world: here comes the man you mean.

Touch. It is meat and drink to me to see a clown: by my troth, we that have good wits have much to answer for; we shall be flouting: we cannot hold.

Ros. Was't you that did so oft contrive to kill him?

Oli. 'Twas I; but 'tis not I: I do not shame To tell you what I was, since my conversion So sweetly tastes, being the thing I am.

Ros. But, for the bloody napkin?

Oli. By and by.

When from the first to last betwixt us two Tears our reconciliations had most kindly bathed, As how I came into that desert place: —

In brief, he led me to the gentle duke,

Who gave me fresh array and entertainment, Conceiving me into my brother's love;

Who led me instantly unto his cave,

There stripp'd himself, and here upon his arm

The lioness had torn some flesh away,

Which all this while had bled; and now he fainted

And cried, in fainting, upon Rosalind.

Brief, I recover'd him, bound up his wound;

And, after some small space, being strong at heart,

He sent me hither, stranger as I am,

To tell this story, that you might excuse

His broken promise, and to give this napkin

Dyed in his blood unto the shepherd youth

That he in sport doth call his Rosalind.

[Rosalind enteres.

Ros. Why, how now, Ganymede! sweet Ganymede!

Oli. Many will swoon when they do look on blood.

Ros. There is more in it. Cousin Ganymede!

Oli. Look, he recovers.

Ros. I would I were at home.

Touch. We'll lead you thither.

I pray you, will you take him by the arm?

Ros. Be of good cheer, youth: you a man! you a man's heart.

Ros. I do so, I confess it. Ah, sirrah, a body would think this was well counterfeited! I pray you, tell your brother how well I counterfeited. Heigh-ho!

Ros. This was not counterfeit: there is too great testimony in your complexion that it was a passion of earnest.

Ros. Counterfeit, I assure you.

Ros. Well then, take a good heart and counterfeit to be a man.

Ros. So I do: but, 'faith, I should have been a woman by right.

Oli. That will I, for I must bear answer back How you excuse my brother, Rosalind.

Ros. I shall devise something: but, I pray you, command my counterfeiting to him. Will you go?

[Execute.

SCENE II.

Touch. Why, thou sayest well. I do now remember a saying, 'The fool doth think he is wise, but the wise man knows himself to be a fool.' The philosopher, when he had a desire to eat a grape, would open his lips when he put it into his mouth; meaning thereby that grapes were made to eat and lips to open. You do love this maid? Will. I do, sir. Touch. Give me your hand. Art thou learned? Will. Yes, sir. Touch. Then learn this of me: to have, is to have; for it is a figure in rhetoric that drink, being poured out of a cup into a glass, by filling the one doth empty the other; for all your writers do consent that lps is he: now, you are not lps; for I am he. Will. Whence, sir? Touch. He, sir, that must marry this woman. Therefore, you clown, abandon,—which is in the vulgar leave,—the society,—which in the boorish company,—of this female,—which in the common woman; which together is, abandon the society of this female, or, clown, thou persists; or, to thy better understanding, dist; or, to wit, I kill thee, make thee away, translate thy life into death, thy liberty into bondage; I will deal in poison with thee, or in bastinado, or in steel; I will handy with thee in faction; I will o'er-run thee with policy; I will kill thee a hundred and fifty ways; therefore, to thee, trouble. And. Do, good William. Will. God rest you merry, sir. [Exit.

Enter Corin.
Cor. Our master and mistress seek you; come, away, away! Touch. Trip, Audrey! trip, Audrey! I attend, I attend. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The Forest.

Enter Orlando and Oliver.

Orl. Is't possible that on so little acquaintance you should like her? that but seeing you should love her? and loving you, should grant? and will you persuade to enjoy her?

Ol. Neither call the goddess of it in question, the poverty of her, the small acquaintance, my studious, nor her sudden consenting; but say with me, I love Aliena; say with her, that she loves me; consent with both that we may enjoy each other: it shall be to your good; for my father's house and all the revenue that was old Sir Rowland's will I estate upon you, and here live and die a shepherd. Orl. And, my cousin. Let your wedding be to-morrow; thither will I invite the duke and all your contented followers. Go you and prepare Aliena; for look you, here comes my Rosalind.

Enter Rosalind.

Ros. God save you, brother.

Orl. And you, fair sister. [Exit.

Rosl. O, my dear Orlando, how it grieves me to see thee wear thy heart in a scar!]

Orl. It is my arm.

Rosl. I thought thy heart had been wounded with the claws of a lion.

Orl. Wounded it is, but with the eyes of a lady. Did your brother tell you how I counterfeited to swoon when he showed me your handkerchief?

Rosl. Ay, and greater wonders than that.

Orl. I, O, I know where you are: not 'Tis true: there was none anything so sudden but the flight of two rams and Caesar's thrausional brag of 'I came, saw, and overcame;' for your brother and my sister no sooner met but they looked, no sooner looked but they loved, no sooner loved but they sighed, no sooner sighed but they asked one another the reason, no sooner knew the reason but they sought the remedy; and in these degrees have they made a pair of stairs to marriage which they will not incontinent, or else incontinent before marriage: they are in the very wrath of love and they will together; clubs cannot part them.

Orl. They shall be married to-morrow, and I will bid the duke to the nuptial. But, O, how bitter a thing it is to look into happiness through another man's eyes! but, O, the more I look, the more I shall perceive to be the height of heart-heaviness, by how much I shall think my brother happy in having what he wishes for.

Rosl. Why then, to-morrow I cannot serve your turn for Rosalind.

Orl. I can live no longer by thinking.

Rosl. I will weary you then no longer with idle talking. Know of me then, for now I speak to some purpose, that I know you are a gentleman of good counsel: I speak not this that you should bear a good opinion of my knowledge, insomuch I say I know you are; neither do I labour for a greater esteem than may in some little measure draw a belief from you, to do yourself good and not to grace me. Believe then, if you please, that I can do strange things: I have, since I was three years old, conversed with a magician, most profound in his art and yet not damnable. If you do love Rosalind so near as your gesture e'ers it out, when your brother marries Aliena, shall you marry her: I know into what straits of fortune she is driven; and it is not impossible to me, if it appear not inconvenient to you, to set her before your eyes to-morrow human as she is and without any danger.

Orl. Speakest thou in sober meanings?

Rosl. By my life, I do; which I tender dearly, though I say I am a magician. Therefore, put you in your best array; bid your friends; for if you will be married to-morrow, you shall, and to Rosalind, if you will.

Enter Silvius and Phebe.

Look, here comes a lover of mine and a lover of hers.
Pheb. Youth, you have done me much ungentleness, To show the letter that I writ to you.

Rosl. I care not if I have: it is my study To seem despicable and ungentle to you: You are there followed by a faithful shepherd: Look upon him, and he shall see you. [Love. Pheb. Good shepherd, tell this youth what 'tis to Sil. It is to be all made of sighs and tears; And so am I for Phebe. Pheb. And I for Ganymede. Orl. And I for Rosalind. Ros. And I for Ganymede. Sil. It is to be all made of faith and service; And so am I for Phebe. Pheb. And I for Ganymede. Orl. And I for Rosalind. Ros. And I for no woman. Sil. It is to be all made of fantasy, All made of passion and all made of wishes, All adoration, duty, and observance, All humbleness, all patience and impatience, All purity, all trial, all observance; And so am I for Phebe. Pheb. And so am I for Ganymede. Orl. And so am I for Rosalind. Ros. And so am I for no woman. Sil. If this be so, why blame you me to love you? Sil. If this be so, why blame you me to love you? Orl. If this be so, why blame you me to love you? Pheb. Who you speak to, 'Why blame you me to love you?' Orl. To her that is not here, nor doth not hear. Ros. Pray you, no more of this; 'tis like the howling of Irish wolves against the moon. [To Sil. I will help you, if I can: [To Pheb.] I would love you, if I could. To-morrow meet me all together. [To Pheb.] I will marry you, if ever I marry woman, and I'll be married to-morrow: [To Orl.] I will satisfy you, if ever I satisfied man, and you shall be married to-morrow: [To Sit.] I will content you, if what pleases you contents you, and you shall be married to-morrow. [To Orl.] As you love Rosalind, meet me: [To Sit.] as you love Phebe, meet; and as I love no woman, I'll meet. So fare you well: I have left you commands.

Sit. I'll not fail, if I live.

Phe. Nor I.

Orl. Nor I. [Exit.

SCENE III.—The forest.

Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Touch. To-morrow is the joyful day, Audre; to-morrow will we be married.

Aud. I do desire it with all my heart; and I hope it is no dishonesty to desire to be a woman of the world. Here come two of the banished duke's pages.

Enter two Pages.

Sec. Page. We are for you: sit i' the middle.

First Page. Shall we clap into 't rommily, without hawking or spitting or saying we are hoarse, which are the only prologues to a bad voice?

Sec. Page. I faith, I faith; and both in a tune, like two gipsies on a horse.

SONG.

It was a lover and his lass,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
That o'er the green corn-field did pass.

In the spring time, the only pretty ring time,
When birds do sing, hey ding a ding, ding:
Sweet lovers love the spring.

Between the acres of the rye,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
These pretty country folks would lie,

In spring time, &c.

This carol they began that hour,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino,
How that a life was but a flower

In spring time, &c.

And therefore take the present time,

With a hey, and a ho, and a hey nonino;
For love is crowned with the prime

In spring time, &c.

Touch. Truly, young gentlemen, though there was no great matter in the ditty, yet the note was very unmeaning.

First Page. You are deceived, sir: we kept time, we lost not our time.

Touch. By my troth, yes; I count it but time lost to hear such a foolish song. God be wi' you; and God mend your voices! Come, Audrey. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—The forest.

Enter Duke senior, Amiens, Jaques, Orlando, Oliver, and Celia.

Duke S. That would I, had I 1 kingdoms to give with her.

Ros. And you say, you will have her, when I bring Duke S. But I would I, were I of all kingdoms king.

Ros. You say, you'll marry me, if I be willing?

Pho. That will I, should I die the hour after.

Ros. But if you do refuse to marry me, you'll give yourself to this most faithful shepherd?

Pho. So is the bargain.

Ros. You say, that you'll have Phebe, if she will?

Sil. Though to have her and death were both one thing.

Ros. I have promised to make all this matter even.

Keep your word, O duke, to give your daughter; you yours, Orlando, to receive his daughter:

Keep your word, Phebe, that you'll marry me,
Or press refusing me, to rest this shepherd;

Keep your word, Silvia, that you'll marry her,
If she refuse me: and from hence I go,
To make these doubts all even. [Exeunt Rosalind and Celia.

Duke S. I do remember in this shepherd boy
Some lively touches of your daughter's favour.

Orl. My lord, the first time that I ever saw him
Methought he was a brother to your daughter:
But, my good lord, this boy is forest-born,
And hath been tutor'd in the rudiments
Of many desperate studies by his uncle,
Whom he reports to be a great magician,

Duke S. I have heard of these. [Enter Touchstone and Audrey.

Duke S. What was that you said?

Aud. I said you, sir; your grace of the like.

Touch. For your grace, sir, among the rest of the country couplinges, to swear and forswear; according as marriage binds and blood breaks; a poor virgin, sir, an ill-favoured thing, sir, but mine own; a poor humour of mine, sir, to take that no man else will: rich honesty dwells like a miser, sir, in a poor house; as your pearl in your foul oyster.

Duke S. By my faith, he is very swift and sententious.

Touch. According to the fool's bolt, sir, and such dulce duties.

Ros. But, for the seventh cause: how did you find the quarrel on the seventh cause?

Duke S. Upon a lie seven times removed:—bear your body more seeming, Audrey:—as thus, sir. I did dislike the cut of a certain courtier's beard: he sent me word, if I said his beard was not cut well, he was in the mind it was: this is called the Retort Cut. [To Sol.] And if I sent him word again, 'twas not well cut, he would send me word, he cut it to please himself: this is called the Quip Modest. If again 'twas not well cut, he disabled my judgment: this is called the Reply Churlish. If again 'twas not well cut, he would answer. I spake not true: this is called the Reproof Valiant. Enter Hymen, Rosalind, and Celia.

Still Music.

IIgm. Then is there mirth in heaven,
When earthly things made even Atone together.

Good duke, receive thy daughter;
Hymen from heaven brought her,
Yet, brought her hither,
That thou mightst join her hand with his.
Whose heart within his bosom is.

Ros. [To Duke] To you I give myself; for I am yours.

Duke S. If there be truth in sight, you are my daughter.

Orl. If there be truth in sight, you are my Rosalind.

Phe. If sight and shape be true,
Why then, my love adorest
I'll have no father, if you be not he:
I'll have no husband, if you be not he:
Nor ne'er wed woman, if you be not she.

IIgm. Peace, ho! I bar confusion:
'Tis I must make conclusion
Of these most strange events:
Here's the Hymen come, the hand to hand
To join in Hymen's bands.

If truth holds true contents,
You and you no cross shall part:
You and you are heart in heart:
You to his love must accord,
Or have a woman to your lord:
You and you are sure together,
As the winter to foul weather,
Whiles a wedlock-hymn we sing,
Feel yourselves with questioning;
That reason wonder may diminish,
How thus we met, and these things finish.

SONG.

Wedding is great Juno's crown;
O blessed bond of board and bed!
'Tis Hymen peoples every town;
High wedlock then be honour'd:
Honour, high honour and renown,
To Hymen, god of every town!

Duke S. O my dear niece, welcome thou art to Even daughter, welcome, in no less degree. [m.e.]

Phe. I will not eat my word, now thou art mine: Thy fancy to thee doth comebine.

Enter Jaques de Boys.

Jaq. de B. Let me have audience for a word or I am the second son of old Sir Rowland, [two:
That bring these tidings to this fair assembly.
Duke Frederick, hearing how that every day Men of great worth resorted to this forest, Address'd a mighty power; which were on foot, With his own counsel, purpos'd to the end. His brother here and put him to the sword:
And to the skirts of this wild wood he came;
Where meeting with an old religious man, After some question with him, was converted Both from his enterprise and from the world, His crown bestowing to his banish'd brother, And all their lands to each again. That were with him exiled. This to be true, I do engage my life.

Duke S. Welcome, young man;
Thou offer'st fairly to thy brothers' wedding; To one his lands withheld, and to the other A land itself at large, a potent dukedom,
First, in this forest let us do those ends That here were well begun and well begot; And after, every of this happy number That have endured shrewd days and nights with us Shall share the good of our returned fortune, According to the numbers of our states. Meantime, forget this new-fall'n dignity And fall into our rustic revelry.

Play, music! And you, brides and bridgrooms all, With measure head'd in joy, to the measures fall.

Jaq. Sir, by your patience. If I heard you rightly, The duke hath put on a religious life
And thrown into neglect the pompous court?

Jaq. de B. He hath.

Jaq. To him will I: out of these convertes There is much matter to be heard and learnt.

To Duke You to your former honour I bequeath;
Your patience and your virtue well deserves it:

To Orl. You to a love that your true faith doth merit:

[alleys: To Oli. You to your land and love and great
To Sir.] You to a long and well-deserved bed:

[To Phe.] And you to wrangling; for thy loving voyage Is but for two months victual'd. So, to your pleasure I am for other than for dancing measures.

Duke S. Stay, Jaques, stay.

Jaq. To see no pastime: what you would have I'll stay to know at your abandon'd cave.

[Exit.

Duke S. Proced, proced, we will begin these As we do trust they'll end, in true delight the pastime.

[x.dance:

EPILOGUE.

Ros. It is not the fashion to see the lady the epilogue: but it is no more unhandsome than to see the lord the prologue. If it be true that good wine makes no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues. What a case am I in then, that am neither a good epilogue nor cannot insinuate with you in the behalf of a good play! I am not furnished like a beggar, therefore to beg will not become me: my way is to conjure you; and I'll begin with the women. I charge you, O women, for the love you bear to men, to like as much of this play as please you: and I charge you, O men, for the love you bear to women—as I perceive by your simpering, nay, and by your hate them—that between you and your women the copies may please. If I were a woman I would kiss as many of you as had beards that pleased me, compliances that liked me and breaths that I defied not: and, I am sure, as many as have good beards or good faces or sweet breaths will, for my kind offer, when I make curtsy, bid me farewel.

INDUCTION.

SCENE I.—Before an alehouse on a heath.

Enter Hostess and Sly.

Sly. I'll pledge thee, in faith.

Hostess. A pair of stocks, you rogue! Sly. Ye are a baggage: the Sly's are no rogues: look in the chronicles: we came in with Richard Conqueror. Therefore pax vobiscum; let the world slide: seesa! [burst? Sly. You will not pay for the glasses you have.

Hostess. Go by, Jeronimo: go to thy cold bed, and warm thee. Sly. I know my remedy; I must go fetch the third-borough. [Exit. Sly. Third, or fourth, or fifth borough, I'll answer him by law: I'll not budge an inch, boy; let him come, and kindly. [falls asleep.

Horns winded. Enter a Lord from hunting, with his train.

Lord. I charge thee, tender well my hounds: Brach Merriman, the poor cur is embossed; And couple Clowder with the deep-mouth'd brach. Saw'st thou not, boy, how Silver made it good At the hedge-corner, in the coldest fault? I would not lose the dog for twenty pound. [lord. First Hun. Why, Belman is as good as he, my He cried upon it at the merest loss And twice to-day pick'd out the dullest scent: Trust me, I take him for the better dog.

Lord. Thou art a fool: if Echo were as fleet, I would esteem him worth a dozen such. But sup them well and look unto them all: To-morrow I intend to hunt again.

First Hun. I will, my lord.

Lord. What's here? one dead, or drunk? See, doth he breathe? Sec. Hun. He breathes, my lord. Were he not warn'd with ale, This were a bed but cold to sleep so soundly. [lies! Lord. O monstrous beast! how like a swine he Grim death, how foul and loathsome is thine image! Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man.

What think you, if he be convey'd to bed, Wapp'd in sweet clothes, rings put upon his fingers, A most delicious banquet by his bed,
 Enter Players.

Now, fellows, you are welcome.

Players. We thank your honour.

Lord. Do you intend to stay with me to-night?

A Player. So please your lordship to accept our duty.

Lord. With all my heart. This fellow I remember. Since once he played a farmer's eldest son:

'Twas where you wou'd the gentlewoman so well:

I have forgot your name; but, sure, that part

Was aptly fitted and naturally perform'd. [means.

A Player. I think 'twas Soto that your honour

Laid over-eyed of his old behaviour. —

For yet his honour never heard a play. —

You break into some merry passion

And so offend him; for I tell you, sirs,

If you should smile he grows impatient. [selves,

A Player. Fear not, my lord: we can contain our Weare to the veriest antic in the world.

Lord. Go, sirrah, take them to the buttery,

And give them friendly welcome every one:

Let them want nothing that my house affords.

[Exit one with the Players.

Sirrah, go you to Bartholomew new my page,

And see him dress'd in all suits like a lady:

That done, conduct him to the drunkard's chamber;

And call him 'madam,' do him obeisance,

Tell him from me, as he will win my love,

He bear himself with honourable action,

Such as he hath observed in noble ladies

Unto their lords, by them accomplished:

Such duty to the drunkard let him do,

With soft low tongue and lovely courtesy,

And say 'What is 't your honour will command,

Wherein your lady and your humble wife

May show her duty and make known her love?'

And then with kind embraces, tempting kisses,

And with declining head into his bosom,

Bid him shed tears, as being overjoy'd

To see her noble lord restored to health,

Who for this seven years hath esteemed him

No better than a poor and loathsome beggar:

And if the boy have not a woman's gift

To ransom a commanded tear,

An onion will do well for such a shift,

Which in a napkin being close convey'd

Shall in despite enforce a watery eye.

See this dispatch'd with all the haste thou canst:

Anon I'll give thee more instructions.

[Exit.

I know the boy will well usurp the grace,

Voice, gait and action of a gentlewoman:

I long to hear him call the drunkard husband,

And how my men will stand themselves from laughter

When they do homage to this simple peasant.

I'll in a moment mend them: haply my presence

May well abate the overweening spirit.

Which otherwise would grow into extremes.

[Exeunt.

Third Serr. What raiment will your honour wear to-day?

Sty. I am Christopher Sly; call not me 'honour' or 'lordship;' I ne'er drank sack in my life: and if you give me any conserves, give me conserves of beef; ne'er ask me what raiment I'll wear; for I have no more doublets than lucks, no more stock-

lets than breeches, no more shoes than feet; nay, some time more feet than shoes, or such shoes as my toes look through the over-leather.

Lord. Heaven cease this idle humour in your
O, that a mighty man of such descent, [honour!

Of such possessions and so high esteem,

Should be involved with such absurdities!

Sly. What, would you make me mad? Am not I

Christopher Sly, old Sty's son of Burton Heath, by birth a pedlar, by education a cardmaker, by trans-

mutation a bear-herd, and now by present profession a tinker? Ask Marian Hacket, the fat ad-wife of Wincet, if she know me not: if she say I am not fourteen pence on the score for sheen ale, score me up for the lyingest knave in Christendom.

What! I am not bestranght; here's—

Third Serr. O, this it is that makes your lady mourn! [groan!

Sec. Serr. Of, this is it that makes your servants.

Lord. Hence comes it that your kindred shuns your house,

As beaten hence by your strange lunacy.

O noble lord, be thou of thy birth,

Call home thy antique thoughts from banishment

And banish hence these abject lowly dreams.

I look how thy servants do attend on thee,

Each in his office ready at thy beck.

Wilt thou have music? hark! Apollo plays [Music.

And twenty caged nightingales do sing:

Or wilt thou sleep? we'll have thee to a couch

Softer and sweeter than the lustful bed

On purpose found up for thine ease.

Say thou wilt walk; we will bestrew the ground:

Or wilt thou ride? thy horses shall be trapped,

Their harness stuffed all with gold and pearl,

Dost thou love hawkng? thou hast hawks will soar

Above the morning lark: or wilt thou hunt?

Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,

And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth.

First Serr. Say thou wilt course; thy greyhounds are as swift

As breathed stags, ay, fleeter than the roe.

Sec. Serr. Dost thou love pictures? we will fetch thee three of the fairest.

Adonis painted by a running brook,

And Cytherea all in sedges hid,

Which seem to move and wander with her breath,

Even as the waving sedges play with wind.

Lord. We'll show thee lo as she was a maid,

And how she was soifully and surpris'd,

As lively painted as the deed was done. [wool.

Third Serr. Or Daphne roaming through a thorny

Scarc'hing her legs that one shall swear she bleeds,

And at that sight shall sad Apollo weep,

So wormingly the blood and tears are drawn.

Lord. Thou art a lord and nothing but a lord;

Thou hast a lady far more beautiful

Than any woman in this waning age. [for the

First Serr. And till the tears that she hath shed

Like envious floods o'er-run her lovely face,

She was the fairest creature in the world;

And yet she is inferior to none.

Sty. Am I a lord? and have I such a lady?

Or do I dream? or have I dream'd till now?

I do not sleep: I see, I hear, I speak;

I smell sweet savours and I feel soft things:

Upon my life, I am a lord indeed

And not a tinker as Christopher Sly.

Well, bring our lady hither to our sight:

And once again, a pot o' the smallest ale.

SCENE II. — A bedchamber in the Lord's house.

Enter aloft. Sty, with Attendants; some with apparel, others with baun and ever and other appurtenances;

and Lords.

Sty. For God's sake, a pot of small ale.

First Serr. Will 't plese your lordship drink a cup of sack?

Sec. Serr. 'Twill please your honour taste of these conserves?

ACT I.

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

SCENE I. Padua. A public place.

Enter Lucentio and his man Tranio.

Lucentio, since for the great desire I had
To see fair Padua, nursery of arts,
I am arrived for fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy;
And of my father's love and your am'rd
With his good will and thy good company,
My trusty servant, well approved in all,
Here let us breathe and haply institute
A course of learning and ingenious studies.

Pisa renowned for grave citizens
Gave me my being and my father first,
A merchant of great traffic through the world,
Vincentio, come of the Bentivoli.
Vincentio's son brought up in Florence
It shall become to serve all hopes conceived,
To deck his fortune with his virtuous deeds;
And therefore, Tranio, for the time I study,
Virtue and that part of philosophy
Will I apply that treats of happiness
By virtue specially to be achieved.
Tell me thy mind; for I have Pisa left
And am to Padua come, as he that leaves
A shallow vessel to plunge him in the deep
And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst.

Tranio. Mi perdono, gentle master mine,
I am in all affected as yourself;
Glad that you thus continue your resolve
To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy.

Lord. Madam.

Sly. Ay, madam, or Joan madam? [ladies.

Lord. 'Madam,' and nothing else: so lords call

Sly. Madam wife, they say that I have dream'd
And slept above some fifteen year or more.

Page. Ay, and the time seems thirty unto me,
Being all this time abandon'd from your bed.

Sly. 'Tis much. Servants, leave me and her

Madam, madress you and come now to bed.

Page. Thrice-noble lord, let me entreat of you
To pardon me yet for a night or two,
Or, if not so, until the sun be set:
For your physicians have expressly charged,
In peril to incur your former madness.

That I should yet absent me from your bed:
I hope this reason stands for my excuse.

Sly. Ay, it stands so that I may hardly tarry so long.
But I would be loath to fall into my dreams again:
I will therefore tarry in despite of the flesh
And the blood. Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Your honour's players, hearing your command,
Are come to play a pleasant comedy:
[ment, For so your doctors hold it very meet,
Seeing too much sadness hath congeald your blood,
And melancholy is the nurse of frenzy:
Therefore they thought it good you hear a play
And frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
Which bars a thousand harms and lengthens life.

Sly. Marry, I will, let them play it. Is not a comody a Christmas gambold or a tumbling-trick?

Page. No, no, my lord; it is more pleasing stuff.

Sly. What, household stuff?

Page. It is a kind of history.

Sly. Well, we'll see 't. Come, madam wife, sit
By my side and let the world slip; we shall ne'er be Younger. Flourish.
ACT I.

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

SCENE I.

Hor. Mates, maid! how mean you that? no mates
Unto your suit; you have not my mould. [for you,
Kath. I' faith, sir, you shall never need to fear:
I wis it is not half way to her heart;
But if it were, doubt not her care should be
To comb your noodle with a three-legg'd stool
And paint your face and use you like a fool.
Hor. From all such devils, good Lord deliver us!
Gre. What? Wallack, withdraw! [ward:
Tre. Hush, master! here's some good pustine to-
That wench is stark mad or wonderful froward.
Luc. But in the other's silence do I see
Maid's mild behaviour and sobriety.
Peace, Tranio.
Tre. A said, master! mum! and gaze your fill.
Bap. Gentlemen, that I may soon make good
What I have said, Bianca, get you in:
And let it not displease thee, good Bianca,
For I will love thee never the less, my girl.
Kath. A pretty feat! it is best
Put finger in the eye, an she knew why.
Bap. Sister, content you in my discontent.
Sir, to your pleasure humbly I subscribe:
My books and instruments shall be my company,
On them to look and practise by myself. [speak.
Luc. Hark, Tranio! thou may'st hear Minerva
Hush, Signior Baptista, will ye be so strange?
Sorry am I that our good will effects
Bianca's grief.
Gre. Why will you mew her up,
Signior Baptista, for this fiend of hell,
And make her bear the pance of her tongue?
Bap. Gentlemen, content ye: I am resolved:
Go in, Bianca: [Exit Bianca.
And for I know she taketh most delight
In music, instruments and poetry,
Schoolmasters will I keep within my house,
Fit to instruct her youth. If you, Hortensio,
Or Signior Gremio, you, know any such,
Prefer them either; for a cunning men
I will be very kind, and liberal
To mine own children in good bringing up:
And so farewell. Katharina, you may stay:
For I have more to commune with Bianca. [Exit.
Kath. Why, and I trust I may go too, may I not?
Wilt thou lead me in appointed hours: as though,
Belike, I knew not what to take, and what to leave, ha? [Exit.
Gre. You may go to the devil's dam: your gifts are so good, here's none will hold you. Their love is not so great, Hortensio, but we may blow our nails together, and fasten at the web of friendship on both sides. Farewell: yet, for the love I bear my sweet Bianca, if I can by any means light on a fit man to teach her that wherein she delights, I will wish him to her father.
Hor. So will I, Signior Gremio: but a word, I pray.
Tranio, the nature of our quarrel yet never brooked parle, know now, upon advice, it toucheth us both, that we may yet again have access to our fair mistress and be happy rivals in Bianca's love, to labour and effect one thing specially.
Gre. What's that, I pray?
Hor. Marry, sir, to get a husband for her sister.
Gre. A husband! a devil.
Hor. I say, a husband.
Gre. I say, a devil. Thinkest thou, Hortensio, though her father be very rich, any man is so very a fool to be married to hell?
Hor. Tush, Gremio, though it pass your patience and mine to endure their loud alarums, why, man, there be good fellows in the world, an a man could light on them, would take her with all faults, and money enow.
Gre. I cannot tell: but I had as lief take her down in this condition, to be whipt at the high cross every morning.

Hor. Faith, as you say, there's small choice in rotten apples. But I say, Sir; that fair law in law makes us friends, it shall be so far forth friendly maintained till by helping Baptista's eldest daughter to a husband we set his youngest free for a husband, and then have to 't refresh. Sweet Bianca! Happy man be his dote! He that runs fastest gets the ring.
How say you, Signior Gremio?
Gre. I am and will; and had I given him the best horse in Padua to begin his wooing that would thoroughly woo her, wed her and bed her and ride
the house of her! Come on.

Luc. O Tranio, till I found it to be true,
I never thought it possible or likely;
But see, while Ily I stood looking on,
I found the effect of love in idleness:
And now in plainness do confess to thee,
That art to me as secret and as dear
As Anna to the Queen of Carthage was,
Tranio, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio,
If I achieve not this young modest girl,
Counsel me, Tranio, for I know thou canst;
Assist me, Tranio, for I know thou wilt.
Tranio, it is no time to chide you now;
Affection is not rated from the heart:
If love have touch'd you, nought remains but so,
'Redme to captum quam quas minimo.'
Luc. Gramercies, lad, go forward; this contents:
The rest will comfort, for thy counsel's sound.
Luc. Master, you look'd so longly on the maid.
Perhaps you mark'd not what's the pith of all.
Luc. O yes, I saw sweet beauty in her face,
Such as the daughter of Agenor had.
That made great Jove to humble him to her hand,
When with his knees he kiss'd the Cretan strand.
Luc. Saw you no more? mark'd you not how her
Began to scold and raise up such a storm,
That mortal ears might hardly endure the din?
Luc. Tranio, I saw her coral lips to move
And with her breath she did perfume the air:
Sacred and sweet was all I saw in her. [trance.
Luc. Nay, then, 'tis time to stir him from his
I pray, awake, sir: if you love the maid, [stands:
Bend thoughts and wits to achieve her. Thus it
Her eldest sister is so curt and shrewd
That till the father rid his hands of her,
Master, your love must live a maid at home;
And therefore has he closely mew'd her up,
Because she would not be angry'd with suitors.
Luc. Ah, Tranio, what a cruel father's he!
But art thou not advised, he took some care
To get her cunning schoolmasters to instruct her?
Luc. Ay, marry, am I, sir; and now 'tis plotted.
Luc. I have it, Tranio.
Luc. Master, for my hand,
Both our inventions meet and jump in one.
Luc. Tell me thine first.
Luc. You shall be schoolmaster
And undertake the teaching of the maid:
That's your device.
Luc. Sir. It is; may it be done?
Luc. Not possible: for who shall bear your part,
And be in Padua here Vincentio's son,
Keep house and ply his book, welcome his friends,
Visit his countrymen and banquet them?
Luc. Basta; content thee, for I have it full.
We have not yet finished this. Nor can we be distinguish'd by our faces
For man or master; then it follows thus;
Thou shalt be master, Tranio, in my stead,
Keep house and port and servants, as I should:
I will some other be, some Florentine,
Some Neapolitan, or another man of Pisa.
'Tis mark'd and shall be so: Tranio, at once.
Faith, sirrah, an you'll not knock, I'll ring it; I'll try how you can sol, fa, and sing it.

[He sings him by the ears.

Enter Hortensio.

Pet. Signior Hortensio, come you to part the fray? 'Con tutto il cuore, bene trovato,' may I say.

Hor. 'Ala nostra casa ben venuto, moltol'onorato signor mio Petruchio.'

Rise, Grumio, rise: we will compound this quarrel.

Gru. Nay, 'tis no matter, sir, what he leges in Latin. If this be not a lawful cause for me to leave his service, look you, sir, he bid me knock him and rap him soundly: sir, well, was it fit for a servant to use his master so, being perhaps, for aught I see, two and thirty, a piping out?

Whom would to God I had well knock'd at first, Then would I swear, and Grumio come by the worst.

Pet. A senseless villain! Good Hortensio, I bade the rasch knock upon your gate, And could not get him for my heart to do it.

Gru. Knock at the gate! O heavens! Spake you not these words plain, 'Sirrah, knock me here, rap me here, knock me soundly.' And come you now with, 'knocking at the gate?'

Pet. Sirrah, be gone, or talk not, I advise you.

Hor. Petruchio, patience: I am Grumio's pledge: Why, this 's a heavy chance 'twixt him and you. Your ancient, trusty, pleasant servant Grumio. And tell me now, sweet friend, what happy gale Blows you to Padua here from old Verona?

Pet. Such wind as scatters young men through the world To seek their fortunes farther than at home Where small experience grows. But in a few, Signior Hortensio, thus it stands with me:

Antonio, my father, is deceased; And I have thrust myself into this maze, Haply to live and thrive as best I may: Crowns in my purse I have and goods at home, And so am come abroad to see the world.

Hor. Petruchio, I know not how to thee And wish thee to a shrewd ill-favour'd wife? Thou 'ldst thank me but a little for my counsel; And yet I 'll promise thee she shall be rich And very rich: but thou 'rt too much my friend, And I 'll not wish thee to her.

Pet. Enter Hortensio and his man Grumio.

Pet. Verona, for a while I take my leave, To see my friends in Padua, but of all My best beloved and approved friend, Hortensio: and I row this is his house. Here, sirrah Grumio: knock, I say.

Gru. Knock, sir! whom should I knock? is there any man has refused your worship?

Pet. Villain, I say, knock me here soundly.

Gru. Knock you here, sir! why, sir, what am I, sir, that should knock you here, sir?

Pet. Villain, I say, knock me at this gate And rap me well, or I'll knock your knave's pate.

Gru. My master is grown quarrelsome. I should knock you first, And then I know after who comes by the worst.

Pet. Will it not be?
And shrewd and froward, so by all because That, were my state far worse than it is, I would not sell her for a mite of gold. \[effect: 0x0] On this you may know, sir, not gold's Tell me her father's name and 'tis enough: For I will board her, though she chide as loud As thunder when the clouds in autumn crack. Hor. Her father is Baptista Minola, An affable and courtious gentleman; Hath promised me to wed her, in my sight. Renowned in Padua for her scolding tongue. Pet. I know her father, though I know not her; And he knew my deceased father well. I will not sleep, Hortensio, till I see her; And therefore let me be thus bold with you To give you over at this first encounter. Unless you will accompany me thither. Gre. I pray you, sir, let him go while the humour lasts. O' my word, an she knew him as well as I do, she would think scolding would do little good upon him: she may perhaps call him half a score knaves or so: why, that's nothing: an he begin Cruele, he'll rack in his tech-tricks. I'll tell you what, sir, an she stand him but a little, he will throw a figure in her face and so disfigure her with it that she shall have no more eyes to see within than a cat. You know him not, sir. Hor. Tarry, Petruchio, I must go with thee, For Baptista's sake: my treasure is: He hath the jewel of my life in hold, His youngest daughter, beautiful Bianca, And her withholds from me and other more, Suitors to her and rivals in my love, Supposing it a thing impossible. For those defects I have here reforseed, That ever Katharina will be woold; Therefore this order hath Baptista ta'en, That none shall have access unto Bianca Till Katharine the curtse have a husband. Gre. Katharine the curtse! A title for a maid of all titles the worst. Hor. Now shall my friend Petruchio do me grace, And offer me disguised in sober robes To old Baptista as a schoolmaster Well seen in music, to instruct Bianca; That so I may, by this device, at least Have some help and leisure to take love to her And unsuspected court her by herself. Gre. Here's no knavery! See, to beguile the old folks, how the young folks lay their heads together! Enter Gremio, and Lucentio disguised, Master, master, look about you; who goes there, ha? Hor. Peace, Grumio! it is the rival of my love. Petruchio, stand by a while. Gre. A proper striving and an amorous! Gre. O, very well, I have perused the note. I thank you, sir; I'll have them very fairly bound: All books of love, see that I have any hand; And see you read no other lectures to her: You understand me: over and beside Signior Baptista's liberality, I'll mend it with a largess. Take your paper too, And let me have them very well perfumed: For she is sweeter than any perfume itself. To whom they go to. What will you read to her? Luc. Whate'er I read to her, I'll plead for you As for my patron, stand you so assured, As firmly as yourself were still in place: Yea, and perhaps with more successful words Than you would, unless you were a scholar. Gre. O this learning, what a thing it is! Gre. O this woodcock, what an ass it is! Pet. Peace, sirrah! [Gremio. Hor. Grumio, man! God save you, Signior Gre. And you are well met, Signior Hortensio. Trow you whither I am going? To Baptista Minola, I promised to inquire carefully. About a schoolmaster for the fair Bianca; And by good fortune I have lighted well. \[effect: 0x0] This young man for learning and behaviour Fit for her turn, well read in poetry And other books, good ones, I warrant ye. Hor. 'Tis well: and I have met a gentleman Hath promised me to help me to another, A fine musician to instruct our mistress; So shall I whet his bounty. To fair Bianca, so beloved of me. [provere: Gre. Beloved of me: and that my deeds shall Greu. And that his bags shall prove. Hor. Gremio, 'tis now no time to vent our love: Listen to me, and if you speak me fair, I'll tell you news indifferently good or other. Here is a gentleman whom by chance I met, Upon agreement from us to his hikin, Will undertake to woo thus Katharine. Yea, and to marry her, if her dowry please. Gre. So said, so done, is well. Hortensio, have you told him all her faults? Pet. I know she is an icksone brawling scold: If that be all, masters, I hear no harm. [man? Gre. No, say'st me so, friend: What country- Pet. Born in Verona, old Antonio's son: My father dead, my fortune lives for me. And I do love good days and long to see, [strange! Gre. O sir, such a life, with such a wife, were But if you have a stomach, to 't God's name: You shall have me assisting you in all. But will you woo this wild-cat? Pet. Will I live? Greu. Will he woo her? ay, or I'll hang her. Pet. Why came I hither but to that intent? Think you a little din can daunt mine ears? Have you not in my time heard lions roar? Have you not heard the sea puff'd up with winds Rage like an angry bear chafed with sweat? Have you not heard great ordinance in the field, And heaven's artillery thunder in the skies? Have I not in a pitched battle heard Loud 'larums, neighing steeds, and trumpets clang? And do you tell me of a woman's tongue, That gives not half so great a blow to hear As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire? Gre. For he fears none. Gre. Hortensio, hark: This gentleman is happily arrived, My mind presumes, for his own good and ours. Hor. I promised we would be contributors And hear such a strange discourse, whatsoever. Gre. And so we will, provided that he win her. Greu. I would I were as sure of a good dinner. Enter Tranio brave, and Biondello. Tran. Gentlemen, God save you. If I may be bold, Tell me, you which is the readiest way To the house of Signior Baptista Minola? Bion. He that has the two fair daughters: is't Tran. Even he, Biondello. [he you mean? Gre. Thank you, sir; you mean not her to— Tran. Perhaps, him and her, sir: what have you to do? Pet. Not her that chides, sir, at any hand, I pray. Tran. I love no chiders, sir, Biondello, let's away. Luc. Well begun, Tranio. Hor. Sir, a word ere you go. Are you a suitor to the maid you talk of, yea or no? Tran. And if I be, sir, is it any offence? Gre. No: if without more words you will get you hence. Tran. Why, sir, I pray, are not the streets as free For me as for you? Gre. But so is not she. Tran. For what reason, I beseech you?
ACT II.

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

SCENE I.–Padua. A room in Baptista’s house.

Enter Katharina and Bianca.

Bian. Good sister, wrong me not, nor wrong your
To make a bondmaid and a slave of me: [self,
That I disdain; but for these other gawds,
Unbind my hands, I’ll pull them off myself,
Yea, all my raiment, to my petticoat;
Or what you will command me will I do,
So well I know my duty to my elders.

Kath. Of all thy suitor, here I charge thee, tell Whom thou lovest best: see thou dissemble not.

Bian. Believe me, sister, of all the men alive
I never yet beheld that special face
Which I could fancy more than any other.

Kath. Minion, thou liest. Is not Hortensio?

Bian. If so, I wish it had been my fortune to be his benefactor, or have made him what

Kath. O then, belike, you fancy riches more:
You will have Gremio to keep you fair.

Bian. Is it for him you do envy me so?
Nay then you jest, and now I will perceive
You have but jested with me all this while;
I prithee, sister Kate, untie my hands.

Kath. If that be jest, then all the rest was so.

Enter Baptista. [Strikes her.

Bap. Why, how now, dame! whence grows this insolence?

Bianca, stand aside. Poor girl! she weeps.

Go ply thy needle; meddle not with her.
For shame, thou kindling of a devilish spirit,
Why dost thou wrong her that didst ne’er wrong thee?

When did she cross thee with a bitter word?

Kath. Her silence flouts me, and I’ll be revenged.

[Flies after Bianca.

Kath. What, will you not suffer me? Nay, now
She is your treasure, she must have a husband;
I must dance barefoot on her wedding day
And for your love to her leading apes in hell.

Talk not to me: I will go sit and weep
Till I can find occasion of revenge.

[Exit Baptista.

Pet. Sir, understand you this of me in sooth:
The youngest daughter whom you hearten
For her father keeps from all access of suitors.
And will not promise her to any man
Until the elder sister first be wed:
The younger then is free and not before.

[Pet. If it be so, sir, that you are the man
Must steal us all and me amongst the rest,
And if you break the ice and do this feat,
Achieve the choler, set the younger free
For our access, whom shall we be to have her
Will not so graceless be to ingrate.

[Pet. Sir, you say well and well you do conceive;
And since you do profess to be a suitor,
You must, as we do, gratify this gentleman,
To whom we all rest generally beholding.

[Pet. Sir, I shall not be shker: in sign thereof,
Please ye we may contrive this afternoon,
And quaff carouses to our mistress’ health,
And do as adversaries do in law,
Strive mightily, but cat and drink as friends.

Bap. Good morrow, neighbour Gremio. God
save you, gentlemen!

Pet. And you, good sir! Pray, have you not a daughter?

Call’d Katharina, fair and virtuous?

Bap. Was ever gentleman thus grieved as I?
But who comes here?

Enter Gremio, Lucentio in the habit of a monk;
Petruchio, with Hortensio as a musician; and Tranio, with Biondello bearing a tape and books.

Grem. Good morrow, neighbour Baptista.

Bap. Good morrow, neighbour Gremio. God
save you, gentlemen!

Pet. And you, good sir! Pray, have you not a daughter?

Call’d Katharina, fair and virtuous?

Bap. I have a daughter, sir, called Katharina.

Grem. You are too blunt: go to it orderly, heavens.

Pet. You wrong me, Signior Gremio: give me news of her. I am a gentleman of Verona, sir,
That, hearing of her beauty and her wit,
Her affability and bashful modesty,
Her wondrous qualities and mild behaviour,
Am bold to show myself a forward guest
Within your house, to make mine eye the witness
Of that report which I so oft have heard.

And, for an entrance to my entertainment,
I do present you with a man of mine,

Cunning in music and the mathematics,
To instruct her fully in those sciences,
Whereof I know she is not ignorant:
Accept of him, or else you do me wrong:
His name is Licio, born in Mantua.[sake]

Bap. You’re welcome, sir; and I, for your good
But for my daughter Katharine, this I know,
She is not for your turn, the more my grief.

Pet. I see you do not mean to part with her,
Or else you like not of my company.

Bap. Mistake me not: I speak but as I find.
Whence are you, sir? what may I call your name?

Pet. Petruchio is my name; Antonio’s son,
A man well known throughout all Italy.[sake]

Bap. I know him well; you are welcome for his Grace. Saving your tale, Petruchio, I pray,
Let us, that are poor petitioners, speak too:
Baccare! you are marvellous forward.

Pet. O, pardon me, Signior Gremio; I would fain be doing.[wooing.

Grem. I doubt it not, sir; but you will curse your Neighbour, this is a gift very grateful. I am sure of it. To express the like kindness, myself, that have been more kindly beholding to you than any, truly given unto you this young scholar (presenting Lucentio), that hath been long studying at Rhodes; as cunning in Greek, Latin, and other languages, as the other in music and mathematics; his name is Cambio; pray, accept his service.

Bap. A thousand thanks, Signior Gentiano, Welcome, good Cambio. [To Cambio] But, gentle sir, nathinks you walk like a stranger; may I be so bold to know the cause of your coming?

Tea. Pardon me, sir, the boldness is mine own, That, being a stranger in this city here,
Do make myself a suitor to your daughter, Unto Bianca, fair and virtuous. Nor is your firm resolve unknown to me, In the preferment of the eldest sister.
This liberty is all that I request.
That, upon knowledge of my parentage,
I may have welcome amongst the rest that woo
And free access and favour as the rest;
And, toward the education of your daughters,
I here bestow a simple instrument.
And this small packet of Greek and Latin books:
If you accept them, then their worth is great.

Bap. Lucentio is your name; of whence, I pray?
Bap. A mighty man of Pisa; by report
I know him well; you are very welcome, sir:
Take you the lute, and you the book of books;
You shall go see your pupils presently.
Holla, within!

Enter a Servant.
Sirrah, lead these gentlemen
To my daughters; and tell them both,
These are their tutors; bid them use them well.
[Exit Servant, with Lucentio and Hortensio, Biondo, following.

We will go walk a little in the orchard,
And then to dinner. You are passing welcome,
And so I pray you all to think yourselves.

Pet. Signior Baptista, my business asketh haste,
And every day I cannot come to woo
You knew my father well, and in him me,
Left in his will to all and good lands and goods,
Which I have better’d rather than decreased;
Then tell me, if I get your daughter’s love,
What dowry shall I have with her to wife?

Bap. After my death the one half of my lands,
And in possession twenty thousand crowns.

Pet. And, for that dowry, I’ll assure her of
Her mother’s wealth, and beauty, and fortune,
In all my lands and leases whatsoever;
Let specialties be therefore drawn between us,
That covenants may be kept on either hand.

Bap. Ay, when the special things is well obtain’d,
There is, her love; for that is all in all.

Pet. Why, that is nothing; for I tell you, father,
I am as peremptory as she proud-minded;
And where two raging fires meet together
They do consume the thing that feeds their fury:
Though little fire grows great with little wind,
Yet extreme gusts will blow out fire and all:
So I to her and so she yields to me;
For I am rough and wool not like a babe. [speed!
Bap. Well mayst thou wool, and happy be thy
But be thou arm’d for some unhappy words. [winds.
Pet. Ay, to the proof; as mountains are for
That shake not, though they blow perpetually.

Re-enter Hortensio, with his head broke.

Bap. How now, my friend? why dost thou look so pale?
Hor. For fear, I promise you, if I look pale.

Bap. What, will my daughter prove a good musician?

Hor. I think she’ll sooner prove a soldier,
Iron may hold with her, but never lutes. [lute?
Bap. Why, then thou canst not break her to the
Hor. Why no; for she hath broke the lute to me.
I did but tell her she mistook her frest,
And bow’d her hand to teach her fingering;
When, with a most impatient devilish spirit, ‘Frets, call you these?’ quoth she; ‘I’ll tune with them,
And, with that word, she struck me on the head,
And through the instrument my pate made way;
And there I stood amazed for a while.
As on a pillow, looking through the lute;
While she did call me rustic haller
And twanging a neck, with twenty mouch vile terms,
As had she staid and sat in some name.

Pet. Now, by the world, it is a lusty wench;
I love her ten times more than e’er I did;
O, how I long to have some chat with her!
Bap. Well, go with me and be not so disconsolate;
Proceed in practice with my younger daughter;
She’s apt to learn and thankful for good turns.
Signior Petruchio, will you go with us,
Or shall I send my daughter Kate to you?

Pet. I pray you do. [Exit all but Petruchio.
I will attend her here.

And woo her with some spirit when she comes.
Say that she ral: why then I’ll tell her plain
She sings as sweetly as a nightingale;
Say that she frown: I’ll say she looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash’d with dew;
Say she be haute and will not speak a word;
Then I’ll commend her volatility.
And say she oftenth with piercing eloquence;
If she do bid me pack, I’ll give her thanks,
As though I bid her stay but a week:
If she deny to wed, I’ll crave the day
When I shall ask the leenu and when be married.
But here she comes; and now, Petruchio, speak.

Enter Katharina.

Good morrow, Kate; for that’s your name, I hear.
Kath. Well have you heard, but something hard of hearing:
They call me Katharine that do talk of me,
Pet. You know not faith; for you are call’d plain Kate,
And bonny Kate and something Kate the curt;
But Kate, the prettiest Kate in Christendom,
Kate of Kate Hurl, my super-dainty Kate,
For dainties are all Kames, and therefore, Kate,
Take this of me, Kate of my consolacion;
Hearing thy mildness praised in every town,
Thy virtues spoke of, and the beauty sounded,
Yet not so deeply as to thee belongs.
Myself am mov’d to woo thee for my wife.
Kath. Moved! in good time: let him that moved you hither
Remove you hence; I knew you at the first
You were a moveable.

Pet. Why, what’s a moveable?
Kath. A joint’stool.
Pet. Thou hast hit it: come, sit on me.
Kath. Asses are made to bear, and so are you.
Pet. Women are made to bear, and so are you.
Kath. No such jade as you, if you mean me.
Pet. Alas! good Kate, I will not burden thee;
For, knowing thee to be but young and light—
Kath. Too light for such a swain as you to catch;
And yet as heavy as my weight should be.
Pet. Should be! should—luzz!
Kath. To tell’t and like a buzzard.
Pet. O slow-wing’d turtle! shall a buzzard take thee?
Kath. Ay, for a turtle, as he takes a buzzard.
Pet. Come, come, you wasp; if faith, you are too angry.
Kath. If I be wapish, best beware my sting.
197
Pet. My remedy is then, to pluck it out.
Kath. Ay, if the fool could find where it lies.
Pet. Who knows not where a wasp does wear his sting? In his tail.
Kath. In his tongue.
Pet. What, with my tongue in your tail? nay, Good Kate; I am a gentleman. [Come again, Kath. That I'll try. [She strikes him.
Pet. I swear I'll cuff you, if you strike again.
Now, how now, you bawd? I am for you.
If you strike me, you are no gentleman;
And if no gentleman, why then no arms.
Pett. A herald, Kate? o, put me in thy books!
Kath. What is your crest? a coxcomb?
Pett. A coombless cock, so Kate will be my hen.
Kath. No cock of mine; thou crow too like a craven.
Pett. Nay, come, Kate, come: you must not look so sour.
Kath. It is my fashion, when I see a crab.
Pett. Why, here's no crab; and therefore look not sour.
Kath. There is, there is.
Pett. The show me it.
Kath. Had I a glass, I would.
Pett. What, you mean my face?
Kath. Well aim'd of such a young one.
Pett. Now, by Saint George, I am too young for your.
Kath. Yet you are wither'd.
Pett. 'Tis with cares.
Kath. I care not.
Pett. Nay, hear you, Kate: in sooth you scape not Kath. I e hate you, if I tarry: let me go. [So.
Pett. No, not a whit: I find you passing gentle.
'Twas told me you were rough and coy and sullen,
And now I find report a wrong report:
'Gainst thon art pleasant, gameassome, passing courteous,
But slow in speech, yet sweet as spring-time flowers:
Thou canst not frown, thou canst not look askance,
Nor bite the lip, as angry wenches will,
Nor hast thou pleasure to be cross in talk,
But thou with mildness entertain'st thy wooers,
With gentle conference, soft and affable.
Why does the world report that Kate doth limp?
O slanderous world! Kate like the hazel-twig
Is straight and slender and as brown in hue
As hazel nuts and sweeter than the kernels.
O, let me see thee walk: thou dost not hait.
Kath. How should I then, when thou keep'st command.
Pett. Did ever Dian so become a grove
As Kate this chamber with her princely gait?
O, be thou Dian, and let her be Kate;
And then let Kate be chast and Dian sportful!
Kath. Where did you study all this goodly speech?
Pett. It is extempore, from my mother-wit.
Pett. A witty mother! witless else her son.
Pett. Am I not wise?
Kath. Yes: keep you warm.
Pett. Marry, so I mean, sweet Katharine, in thy bed:
And therefore, setting all this chat aside, [bed:
Thou hast hit my heart: thy father hath counselleth
That thou shall be my wife: thy dowry 'greed on;
And, will you, till you, I will marry you.
Now, Kate, I am a husband for your turn;
For, by this light, whereby I see thy beauty,
Thy beauty, that doth make me like thee well,
Thou shouldst be married to no man but me:
For I am he am born to tame you Kate,
And bring you from a wild Kate to a Kate
Conformable as other household Kates.
Here comes your father: never make denial;
I must and will have Katharine to my wife.

Re-enter Baptista, Gremio, and Tranio.

Bap. Now, Signior Petruchio, how speed you with your daughter?
ACT III.

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

SCENE I.

Enter Lucceilio, Hortensio, and Bianca.

Luc. Fiddler, forbear; you go too forward, sir: Have you so soon forgot the entertainment Her sister Katharine welcomed you withal? Hor. But, wrangling pedant, this is The patroness of heavenly harmony: Then give me leave to have prerogative; And when in music we have spent an hour, Your lecture shall have leisure for as much. Luc. Preposterous ass, that never read so far To know the cause why music was ordain'd! Was it not to refresh the mind of man After his studies or his usual pain? Then give me leave to read philosophy, And while I pause, serve in your harmony. Hor. Sirrah, I will not bear these brave's thine. Biau. Why, gentlemen, you do me double wrong, To strive for that which resteth in my choice: I am no breaching scholar in the schools; I'll not be tied to hours nor pointed times, But learn my lessons as I please myself, And, to cut off all strife, here sit down: Take you your instrument, play you the whiles; His lecture will be done ere you have tuned. Hor. You'll leave his lecture when I am in tune? Luc. That will be never; tune your instrument. Biaau. Where left we last? Luc. Here, madam: 'Tis he that Simois; he is Sigelia tellus; He srotecet Priami regia celsa senis.' Biaau. Construe them. Luc. 'Tis he that, as I told you before, 'Simois, I am Lucentio; 'tis est, son unto Vincentio of Pisa, 'Sigea tellus,' disguised thus to get your love; 'Tis, srotecet, and that Lucentio that comes a-wooing, 'Primia,' is my man Tranio, 'regia,' bearing my port, 'celsa senis,' that we might beguile the old pantaloon.

Biau. Why, then the maid is mine from all the word, By your firm promise: Gremio is out-vied, Biaau. I must confess your offer is the best; And, let your father make her the assurance, She is your own; else, you must pardon me, If you should die before him, where's her dowry? Tra. That's but a cavil: he is old, I young. Grem. And may not young men die, as well as old? Biaau. Well, gentlemen. I am thus resolved: on Sunday next you know My daughter Katharine is to be married; Now, on the Sunday following, shall Bianca Be bride to you, if you make this assurance; If not, to Signior Gremio: And so, I take my leave, and thank you both. Grem. Alen, good neighbour. [Exit Baptista. Now I fear thee not: Sirrah young gentleman, your father were a fool To give thee all, and in his waning age Set foot under thy table: tut, a toy! An old Italian fox is not so kind, my boy. [Exit. Tra. A vengeance on your crafty wither'd hole! Yet I have made it with a card of ten. 'Tis in my hand to do my master good: I see no reason but supposed Lucentio Must get a father, call'd supposed Vincentio; And that's a wonder: fathers commonly Do get their children: but in this case of wooing, A child shall get a sire, if I fail not of my cunning. [Exit.
THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.  SCENE II.

ACT III.

Enter a Servant.

Serv. Mistress, your father prays you leave your And help to dress your sister's chamber up: [books]

You know to-morrow is the wedding-day.

Bian. Farewell, sweet masters both; I must be gone.

[Exeunt Bianca and Servant.

Luc. Faith, mistress, then I have no cause to stay, and a welcome for you too. [Exit.

Hor. But I have cause to pry into this pedant;

Methinks he looks as though he were in love:

Yet if thy thoughts, Bianca, be so humble

To cast thy wandering eyes on every stile,

Seize thee that list: if once I find thee ranging,

Hortensio will be quit with thee by changing.

[Exit.

Enter Baptista, Gremio, Tranio, Katharina, Bianca, Lucentio, and others, Attendants.

Bap. [To Tranio] Signior Lucentio, this is the pointed day

That Katharine and Petruchio should be married,

And yet, we hear not of our son-in-law.

What will be said? what mockery will it be,

To want the bridgroom when the priest attends

To speak the ceremonial rites of marriage?

What says Lucentio to this shame of ours?

Kath. No shame but mine; I must, forsooth, be forced

To give my hand opposed against my heart

Unto a mad-brain rudely full of spleen;

Who wo'd in haste and means to wed at leisure.

I told you, I, he was a frantic fool,

Hiding his bitter jests in blurt behaviour;

And, to be noted for a merry man,

He'll woo a thousand, point the day of marriage,

Make feasts, invite friends, and proclaim the banes;

Yet never means to wed where he hath wo'd.

Now must the world point at poor Katharine,

And say, 'Lo, there is mad Petruchio's wife;

If it would please him come and marry her!'

Tra. Patience, lady Katharine, and Baptista too.

Upon my life, Baptista means well but,

Whatever fortune stays him from his wish:

Though he be blunt, I know him passing wise;

Though he be merry, yet withal he's honest.

Kath. Would Katharine had never seen him thence!

[Exeunt weeping, followed by Bianca and others.

Bap. Go, girl; I cannot blame thee now to weep;

For such an injury would vex a very saint,

Much more a shrew of thy impatient humour.

Enter Bianello.

Bion. Master, master! news, old news, and such news as you never heard of!

Bap. Is it new and old too? how may that be?

Bion. Why, is it not news, to hear of Petruchio's

Bap. Is he come? [coming?

Bion. Why, no, sir.

Bap. But then?

Bion. He is coming.

Bap. When will he be here?

Bion. When he stands where I am and sees you

Tra. But say, what to thine old news? [there.

Bion. Why, Petruchio is coming in a new hat and an old jerkin, a pair of old breeches three turned, a pair of boots that have been candle-cases, one buckled, another laced, an old rusty sword ta'en out of the town-armoury, with a broken hilt, and chapeless; with two broken points; his horse hipped with an old motly saddle and stirrups of no kindred; besides, possessed with the gauders and like to mose in the chine; troubled with the lapp, infected with the fashions, full of windgalls, ped with sprains, rayed with yellow, past cure of the five, stark spoiled with these beggars, begnawn with the bots, swayed in the back and shoulder-shotten; near-pegged before and with a half-checked bit and a head-stall of sheep's leather which, being restrained to keep him from stumbling, hath been often burst and now repaired with knots; one girth six times pieced, rayed with a crupper of vulnure, which hath two letters for her name fairly set down in studs, and here and there pieced with patchthread.

Bap. Who comes with him?

Bion. O, sir, his lackey, for all the world caparisoned like the horse; with a linen stock on one leg and a kersey bodlase on the other, gartered with a red and blue list; an old hat and 'the humour of forty fancies' prick'd in 't for a feather: a monster, a very monster in apparel, and not like a Christian footboy or a gentleman's lackey.

Tra. 'Tis some old humour pricks this to fetch you.

Yet oftentimes he goes but mean-apparrell'd.

Bap. I am glad he's come, howsoever he comes.

Bion. Why, sir, he comes not.

Bap. Didst thou not say he comes?

Bion. Who, that Petruchio came?

Bap. Ay, that Petruchio came.

Bion. No, sir; I say his horse comes, with him on his back.

Bap. Why, that's all one.

Bion. Nay, by Saint Jamy, I hold you a penny, A horse and a man, Is more than one,

And yet not many.

Enter Petruchio and Grumio.

Petr. Come, where be these gallants? who's at work?

Bap. You are welcome, sir. [home.

Petr. And yet I come not well.

Bap. And yet youhalt not.

Tra. Not so well apparel'd

As I wish you were.

Petr. Were it better, I should rush in thus.

But where is Kate? where is my lovely bride?

How now, my father? Gentles, methinks you frown:

And wherefore gaze this goodly company,

As if they saw some wondrous monument,

Some comet or unusual prodigy? [day:

Bap. Why, sir, you know this is your wedding.

First were we sad, fearing you would not come;

Now sadder, that you come so unprovided.

Fie, doff this habit, shame to your estate,

An eye-sore to our solemn festival!

Tra. And tell us, what occasion of impert

Hath all so long detain'd you from your wife,

And sent you hither so unlike yourself?

Petr. Tedium it was to tell, and harsh to hear:

Sufficeth, I am come to keep my word,

Though in some part enforced to digress;

Which, at more leisure, I will so excuse

As you shall well be satisfied withal.

Where is Kate? I stay to long from her;

The morning wears, 'tis time we were at church.

Tra. See not your bride in these unreveller robes:

Go to my chamber; put on clothes of mine.

Petr. Not 1, believe me: thus I'll visit her.

Bap. But thus, I trust, you will not marry her.

Petr. Good morrow, so even thus; therefore 'tis done with words;

To me she's married, not unto my clothes:
Could I repair what she will wear in me,
As I can change these poor accoutrements,
'T were well for Kate and better for myself.
But what a fool am I to chat with you,
When I should bid good morrow to my bride,
And seal the title with a lovely kiss!

Tea. He hath some meaning in his mad attire:
We will persuade him, be it possible.
To put on better ere he go to church.

Bap. I'll alter him, and see the event of this.

Exeunt Baptistus, Gremio, and attendants.

Tea. But perchance to love again?
Her father's liking: which to bring to pass,
As I before imparted to your worship,
I am to get a man,—what'er he be,
It skills not much, we'll fit him to our turn,—
And he shall be Vincentio of Padua;
And make assurance here in Padua
Of greater sum than I have promised.
So shall you quietly enjoy your hope,
And marry sweet Bianca with consent.

Luc. Were it not that my fellow-schoolmaster
Doth watch Bianca's steps so narrowly,
'T were good, methinks, to steal our marriage:
Which if once performed, let all the world say no,
I'll keep mine own, despite of all the world.

Tea. That by degrees we mean to look into,
And watch our vantage in this business:
We'll over-reach the greybeard, Gremio,
The narrow-prying father, Minola,
The quaint musician, amorous Licio;
All for my master's sake, Lucentio.

Re-enter Gremio.

Signior Gremio, can you from the church?

Grem. As willingly as e'er I came from school.

Tea. And is the bride and bridegroom coming home?

Grem. A bridegroom say you? 'tis a grooms indeed,
A grumbling grooms, and that the girl shall find.

Grem. Why, he's a devil, a devil, a very head:

Tea. Why, she's a devil, a devil, the devil's dam.

Grem. Tut, she's a lamb, a dove, a fool to him!
I'll tell you, Sir Lucentio: when the priest
Should ask, if Katharine should be his wife,
'Any by goss-wounds,' quoth he; and swore so loud,
That, all mannaed, the priest let tall the book;
And, as let to tell me, is my good Katharine.
The mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff
That down fell priest and book and book and priest:
'Now take them up,' quoth he, 'if any list.'

Tea. What said the wench when he rose again?

Grem. Trembled and shook; for why, he stamped'd
As if the vicar meant to cozen him.
But after many ceremonies done,
He calls for wine: 'A health!' quoth he, as if
He had been abroad, carousing to his mates.
After a storm: quaff'd off the muscadell
And then they both sat all in the sexton's face;
Having no other reason.
But that his beard grew thin and hungerly
And seem'd to ask him sops as he was drinking.
This done, he took the bride about the neck
And kiss'd her lips with such a clamorous smack
That at the parting all the church did echo:
And I seem'd this came thence for very shame;
And after me, I know, the rout is coming.
Such a mad marriage never was before:

Hark, hark! I hear the minstrels play.

[Music.]

Re-enter Petruchio, Katharina, Bianca, Baptista, Hortensio, Gremio, and Train.

Pet. Gentlemen and friends, I thank you for your pains:

I know you think great store of me today,
And have prepared great store of wedding cheer;
But so it is, my haste doth call me hence,
And therefore here I mean to take my leave.

Bap. Is't possible you will away to-night?

Pet. I must away to-day, before I might come
Make it no matter; if you knew my business,
You would entreat me rather go than stay.
And, honest company, I thank you all,
That have beheld me give away myself.
To this most patient, sweet and virtuous wife:
Dine with my father, drink a health to me;
For I must hence; and farewell to you all.

Tea. Let us entreat you stay till after dinner.

Pet. It may not be.

Grem. Let me entreat you.

Pet. It cannot be.

Kath. I am content.

Pet. Is there content to stay?

Kath. I am content you shall entreat me hence;
But yet not stay, entreat me how you can.

Kath. Now, if you love me, stay.

Grem. Ay, sir, they be ready: the oats have eaten
The horses.

Kath. Nay then.

Do what thou canst, I will not go to-day;
No, nor to-morrow, not till I please myself.
The door is open, sir; there lies your way;
You may be jogging whiles your boots are green;
For me, I'll not be gone till I please myself;
'Tis like you'll prove a jolly surly groom,
That take it on you at the first so roundly,

Pet. O Kate, content thee; prithee, be not angry.

Kath. I will be angry: what hast thou to do?

Father, be quiet: he shall stay my leisure.

Grem. Ay, marry, sir, is not to work.

Kath. Gentlemen, forward to the bridal dinner:
I see a woman may be made a tool,
If she had not a spirit to resist.

[mand.

Pet. They shall go forward, Kate, at thy command;
Obey the bride, you that attend on her;
Go to the feast, revel and delecture.
Carouse full measure to her maidenhead,
Be mad and merry, or go hang yourselves:
But for my bonny Kate, she must with me.
Nay, look not big, nor stamp, nor stare, nor fret;
I will be master of what is mine own:

Pet. Ay, marry, sir, let's to work.

Kath. Nay: I will not have thee, Kate, to work.

Pet. Neighbours and friends, though bride and bridegroom want,
For to supply the places at the table,
You know there wants no junkets at the feast.

Kath. Lucentio, you shall supply the bridegroom's place;
And let Baptista take his sister's room.

Pet. Shall sweet Bianca practise how to bride it?

Bap. She shall, Lucentio. Come, gentlemen, let's go.

[Exeunt.]
ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Petruchio's country house.

Enter Grumio.

Gr. Fie, fie on all tired jades, on all mad masters, and all fool ways! Was ever man so hunted? was ever man so raved? was ever man so weary? I am sent before to make a fire, and they are coming after to warm them. Now, were not I a little pot and soon hot, my very lips might freeze to my teeth, my eyes to the root of my mouth, my heart in my belly, ere I should come by a fire to thaw me: but I, with blowing the fire, shall warm myself; for, considering the weather, a taller man than I will take cold. Hola, ho! Curtis.

Enter Curtis.

Curt. Who is that calls so coldly?

Gr. A piece of ice: if thou doubt it, thou mayst slide from my shoulder to my heel with no greater a run but my head and my neck. A fire, good Curtis.

Curt. Is my master and his wife coming, Grumio?

Gr. O, ay, Curtis, ay; and therefore fire, fire, cast cold water.

Curt. Is she so hot a shrew as she's reported?

Gr. She was, good Curtis, before this frost: but, thou knowest, winter tames man, woman and beast: for it hath tamed my old master and my new mistress and myself, fellow Curtis.

Curt. Away, you three-inch fool! I am no beast.

Gr. Am I but three inches? why, thy horn is a foot; and so long am I at the least. But wilt thou make a fire, or shall I complain on thee to our mistress, whose hand, she being now at hand, thou shalt soon feel, to thy cold comfort, for being slow in thy hot office?

Curt. I prithee, good Grumio, tell me, how goes the world?

Gr. A cold world, Curtis, in every office but thine; and therefore fire: do thy duty, and have thy duty; for my master and mistress are almost frozen to death.

Curt. There's fire ready; and therefore, good Grumio, the news.

Gr. Why, 'Jack, boy! ho! boy!' and as much news as will thow.

Curt. Come, you are so full of ready-catching!

Gr. Why, therefore fire: for I have caught extreme cold. Where's the cook? is supper ready, the house trimmed, rushes strewn, coalwells swept; the serving-men in their new livery, their white stockings, and every officer his wedding-garment on? Be the jacks fair within, the jills fair without, the carpets laid, and every thing in order?

Curt. All ready; and therefore, I pray thee, news, Grumio.

Gr. First, know, my horse is tired; my master and mistress fallen out.

Curt. How?

Gr. Out of their saddles into the dirt; and thereby hangs a tale.

Curt. Let's ha'n't, good Grumio.

Gr. Lead thine car.

Curt. Here.

Gr. There.

[Strikes him.

Curt. This is to feel a tale, not to hear a tale.

Gr. And therefore let's called a sensible tale: and this cuff was but to knock at your ear, and beseech listening. Now I begin: Imprimis, we came down a foul hill, my master riding behind my mistress,— Curt. Both of one horse?

Gr. What's that to thee?

Curt. Why, a horse.

Gr. Tell thou the tale: but hadst thou not crossed me, thou shouldst have heard how her horse fell and she under her horse; thou shouldst have heard in how myri a place, how she was bemouled, how he left her with the horse upon her, the world upon her because her horse stumbled, how she waded through the dirt to pluck him off me, how I swore, how she prayed, that never prayed before, how I cried, how the horses ran away, how her bride was burst, how I lost my crupper, with many things of worthy memory, which now shall die in oblivion and thou return unexperienced to thy grave.

Curt. By this reckoning he is more shrew than Grumio.

Gr. Ay; and that thou and the proudest of you all shall find when he comes home. But what talk I of this? Call forth Nathaniel, Joseph, Nicholas, Philip, Walter, sugArcop and the rest: let their heads be sleekly combed, their blue coats brushed and their garters of an indifferent knit: let them curtsey with their left legs and not presume to touch a hair of my master's horses tail till they kiss their hands. Are they all ready?

Curt. They are.

Gr. Call them forth.

Curt. Do you hear, ho! you must meet my master to countenance my mistress.

Gr. Why, she hath a face of her own.

Curt. Who knows not that?

Gr. Thou, it seems, that calls for company to countenance her.

Curt. I call them forth to credit her.

Gr. Why, she comes to borrow nothing of them.

Enter four or five Servingmen.

Nath. Welcome home, Grumio!

Nath. How now, old lad?

Grumio. Welcome, you;—how now, you;—what, you;—fellow, you;—and thus much for greeting. Now, my spruce companions, is all ready, and all things neat?

Nath. All things is ready. How near is our master?

Grumio. Even at hand, alighted by this; and therefore be not—Cock's passion, silence! I hear my master.

Enter Petruchio and Katharina.

Pet. Where be these knaves? What, no man at To hold my stirrup nor to take my horse! [door Where is Nathaniel, Gregory, Philip? All Serv. Here, here, sir; here, sir.

Pet. Here, sir! here! sir! here! sir! here, sir! You logger-headed and unpolish'd grooms! What, no attendance? no regard? no duty? Where is the foolish knave I sent before?

Grumio. Here, sir; as foolish as I was before.

Pet. You peasanat swain! you whoreson malt-horse drudge!

Did I not bid thee meet me in the park, And bring along these rascal knaves with thee?

Grumio. Nathaniel's coat, sir, was not fully made, And Gabriel's pumps were all unshin'd they are. There was no link to colour Peter's hat, And Walter's dagger was not come from sheathing; There were none line but Adam, Ralph, and Gregory; The rest were ragged, old, and beggarly; Yet, as they are, here are they come to meet you. Pet. Go, rascals, go, and fetch my supper in.

[Singing Where is the life that late I led— Where are those—Sit down, Kate, and welcome.—Soul, soul, soul, soul!
THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

SCENE II.

Enter Petruchio.

Pet. Thus have I politicly begun my reign, And 'tis my hope to end successfully. My falcon now is sharp and passing empty: And till she stoop she must not be full-gorg'd, For then she never looks upon her lure. Another way I have to man my haggard, To make her come and know her keeper's call, That is, to watch her, as we watch these kites That bate and beat and will not be obedient. She eat no meat to-day, nor none shall eat: Last night she slept not, nor to-night she shall not; As with the meat, some undeserved fault I'll find about the making of the bed; And here I'll stuff the pillow, there the bolster, This way the coverlet, another way the sheets: Ay, and amid this hurly I intend That all is done in reverend care of her; And in conclusion she shall watch all night: And if she chance to nod I'll rail and brawl And with the clamour keep her still awake. This is a way to kill a wife with kindness; And thus I'll curb her mad and headstrong humour, He that knows better how to tame a shrew, Now let him speak: 'tis charity to show. [Exit.

Enter Tranio and Hortensio.

Tran. Is 't possible, friend Licio, that Mistress Doth fancy any other but Lucentio? [Bianca Telle you, sir; she bears me fair in hand. Hort. Sir, to satisfy you to what I have said, Stand by and mark the manner of his teaching.

Enter Bianca and Lucentio.

Luc. Now, mistress, profit you in what you read? Bian. What, master, read you? first resolve me if that. Luc. I read that I profess, the Art to Love. Bian. And may you prove, sir, master of your art! Luc. While you, sweet dear, prove mistress of my heart! Hort. Quick proceeders, marry! Now, tell me, I pray You that durst swear that your mistress Bianca Loved none in the world so well as Lucentio. Tra. O despitish love! unconstant womankind! I tell thee, Licio, this is wonderful. Hort. Mistake no more: I am not Licio, Nor a musician, as I seem to be: But one that seem to live in this disguise, For such a one as leaves a gentleman, And makes a god of such a calling: Know, sir, that I am call'd Hortensio. Tra. Signior Hortensio, I have often heard Of your entire affection to Bianca; And since mine eyes are witness of her lightness, I will with you, if you be so contented, Forswear Bianca and her love for ever. Hort. See, how they kiss and court! Signior Lucentio, Here is my hand, and here I firmly vow Never to woo her more, but do forswear her, As one unworthy all the former favours That I have fondly flatter'd her with. Tra. And here I take the like unfeigned oath, Never to marry with her though she entreat: Fie on her! see, how beastly she doth court him! Hort. Would all the world but he had quite forsworn! For me, that I may surely keep mine oath, I will be married to a wealthy widow, Ere three days pass, which hath as long loved me As I have loved this proud disdainful haggard, And so farewell, Signior Lucentio. Kindness in women, not their beauteous looks, Shall win my love: and so I take my leave, In resolution as I swore before. [Exit. Tra. Mistress Bianca, bless you with such grace As 'longeth to a lover's blessed case! Nay, I have ta'en you napping, gentle love, And have forsworn you with Hortensio. Bian. Tranio, you jest: but have you both forsworn me? Tran. Mistress, we have. Luc. Then we are rid of Licio. Tra. I'faith, he'll have a lusty widow now, That shall be woo'd and wedded in a day. Bian. God give him joy! Tran. Ay, and he'll 'tame her. Bian. He says so, Tranio.
Act IV.

The Taming of the Shrew.

Scene III.

Enter Katharina and Grumio.

Kath. No, no, forsooth; I dare not for my life.

Grum. This is more my way, the more his nip up.

What, did he marry me to finish me?

I warrant, Beggars, that come unto my father's door,

Upon entreaty have a present alms;

If not, elsewhere they meet with charity.

But I, who never knew how to entreat,

Nor never needed that I should entreat.

Am starved for meat, giddy for lack of sleep,

With oaths kept waking and with brawling led;

And that which spites me more than all these wants,

He does it under name of perfect love.

As who should say, if I should sleep or eat,

'Tis wreaked on me; sundry else present death.

I prithee go and get me some repast;

I care not what, so it be wholesome food.

What say you to a neat foot's? I prithee let me have it.

Grum. I fear it is too choleric a meet.

Have you to a fat tripe finely broiled?

Kath. I like it well; good Grumio, fetch it me.

Grumio. I cannot tell; I fear 'tis choleric.

What say you to a piece of beef and mustard?

Kath. A dish that I do love to feed upon.

Grumio. Ay, but the mustard is too hot a little.

Kath. Why then, the beef, and let the mustard rest.

If you will have it, I will not; you shall have the mustard, or else you get no beef of Grumio.

Kath. Then both, or one, or anything thou wilt.

Grumio. Why then, the mustard without the beef.

Kath. Go, get thee gone, thou false dealing slave, [Beats him.

That fedst me with the very name of meat:

Sorrow on thee and all the pack of you,

That triumph thus upon my misery!

Go, get thee gone, I say.

Enter Petruchio and Hortensio with meat.

Petr. How fares my Kate? What, sweeting, all

Horten. Mistress, what cheer?

Kath. Faith, as cold as can be.

Petr. Pluck up thy spirits; look cheerfully upon me.

Here, love; thou see'st how diligent I am
To dress thy meat myself and bring it thee;

I am some doubt, how Kate, this meat merits thanks,

What, not a word? Nay, then thou lovest not it;

And all my pains is sorted to no profit.

Here, take away this dish.

Kath. I pray you, let it stand.

Petr. The poorest service is repaid with thanks;

And so shall mine, before you touch the meat.

Kath. I thank you, sir.

Hort. Signior Petruchio, fie! you are to blame.

Come, Mistress Kate, I'll bear you company. [me.

Petr. [Aside] Eat it up all, Hortensio, it thou love

Much good do it unto thy gentle heart!

Kate, eat apace; and now, my home love,

Will we return unto thy father's house

And revel it as bravely as the best;

With silken coats and caps and golden rings,

With ruffs and cuffs and farlingues and things;

With scarfs and fans and double change of bravery,

With amber bracelets, beads and all this knavery.

What, hast thou dined? The tailor stays thy leisure,

To deck thy body with his ruffling treasure.

Enter Tailor.

Come, tailor, let us see these ornaments;

Lay forth the gown.

Enter Haberdasher.

What news with you, sir?

[me. Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.

Petr. Why, this was moulded on a perorring;
THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

SCENE IV.

A velvet dish: fie, fie! 'tis lewd and filthy:
Why, 'tis a cockle or a walnut-shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap:
Away with it! come, let me have a bigger.
Kath. I'll have no bigger; this doth fit the time,
And gentlewomen wear such caps as these.

Pet. Why are you gentle, you shall have one too,
And not till then.

Hor. [Aside] That will not be in haste.

Kath. Why, sir, I trust I may have leave to speak;
And speak I will; I am no child, no babe:
Your better's have endured me say my mind,
And if you cannot, bid you stop your ears.
My tongue will tell the anger of my heart,
Or else my heart concealing it will break,
And rather than it shall, I will be free
Even to the uttermost, as I please, in words.

Pet. Why, thou say'st true: it is a paltry cap,
A custard-coleon, a bauble, a silken pie:
I love thee well, in that thou likest it not.
Kath. Love me or love me not, I like the cap;
And it I have, or I will have none.

[Exit Hubertusher.

Pet. Thy gown? why, ay: come, tailor, let us see't.
O mercy, God! what masquing stuff is here?
What's that to thee?
What, up and down, carved like an apple-tart?
Here's a snip and nip and cut and slish and slash,
Like to a censer in a barber's shop.
Why, what, 'tis devil's name, tailor, call'st thou this?
Hor. [Aside] I see she's like to have neither cap nor gown.

Pet. Thou bid me make it orderly and well,
According to the fashion and the time.
Pet. Marry, and did; but if you be remember'd,
I did not bid you mar it to the time.
Go, hop me over every kernel home,
"Come, gracious sir, I'll none of it: hence! make your best of it.
Kath. I never saw a better-fashion'd gown,
More quaint, more pleasing, nor more commend-
Belike you mean to make a puppet of me. [Aside.

Pet. Why, true; he means to make a puppet of thee.

Tet. She says your worship means to make a puppet of her.

Pet. O monstrous arrogance! Thou liest, thou thread, thou thimble!
Thou yard, three-quarters, half-yard, quarter, nail,
The thread of my eye! This is it like a demi-cannon.
Braved in mine own house with a skein of thread?
Away, thou rag, thou quantity, thou remnant:
Or I shall so be near thee with thy yard
As thou shalt think on prating whilst thou livest!
I tell thee, I, that thou hast marred her gown.

Pet. Your worship is deceived; the gown is made
Just as your master had direction.

Grumio gave order how it should be done.

Gru. I gave him no order; I gave him the stuff.

Pet. But how did you desire it should be made?

Gru. Marry, sir, with needle and thread.

Pet. But did you not request to have it cut?

Gru. Thou hast faced many things.

Tet. I have.

Gru. Face not me; thou hast表现 many men; brave not me; I will neither be faced nor braved, I say unto thee, I bid thy master cut out the gown: but I did not bid him cut it to pieces: ergo, thou fool.

Tet. Why, here is the note of the fashion to test.

Pet. Read it.

[Aside. The note lies in 's throat, if he say I said so.

Gru. [Reads] Imprimis, a loose-bodied gown:

Pet. Master, if ever I said loose-bodied gown,
Sew me shall hop skirts of it, and beat me to death with a bottom of brown thread: I said a gown.

ACT IV.

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW. SCENE V.

Luc. I pray thee, moralize them.
Bion. Then thus: Baptista is safe, talking with the deceiving father of a deceitful son.
Luc. And what of him?
Bion. This daughter is to be brought by you to the supper.
Luc. And then?
Bion. The old priest of Saint Luke's church is at your command at all hours.
Luc. And what of all this? We cannot tell; expect they are busied about a counterfeit assurance: take you assurance of her, 'cun privilegio ad imprimentum solutum' to the church; take the priest, clerk, and some sufficient honest witnesses:
If this be not that you look for, I have no more to do. Go, bid them farewell for ever and a day. [say, Luc. Hearst thou, Bionello?
Bion. I cannot tardy: I knew a wench married in an afternoon as she went to the garden for parsley to stuff a rabbit; and so may you, sir: and so, adieu, sir. My master hath appointed me to go to Saint Luke's, to bid the priest be ready to come again. Therefore, I cannot lie with you longer.
Luc. I may, and will, if she be so contented:
She will be pleased; then wherewith should I doubt?
Hap what hap may, 'twill roundly go about her:
It shall go hard if Camillo go without her. [Exit.

SCENE V.—A public road.

Enter Petruchio, Katharine, Hortensio, and Servants.

Petr. Come on, i' God's name; once more toward fair Katherina.

Kath. Good Lord, how bright and goodly shines the moon!

Petr. The moon? the sun: it is not moonlight now.

Petr. I say it is the moon that shines so bright.

Kath. I know it is the sun that shines so bright.

Petr. Now, by my mother's son, and that's myself, it shall be moon, or star, or what I list,
Or ere I journey to your father's house.
Go on, and fetch our horses back again.

Kath. Every more cross'd and cross'd; nothing but cross'd!
Hor. Say as he says, or we shall never go.

Kath. Forward, forward, forward! thus the bowl should
And not unluckily against the bias.
Hor. Petruchio, go thy ways; the field is won.

Petr. Well forward, forward! thus the bowl should
And not unluckily against the bias.

Hor. Petruchio, thy servant is coming here.

Enter Vincentio.

[To Vincentio] Good morrow, gentle mistress: where tell me, sweet Kate, and tell me truly too, [away? Hast thou beheld a fresher gentlewoman? Such war of white and red within her cheeks! What stars do spangle heaven with such beauty, As those two eyes become that heavenly face? Fair lovely maid, once more good day to thee. Sweet Kate, thou must embrace her for her beauty's sake.

Kath. A' will make the man mad, to make a woman of him.

Kath. Young budding virgin, fair and fresh and Whiter away, or where is thy abode? [sweet, Happy the parents of so fair a child;
Happier the man, whom favourable stars
Allot thee for his lovely bed-fellow!

Pet. Why, how now, Kate! I hope thou art not
This is a man, old, wrinkled, faded, wither'd,
And not a maiden, as thou say'st he is.

Kath. Pardon, old father, my mistaking eyes,
That have been so bedazzled with the sun
That everything I look on seemseth green:
Now I perceive thou art a reverend father;
Pardon, I pray thee, for my mad mistaking.

Pet. Do, good old grandsire; and withal make known
Which way thou travellest: if along with us,
We shall be joyful of thy company.

Fair sir, and you my merry mistress,
That with your strange encounter much amazed me,
My name is call'd Vincentio; my dwelling Pisa;
And bound I am to Padua; there to visit
A son of mine, which long I have not seen.

Pet. What is his name?

Vin. Lucentio, gentle sir.

Pet. Happily met; the happier for thy son.

And now by law, as well as reverend age,
I may entitle thee my loving father:
The sister to my wife, this gentlewoman,
Thy son by this bath married. Wonder not,
Nor be not grieved: she is of good esteem,
Her dowry wealthy, and of worthy birth;
Beside, so qualified as may be seem
The spouse of any noble gentleman.
Let me embrace with old Vincentio,
And wander we to see thy honest son.
Who will of thy arrival be full joyous.

Vin. But is this true? or is it else your pleasure,
Like pleasant travellers, to break a jest
Upon the company you overtake?

Hor. I do assure thee, father, so it is.

Pet. Come, go along, and see the truth hereof;
For our first errand hath made thee jealous.

[Exeunt all but Hortensio.

Hor. Well, Petruchio, this has put me in heart.
Have to my widow? if she be froward,
Then hast thou taught Hortensio to be untoward.

[Exit.

ACT V.

Gremio discovered. Enter behind Biondello, Lucentio, and Bianca.

Bion. Softly and swiftily, sir; for the priest is ready.

Luc. I fly, Biondello; but they may chance to need thee at home; therefore leave us.

Bion. Nay, faith, I'll see the church o'your back; and then come back to my master's as soon as I can.

[Exeunt Lucentio, Bianca, and Biondello.

Gre. I marvel Camillo comes not all this while.

Enter Petruchio, Katharina, Vincentio, Gru- mio, with Attendants.

Pet. Sir, here 's the door, this is Lucentio's house; My father's hears more toward the market-place; Thither must I, and here I leave you, sir.

Vin. You shall not choose but drink before you go:
I think I shall command your welcome here, And, by all likelihood, some cheer is toward.

[Knocks.

Gre. They're busy within; you were best knock louder.

Pedant looks out of the window.

Ped. What's he that knocks as he would beat down the gate?

Vin. Is Signior Lucentio within, sir?

Ped. He's within, sir, but not to be spoken with.

Vin. What if a man bring him a hundred pound or two, to make merry withal?

Pet. Keep your hundred pounds to yourself; he shall need none, so long as I live.

Vin. Nay, I told you so; my son was well beloved in Padua. Do you hear, sir? To leave frivolous circumstances, I pray you, tell Signior Lucentio that his father is come from Pisa and is here at the door to speak with him.

Pet. Thou liest: his father is come from Padua and here looking out at the window.

Vin. Art thou his father?

Pet. Ay, sir; so his mother says, if I may believe her.

Pet. [To Vincentio] Why, how now, gentleman! why, this is flat knavery, to take upon you another man's name and business.

Ped. Lay hands on the villain; I believe 'a means to cozen somebody in this city under my countenance.
Enter one with an officer.

Carry this man known to the gaol. Father Baptista, I charge you see that he be forthcoming.

Vin. Carry me to the gaol!

Grc. Stay, officer: he shall not go to prison.

Bay. Talk not, Signior Gremio: I say he shall go to prison.

Grc. Take heed, Signior Baptista, lest you be cop'd in this business: I dare swear this is the right Vincentio.

Pet. Swear, if thouarest.

Grc. Nay, I dare not swear it.

Vin. Then thou wert best say that I am not Lucentio.

Grc. Yes, I know thee to be Signior Lucentio,

Bay. Away with the dotard! to the gaol with him!

Vin. Thus strangers may be haled and abused: O monstrous villain!

Re-enter Biondello, with Lucentio and Bianca.

Bion. O! we are spoiled and — yonder he is: deny him, forswear him, or else we are all undone.

Luc. [Kneeling] Pardon, sweet father.

Vin. Lives my sweet son?

[Exeunt Biondello, Tranio, and Pedant, as fast as may be.

Bion. Pardon, dear father.

Bay. How fast thou offended?

Luc. Here's Lucentio,

Right son to the right Vincentio;
That have by marriage made thy daughter mine,
While counterfeit supposed be'd thinke cyne.

Grc. Here's packing, with a witness, to deceive us all!

Vin. Where is that damned villain Tranio,
That faced and braved me in this matter so?

Bay. Why, tell me, is not this my Cambio?

Bion. Cambio is changed into Lucentio,

Luc. Love wronged these miracles. Bianca's love

Made me exchange my state with Tranio,
While he did bear my countenence in the town;
And happily I have arrived at the last
Unto the wished haven of my bliss.

What Tranio did, myself enforced him to;
Then pardon him, sweet father, for my sake.

Vin. I'll slit the villain's nose, that would have sent me to the gaol.

Bay. But do you hear, sir? have you married my daughter without asking my good will?

Vin. Fear not, Baptista; we will content you, go to: but I will; to be revenged for this villain.

Bay. And I, to sound the depth of this knavery.

Luc. Look not pale, Bianca; thy father will not frown.

Grc. My cake is dough; but I'll in among the rest.

Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast. [Exit. Kath. Husband, let's follow, to see the end of this

Pet. First kiss me, Kate, and we will. [ado.

Kath. What, in the midst of the street?

Pet. What, art thou ashamed of me?

Kath. No, sir, God forbid; but ashamed to kiss.

Pet. Why, then let's 'ome again. Come, sirrah, let's away.

Kath. Nay, I will give thee a kiss: now pray thee,

Pet. Is not this well? Come, my sweet Kate,

Better once than never, for never too late. [Exeunt.
ACT V.

THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

SCENE II.

Petr. Well, I say no: and therefore for assurance
Let's each one send unto his wife;
And he whose wife is most obedient
To come at first when he doth send for her,
Shall win the wager which we will propose.

Hor. Content. What is the wager?

Luc. Twenty crowns.

Petr. Twenty crowns! I'll venture so much of my hawk or hound,
But twenty times so much upon my wife.

Luc. A hundred then.

Hor. Content.

Petr. A match! 'tis done.

Luc. Who shall begin?

Go, Biondello, bid your mistress come to me.

Bion. I go.

[Exit Biondello.

Bap. Soi, I'll be your half, Bianca comes.

Luc. I'll have no halves; I'll bear it all myself.

Re-enter Biondello.

How now! what news?

Bion. Sir, my mistress sends you word
That she is busy and she cannot come.

Petr. How! she is busy and she cannot come!
Is this an answer?

Gre. Ay, and a kind one too:
Pray God, sir, your wife send you not a worse.

Petr. I hope, better.

Hor. Sirrah Biondello, go and entreat my wife
To come to me forthwith.

[Exit Bion.

She, o! o! entreat her!

Nav, then she must needs come.

Hor. I am afraid, sir,
Do what you can, yours will not be entreated.

Re-enter Biondello.

Now, where's my wife?

Bion. She says you have some goodly jest in hand:
She will not come; she bids you come to her.

Petr. Worse and worse; she will not come! O d'ye,
Intolerable, not to be endured!

Sirrah Grumio, go to your mistress;
Say, I command her to come.

[Exit Grumio.

Hor. I know her answer.

What?

Petr. She will not.

Hor. The fouler fortune mine, and there an end.

[Exit now, by my bold dame, here comes Katharina!

Re-enter Katharina.

Kath. What is your will, sir, that you send for me?

Petr. Where is your sister, and Hortensio's wife?

Kath. They sit conferring by the parlour fire.

Petr. Go, fetch them hither: if they dare to come,
Swinge me them soundly forth unto their husbands:
Away, I say, and bring them hither straight.

[Exit Katharina.

Luc. Here is a wonder, if you talk of a wonder.
Hor. And so it is; I wonder what it bodes.

Petr. Murry, peace it bodes, and love and quiet life,
And awful rule and right supremacy:
And, to be short, what not, that's sweet and happy?

Bap. Now, fair befall thee, good Petruchio!
The wager thou hast won; and I will add
Unto their losses twenty thousand crowns;
Another dowry to another daughter,
For she is changed, as she had never been.

Petr. Nay, I will win my wager better yet
And show in her sign of her obedience,
Her new-built virtue and obedience.

See where she comes and brings your froward wives
As prisoners to her womanly persuasion.

Re-enter Katharina, with Bianca and Widow.

Katharine, that cap of yours becomes you not:
Off with that bauble, throw it under-foot.

Wide, Lord, let me never have a cause to sigh,
Till I be brought to such a silly pass!

Luc. Fie! what a foolish duty call you this?

Luc. I would your duty were as foolish too:
The wisdom of your duty, fair Bianca,
Hath cost me a hundred crowns since supper-time.

Luc. The more fool you, for laying on my duty.

Petr. Katharine, I charge thee, tell these headstrong women
What duty they do owe their lords and husbands.

Wid. Come, come, you're mocking: we will have,
No telling.

Luc. Come on, I say; and first begin with her.

Wid. She shall not.

Petr. I say she shall: and first begin with her.

Kath. Fie, fie! unknight that threatening unkind brow.

And dart not scornful glances from those eyes,
To wound thy lord, thy king, thy governor:
It blots thy beauty as frosts do bite the meads,
Confounds thy fame as whirlwinds shake fair buds,
And in no sense is meet or amiable.

A woman moved is like a fountain troubled,
Muddy, ill-seeming, thick, bereft of beauty;
And while it is so, none so dry or thirsty
Will deign to sip or touch one drop of it.

Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,
Thy head, thy sovereign; one that cares for thee,
And for thy maintenance commits his body
To painful labour both by sea and land,
To watch the night in storms, the day in cold,
Whilst thouliest warm at home, secure and safe;
And craves no other tribute at thy hands
But love, fair looks and true obedience;
Too little payment for so great a debt,
Such duty as the subject owes the prince
Even such a woman oweth to her husband;
And when she is froward, peevish, sailen, sour,
And not obedient to his honest will,
What is she but a foul contending rebel
And graceless traitor to her loving lord?
I am ashamed that women are so simple
To offer war where they should kneel for peace,
Or seek for rule, supremacy and sway,
When they are bound so love and obey.

Why are our bodies soft and weak and smooth,
Unapt to toil and trouble in the world,
But that our soft conditions and our hearts
Should well agree with our external parts?

Come, come, you froward and unable worms!
My mind hath been as big as one of yours,
My heart as great, my reason haply more,
To handy word for word and frown for frown;

But now I see our fancies are but straw,
Our strength as weak, our weakness past compare,
That seeming to be most which we indeed least are.

Then vail your stomachs, for it is no bed,
And place your hands below your husband's foot:
In token of which duty, if he please,
My hand is ready: may it do him ease.

Petr. Why, there's a wench! Come on, and kiss me, Kate.

Luc. Well, go thy ways, old lad; for thou shalt not.

Petr. 'Tis a good hearing when children are to ward.

Luc. But a harsh hearing when woman are fro.

Petr. Come, Kate, we'll to bed.

We three are married, but you two are sped.

[To Luc.] 'Twas I won the wager, though you hit the white;
And, being a winner, God give you good night!

[Exit Petruchio and Katharina.

Luc. Now, go thy ways; thou hast tasted a curt shrew.

Luc. 'Tis a wonder, by your leave, she will be turned so.

[Exit.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Rousillon. The Count's palace.

Enter Bertram, the Countess of Rousillon, Helena, and Lafeu, all in black.

Count. In delivering my son from me, I bury a second husband.

Ber. And I in going; madam, weep o'er my father's death anew: but I must attend his majesty's command, to whom I am now in ward, evermore in subjection.

Laf. You shall find of the king a husband, madam; you, sir, a father: he tbat so generally is at all times good must of necessity hold his virtue to you; whose worthiness would stir it up where it wanted rather than lack it where there is such abundance.

Count. What hope is there of his majesty's amend?

Laf. He hath abandoned his physicians, madam; under whose practices he hath persevered time with hope, and finds no other advantage in the process but only the losing of hope by time.

Count. This young gentlewoman had a father.—O, that 'twas! how sad a passage 'Tis!—whose skill was almost as great as his honesty; had it stretched so far, would have made nature immortal, and death should have payl for lack of work. Would, for the king's sake, he were living! I think it would be the death of the king's disease. [madam?]

Laf. How called you the man you speak of?

Count. He was famous, sir, in his profession, and it was his great right to be so: Gerard de Narbon.

Laf. He was excellent indeed, madam; the king very lately spoke of him admiringly and mourningly: he was skilful enough to have lived still, if knowledge could be set up against mortality.

Ber. What is it, my good lord, the king languishes?

Laf. A distemper, my lord.

Ber. I heard not of it before.

Laf. I would it were not notorious. Was this gentlewoman the daughter of Gerard de Narbon?

Count. His sole child, my lord; and bequeathed to my overlooking. I have those hopes of her good that her education promises; her dispositions she inherits, which makes fair gifts fairer; for where an unclean mind carries virtuous qualities, there commendations go with pity; they are virtues and traitors too: in her they are the better for their simplicity; she derives her honesty and achieves her goodness.

Laf. Your commendations, madam, get from her tears.

Count. 'Tis the best brine a maiden can season her praise in. The remembrance of her father never approaches her heart but the tyranny of her sorrows takes all livelihood from her cheek. No more of this, Helena; go to, no more; lest it be rather thought you affect a sorrow than have it.

Hel. I do affect a sorrow indeed, but I have it too. Moderate lamentation is the right of the dead, excessive grief the enemy to the living.

Count. If the living be enemy to the grief, the excess makes it soon mortal.

Ber. Madam, I desire your holy wishes.

Laf. How understand we that? [father

Count. Be thou blest, Bertram, and succeed thyself in manners, as in shape! thy blood and virtue Contend for empire in thee, and thy goodness Share with thy birthright! Love all, trust a few, Do wrong to none: be able for thine enemy Rather in power than use, and keep thy friend Under thy own life's key; be churlish for silence, But never tax'd for speech. What heaven more will,

That thee may furnish and my prayers pluck down,
Fall on thy head! Farewell, my lord;
'Tis an unseason'd courtier; good my lord,
Advise him.

Laf. He cannot want the best
That shall attend his love.

Count. Heaven bless him! Farewell, Bertram.

[Exit."

Ber. [To Helena] The best wishes that can be forged in your thoughts be servants to you! Be comfortable to my mother, your mistress, and make much of her.

Laf. Farewell, pretty lady: you must hold the credit of your father. [Exit Bertram and Lafon.

Hel. O, were that all! I think not on my father; And these great tears grace his remembrance more Than those I shed for him. What was he like? I have forgot him: my imagination Carries no favour in't but Bertram's.
I am undone: there is no living, none,
If Bertram be away. 'T were all one
That I should love a bright particular star
And think to wed it, he is so above me:
In his bright radiance and collateral light
Must I be comforted, not in his sphere.
The ambition in my love thus plagues itself:
The hind that would be mated by the lion
Must die for love. 'Twas pretty, though a plague,
To see him every hour:
His arched brows, his hawking eye, his curle,
In our heart's table; heart too capable
Of every line and trick of his sweet favour:
But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancy
Must sanctify his reliques. Who comes here?

Enter Parolles.

[Aside] One that goes with him: I love him for his sake;
And yet I know him a notorious liar,
Think him a great way fool, solely a coward;
Yet these grow on him by our credit
That they take place, when virtue's steely bones
Look bleak in the cold wind: withal, full oft we see
Cold wisdom waiting on superfluous folly.

Par. Save you, fair queen!
Hel. And you, monarch!
Par. No.
Hel. And no.

Par. Are you meditating on virginity?

Hel. Ay. You have some stain of soldier in you;
Let me ask you a question. Man is enemy to virginity:
How may we barriorc it against him?

Par. Keep her with me.

Hel. But he assails; and our virginity, though valiant,
In the defence yet is weak: unfold to us
Some warlike resistance.

Par. There is none: man, sitting down before you,
Will undermine you and blow you up.

Par. Virginity being blown down, man will Quicklier be bloomed: marry, in blowing him down again,
With the breach yourselves made, you
Will lose your city. It is not politic in the commonwealth
Of nature to reserve virginity. Loss of virginity
Is rational increase and there was never virgin till virginity was first lost.

Par. That you were made of is metal to make virgins.
Virginity by being once lost may be ten times found; by being ever lost
Ever lost: 'tis too cold a companion
Away with it.

Hel. I will stand for 't a little, though therefore
I die a virgin.

Par. There's little can be said in 't: 'tis against
The rule of nature. To speak on the part of virginity Kicks to a fellow that has it; which is most Infallible disobedience. He that hangs himself is a virgin;
Virginity murders itself; and should be buried in Highways out of all sanctified limit, as a desperate offencess against nature. Virginity Breeds mites, much like a cheese; consumes
To the very paring, and so dies with feeding his own stomach.
Besides, virginity is pesky, proud, idle,
Made of self-love, which is the most inhabited sin in the Canon. Keep it not; you cannot choose but lose by 't; out with 't; within ten year it will make itself ten,
Which is a goodly increase; and the principal
Itself not much the worse; away with 't!

Hel. How might one do, sir, to lose it to her own liking?

Par. Let me see: marry, ill, to like him that ne'er it likes. 'Tis a commodity will lose the gloss
With lying; the longer kept, the less worth: off
With 't while 't's vendible; answer the time of requital.
Commodity, like an old curdier, bears
Her cap out of fashion: richly suited, but unsuitable:
Just like the brooch and the tooth-pick, which wear
Not now. Your date is better in your pie and your porridge
Than in your cheek; and your virginity,
Your old virginity, is like one of our French withered
Pears, it looks ill, it eats dryly; marry, 'tis a withered pear; it was formerly better; marry, yet

't is a withered pear; will you anything with it?

Hel. Not my virginity yet.

Par. There shall your master have a thousand loves.
A mother and a mistress, and a friend,
A phrenix, captain, and an enemy,
A guide, a goddess, and a sovereign,
A counsellor, a traitress, and a dear.
His humble ambition, proud humility,
His jarring concord, and his discord duteous,
His faith, his sweet disorder: with a word
Of pretty, fond, adoptious chasteileons.
That blinking Cupid glossys. Now shall he—
I know not what he shall. God send him well!
The court's a learning place, and he is one—
Par. What's mine faith?

Hel. That I wish well. 'Tis pity—

Par. What's pity?

Hel. That wishing well had not a body in 't,
Which might be felt: that we, the poorer born,
Whose lacer starers do shut us up in wishes,
Might with effects of them follow our friends,
And show what we alone must think, which never Returns us thanks.

Enter Page.

Page. Monsieur Parolles, my lord calls for you.

Par. Little Monsieur Parolles, if I can remember
Thee, I will think of thee at court.

Hel. Monsieur Parolles, you were born under a Charitable star.

Par. Under Mars.

Hel. I especially think, under Mars.

Par. Why under Mars?

Hel. The wars have so kept you under that you Must needs be born under Mars.

Par. When he was predominant.

Hel. When he was retrograde, I think, rather.

Par. Why think you so?

Hel. You go so much backward when you fight.

Par. That's for advantage.

Hel. So is running away, when fear proposes the safety:
But the composition that your valour and fear
Makes in you is a virtue of a good wing, and I
Like the wear well.

Par. I am full of businesses. I cannot Answer thee accurately. I will return perfect courtier; in the
Which my instruction shall serve to naturalize thee,
So thou wilt be capable of a courtier's counsel and Understand what advice shall thrust upon thee;
else thou diest in thine unthankfulness, and thine
Ignorance may cost thee a fine. When thou
Thou hast leisure, say thy prayers; when thou
Hast none, remember thy friends: get thee a good husband,
And use him as he uses thee; so, farewell.

Hel. Our remedies off in ourselves do lie,
Which we ascribe to heaven: the fated sky
Gives us free scope, only doth backward pull
Our show designs when we ourselves are dull.
What power is it which mounts my love so high,
That makes me see, and cannot feed mine eye?
The mightiest space in fortune nature brings
To join like likes and kiss like native things.
Impossible he strange attempts to those
That weigh their pains in sense and do suppose
What hath been cannot be: who ever strove
To show her merit, that did miss her love?
The king's disease—my project may deceive me,
But my intents are fix'd and will not leave me.

Exit.

SCENE II. — Pavia. The king's palace.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the King of France, with letters, and divers Attendants.

King. The Florentines and Senoes are by the ears;
Have fought with equal fortune and continue
A brave war.
ACT I.  ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.  SCENE III.

First Lord.  So't is reported, sir.
King.  Nay, 'tis most credible; we here receive it
A certainty, very near from our cousin Austria,
With caution that the Florentines may move us
For speedy aid; wherein our dearest friend
Prejudicates the business and would seem
To have us make denial.

First Lord.  His love and wisdom,
Approved so to your majesty, may plead
For ampest credential.

King.  He hath arm'd our answer,
And Florence is denied before he comes:
Yet, for our gentlemen that mean to see
The Tuscan service, freely have they leave
To stand on either part.

Sec. Lord.  It well may serve
A nurture to our gentry, who are sick
For breathing and exploit.

King.  What's he comes here?

Enter Bertram, Lafeu, and Parolles.

First Lord.  It is the Count Rousillon, my good Young Bertram.

[ldour.

King.  Youth, thou be'st thy father's face;
Frank nature, rather curious than in haste,
Hath well composed thee.  Thy father's moral parts
Mayst thou inherit too.  Welcome to Paris.

Ber.  My thank's and duty are your majesty's.

King.  I would I had that corporal soundness now,
As when thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiery!  He did look far Into the service of the time and was Disciplin'd of the bravest; he lasted long;
But on his dill haggis age steald on
And wore us out of act.  It much repairs me
To talk of your good father.  In his youth
He had the wit which I can well observe
To-day in our young lords; but they may jest
Till their own scorn return to them unnoted
 Ere they can hide their levity in honour;
So like a courtier, contempt nor bitterness
Were in his pride or sharpness; if they were,
His equal had awaked them, and his honour,
Clock to itself, knew the true minute when Exception bid him speak, and at this time
His tongue obey'd his hand: who were below him
He used as creatures of another world
And bow'd his eminent top to their low ranks,
Making them proud of his humility,
In their poor praise he humbled.  Such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times;
Which now'd so well, would demonstrate them now
But goes backward.

Ber.  His good remembrance, sir,
Lies richer in your thoughts than on his tomb;
So in approv'd lives not his epitaph
As in your royal speech.

King.  Would I were with him!  He would always Thinks I hear him now; his plattive words
He scatter'd not in ears, but grafted them,
To grow there and to bear.  —Let me not live,—
This his good melancholy oft began,
On the catastrophe and heel of pastime,
When it was out.  —Let me not live,—quoth he,
After my flame lacks oil, to be the stub
Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive senses
All but new things disdain; whose judgments are Mere fathers of their garments; whose constancies
Expire before their fashions.  This he wish'd;
I after him do after him wish too,
Since I nor wax nor honey can bring home,
I quickly were dissolved from my hive,
To give some labourers room.

Sec. Lord.  You are loved, sir;
Therefore that lend it you shall lack you first.

King.  I fill a place, I know 't.  How long is 't,
Since the physician at your father's died?
He was much famed.

Ber.  Some six months since, my lord.

King.  If he were living, I would try him yet.
Let me an arm; the rest have worn me out.

Ber.  With such requisitions; nature and sickness
Debate at their leisure.  Welcome, count;
My son's no dearer.

Thank your majesty.  [Exeunt.  Flourish.

SCENE III.—Rousillon.  The Count's palace.

Enter Countess, Steward, and Clown.

Count.  I will now hear; what say you of this gentiewoman?

Stew.  Madam, the care I have had to even your count, I wish might be found in the calendar of my past endeavours; for then we wounded our modesty and made foul the clearness of our deserving, when of ourselves we publish them.

Count.  What does this knife here?  Get you gone, sirrah: the complaints I have heard of you I do not all return: 'tis my slowness that I do not; for I know you lack not the ability to commit them, and have enough ability make such knowledge yours.

Clo.  'T is not unknown to you, madam, I am a poor

Count.  Well, sir.

Clo.  No, madam, 't is not so well that I am poor, though many of the rich are damned: but, if I may have your hospitality's good will to go to the world, Isbel the woman and I will do as we may.

Count.  Wilt thou needs be a beggar?

Clo.  I do beg your good will in this case.

Count.  In what case?

Clo.  In Isbel's case and mine own.  Service is no heritage; and I think I shall never have the blessing of God till I have issue o' my body; for they say barnes are blessings.

Count.  Tell me thy reason why thou witt marry.

Clo.  My poor body, madam, requires it: I am driven on by the flesh; and he must needs go that the devil drives.

Count.  Is this all your worship's reason?

Clo.  Faith, madam, I have other holy reasons, such as they.

Count.  May the world know them?

Clo.  I have been, madam, a wicked creature, as you and all flesh and blood are; and, indeed, I do marry that I may repent.

Count.  Thy marriage, sooner than thy wickedness.

Clo.  I am out o' friends, madam; and I hope to have friends for my wife's sake.

Count.  Such friends are thine enemies, knave.

Clo.  You're shallow, madam, in great friends; for the knaves come to do that for me which I am aware of.  He that ears my land spares my team and gives me leave to in the crop: if I be his cokold, he's my drudge: he that comforts my wife is the cherisher of my flesh and blood; he that cherishes my flesh and blood loves my flesh and blood; he that loves my flesh and blood is my friend: ergo, he that kisses my wife is my friend.  If men could be contented to be what they are, there were no fear in marriage; for young Charbon the purified and old Pousam the papist, howseome'er their hearts are severed in religion, their heads are both one; they may jowl horns together, like any deer I the herd.

Count.  Wilt thou ever be a foul-mouthed and calumniou's knave?

Clo.  A prophet I, madam; and I speak the truth the next way:

For I the ballad will repeat;
Which men full true shall find;
Your marriage comes by destiny;
Your cuckoo sings by kind
ACT I.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

SCENE III.

Count. Get you gone, sir; I'll talk with you more anon.

Stew. May it please you, madam, that he bid Helen come to you: of her I am to speak.

Sirrah, tell my gentlewoman I would speak with her: Helen, I am gone.

Clo. Was this fair face the cause, quoth she, Why the Grecians sacked Troy? Fond done, done fond

With this King Priam's joy? With that she sighed as she stood, When he had passed as signed as she stood,

And gave this sentence then; Among nine bad if one be good, Among nine bad if one be good,

There's yet one good in ten.

Count. What, one good in ten? you corrupt the song, sirrah.

Clo. One good woman in ten, madam; which is a purifying o' the song; would God would serve the world so all the year! we'd find no fault with the tithe-woman, if I were the parson. One in ten, quoth a? An we might have a good woman born but one every blazing star, or at an earthquake, that I could neither believe nor misdoubt: a man may drowm his heart out, ere a' pluck one.

Count. You'll be gone, sir knave, and do as I command you.

Clo. That man should be at woman's command, and yet no hurt done! Though honestly be no purit

But it will do no hurt; it will wear the surd of humility over the black gown of a big heart. I am going, forsooth: the business is for Helen to come hither.

[Exit.

Count. Well, well.

Stew. I know, madam, you love your gentlewoman entirely.

Count. Faith, I do: her father bequeathed her to me; and she herself, without other advantage, may lawfully make title to as much love as she finds: there is more owning her than is paid; and more shall be paid her than she'll demand.

Stew. Madam, I was very late more near her than

I think she wished me: alone she was, and did communicate to herself her own words to her own ears; she thought, I dare vow for her, they touched not any stranger sense. Her matter was, she loved your son; Fortune, she said, was no goddess, that he

And hellish obstinate tie thy tongue;

That truth should be suspected. Speak, is't so?

If it be so, you have wound a goodly clew;

If it be not, forswear 't; how'er, I charge thee, As heaven shall work in me for thine avail;

To tell me truly.

Hec. Good madam, pardon me!

Count. Do you love my son?

Hec. Your pardon, noble mistress!

Count. Love you my son?

Hec. Do not you love him, madam?

Count. Go not about; my love hath in't a bond.

Whereof the world takes note: come, come, discourse

The state of your affection; for your passions Have to the full appearance.

Hec. Then, I confess, Here on my knee, before high heaven and you, That before you, and next unto high heaven, I love your son.

My friends were poor, but honest; so's my love: Be not offended; for it hurts not him

That he is loved of me: I follow him not

By any token of presumptions suit,

Nor would I have him till I do deserve him;

Yet forever know how that done should be.

I know I love in vain, strive against hope;

Yet in these captious and intemible sieves

I still pour in the waters of my love.

And lack not to lose still: thus, Indian-like,

213
Religious in mine error, I adore
The sun, that looks upon his worshiper,
But knows of him no more. My dearest madam,
Let not your hate encounter with my love
For loving where you do: but if yourself,
Whose aged honour cites a virtuous youth,
Did ever in so true a frame of heart,
Wish chastely and love dearly, that your Dian
Was both herself and love: O, then, give pity
To her, whose state is such that cannot choose
But lend and give where she is sure to lose;
That seeks not to find that her search implies,
But plucks the life sweeter where she dies!
Count. Had you not lately an intent,—speak
To go to Paris? [truly.
Hel. Madam, I had.
Count. Wherefore? tell true.
Hel. I will tell truth; by grace itself I swear.
You know my father left me some prescriptions
Of rare and proved effects, such as his reading
And manifest experience had collected
For general sovereignty; and that he will'd me
In head full of reservation to bestow the
As notes whose faculties inclusive were
More than they were in note: amongst the rest,
There is a remedy, approved, set down,
To cure the desperate languishings whereof
The king is reader'd lost.
Count. For Paris, was it? speak.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Paris. The King's palace.

Flourish of cornets. Enter the King, attended with divers young Lords taking leave for the Florentine war; Bertram, and Parolles.

King. Farewell, young lords; these warlike principles [exult.
Do not throw from you: and you, my lords, fare
Shake the advice between you: if both gain all;
The gift doth stretch itself as 'tis received,
And is enough for both.
First Lord. 'Tis our hope, sir, after we enter'd soldiers, to return
And find your grace in health.
King. No, no, it cannot be: and yet my heart
Will bear the conscience of the making
That doth my life besiege. Farewell, young lords; Whether I live or die, be you the sons
Of worthy Frenchmen: let higher Italy,— Those lab'd that inherit but the fall
Of the last monarchy,— see that you come
Not in too honour, but to wed it: when
The bravest questant shrinks, find what you seek,
That fame may cry you loud: I say, farewell.
Sec. Lord. Health, at your bidding, serve your majesty!
King. Those girls of Italy, take heed of them:
They say, our French lack language to deny,
If they demand: beware of being captives,
Before you serve.
Both. Our hearts receive your warnings.
King. Farewell. Come hither to me.
First Lord. O my sweet lord, that you will stay behind us!
Par. 'Tis not his fault, the spark.
Sec. Lord. O, 'tis brave wars!
Par. Most admirable: I have seen those wars.
Ber. I am commanded here, and kept a coil with 'Too young' and 'the next year' and 'is too early,'
Act II. ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL. Scene I.

Laf. Then here's a man stands, that has brought this pardon.
I would you had kneel'd, my lord, to ask me mercy,
And that at my bidding you could so stand up.

King. I would I had; so I had broke thy pate.
And all this day to gall the sieve.

Laf. Good faith, across; but, my good lord, 'tis
Will you be cured of your infirmity?

King. No.

Laf. O, will you eat no grapes, my royal fox?
Yes, but you will my noble grapes, an if [medicines]
My royal fox could reach the pipe; I have seen a
That's able to breathe life into a stone,
Quicken a rock, and make you dance canary
With spritely fire and motion; whose simple touch
Is powerful to arise King Pepin, nay,
To give great Charlemain a pen in 's hand
And write to her a love-line.

King. What here? this is?

Laf. Why, Doctor She; my lord, there's one arrived,
If you will see her: now, by my faith and honour,
It seriously I may convey my thoughts
In this my light delivering, I have spoke
With that, in her sex, her years, profession,
Wisdom and constancy, hath amazed me more
Than I dare blame my weakness: will you see her,
For that is her demand, and know her business?
That done, laugh well at me.

King. Now, good Lafeu, bring in the admittance: that we with thee
May spend our wonder too, or take off thine
By wondering how thou took'st it.

Laf. Nay, I'll fit you,
And not be all day neither. [Exit.]

King. Thus he his special nothing ever prologues.

Re-enter Lafeu, with Helena.

Laf. Nay, come your ways.

King. This haste hath wings indeed.

Laf. Nay, come your ways;
This is his majesty: say your mind to him:
A traitor you do look like; but such traitors
His majesty seldom fears: I am Cressid's uncle,
That dare leave two together; fare you well. [Exit.

King. Now, fair one, does your business follow us?

Hel. Ay, my good lord.

Gerard de Narbon was my father;
In whom he did profess, well found.

King. I knew him.

Hel. The rather will I spare my praises towards Knowing him is nought. On 's bed of death
[him] Many receipts he gave me: chiefly one,
Which, as the dearest issue of his practice,
And of his old experience the only darling,
He lade me store up, as a triple eye,
Safer than mine own two, more dear; I have so;
And, hearing his high majesty is touch'd
With that malignant cause wherein the honour
Of my dear father's gift stands chief in power,
I come to tender it and my appliance
With all bound humbleness.

King. We thank you, maiden;
But may not be so credulous of cure,
When our most learned doctors leave us and
The congregated college have concluded
That labouring art can never ransom nature
From her insidie estate: I say we must not
So stain our judgment, or corrupt our hope,
To prostitute our past-cure malady
To empiricks, or to disserve so
Our great self and our credit, to esteem
A second fox, and on our credit the sense we deem.

Hel. My duty then shall pay me for my pains:
I will no more enforce mine office on you;
Humility entertaining from your royal thoughts
A modest one, to bear me back again.

King. I cannot give thee less, to be call'd grateful:
Thou thought'st to help me; and such thanks I give
As one near death to those that wish him live:
But what at full I know, thou know'st no part,
I knew thee an excellent perill, thou hast

Hel. What I can do no hurt to try,
Since you set up your rest 'gainst remedy.
I'he that of greatest works is finisher
Oft does them by the weakest minister:
So holy writ in babes hath judgment shown,
When judges have been babes; great floods have
From simple sources, and great seas have dried
When miracles have by the greatest been denied.
Oft expectation fails and most oft there
Where most it promises, and oft it hits
Where hope is coldest and despair most fits. [maid;
King. I must not hear thee: fare thee well, kind
Thy pains not used must not my self be paid;
Prophers not took reap thanks for their reward.

Hel. Inspired merit so by breath is bann'd;
It is not so with Him that all things knows
As 'tis with us that square our guess by shows;
But most it is presumption in us when
The help of heaven we could not get of men.
Dear sir, to my endeavours give consent;
Of heaven, not me. make an experiment.
I am not an impostor that proclaim
Myself against the level of mine aim;
But know I think and think I know most sure
My worth not power, nor you past cure.

King. Art thou so confident? within what space
Honest thou my cure?

Hel. The greatest grace lending grace,
Ere twice the horses of the sun shall bring
Their fiery torcher his diurnal ring,
Ere twice in mark and occidental damp
Moist Hesperus hath quenched his sleepy lamp,
Or four and twenty times the pilot's glass
Hath told the thievish minutes how they pass,
What is inhurn from your sound parts shall fly,
Health shall live free and sickness freely die.

King. Upon thy certainty and confidence
What darest thou venture?

Hel. Tax of impudence,
A strumpet's boldness, a divulged shame
Traduced by odious ballads: my maiden's name
Scarc'd otherwise: nay, worse—if worse—extended
With vilest lies, let my life be ended [speak
When King. Methinks in thee some blessed spirit doth
Its powerful sound within an organ weak:
And what impossibility would slay
In common sense, sense saves another way.
Thy life is dear; for all that life can rate
Worth name of life in thee hath estimate,
Youth, beauty, wisdom, these to thee, all,
That happiness and prime can happy call:
Thou this to hazard needs must intimate
Skill infinite or monstrous desperate,
Sweet practiser, thy physic I will try,
That ministers thine own death to thee.

Hel. If it be in my power, or in my reach

King. Make thy demand.

Hel. But will you make it even?

King. Ay, by my sceptre and my hopes of heaven.

Hel. Then shalt thou give me with thy kindly hand
What husband in thy power I will command;
Exempted be from me the arrogance
To choose from forth the royal blood of France,
My low and humble name to propagate
With my branch or lineage thy state;
But such a one, thy vassal, whom I know
Is free for me to ask thee, to bestow,

King. Here is my hand; the premises observed,
Thy will by my performance shall be served;
If, but Peruse, I is you, you sake. All's there. As high as word, my deed shall match thy meed. [Flourish. Exeunt."

SCENE II. — Rousillon. The Count's palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. Come on, sir; I shall now put you to the height of your breeding.

Clo. I will show myself highly fed and lovingly taught; but knowing no business is but to the court.

Count. To the court! why, what place make you special, when you put off that with such contempt? But to the court!

Clo. Truly, madam, if God have lent a man any manners, he may easily put it off at court; he that cannot make his leg, but only of his cap, kiss his hand and say nothing, has neither leg, hands, lip, nor cap; and indeed such a fellow, to say precisely, were not for the court; but for me, I have an answer will serve all men.

[All questions.

Count. Marry, that's a beautiful answer that fits well into a bachelor's chair that fits all buttocks, the pin-buttock, the quack-buttock, the brawn buttock, or any buttock.

Count. Will your answer serve fit to all questions?

Clo. As fit as ten greats is for the hand of an attorney, as your French crown for your taifete pank, as Clo. I wish for Tom's frying-ni, as a pancake for Shrove Tuesday, a morsel for Shave-day, as the nail to his hole, the euckold to his horn, as a scolding quean to a wrangling knife, as the nun's lip to the friar's mouth, as, the pudding to his skin.

Count. Have you, I say, an answer of such fitness for all questions?

Clo. From below your duke to beneath your constable, it will fit any question.

Count. It must be an answer of most monstrous size that must fit all demands.

Clo. But a trifle neither, in good faith, if the learned should speak truth of it: here it is, and all that behoves to think on I am a courtier: it shall do no you harm to learn.

Count. To be young again, if we could: I will be a fool in question, hoping to be the wiser by your answer. I pray you, sir, are you a courtier?

Clo. O Lord, sir! There's a simple putting off.

More, more, a hundred of them.

You.

Clo. Sir, I am a poor friend of yours, that loves.

Clo. O Lord, sir! Thicke, thick, spare not me.

Clo. I think, sir, you can eat none of this homely meat.

You.

Clo. O Lord, sir! Nay, put me to 't, I warrant.

Clo. You were lately whipped, sir, as I think.

Clo. O Lord, sir! spare not me.

Count. Do you cry, 'O Lord, sir!' at your whipping, and 'spare not me'? Indeed your 'O Lord, sir!' is very sequent to your whipping: you would answer very well to a whipping, if you were but bound to.

Clo. I ne'er had worse luck in my life in my 'O Lord, sir!' I see things may serve long, but not serve ever.

Count. I play the noble housewife with the time,

To entertain 't so merrily with a fool.

Count. An end, sir; to your business. Give Ellen And urge her to a present answer back: [this, Compend me to my kinsmen and my son: This is not much.

Clo. Not much commendation to them.

SCENE III. — Paris. The King's palace.

Enter Bertram, Lafau, and Parolles.

Laf. They say miracles are past; and we have our philosophical persons, to make modern and familiar, the old supernatural and causeless. Here is it that we make trifles of dangers, ensconcing ourselves into seeming knowledge, when we should submit ourselves to an unknown fear.

Por. Why, 'tis the rarest argument of wonder that hath shot out in our latter times.

Ber. And so 'tis.

Laf. To be relinquished of the artists,—

Por. So I say.

Laf. Both of Galen and Paracelsus.

Por. So I say.

Laf. Of all the learned and authentic fellows,—

Por. Not to be helped,—

Por. Right: as 'twere, a man assured of a—

Laf. Uncertain life, and sure death.

Por. Just, you say well; so would I have said, and I may truly say, it is a novelty to the world.

Por. It is, indeed: if you will have it in showing, you shall read it in — what do ye call there?

Laf. A showing of a heavenly effect in an earthly actor.

Por. That's it: I would have said the very same.

Laf. Why, your dolphin is not lustier: 'fore me, I speak in respect —

Por. Nay, 'tis strange, 'tis very strange, that is the brief and the tedious of it; and he's of a most facetious spirit that will not acknowledge it to be Laf. Very band of heaven.

[The —

Por. Ay, so I say.

Laf. In a most weak—[pausing] and debile minister, great power, great transcendence: which should, indeed, give us a further use to be made than alone the recovery of the king, as to be —

[pausing] generally thankful.

Por. Authorities have said it; you say well. Here comes the king.

Enter King, Helena, and Attendants.

Lafau and Parolles retire.

Laf. Lustig, as the Dutchman says: I'll like a maid the better, whilst I have a tooth in my head: why, he's able to lead her a coranto.

Por. Mort du vinaigre! is not this Helen?

Laf. 'Fore God, I think so.

King. Go, call before me all the lords in court.

Sit, my preserver, by thy patient's side:

And with this helpful hand, whose misch'd sense

Thou hast repeal'd, a second time receive

The confirmation of my promised gift,

Which but attends thy naming.

Enter three or four Lords.

Fair maid, send forth thine eyes: this youthful

Of noble bachelors stand at my bestowing, [parcel O'er whom both sovereign power and father's voice I have to use: thy frank election make;[ sake. Thou hast power to choose, and they none to for.]

Mer. To each of you one fair and virtuous mistress Fall, when Love please! marry, to each, but one!

Laf. I'll give bay Curtal and his furniture,

My month no more were broken than these boys',

And writ as little heard.

King. Peruse them well:

Not one of those but had a noble father.
ACT II.

ALL’S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Scene III.

Hel. Gentlemen.

 Heaven hath through me restored the king to health.

All. We understand it, and thank heaven for you.

Hel. I am a simple maid, and therein wealthiest.

That I profess I simply am a maid.

Pleas’d, Than our fortune, I have done already;

The blushes in my cheeks thus whisper me. [fused,

‘We blush that thou shouldst choose; but, be re-

Let the white death sit on thy cheek for ever;

We’ll never come there again.’

King.

Make choice; and, see,

Who shuns thy love shuns all his love in me.

Hel. Now, Dian, from thy altar do I fly,

And to imperial Love, that god most high,

Do my sigis stream. Sir, will you hear my suit?

First Lord. And grant it.

Hel.

Thanks, sir; all the rest is mute.

Laf. I had rather be in this choice than throw ames-see for my life.

Hel. The honour, sir, that flames in your faireyes,

Before I speak, too threateningly replies:

Love make your fortunes twenty times above

That so wishes and her humble love!

Sec. Lord. No better, if you please.

Hel. My wish receive,

Which great Love grant! and so, I take my leave.

Laf. Do all they deny her? An they were sons of mine, I’d have them whipped; or I would send them to the Turk, to make munchees.

Hel. Be not afraid that your hand should take;

I’ll never do wrong for your own sake:

Blessing upon your vows! and in your bed

Find fairer fortune, if you ever wed!

Laf. These boys are boys of ice, they’ll none have.

her; sure, they are bastards to the English; the French ne’er got’em.

Hel. You are too young, too happy, and too good,

To make yourself a son out of my blood.

Fourth Lord. Fair one, I think not so.

Laf. There’s one grape yet; I am sure thy father drank wine: but if thou be’st not an ass, I am a youth of fourteen; I have known thee already.

Hel. [To Bertram] I dare not say I take you; but

Me and my service, ever whilst I live,

I give into your guiding power. This is the man.

King. Why, then, young Bertram, take her; she’s thy wife.

[highness,

Ber. Yes, my good lord;

But never hope to know why I should marry her.

King. Thou know’st she has raised me from my sickly bed.

Ber. But follows it, my lord, to bring me down

Must answer for your raising? I know her well;

She had her breeding at my father’s charge.

A poor daughter my wife! Disdain

Rather corrupt me ever!

[which

King. T’is only title thou disdain’st in her, the

I can build up. Strange it is that our bloods,

Of colour, weight, and heat, pour’d all together,

Would quite confound distinction, yet stand off

In differences so mighty. If she be

All that is virtuous, save what thou dislikest.

A poor physician’s daughter, than disliked

Of virtue for the name: but do not so:

From lowest place when virtuous things proceed,

The place is dignified by the doer’s deed;

When thou art well’s, and virtue none,

It is a dropped honour. Good alone

Is good without a name. Vileness is so:

The property by what it is should go,

Not by the title. She is young, wise, fair;

In these to nature she’s immediate heir,

And these breed honour: that is honour’s scorn,

Which challenges itself as honour’s born

And is not like the sire: honours thrive,

When rather from our acts we then derive

That our breed is that we have disgrac’d.

Debosh’d on every tomb, on every grave

A lying trophy, and as oft is dumb

Where dust and damned oblivion is the tomb

Of honour’d bones indeed. What should be said?

If thou couldst like this creature as a maid,

I can create the rest: virtue and she

Is her own dower; honour and wealth for me.

Ber. I cannot love her, nor will strive to do’t.

King. Thou wrong’st thyself, if thou shouldst strive to choose.

Hel. That you are well restored, my lord, I’m glad:

Let the rest go.

King. My honour’s at the stake; which to defeat,

I must produce my power. Here, take her hand,

Proud scornful boy, unworthy this good gift;

That dost in vile misprision shake up

My love and her desert; that cannot be dream’d.

We poising in her defective scale,

Shall weigh thee to the beam; that wilt not know;

It is in us to plant thine honour where

We please to have it grow. Check thy contempt:

Obey our will, which travels in thy good:

Believe not thy disdain, but presently

Do thine own fortunes that else might:

Which both thy duty owes and our power claims;

Or I will throw thee from my care for ever

Into the staggers and the careless hapse

Of youth and ignorance; both my revenge and hate

Loosing upon thee, in the name of justice,

Without all terms of pity. Speak thou answer.

Ber. Tardly, my gracious lord; for I submit

My fancy to your eyes: when I consider

What great creation and what dole of honour

Flies where you bid it, I find that she, which late

Was in my noilder thoughts most base, is now

The praised of the king; who, so ennobled,

Is as ’t were born so.

King. Take her by the hand,

And tell her she is thine: to whom I promise

A counterpoise, if not to thy estate

A balance more replete.

Par. I take her hand.

King. Good fortune and the favour of the king

Smile upon this contract; whose ceremony

 Shall seem expedient on the now-born brief,

And be perform’d to-night: the solemn feast

Shall more attend upon the coming space.

Expecting absent friends. As thou lov’est her,

Thy love ’s to me religious: else, do err.

[Exeunt all but Lafaw and Paroles.

Laf. [Advancing] Do you hear, monsieur? a word

Par. Your pleasure, sir? [with you.

Laf. Your lord and master did well to make his recantation.

Par. Recantation! My lord! my master!

Laf. Ay; is it not a language I speak?

Par. A most harsh one, and not to be understood without bloody succeeding. My master!

Laf. Are you companion to the Count Ronsillon?

Par. To any count, to all counts, to what is man.

Laf. To what is count’s man; count’s master is of another style.

[too old

Par. You are too old, sir; let it satisfy you, you are

Laf. I must tell thee, sirrah; I write man; to which title age cannot bring thee.

Par. What I dare too well do, I dare not do.

Laf. I did not think thee, for I thought thee to be a pretty wise fellow; thou dost make tolerable vent of thy travel; it might pass; yet the scarts and tamerets about thee did manifoldly dissuade me from believing thee a vessel of too great a burthen.

217
I have now found thee; when I lose thee again, I care not; yet art thou good for nothing but taking up; and that thou 'rt scarce worth. [thee.—

Par. Hadst thou not the privilege of antiquity upon

Laf. Do not plunge thyself too far in anger, lest thou repent it: when I say lord have her heart on thee for a hen! So, my good window of lattice, fare thee well: thy casement I need not open, for I look through thee. Give me thy hand. [exit.

Par. My lord, you give me most egregious indul-

Laf. Ay, with all my heart; and thou art worthy Par. I have not, my lord, deserved it. [let it.

Laf. Yes, good faith, every dram of it; and I will not bate thee a scruple.

Par. Well, I shall be wiser.

Laf. Even as soon as thou canst, for thou hast to pull at a snare o' the contrary. If ever thou be'st bound in thy scarlet and beaten, thou shalt find what it is to be proud of thy bondage. I have a desire to hold my acquaintance with thee, or rather my know-edge, that I may say in the default, he is a man I know. [ vexation.

Par. My lord, you do me most insupportable

Laf. I would it were hell-pains for thy sake, and my poor doing eternal: for doing I am past as I will by thee, in what motion age will give me leave. [Exit.

Par. Well, thou hast a son shall take this disgrace off me: scurvy, old, filthy, scurvy lord! Well, I must be patient: there is no fending of authority. I'll beat him, by my life, if I can meet him with any convenience, an be were double and a double lord. I'll have no more pity of his age than I would have of— I'll beat him, as if I could but meet him again.

Re-enter Lafeu.

Laf. Sirrah, your lord and master's married; there's news for you: you have a new mistress.

Par. I most unfeignedly beseech your lordship to make some reservation of your wrongs: he is my good lord; whom I serve above is my master.

Laf. Who? God?

Par. Ay, sir.

Laf. The devil it is that's thy master. Why dost thou garner up thy arms o' this fashion? dost make hose of thy sleeves? do other servants so? Thou wast best set thy lower part where thy nose stands. By mine honour, if I were but two hours younger, I'd beat thee: methinks, thou art a general offender, and every man should beat thee: I think thou wast created for men to breathe themselves upon thee.

Par. This is hard and undeserved measure, my lord.

Laf. Go to, sir: you were beaten in Italy for picking a kernel out of a pomegranate; you are a vagabond and no true traveller; you are more saucy with lords and honourable personages than the commission of your birth and virtue gives you heraldry. You are not worth another word else, I'd call you knave. I leave you. [Exit.

Par. Good, very good; it is so then: good, very good; let it be concealed awhile.

Re-enter Bertram.

Ber. Undone, and forfeited to cares for ever!

Par. What's the matter, sweet-heart? [sworn.

Ber. Although before the solemn priest I have I will not bed her.

Par. What, what, sweet-heart?

Ber. 0 my Paroles, they have married me!

I'll to the Tuscan wars, and never bed her.

Par. France is a dog-hole, and it no more merits The blow that's in foot: to the wars!

Ber. There's letters from my mother: what the import is, I know not yet.

Par. Ay, that would be known. To the wars, my boy, to the wars!

He wears his honour in a box unseen,
That hags his kicky-wicky here at home,
Spendeth his manly narrow in her arms,
Whose should sustain the bound and high curvet
Of Mars's fiery steed. To other regions
France is a stale: where that dwell in 't jades;
Therefore, to the war!

Ber. It shall be so: I'll send her to my house,
Acquaint my mother with my hate to her,
And wherefore I am fled; write to the king
That which I durst not speak: his present gift
Shall furnish me to those Italian fields,
Where noble fellows strike: war is no strife
To the dark house and the detested wife.

Par. Will this capriccio hold in thee? art sure?

Ber. Go with me to my chamber, and advise me. I'll send her straight away; to-morrow
I'll to the wars, she to her single sorrow.

Par. Why, these balls bound; there's noise in it.
'Tis hard:
A young man married is a man that's marr'd:
Therefore away, and leave her bravely: go;
The king has done you wrong: but, hush, 'tis so.

[Exeunt.

SCENE IV. — Paris. The king's palace.

Enter Helena and Clown.

Hel. My mother greets me kindly: is she well?

Cl. She is not well; but yet she has her health: she's very merry; but yet she is not well: but thanks be given, she's very well and wants nothing i' the world; but yet she is not well.

Hel. If she be very well, what does she all, that she's not very well?

Cl. Truly, she's very well indeed, but for two things.

Hel. What two things?

Cl. One, that she's not in heaven, whither God send her quickly; the other, that she's in earth, from whence God send her quickly!

Enter Paroles.

Par. Bless you, my fortunate lady!

Hel. I hope, sir, I have your good will to have mine own good fortunes.

Par. You had my prayers to lead them on; and to keep them on, have them still. O, my knave, how does my master smile?

Cl. So that you had her wrinkles and I her money, I would she did as you say.

Par. Why, I say nothing.

Cl. Marry, you are the wiser man; for many a man's tongue shakes out his master's undoing; to say nothing, to do nothing, to know nothing, and to have nothing, is to be a great part of your title; which is within a very little of nothing.

Par. Away! thou 'rt a knave.

Cl. You should have said, sir, before a knave don't a knave; that's, before me thou 'rt a knave: this had been truth, sir, and [thee.

Par. Go to, thou art a witty fool; I have found

Cl. Did you find me in yourself, sir? or were you taught to find me? The search, sir, was profitable; and much fool may you find in you, even to the world's pleasure and the increase of laughter.

Par. A good knave, 0, faith, and well fed. Madam, my lord will go away to-night;
A very serious business calls on him.

ACT III.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

SENE 1.

Par. That you will take your instant leave o’ the king.
And make this haste as your own good proceeding,
Strenthens’d with what apology you think
May make it probable need.
Hel. What more commands he?
Par. That, having this obtain’d, you presently
Attend his further pleasure.
Hel. In every thing I wait upon his will.
Par. I shall report it so.
Hel. I pray you. [Exit Parolles.]
Come, sirrah. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Paris. The king’s palace.

Enter Lafeu and Bertram.

Laf. But I hope your lordship thinks not him a soldier.
Ber. Yes, my lord, and of very valiant approbation.
Laf. You have it from his own deliverance.
Ber. And by other warranted testimony.
Laf. Then my dial does not true: I took this lurk
For a hunting.
Ber. I do assure you, my lord, he is very great in knowledge
And accordingly valiant.
Laf. I have then sinned against his experience
And transgressed against his valour; and my state
That way is dangerous, since I cannot yet find in my heart
To repent. Here he comes; I pray you, make us friends; I will pursue the amity.

Enter Parolles.

Par. [To Bertram] These things shall be done, sir.
Laf. Pray you, sir, who’s his tailor?
Par. Sir?
Laf. O, I know him well, I, sir; he, sir, ‘s a good workman, a very good tailor.
Ber. [Aside to Par.] Is she gone to the king?
Laf. She is.
Ber. Will she away to-night?
Par. As you ‘ll have her.
Ber. I have with my letters, casked my treasure,
Given order for our horses; and to-night,
When I should take possession of the bride,
End ere I do begin.

Laf. A good traveller is something at the latter end of a dinner; but one that lies three and three Uses a known truth to pass a thousand nothing,
With, should be once heard and thrice believed.
God save you, captain.
Ber. Is there any unkindness between my lord and you, monsieur?
Par. I know not how I have deserved to run into My lord’s displeasure.
Laf. You have made shift to run into ’t, boots and spurs and all, like him that leaped into the custard;
And out of you it you’ll run again, rather than Suffer question for your residence.
Ber. It may be you have mistaken him, my lord.
Laf. And shall do so ever, though I took him at ’s prayers. Fare you well, my lord; and believe this of me, there can be no kernel in this light nut;
the soul of this man is his clothes. Trust him not In matter of heavy consequence; I have kept of them time, and know their natures. Farewell, monsieur; I have spoken better of you than you have or will to deserve at my hand; but we must do good against evil.

Par. An idle lord, I swear.
Ber. I think so.
Par. Why, do you not know him?
Ber. Yes, I do know him well, and common speech
Gives him a worthy pass. Here comes my cog.

Enter Helena.

Hel. I have, sir, as I was commanded from you,
Spoke with the king and have procured his leave
For present parting; only he desires
Some private speech with you.
Ber. I shall obey his will.
You must not marvel, Helen, at my course,
Which holds not colour with the time, nor does
The ministration and required office
On my particular. Prepared I was not
For such a business: therefore am I found
So much unsettled: this drives me to entreat you
That presently you take your way for home;
And rather must than ask why I entreat you,
For my respects are better than they seem
And my appointments have in them a need
Greater than shows itself at the first view
To you that know them not. This to my mother:
[Going a bitter.
’T will be two days ere I shall see you, so
I leave you to your wisdom.
Hel. Sir, I can nothing say,
But that I am your most obedient servant.
Par. Come, come, no more of that.
Hel. And ever shall
With true observance seek to eke out that Wherein toward me my lonely stars have faile’d
To equal my great fortune.
Ber. Let that go:
My haste is very great: farewell; be home.
Hel. Pray, sir, your pardon.
Ber. Well, what would you say?
Hel. I am not worthy of the wealth I owe,
Nor dare I say ’tis mine, and yet it is;
But, like a timorous thief, most fain would steal
What law does vouch mine own.
Ber. What would you have?
Hel. Something; and scarce so much: nothing, indeed.
I would not tell you what I would, my lord;
Faith, yes;
Strangers and foes do sunder, and not kiss.
Ber. I pray you, stay not, but in haste to horse.
Hel. I shall not break your bidding, good my lord.
Ber. Where are my other men, monsieur? Farewell.
[Exit Helena.

Go thou toward home; where I will never come
Whilst I can shake my sword or hear the drum.
Away, and for our flight.
Par. Bravely, coraggio! [Exeunt.

ACT III.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, attended;
the two Frenchmen, with a troop of soldiers.

Duke. So that from point to point now have you
The fundamental reasons of this war.
[Music. Whose great decision hath much blood let forth
And more thirsts after.
ACT III.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

Scene II.

But like a common and an outward man,
That the great figure of a council frames
By self-unable notion: therefore dare not Say what I think of it, since I have found Myself in my heart gone grounds to fail
As often as I guess'd.

Duke. Be it his pleasure.

First Lord. But I am sure the younger of our na-

Come here for physic.

Duke. Welcome shall they be:
And all the honours that can fly from us
Shall on them settle. You know your places well;
When better fall, for your avails they fell:
To-morrow to the field. [Flourish. Exit Count.

SCENE II.—Rousillon. The Count’s palace.

Enter Countess and Clown.

Count. It hath happened all as I would have had it, save that he comes not along with her.

Clo. By my troth, I take my young lord to be a very melancholy man.

Count. By what observance, I pray you?

Clo. Why, he will look upon his book and sing;
Mend the ruff and sing; ask questions and sing;
Pick his teeth and sing. I know a man that had this trick of melancholy sold his goodly manor for a
song.

Count. Let me see what he writes, and when he meets to come. [Opening a letter.

Clo. I have no mind to Isbel since I was at court:
our old king and our Isbel of the country are nothing like your old king and your Isbel of the court:
the brains of my Cupid’s knocked out, and I begin to hate, as an old man loves money, with no stam.

Count. What have we here? [Reads.

Clo. E’en that you have there. [Exit. Count. [Reads] I have sent you a daughter-in-law:
she hath recovered the king, and undone me. I have wedded her, not bedded her; and sworn to make the not eternal. You shall hear I am run away: know it before the report come. If there be breath enough in the world, I will hold a long distance. My duty to you.

Your unfortunate son.

BERTRAM.

This is not well, rash and unbridled boy,
To fly the favours of so good a king;
To pull his indignation on thy head
By the misprizing of a maid too virtuous
For the contempt of empire.

Re-enter Clown.

Clo. O madam, yonder is heavy news within between two soldiers and my young lady!

Count. What is the matter?

Clo. Nay, there is some comfort in the news, some comfort; your son will not be killed so soon as he thought he was: the danger is in standing to ‘twas the loss of men, though it be the getting of children.
Here they come will tell you more: for my part, I only hear your son was run away.

[Exit. Count.

Enter Helena and two Gentlemen.

First Gent. Save you, good madam.

Hel. Madam, my lord is gone, for ever gone.

Sec. Gent. Do not say so, madam. [men,

Enter Helena with patience. Pray you, gentle,
I have felt so many quarks of joy and grief,
That the first face of neither, on the start, [you
Can woman me unto ‘t; where is my son, I pray Sec. Gent. Madam, he’s gone to serve the duke of Florence:

We met him thitherward; for thence we came,
And, after some dispatch in hand at court,
Thither we bend again. [port.

Hel. Look on his letter, madam: here’s my pass.

Count. Brought you this letter, gentlemen?

First Gent. Ay, madam; and for the contents sake are sorry for our pains.

Count. I prithee, lady, have a better cheer;
Thou engrossest all the griefs are thine,
Thou robbst me of a moiety: he was my son;
But I do wash his name out of my blood.

And this is all my child. Towards Florence is he?

Sec. Gent. Ay, madam.

Count. And to be a soldier?

Sec. Gent. Such is his noble purpose; and, believe’d,
The duke will lay upon him all the honour
That good convenience claims.

Count. Return you thither?

First Gent. Ay, madam, with the swiftest wing of speed.

[In France. Hel. [Reads] Till I have no wife, I have nothing
’Tis bitter.

Count. Find you that there?

First Gent. Ay, madam.

First Gent. ’Tis but the boldness of his hand,
Haply, which his heart was not consenting to.

Count. Nothing in France, until he have no wife!
There’s nothing here that is too good for him
But only she; and she deserves a lord
That twenty such rude boys might be upon
And call her houly mistress. Who was with him?

First Gent. A servant only, and a gentleman
Which I have sometime known.

Count. Paroles, was it not?

First Gent. Ay, my good lady, he. [ness.

Count. A very tainted fellow, and full of wicked-
My son corrupts a well-derived nature
With his inducement.

First Gent. Indeed, good lady,
The fellow has a deal of that too much,
Which holds him much to have.

Count. You’re welcome, gentlemen.

I will entreat you, when you see my son,
To tell him that his sword can never win
The honour that he loses: more I’ll entreat you
Written to bear along.

Sec. Gent. We serve you, madam, in
That and all your wealthiest affairs.

Count. Not so, but as we change our courtesies,
Will you draw near?

[Exit Countess and Gentlemen.

Hel. ‘Till I have no wife, I have nothing in France,’
Nothing in France, until he has no wife!

Thou shalt have none, Rousillon, none in France;
Then hang all the world; and let my lord!
That chase thee from thy country and expose
Those tender limbs of thine to the event
Of the none-sparing war? and is it I
That drive thee from the sportive court, where thou
Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
Of smoky muskets? O you leaden messengers,
That ride upon the violent speed of fire,
Fly with false aim; move the still-peering air,
That sings with piercing; do not touch my lord.
Whoever shoots at him, I set him there;
Whoever charges on his forward breast,
Come thou the blit that do hold him to ‘t;
And, though I kill him not, I am the cause his death was so effect;
Better ‘twere
I met the ravin lion when he roar’d
With sharp constraint of hunger; better ‘twere
That all the miseries which nature owes

Whence honour but of danger wins a scar, [ion, As oft it loses all: I will be gone; My being here it is that holds thee hence; Shall I stay here to do't? no, no, although The gates of heaven: and angels offered: I will be gone. That pitiful rumour may report my flight. To consolate thine ear. Come, night; end, day! For with the dark, poor thief, I'll steal away.

Flourish. Enter the Duke of Florence, Bertram, Paroles, Soldiers, Drum and Trumpets.

Duke. The general of our horse thou art; and we, Great in our hope, lay our best love and credence Upon thy promising fortune.

Ber. Sir, it is a charge too heavy for my strength, but yet We'll strive to bear it for your worthy sake To the extreme edge of hazard.

Duke. Then go thou forth; And fortune play upon thy prosperous helm, As thy auspicious mistress.

Ber. This very day, Great Mars, I put myself into thy file: Make me but like my thoughts, and I shall prove A lover of thy drum, hater of love.

SCENE IV.—Rousillon. The Count's palace.

Enter Countess and Steward.

Count. Alas! and would you take the letter of her? Might you not know she would do as she has done, By sending me a letter? Read it again.

Stew. [Reads] I am Saint Jaques' pilgrim, thither gone; Ambitious love hath so in me offended, That rarefoot plod I the cold ground upon. With painted vow my faults to have amended. Write, write, that from the bloody course of war My dearest master, your dear son, may he; Bless him at home in peace, whilst I from far His name with zealous fervour sanctify: His labour's burdens bid him forgive; I, his despitful Juna, sent him forth From courtly friends, with camping fees to live, Where death and danger do thee worth of: He is too good and fair for death and me; Whom I myself embrace, to set him free.

Count. Ah, what sharp stings are in her mildest words! Rinaldo, you did never lack advice so much, As letting her pass so: had I spoke with her, I could have well diverted her intents, Which thus she hath prevented.

Stew. Pardon me, madam: If I had given you this at over-night, She might have been o'erta'en; and yet she writes, Pursuit would be but vain.

Count. What angel shall Bless this unworthy husband? he cannot thrive, Unless her prayers, whom heaven delights to hear And loves to grant, reprieve him from the wrath Of greatest justice. Write, write, Rinaldo, To this unmerry husband of his wife; Let every word weigh heavy of her worth That he does weigh too light: my greatest grief, Though little he doe feel it, set down sharply.

Dispatch the most convenient messenger: When haply he shall hear that she is gone, He will return; and hope I may that she Haring so much, will speed her foot again, Led hither by pure love: which of them both Is dearest to me, I have no skill in sense To make distinction: provide this messenger: My heart is heavy and mine age is weak: Grief would have tears, and sorrow bids me speak.

SCENE V.—Florence. Without the walls. A tucket after off.

Enter an old Widow of Florence, Diana,Virola, and Mariana, with other Citizens.

Wid. Nay, come; for if they do approach the city, we shall lose all the sight.

Paro. They say to the French count has done most honourable service.

Wid. It is reported that he has taken their greatest commander; and that with his own hand he slew the duke's brother. [Tucket] We have lost our labour; they are gone a contrary way: hark! you may know by their trumpets.

Mar. Come, let's return again, and suffice ourselves with the report of it. Well, Diana, take heed of this French earl; the honour of a maid is her name; and no legacy is so rich as honesty.

Wid. I have told my neighbour how you have been solicited by a gentleman his companion.

Mar. I know that knave: hang him! one Paroles: a filthy officer he is in those suggestions for the young Earl. Beware of them, Diana; their promises, enticements, oaths, tokens, and all these engines of lust, are not the things they go under: many a maid hath been seduced by them: and the misery is, example, that so terrible shows in the wreck of maidenhood, cannot for all that dismade succession, but that they are timed with the twigs that threaten them. I hope I need not to advise you further; but I hope your own grace will keep you where you are: though there were no further danger known but the modesty which is so lost.

Din. You shall not need to hear me.

Wid. I hope so.

Enter Helena, disguised like a Pilgrim.

Look, here comes a pilgrim: I know she will lie at my house: thither they send one another: I'll question her. God save you, pilgrim! whither are you bound?

Hel. To Saint Jaques le Grand.

Where do the palmer's lodge, I do beseech you?

Wid. At the Saint Francis here beside the port.

Hel. Is this the way?

Wid. Ay, marry, is 't. [A march after.] Hark you! they come this way.

If you will tarry, holy pilgrim, But till the troops come by, I will conduct you where you shall be lodged; The rather, for I think I know your hostess As ample as myself.

Hel. Is it yourself?

Wid. If you shall please so, pilgrim.

Hel. I thank you, and will stay upon your leisure.

Wid. You came, I think, from France?

Hel. I did so.

Wid. Here you shall see a countryman of yours That has done worthy service.

Hel. His name, I pray you.

Din. The Count Rousillon: know you such a one?

Hel. But by the ear, that bears most nobly of him: His face I know not.

Din. Whatsoever he is, He's bravely taken here. He stole from France, As 't is reported, for the king had married him Against his liking: think you it is so?

Hel. Ay, surely, mere the truth: I know his lady.

Din. There is a gentleman that serves the count Reports but coarsely of her.

Hel. What's his name?

Din. Monsieur Paroles.
ALL’S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.  SCENE VI.

Hd.  O, I believe with him,  In argument of praise, or to the worth  Of the great count himself, she is too mean  To have her name repeated; all her deserving  Is a reserved honesty, and that  I have not heard examined.  Ddu.  Alas, poor lady!  'Tis a hard bondage to become the wife  Of a detesting lord.  Wid.  I warrant, good creature, wheresoe’er she is,  Her heart weighs sadly; this young maid might do  A shrewd turn, if she pleased.  H.  How do you mean?  May be the amorous count solicits her  In the unlawful purpose.  Wid.  He does indeed;  And breaks with all that can in such a suit  Corrupt the tender honour of a maid:  But she is arm’d for him and keeps her guard  In honestest defence.  Mar.  The gods forbid else!  Wid. So, now they come:

Drum and Colour.

Enter Bertram, Parolles, and the whole army.  That is Antonio, the duke’s eldest son;  That, Escalus.  H.  Which is the Frenchman?  Ddu.  He;  That with the plume: ’tis a most gallant fellow.  I would he loved his wife: if he were honest  He were much goodlier: is ’t not a handsome gentle- H. I like him well.  Ddu.  ’Tis pity he is not honest: yon’s that same knave  That leads him to these places: were it his lady,  I would poison that vile mascal.  H.  Which is he?  Ddu.  That jack-an-papes with scarfs: why is he  melancholy?  H. Percibane he’s hurt ’t the battle.  Par.  Lose our drum! well.  Mar.  He’s shrewdly vexed at something: look,  he has spied us.  Wid.  Marry, hang you!  Mar.  And your drum, for a ring-carrier!  [Escuat Bertram, Parolles, and army.  Wid.  The troop is past. Come, pilgrims, I will  bring you  Where you shall host: of enjoo’d penitents  There’s four or five, to great Saint Jaques bound,  Already at my house.  H.  I humbly thank you:  Please it this matron and this gentle maid  To eat with us to-night, the charge and thanking  Shall be for me; and, to requite you further,  I will bestow some precepts of this virgin  Worthy the note.  [Escuit.

SCENE VI.—Camp before Florence.

Enter Bertram and the two French Lords.  Sec. Lord. Nay, good my lord, put him to’t; let  him have his way.  First Lord. If your lordship find him not a hild-  ing, hold me no more in your respect.  Sec. Lord. On my life, my lord, a bubble.  Ber. Do you think I am so far deceived in him?  H.  Believe it, my lord, in mine own direct  knowledge, without any malice, but to speak of him  as my kinsman, he’s a most notable coward, an  infinite and endless liar, an hourly promise-breaker,  the owner of no one good quality worthy your lord-  ship’s entertainment.

First Lord. It was fit you knew him; lest, re-  posing too far in his virtue, which he hath not, he  might at some great and trusty business in a main  danger fail you.  Ber. I would I knew in what particular action to  try him.  First Lord. None better than to let him fetch off  his drum, which you hear him so confidently under-  take to do.  Sec. Lord. I, with a troop of Florentines, will  suddenly surprise him; such I will have, whom I  know not: but if the enemy: we will  bend and hoodwink him so, that he shall suppose  no other but that he is carried into the length of  the adversaries, when we bring him to our own  tents. Be but your lordship present at his exami-  nation: if he do not, for the promise of his life and  in the highest compulsion of base fear, offer to  betray you and deliver all the intelligence in his  power against you, and that with the divine forfeit  of his soul upon oath, never trust my judgment in  any thing.  First Lord. O, for the love of laughter, let him  fetch his drum; he says he has a stratagem for ’t:  when your lordship sees the bottom of his success  in ’t, and to what metal this counterfeit lump of  ore will be melted, if you give him not John Drum’s  entertainment, your inclining cannot be removed.  Here he comes.  Enter Parolles.

Sec. Lord. [Aside to Ber.], O, for the love of laugh-  ter, hinder not the honour of his design: let him  fetch off his drum in any hand.  Ber. Now how, monsieur! this drum sticks sorely  in your disposition.  First Lord. A pox on ’t, let it go; ’tis but a drum.  Par. But a drum! ’s it ’s but a drum? A drum  so lost! There was excellent command,—to charge  in with our horse upon our own wings, and to rend  our own soldiers!  First Lord. That was not to be blamed in the  command of the service; it was a disaster of war  that Cesar himself could not have prevented, if he  had been there to command.  Ber. Well, we cannot greatly condemn our suc-  cess: some dishonour we had in the loss of that  drum; but it is not to be recovered.  Par. It might have been recovered.  Ber. It might: but it is not now.  Par. It is to be recovered: but that the merit  of service is seldom attributed to the true and exact  performer, I would have that drum or another,  or ’s it a jot.  Ber. Why, if you have a stomach, to ’s, monsieur,  if you think your mystery in stratagem can bring  this instrument of honour again into his native  quarter, be magnanimous in the enterprise and go  on: I will grace the attempt for a worthy exploit:  if you speed well in it, the duke shall both speak  of it, and extend to you what further becomes  his greatness, even to the utmost syllable of your  worthiness.  Par. By the hand of a soldier, I will undertake it.  Ber. But you must not now shumber in it.  Par. I’ll about it this evening: and I will pres-  ently pen down my dilemmas, encourage myself  in my certainty, put myself into my mortal prepara-  tion; and by midnight look to hear further from me.  Ber. May I be bold to acquaint his grace you are  gone about it?  Par. I know not what the success will be, my  lord, nor what the effect: I would that  Ber. I know thou’rt valiant: and, to the possi-  bility of thy soldiership, will subscribe for thee.  Farewell.  Par. I love not many words.  [Exit.

Sec. Lord. No more than a fish loves water. Is
ACT IV.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

SCENE I.

not this a strange fellow, my lord, that so confidently seems to undertake this business, which he knows is not to be done; damns himself to do and dares better be damned than to do't.

First Lord. You do not know him, my lord, as we do; certain it is, that he will steal himself into a man's favor and for a week escape a great deal of discoveries; but when you find him out, you have him ever after.

Ber. Why, do you think he will make no deed at all of this that so seriously he does address himself unto?

See. Lord. None in the world; but return with an invention and clap upon you two or three probable lies; but we have almost embossed him; you shall see his fall to-night; for indeed he is not for your lordship's respect.

First Lord. We'll make you some sport with the fox ere we case him. He was first smoked by the old lord Lafau: when his disguise and he is parted, tell me what a strat you shall find him; which you shall see this very night.

See. Lord. I must go look my twigs: he shall be caught.

Ber. Your brother he shall go along with me.

See. Lord. As 'tis please your lordship: I'll leave you. [Exit.

Ber. Now will I lead you to the house, and show you the lass I spoke of.

First Lord. But you say she's honest.

Ber. That's all the fault: I spoke with her but once
And found her wondrous cold; but I sent to her,
By this same coxcomb that we have i' the wind,
Tokens and letters which she did re send:
And this is all I have done. She's a fair creature:
Will you go see her?

First Lord. With all my heart, my lord. [Exit.

SCENE VII.—Florence. The Widow's house.

Enter Helena and Widow.

Hel. If you misjudge me that I am not she,
I know not how I shall assure you further,
But I shall lose the grounds I work upon.

Wid. Though my estate be fallen, I was well born,
Nothing acquainted with these businesses;
And would not put my reputation now
In any staining act.

Hel. Nor would I wish you.
First, give me trust, the count he is my husband,
And what to your sworn counsel I have spoken
Is so from word to word; and then you cannot,
By the good aid that I of you shall borrow,
Err in bestowing it.

Wid. I should believe you;
For you have show'd me that which well approves
You're great in fortune.

Take this purse of gold,
And let me buy your friendly help thus far,
Which I will over-pay and pay again [laugh]
When I have found it. The count he wores your Lays down his wanton siege before her beauty,
Resolved to carry her: let her in fine consent,
As we'll direct her how 'tis best to bear it.
Now his important blood will nought deny
That she'll demand: a ring the county wears,
That downward hath succeeded in his house
From son to son, some four or five descents
Since the first father wore it: this ring he holds
In most rich choice; yet in his idle life,
To buy his will, it would not seem too dear,
Hove'er repeated after.

Wid. Now I see
The bottom of your purpose.

Hel. You see it lawful, then: it is no more,
But that your daughter, ere she seems as won,
Desires this ring; appoints him an encounter;
In fine, delivers me to fill the time,
Herself most chastely absent: after this,
To marry her, I'll add three thousand crowns
To what is past already.

Wid. I have yielded:
Instruct my daughter how she shall persevere,
That time and place with this deceit so lawful
May prove coherent. Every night he comes
With musick of all sorts and songs composed
To her unworthiness: it nothing steads us
To chide him from our ears; for he persists
As if his life lay on 't.

Hel. Why then to-night
Let us assay our plot; which, if it speed,
Is wicked meaning in a lawful deed
And lawful meaning in a lawful act,
Where both not sin, and yet a sinful fact:
But let's about it. [Exit.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Without the Florentine camp.

Enter Second French Lord, with five or six other Soldiers in ambush.

See. Lord. He can come no other way but by this heage-corner. When you sally upon him, speak what terrible language you will; though you understand it not yourselves, no matter; for we must not seem to understand him, unless some one among us whom we must produce for an interpreter.

First Sold. Good captain, let me be the interpreter.

See. Lord. Art not acquainted with him? knows he not thy voice?

First Sold. No, sir, I warrant you.

See. Lord. But what linen-weasely hast thou to speak to us again?

First Sold. 'E'en such as you speak to me.

See. Lord. He must think I some kind of strangers
't the adversary's entertainment. Now he hath a smack of all neighbouring languages: therefore we must every one be a man of his own fancy, not to know what we speak one to another: so we seem to know, is to know straight our purpose; choughs' language, gabble enough, and good enough.
As for you, interpreter, you must seem very politic.
But couch, he! here he comes, to beguile two hours in a sleep, and then to return and swear the lies he forges.

Enter Parolies.

Par. Ten o'clock: within these three hours 'twill be time enough to go home. What shall I say I have done? It must be a very plausible invention that carries it: they begin to smoke me; and disgraces have of late knocked too often at my door.
I find my tongue is too foolhardy; but my heart hath the fear of Mars before it and of his creatures, not daring the reports of my tongue.

See. Lord. This is the first truth that 'er e' thine own tongue was guilty of.

Par. What the devil should move me to undertake the recovery of this drum, being not ignorant of the impossibility, and knowing I had no such purpose? I must give myself some hurts, and say

223
I got them in exploit: yet slight ones will not carry it: they will say, "Came you off with so little?" and great ones I dare not give. Wherefore, what's the instance? Tongue, I must put you into a better woman's mouth, and buy myself another of Belqazet's mule, if you prattle me into these perils.

Sec. Lord. Is it possible he should know what he is, and be that he is?

Par. I would the cutting of my garments would serve the turn, or the breaking of my Spanish sword.

Sec. Lord. We cannot afford you so.

Par. Or the barng of my beard; and to say it was in stratagem.

Sec. Lord. 'T would not do.

Par. Or to drown my clothes, and say I was stripped.

Sec. Lord. Hardly serve.

Par. Though I swore I leaped from the window of the citadel.

Sec. Lord. How deep?

Par. Thirty fathom.

Sec. Lord. Three great oaths would scare me make that be believed.

Par. I would had any drum of the enemy's; I would swear I recovered it.

Sec. Lord. You shall hear one anon.

Par. A drum now of the enemy's.

Sec. Lord. Throa movusous, cargo, cargo, cargo.

All. Cargo, cargo, cargo, villandia par corbo, cargo.

Par. O, ransom, ransom! do not hide mine eyes.

[They seize and blindfold him."

First Sold. Boskos through to boskos.

Par. I know you are the Muskos' regiment:

And I shall lose my life for want of language:

If there be here German, or Dane, low Dutch, Italian, or French, let him speak to me; I'll discover that which shall unde the Florentine.

First Sold. Boskos vauvado; I understand thee, and can speak thy tongue. Kerelybonto, sir, betake thee to thy faith, for seventeen poulards are at thy bosom.

Par. O!

First Sold. O, pray, pray, pray! Manka revania duche.

Sec. Lord. Oscobidulchos volvicolse.

[Yet.

First Sold. The general is content to spare thee

And, hooldwink'd as thou art, will lead thee on.

To gather from thee: haply thou mayst inform something to save thy life.

Par. O, let me live!

And all the secrets of our camp I'll show

Their force, their purposes; nay, I'll speak that

Which you will wonder at.

First Sold. But will thou faithfully?

Par. If I do not, damn me.

First Sold. Acerola linta.

Come on; thou art granted space.

[Exit, with Paroles guarded. A short coronation.

Sec. Lord. Go, tell the Count Rousillon, and my brother,

We have caught:

Till we do hear

Sec. Sold. I, Captain, I will.

Sec. Lord. All unto ourselves:

Inform on that.

Sec. Sold. So I will.

Sec. Lord. Till then I'll keep him dark and safely lock'd.

[Exit.

SCENE II.—Florence. The Widow's house.

Enter Bertram and Diana.

Ber. They told me that your name was Fontibel.

Dian. No, my good lord; Diana.

Ber. Titled goddess; And worth it, with addition! But, fair soul, in your fine frame hath love no quality? If the quick fire of youth light not your mind, You are no maiden, but a great monument.

When you are dead, you should be such a one As you are now, for you are cold and stern; And now you should be as your mother was When your sweet self was got.

Dian. She then was honest.

Ber. So should you be.

No; My mother did but duty; such, my lord, As you owe to your wife.

Ber. No more o' that;

I prithee, do not strive against my vows;

I was compel'd to her; but I love thee

By love's own sweet constraint, and will for ever Do thee all rights of service.

Dian. Ay, so you serve us till you serve us; but when you have our reses,

You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves And mock us with our bareness.

How have I sworn!

Dian. 'T is not many oaths that makes the truth,

But the plain single vow that is vow'd true.

What is not holy, that we swear not by,

But take the High' st to witness: then, pray you, tell If I should swear by God's great attributes.

I loved you dearly, would you believe my oaths,

When I did love you ill? This has no holding,

To swear by him whom I protest to love,

That I will work against him: therefore your oaths Are words and poor conditions, but unseal'd,

At least in my opinion.

Ber. Change it, change it;

Be not so holy-cruel: love is holy;

And my integrity ne'er knew the crafts

That you do charge men with. Stand no more off,

But give thyself unto my sick desires,

Who then recover: say thou art mine, and ever

My love as it begins shall so persever.

Dian. I see that men make roges in such a scarce

That we 'll forsake ourselves. Give me that ring.

Ber. I'll lend it thee, my dear; but have no power
To give it from me.

Dian. Will you not, my lord?

Ber. It is an honour 'longing to our house,

Bequested down from many ancestors;

Which were the greatest obloquy 't the world

In me to lose.

Dian. Mine honour's such a ring:

My chastity's the jewel of our house;

Bequested down from many ancestors;

Which were the greatest obloquy 't the world

In me to lose: thus your own proper wisdom

Brings in the champion Honour on my part,

Against your vain assault.

Ber. Here, take my ring;

My house, mine honour, yea, my life, be thine,

And I'll be bid by thee.

Dian. When midnight comes, knock at my cham-

I'll order take my mother shall not hear.

Now will I charge you in the band of truth,

When you have conquered me, and made me a dozen bed,

Remain there but an hour, nor speak to me: tell them

My reasons are most strong; and you shall know

When back again this ring shall be deliver'd:

And on your finger in the night I'll put

Another ring, that what in time proceeds

May token to the future our present hours.

Adieu, till then; then, fail not. You have won

A wife of me, though there my hope he done.

Ber. A heaven on earth I have won by wooing thee.

[Exit.

Dian. For which live long to thank both heaven

You may so in the end.

[Exeunt.]
ACT IV.  ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.  SCENE III.

My mother told me just how he would woo,
As if she sat in 's heart; she says all men
Have the like oaths: he had sworn to marry me
When his wife's dead; therefore I 'll lie with him
When I am buried. Since Frenchmen are so braid, Married or not will, I live and die amid:
Only in this disguise I think 't no sin
To cozen him that would unjustly win.  [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Florentine camp.

Enter the two French Lords and some two or three Soldiers.

First Lord. You have not given him his mother's letter?

Sec. Lord. I have delivered it an hour since: there is something in 't that stings his nature; for on the reading
I changed almost into another man.
First Lord. He has much worthy blain laid upon him for shaking off so good a wife and so sweet a lady.

Sec. Lord. Especially he hath incurred the ever-lasting dispersing displeasure of the king, who had even tuned his bounty to sing happiness him. I will tell you a thing, but you shall let it dwell darkly with you.
First Lord. When you have spoken it, 'tis dead, and I am the grave of it.

Sec. Lord. He hath perverted a young gentle-woman here in Florence, of a most chaste renown;
and this night he flies his will in the spoil of her honour,
in her last breath, and now he is monumental ring,
and thinks himself made in the unchaste composition.

First Lord. Now, God delay our rebellion! as we are ourselves, what things are we!

Sec. Lord. Merely our own traitors. And as in the common course of all things, we still see them reveal themselves, till they attain to their abhorred ends, so he that in this action contrives against his own nobility, in his proper stream overflows himself.

First Lord. Is it not meant damnable in us, to be trumpeters of our unlawful intents? We shall not then have his company to-night?

Sec. Lord. Not till after midnight; for he is dexter to his hour.

First Lord. That approachespace; I would gladly have him see his company anatomized, that he might take a measure of his own judgments, where so curiously he had set this counterfeit.

Sec. Lord. We will not meddle with him till he come; for his presence must be the whip of the other.

First Lord. In the meantime, what hear you of these wars?

Sec. Lord. I hear there is an overture of peace.

First Lord. Nay, I assure you, a peace concluded.

Sec. Lord. What will Count Rousillon do then?
will he travel higher, or return again into France?

First Lord. I perceive, by this demand, you are not altogether of his council.

Sec. Lord. Let it be forbid, sir; so should I be a great dupe of his act.

First Lord. Sir, his wife some two months since fled from his house: her pretense is a pilgrim scarce to Saint Jaques le Grand; which holy undertaking with most austere sanctity she accomplished; and, there resting, the tenderness of her nature became as a prey to her grief: in fine, made a groan of absent beaute, and, now she is, and was in heaven.

Sec. Lord. How is this justified?

First Lord. The stronger part of it by her own letters, which makes her story true, even to the point of her death: her death itself, which could not be at the office to say is come, was faithfully confirmed by the place.

Sec. Lord. Hath the count all this intelligence?

First Lord. Ay, and the particular confirmations, point from point, to the full arming of the verity.

Sec. Lord. I am heartily sorry that he 'll be glad of this.

First Lord. How mightily sometimes we make us comforts of our losses!

Sec. Lord. And how mightily some other times we drown a host in tears! The great dignity that his valour hath here acquired for him shall haunt me: the web of our life is of a mingled yarn, good and ill together: our virtues would be proud, if our faults whipped them not; and our crimes would despair, if they were not cherished by our virtues.  Enter a Messenger.

How now! where's your master?

Serv. He met the duke in the street, sir, of whom he hath taken a solemn leave: his lordship will next morning for France. The duke hath offered him letters of commendations to the king.

Sec. Lord. They shall be no more than needful there, if they were more than they can commend.

First Lord. They cannot be too sweet for the king's tartsness. Here's his lordship now.

Enter Bertram.

How now, my lord! Is't not after midnight?

Ber. I have to-night dispatched sixteen business, a month's length a-piece, by an abstract of success: I have confided with the duke, done my adeu with his nearest; buried a wife, mourned for her; writ to my lady mother I am returning; entertained my convoy: and between these main parcels of dispatch effected many nicer needs: the last was the greatest, but that I have not ended yet.

Sec. Lord. If the business be of any difficulty, and this morning your departure hence, it requires haste of your lordship.

Ber. I mean, the business is not ended, as fearing to hear of it hereafter. But shall we have this dialogue between the fool and the soldier? Come, bring forth this counterfeit module, has deceived me, like a double-meaning prophetess.

Sec. Lord. Bring him forth: has sat i' the stocks all night, poor gallant knave.

Ber. No matter; his heels have deserved it, in usurping his spur so long. How does he carry himself?

Sec. Lord. I have told your lordship already, the stocks carry him. But to answer you as you would be understood; he weeps like a wench that had shed his milk: he hath confessed himself to Morgan, whom he supposed to be a friar, from the time of his remembrance to this very instant disaster of his setting i' the stocks: and what think you he hath confessed?

Ber. Nothing of me, has a?

Sec. Lord. His confession is taken, and it shall be read to his face: if your lordship be in't, as I believe you are, you must have the patience to hear it.

Enter Parolles guarded, and First Soldier.

Ber. A plague upon him! muffled! he can say nothing of me: hush...!

First Soldier. He calls | cases: what will you say without 'em?
Par. I will confess, if it be without constrainment:
I can say no
First Soldier. Bosko chinn. | more.
First Lord. Boblibindo ch.
First Soldier. You are a mere general. Our general bids you answer to w.
ask you out of a solio.

Par. And truly, as I hope to live,
First Soldier. [Reads] 'First demand of him how many horse the duke is strong.' What say you to that?
Par. Five or six thousand; but very weak and unserviceable: the troops are all scattered, and the commandery very poor rogues, upon my reputation and credit, I dare to venture it.

First Sold. Shall I set down your answer so?

Par. Do: I will take the sacrament on't, how and which way you will.

Ber. All's one to him. What a past-saving slave is this!

Par. You're deceived, my lord: this is Monsieur Paroles, the gallant militarist,—that was his own phrase,—that had the whole rhetoric of war in the knot of his scarf, and the practice in the shape of his dagger.

Sec. Lord. I will never trust a man again for keeping his word clean, nor believe he can ever any thing in him by wearing his apparel neatly.

First Sold. Well, that's set down.

Par. Five or six thousand horse, I said,—I will say true,—or thereabouts, set down, for I'll speak truth.

First Lord. He's very near the truth in this.

Ber. But I con him no thanks for't, in the nature he delivers it.

Par. Poor rogues, I pray you, say.

First Sold. Well, that's set down.

Par. Humibly thank you, sir: a truth's a truth, the rogues and poor Parisians.

First Sold. [Reads] 'Demand of him, of what strength they are a-foot.' What say you to that?

Par. By my troth, sir, if I were to live this present hour, I will tell true. Let me see: Spurio, a hundred and fifty; Sebastian, so many; Corambus, so many; Jacques, so many; Guillian, Cosmo, Lodwick, and Gratia, two hundred and fifty each; mine own company, Chittorip, Vannond, Bentlii, two hundred and fifty each: so that the master-file, rotten and sound, upon my life, amounts not to fifteen thousand pole: half of which dare not shake the snow from off their cassocks, lest they shake themselves to pieces.

Ber. What shall be done to him?

First Lord. Nothing, but let him have thanks. Demand of him my condition, and what credit I have with the duke.

First Sold. So well, that's set down. [Reads] 'You shall demand of him, whether one Captain Duman be in the camp, a Frenchman: what his reputation is with the duke; what his valour, honesty, and expertness in wars: or whether he thinks it were not possible, with well-weighting sums of gold, to corrupt him to a revolt.' What say you to this? which if you will, your business is done.

Par. I beseech you, let me answer to the particular of the interrogatories: demand them singly.

First Sold. Do you know this Captain Duman?

Par. I know him: a was a bovester's prentice in Paris, from whence he was whipped for getting the shrive's foot with child,—a dumb innocent, that could not say him nay.

Ber. Nay, by your leave, hold your hands: though I know his brains are forfeit to the next tile that falls,

First Sold. Well, is this captain in the duke of Florence's camp?

Par. Upon my knowledge, he is, and lousy.

First Lord. Nay, look not so upon me; we shall hear of your lordship anon.

First Sold. Was it his reputation with the duke? They like know him for no other but a poor officer, that hath a letter to me this other day to turn him out o' the land: I think I have his letter in my pocket.

First Sold. Marry, we'll search.

Par. In good sadness, I do not know: either it is there, or it is upon a file with the duke's other letters in my tent.

First Sold. Here't is; here's a paper: shall I read it to you?

Par. I do not know if it be it or no.

First Lord. Excellent.

First Sold. [Reads] 'Dian, the count's a fool,' and full of gold,—'

Par. That is not the duke's letter, sir; that is an advertisement to a proper maid in Florence, one Dian, the daughter of one Count Rousillon, a foolish idle boy, but for all that very ruttish: I pray you, sir, put it up again.

First Sold. Nay, I'll read it first, by your favour.

Par. My meaning in't, I protest, was very honest, in the behalf of the maid: for I knew the young count to be a duengerous and base boy, who is a whale to virginity and devours up all the fry it.

Ber. Dammable both-sides rogue! [hisses]

First Sold. [Reads] 'When he sweats oaths, bid him drop gold, and take it; after he scores, he never pays the score; half won be match well made; match, and well won it; he never pays after-debts, take it before; and say a soldier, Dian, told thee this.

Men are to melt with boys, are not to kiss; for count of this, the count's a fool. I know it, Who pays before, but not when he owes it. Thine, as he vowed to thee in thine ear, PAROLES.'

Ber. He shall be whipped through the army with this rhyme in 's forehead.

Sec. Lord. This is your devoted friend, sir, the manofolk linguist and the armipotent soldier.

Par. I could endure any thing before but a cat, and now he's a cat to me.

First Sold. I perceive, sir, by the general's looks, we shall be fain to hang you.

Par. My life, sir, in any case: not that I am afraid to die: but that, my offences being many, I would repent out the remainder of nature: let me live, sir, in a dungeon, 't the stocks, or any where, so I may live.

First Sold. We'll see what may be done, so you confess freely; therefore, once more to this Captain Duman: you have answered to his reputation with the duke, and to his valour: what is his honesty?

Par. He will steal, sir, an egg out of a cloister. for rapes and ravishments he parleys Nesseus; he professes not keeping of oaths; in breaking 'em he is stronger than Hercules: he will lie, sir, with such volubility, that you would think truth were a fool drunkard do his best virtue, for he will be swine drunk; and in his sleep he does little harm. rave to his bed-clothes about him; but they know his conditions and lay him in straw. I have but little more to say, sir, of his honesty: he has every thing that an honest man should have; what an honest man should have, he has nothing.

First Lord. I begin to love him for this.

Ber. For this description of thine honesty? A pox upon him for me, he's more and more a cat.

First Sold. What say you to his expertness in war?

Par. Faith, sir, he has led the drum before the English dragoons: to belie him, I will not, and more of his soldiership I know not: except, in that country he had the honour to be the officer at a place there called Mile-end, to instruct for the doubting of files: I would do the man what honour I can, but not of this I am certain: we'll cut our cat.

First Lord. He has not a villained villany so far, that the rarity redeems him.

Ber. A pox on him, he's a cat still.

First Sold. His qualities being at this poor price, I need not to ask you if gold will corrupt him to revolt.

Par. Sir, for a quart d'en he will sell the very simplicity of his salvation, the inheritance of it; and cut the entail from all remaniders, and a perpetual succession for it eternally. [Dumain?]
First Sold. What's his brother, the other Captain Sec. Lord. Why does he ask him of me?
First Sold. What's his?
Par. Even a crow o' the same nest; not altogether so great as the first in goodness, but greater a very great deal in some superfluities. Dunoa, for a reward; yet his brother is reputed one of the best that is: in a retreat he outruns any lackey; marry, in coming on he has the cramp.
First Sold. If your life be saved, will you undertake to betray the Florentines? [Ronsillon.
Par. Ay, and the captain of his horse. Count First Sold. I'll whisper with the general, and know his pleasure.
Par. [Aside] I'll no more drumming; a plague of all drums! Only to seem to deserve well, and to beguile the supposition of that lascivious young boy the count, have I run into this danger. Yet who would have suspected an ambush where I was taken?
First Sold. There is no remedy, sir, but you must die: the general says, you that have so traitorously discovered the secrets of your army and made such pestiferous reports of men very nobly held, can serve the world for no honest use; therefore you must die. Come, headsmen, off with his head.
Par. O Lord, sir, let me live, or let me see my death!
First Sold. That shall you, and take your leave of all your friends. [Unbinding him.
So, look about you: know you any here? Per. Good morrow, noble captain.
Sec. Lord. God bless you, Captain Parolles.
First Lord. God save you, noble captain.
Sec. Lord. Captain, what greeting will you to my Lord Lafaé? I am for France.
First Lord. Good captain, will you give me a copy of the same? I must go to-day to the great court of the Count Ronsillon? an I were not a very coward, I'd compell it of you: but fare you well.
[Exit Bertram and Lords.
First Sold. You are undone, captain, all but your scurf; that has a knot on't yet.
Per. Who cannot be crushed with a plot?
First Sold. If you could find out a country where but women were that had received so much shame, you might begin an impudent nation. Fare ye well, sir; I am for France too: we shall speak of you there.
[Exit, with Soldiers.
Par. Yet am I thankful: if I had not been great, 'T would burst at this. Captain I'll be no more; But I will eat and drink, and sleep as sweet As captain shall: simply the thing I am Shall make me live. Who knows himself a braggart, Let him fear this, for it will come to pass That every braggart shall be found an ass. Rust, sword! cool, blushes and. Parolles, live Safest in shame! being fool'd, by foollery thrive! There's place and means for every man alive. I'll after them. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Florence. The Widow's house.
Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana.
Hel. That you may well perceive I have not wrong'd you, One of the greatest in the Christian world Shall give my life: 'twas a princely deed, Ere I can perform mine intents, to kneel: Time was, I did him a desired service. Dear almost as his life; which gratitude Through flinty Tartar's bosom would peep forth, And answer, thanks: I duly an Inforam'd his grace is at Marseilles; to which place We have convenient convey: You must know, I am supposed dead: the army breaking, My husband lies him home; where, heaven aiding, And by the leave of my good lord the king, We'll be before our welcome.
Wel. Gentle madam, You never had a servant to whose trust Your business was more welcome.
Hel. Nor you, mistress, Ever a friend whose thoughts were more truly labour To recompose your love; doubt not but heaven Hath brought me up to be your daughter's dower, As it hath fated her to be my motive And helper to a husband. But, O strange men! That can such sweet use make of what they hate, When saucey trusting of the cozen'd thoughts Dedies the tetchy night; so lust doth play With what it loathes for that which is away. But more of this hereafter. You, Diana, Under my poor instructions yet must suffer Something in my behalf.
Dian. Go with your impositions, I am yours Upon your will to suffer.
Hel. Yet, I pray you: But with the word the time will bring on summer, When briers shall have leaves as well as thorns, And be as sweet as sharp. We must away; Our wages is prepared, and time revives us: ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL: still the fine's the crown; Whate'er the course, the end is the renown.
[Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Ronsillon. The Count's palace.
Enter Countess, Lafaé, and Clown.
Laf. No, no, no, your son was misled with a snip-taffeta fellow there, whose villainous saffron would have made all the unbaked and doughty youth of a nation in his colour; your daughter-in-law had been alive at this hour, and your son here at home, more advanced by the king than by that red-tailed humble-bee I speak of.
Count. I would I had not known him; it was the death of the most virtuous gentlewoman that ever more had praise for creating. If she had partaken of my flesh, and cost me the dearest groans of a mother, I could not have owed her a more rooted love.
Laf. 'Twas a good lady, 'twas a good lady: we may pick a thousand saluds ere we light on such another:
Clo. Indeed, sir, she was the sweet-marrow of the salud, or rather, the herb of grace.
Laf. They are not herbs, you knave; they are nose-herbs.
Clo. I am not great Nebuchadnezzar, sir; I have not much skill in grass.
Laf. Whether dost thou profess thyself, a knave or a fool?
Clo. A fool, sir, at a woman's service, and a knave at a man's.
Laf. Your distinction?
Clo. I would cozen the man of his wife and do his service.
Laf. So you were a knave at his service, indeed.
Clo. And I would give his wife my bauble, sir, to do her service.
Laf. I will subscribe for thee, thou art both knave and fool.
Clo. At your service.
Laf. No, no, no.
Clo. Why, sir, if I cannot serve you, I can serve as great a prince as you are.
Laf. Who's that? a Frenchman?
Clo. Faith, sir, a has an English name: but his origin is more hotter in France than there.
Laf. What prince is that?

ACT V.

ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

SCENE I.–Marseilles. A street.

Enter Helena, Widow, and Diana, with two Attendants.

Hel. But this exceeding posting day and night Must wear your spirits low; we cannot help it: But since you have made the days and nights as one, To wear your gentle limbs in my affairs, Be bold you do so grow in my requital As nothing can unroot you. In happy time;

Enter a Gentleman.

This man may help me to his majesty's ear, If he would spend his power. God save you, sir.

Gent. And you.

Hel. Sir, I have seen you in the court of France. Gent. I have been sometimes there.

Hel. I do presume, sir, that you are not fallen From the report that goes upon your goodness; And therefore, goaded with most sharp occasions, Which lay nice manners by, I put you to The use of your own virtues, for the which I shall continue thankful.

Gent. What's your will?

Hel. That it will please you To give this poor petition to the king, And aid me with that store of power you have To come into his presence.

Gent. The king's not here.

Hel. Not here, sir?

Gent. Not, indeed.

Hel. He hence removed last night and with more haste Than his use. *Lord, how we lose our pains! Hel. All's well that ends well yet, Though time seem so adverse and means unimit, I do beseech you, whither is he gone?

ACT V.

SCENE II.—Ronsillon. Before the Count's palace.

Enter Clown, and Parolles, following.

Par. Good Monsieur Lavache, give my Lord Lafeu this letter: I have ere now, sir, been better known to you, when I have held familiarity with fresher clothes; but I am now, sir, madrilled in fortune's mood, and smell somewhat strong of her strong displeasure.

Clo. Truly, fortune's displeasure is but sluttish, if it smell so strongly as thou speakest of: I will henceforth eat no fish of fortune's buttering. Pri thee, allow the wind.

Par. Nay, you need not to stop your nose, sir; I spoke but by a metaphor.

Clo. Indeed, sir, if your metaphor stink, I will stop my nose; or against any man's metaphor. Pri thee, allow the wind.

Par. Pray you, sir, deliver me this paper.

Clo. Foh! Pri thee, stand away: a paper from fortune's close-stool to give to a nobleman: Look, here he comes himself.
ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.—Act V., Scene iii.
Enter Lafene.

Here is a purr of fortune's, sir, or of fortune's cat,—but not a musk-cat,—that has fallen into the uncLean fishpond of her displeasure, and, as he says, is muddled within: pray you, sir, use the earp as you may; for he looks like a poor, decayed, ingeneous, foolish, rascally knave. I do pity his distress in my smiles of comfort and leave him to your lordship.

Par. My lord, I am a man whom fortune hath cruelly scratched.

Laf. And what would you have me to do? 'Tis too late to pare her nails now. Wherein have you played the knave with fortune, that she should scratch you, who of herself is a good lady and would not have knaves thrive long under her? There's a quart d'eau for you: let the justices make you and fortune friends: I am for other business. [Exit.

Par. I beseech your honour to hear me one single

Laf. You beg a single penny more: come, you shall have 't; save your word.

Par. Mr. name, my good lord, is Parolles.

Laf. You beg more than 'word,' then. Cox my passion! give me your hand. How does your drum?

Par. O my good lord, you were the first that found me! [thee.

Laf. Was I, in sooth? and I was the first that lost

Par. It lies in you, my lord, to bring me in some grace, for you did bring me out.

Laf. Out upon thee, knave! dost thou put upon me at once both the office of God and the devil? One brings thee in grace and the other brings thee out. [Trumpets sound.] The king's coming: I know by his trumpets. Sirrah, inquire further after me: I had talk of you last night: though you are a fool and a knave, you shall eat; go to, follow.

Par. I praise God for you. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Roussillon. The Count's palace.

Flourish. Enter King, Countess, Lafene, the two French Lords, with Attendants.

King. We lost a jewel of her; and our esteem

Was made much poorer by it: but your son,

As mad in folly, hack'd the sense to know

Her acquaintance born.

Count. 'Tis past, my liege;

And I beseech your majesty to make it

Natural rebellion, done i' the blaze of youth;

When oil and fire, too strong for reason's force,

O'erhears it and burns on.

Par. My honour'd lady,

I have forgot and forgotten all;

Though my revenges were high bent upon him,

And watch'd the time to shoot.

Laf. This I must say,

But first I beg my pardon, the young lord

Did to his majesty, his mother and his lady

Offence of mighty note: but to himself

The greatest wrong of all. He lost a wife

Whose beauty did astonish the survey

Of richest eyes, whose words all ears took catch,

Whose dear perfection hearts that scorn'd to serve

Humbly call'd mistress.

King. Praising what is lost

Makes the remembrance dear. Well, call him hither;

We are reconciled, and the first view shall kill

All repetition: let him not ask our pardon;

The nature of his great offence is dead,

And deeper than olden brows we bury

The incensing relics of it: let him approach,

A stranger, no offender; and inform him

So 'tis our will he should.

Gent. I shall, my liege. [Exit.

King. What says he to your daughter? Have you spoke?

Laf. All that he is hath reference to your highness.

King. Then shall we have a match. I have letters sent me

That set him high in fame.

Enter Bertram.

Laf. He looks well on't.

King. I am not a day of season,

For thou mayst see a sunshine; but a hail

In me at once: but to the brightest beams

Distracted clouds give way; so stand thou forth;

The time is fair again.

Ber. My high-repented, dear sovereign, pardon to me.

King. All is whole;

Not one word more of the consumed time.

Let's take the instant by the forward top;

For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees

The inaudible and noiseless foot of Time

Steals ere we can effect them. You remember

The daughter of this lord?

Ber. Admiringly, my liege, at first

I struck my choice upon her, ere my heart

Durst make too bold a herald of my tongue

Where the impression of mine eye inciting,

Contempt his scornful perspective did lend me,

That which warp'd the line of every garter favour;

Scorn'd a fair colour, or express'd it stolen;

Extended or contracted all proportions

To a most hideous object: thence it came

That she whom all men praised and whom myself,

Since I have lost, have loved, was in mine eye

The dust that did offend it.

King. Well excus'd:

That thou didst love her, strikes some scores away

From the great comt: but love that comes too late,

Like a remorseful pardon slowly carried,

To the great sender turns a sour offence,

Crying, 'That's good that's gone.' Our rash faults

Make trivial price of serious things we have,

Not knowing them until we know their grave:

Oft our displeasures, to ourselves unjust,

Destroy our friends and after weep their dust:

Our own love waking cries to see what's done,

While shame full late sleeps out the afternoon.

Be this sweet Helen's will, and now forget her;

Send forth your amorous token for fair Mauldin:

The main consents are had; and here we'll stay

To see our widow's second marriage-day.

Count. Which better than the first, O dear heaven,

Or, ere they meet, in me, O nature, cease? [bless!

Lei. Come on my son, in whom my house's name

Must be digested, give a favour from you

To sparkle in the spirits of my daughter,

That she may quickly come. [Exit.

Laf. By my old beard,

And every hair that's on't, Helen, that's dead,

Was a sweet creature: such a ring as this,

The last that e'er I took her leave at court,

I saw upon her finger.

Ber. Hers it was not.

King. Now, pray you, let me see it; for mine eye,

While I was speaking, oft was fasten'd to't.

This ring was mine: and, when I gave it Helen,

I bade her, if her fortunes ever stood

Necessity to help, that by this token [her

I would relieve her. Had you that craft, to crave

Of what should steady her most?

Ber. My gracious sovereign, How'er it pleases you to take it so,

The ring was never hers.

Count. Son, on my life,

I have seen her wear it; and she reckon'd it

At her life's rate.

Laf. I am sure I saw her wear it.

Ber. You are deceived, my lord; she never saw it.
In Florence was it from a casement thrown me, Writ in a paper, which contain'd the name Of her that threw it: noble she was, and thought I should engage; but when I had subscibed, And to mine own fortune and inform'd her fully I could not answer in that course of honor As she had made the overt ure, she ceased In heavy satisfaction and would never Receive the ring again.

King. Plutus himself, That knows the tinct and multiplying medicine, Hath not in nature's mystery more science Than I have in this ring: 'twas mine, 'twas Helen's, Whoever gave it you. Then, if you know That you are well acquainted with yourself, Confess'th yon herra, and by what rough enforcement You got it from her: she call'd the saints to surety That she would never put it from her finger Unless she gave it to yourself in bed, Where you have never come, or sent it us Upon her great disaster.

Bor. She never saw it.

King. Thou speak'st it falsely, as I love mine honour; And makest conjectural fears to come into me, Which I would fain shut out. If it should prove That thou avnest so inhuman.— 't will not prove so;— And yet I know not who and what hate her deadly, And she is dead; which nothing, but to close Her eyes myself, could win me to believe, More than to see this ring. Take him away.

[Guards seize Bertram.]

My fore-past proofs, however the matter fall, Shall tax my tears of little vanity: Having vainly fear'd too little. Away with him! We'll sift this matter further.

Bor. If you shall prove This ring was ever hers, you shall as easily Prove that I husband'd her bed in Florence, Where yet she never was. [Exit, guarded.]

King. I am wrap't in dismal thinkings.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. Graceful sovereign, Whether I have been to blame or no, I know not: Here's a petition from a Florentine, Who hath for four or five removes come short To tender it herself. I undertook it, Vanquish'd thereto by the fair grace and speech Of the poor suppliant, who by this I know Is here attending: her business looks in her With an importning visage; and she told me, In a sweet verbal brie f, it did concern Your highness with herself.

King. [Reads] Upon his many protestations to marry me when his wife was dead, I blush to say it, he won me. Now is the Count Rousillon a widower: his vows were forfend to me, and my honour's paid to him. He stode from Florence, taking no leave, and I follow him to his country for justice: grant it me, O king! in you it best lies; otherwise a seducer flourishes, and a poor maid is undone.

Diana Capulet. But I will buy me a son-in-law in a fair, and toll for this: I'll none of him.

[Exit, guarded.]

King. The heavens have thought well on thee, To bring forth this discovery. Seek these suitors: Go speedily and bring again the count. I am afraid the life of Helen, lady, Was tenderly snatch'd.

Count. Now, justice on the doers!

Re-enter Bertram, guarded.

King. I wonder, sir, sith wives are monsters to commerce, And that you dy them as you swear them lordship, Yet you desire to marry.

Enter Widow and Diana.

What woman's that?

Bor. I am, my lord, a wretched Florentine, Derived from the ancient Capulet: My suit, as I do understand, you know, And therefore know now far I may be pitied. [As Ber.] I am her mother, sir, whose age and honor Both suffer under this complaint we bring, And both shall cease, without your remedy.

King. Come hither, count; do you know these women?

Bor. My lord, I neither can nor will deny [ther? But that I know them: do they charge me fur.

Bor. Why do you look so strange upon your wife?

Bor. She's none of mine, my lord.

Bor. If you shall marry, You give away this band, and that is mine; You give away heaven's vows, and those are mine; You give away myself, which is known mine; * For I by vow am so emboldened yours, That she which marries you must marry me, Either both or none.

Laf. Your reputation, comes too short for my daughter; you are no husband for her.

Bor. My lord, this is a fond and desperate creature, Whom sometime I have laugh'd with: let your highness Lay a more noble thought upon mine honour Than for to think that I would sink it here.

King. Sir, for my thoughts, you have them ill to friend Till you're dec'ed gain them: fairest prove your honour Than in my thought it lies.

Bor. Good my lord, Ask him upon his oath, if he does think He had not my virginity.

King. What say'st thou to her?

Bor. She's impudent, my lord, And was a common gamester to the camp.

Bor. He does me wrong, my lord; if I were so, He might have bought me at a common price: Do not believe him. O, behold this ring, Whose high respect and rich validity Did lack a parallel; yet for all that He gave it to a commoner o' the camp, It I' the one.

Count. He blushes, and 'tis it: Of six preceding ancestors, that gem, Conferred by testament to the sequent issue, Hath it been owned and worn. This is his wife; That ring's a thousand proofs.

King. Methought you said You saw one here in court could witness it. Bor. I did, my lord, but beth am to produce So bad an instrument: his name's Parolles.

Laf. I saw the man to-day, if man be he,

King. Find him, and bring him hither.

[Exit an Attendant.

Bor. What of him?

He's quoted for a most perfidious slave, With all the spots o' the world tax'd and debosh'd; Whose nature sickens but to speak a truth. Am I for that or this for what he'll utter, That will speak any thing?

King. She hath that ring of yours.

Bor. I think she has: certain it is I liked her, And board'd her i' the wanton way of youth: She knew her distance and did angle for me, Maddening my eagerness with her restraint, As all impediments in fancy's course Are motives of more fancy; and, in fine, Her infinite cunning, with her modern grace, Subdued me to her rate: she got the ring; And I had that which any inferior might An market-price have bought.

Bor. I must be patient:
ACT V. ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL. SCENE III.

You, that have turn'd off a first so noble wife, May justly diet me. I pray you yet: Since you lack virtue, I will lose a husband; Send for your ring, I will return it home, And give me mine again.

Ber. I have it not.

King. What ring was yours, I pray you?

Dia. Sir, much like The same upon your finger. [late.

King. Know you this ring? this ring was his of Dia. And this was it I gave him, being abed.

King. The story then goes false, you threw it him Out of a casement.

Dia. I have spoke the truth.

Enter Parolles.

Ber. My lord, I do confess the ring was hers.

King. You boggle shrewdly, every feather starts Is this the man you speak of? [you.

Dia. Ay, my lord.

King. Tell me, sirrah, but tell me true, I charge Not fearing the displeasure of your master, [you, Which on your just proceeding I'll keep off, By him and by this woman here what know you? Par. So please your majesty, my master hath been an honourable gentleman: tricks he had had in him, which gentleman have.

King. Come, come, to the purpose: did he love this woman?

Par. Faith, sir, he did love her; but how?

King. How, I pray you? [woman.

Par. He did love her, sir, as a gentleman loves a King. How is that?

Par. He loved her, sir, and loved her not.

King. As thou art a knave, and no knave. What an equivocal companion is this! [man.

Par. I am a poor man, and at your majesty's command.

Laf. He's a good drunk, my lord, but a mighty orator.

Dia. Do you know he promised me marriage?

Par. Faith, I know more than I'll speak.

King. But wilt thou not speak all thou knowest?

Par. Yes, so please your majesty. I did go be-tween them, as I said; but more than that, he loved her: for indeed he was mad for her, and talked of Satan and of Limbo and of Furies and I know not what yet I was in that credit with them at that time that I knew of their going to bed, and of other motions, as promising her marriage, and things which would derive me till I will speak of; therefore I will not speak what I know.

King. Thou hast spoken all already, unless thou canst say they are married: but thou art too fine in thy evidences: therefore stand aside. This ring, you say, was yours?

Dia. Ay, my good lord.

King. Where did you buy it? or who gave it you?

Dia. It was not given me, nor I did not buy it.

King. Who lent it you?

Dia. It was not lent me neither.

King. Where did you find it, then?

Dia. I found it not.

King. If it were yours by none of all these ways, How could you give it him?

Dia. I never gave it him.

Laf. This woman's an easy goose, my lord; she goes off and on at pleasure.

King. This ring was mine: I gave it her first wife.

Dia. It might be yours or hers, for aught I know.

King. Take her away: I do not like her now; To prison with her: and away with him.

Unless thou tell'st me where thou hast this ring, Thou diest within this hour.

Dia. I'll never tell you.

King. Take her away.

Dia. I'll put in bail, my liege.

King. I think thee now some poor good customer.

Dia. By Jove, if ever I knew man, 'twas you.

King. Wherefore hast thou accused him all this while?

Dia. Because he's guilty, and he is not guilty: He knows I am no maid, and he'll swear to 't; I'll swear I am a maid, and he knows not. Great king, I am no strumpet, by my life; I am either maid, or else this old man's wife.

King. She does abuse our ears: to prison with her.

Dia. Good mother, fetch my bail. Stay, royal sir: [Exit Widow.

The jeweller that owes the ring is sent for, And he shall surely me. But for this lord, Who hath abused me, as he knows himself, Though yet he never harm'd me, here I quit him: He knows himself my bed he hath defiled; And at that time he got his wife with child; Dead though she be, she feels her young one kick; So there's my riddle: one that's dead is quick: And now behold the meaning.

Re-enter Widow, with Helena.

King. Is there no exorcist Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes? Is it real that I see? [Hel. No, my good lord; 'Tis but the shadow of a wife you see, The name and not the thing.

Ber. Both, both, O, pardon! Hel. O my good lord, when I was like this maid, I found you wondrous kind, There is your ring; And, look you, here's your letter: this it says: 'When from my finger you can get this ring And are by me with child, &c. This is done: Will you be mine, now you are doubly won? Ber. If she, my liege, can make me know this I'll love her dearly, ever, ever dearly. [clearly, Hel. If it appear not plain and prove untrue, Deadly divorce step between me and you! O my dear mother, do I see you living?

Laf. Mine eyes smell onions; I shall weep anon: [To Parolles] Good Tom Drum, lend me a handker-cher; so. I thank thee: wait on me home, I'll make sport with Let thy courtesies alone, they are scurrilous ones. [To Helena] Let us from point to point this story know, To make the even truth in pleasure flow. [To Drum] If thou hast yet a fresh uncropped flower, Choose thou thy husband, and I'll pay thy dower; For I can guess that by thy honest aid Thou kept'st a wife herself, thyself a maid. Of that and all the progress, more or less, Resolvedly more leisure shall express: All yet seems well; and if it end so meet, The bitter past, more welcome is the sweet. [Flourish.

EPILOGUE.

King. The king's a beggar, now the play is done: All is well ended, if this suit be won. With thou express content; which we will pay, With strife to please you, day exceeding day: Ours be your patience then, and yours our parts; Your gentle hands lend us, and take our hearts. [Exeunt.

Antonio, a sea captain, friend to Sebastian.
A Sea Captain, friend to Viola.
Valentine, gentlemen attending on the Duke.
Curio,
Sir Toby Belch, uncle to Olivia.
Sir Andrew Aguecheek.
Malvolio, steward to Olivia.

Fabian,
Feste, a Clown, servants to Olivia.

Olivia.
Viola.
Maria, Olivia’s woman.
Lords, Priests, Sailors, Officers, Musicians, and other Attendants.

SCENE — A city in Illyria, and the sea-coast near it.

[For an Analysis of the Plot of this Play, see Page 145.]

ACT I.

SCENE I.—The Duke’s palace.

Enter Duke, Curio, and other Lords; Musicians attending.

Duke. If music be the food of love, play on;
Give me excess of it, that surfeiting
The appetite may sicken, and so die.
That strain again! It had a dying fall:
O, it came o’er my ear like the sweet sound
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing and giving odour! Enough; no more:
’Tis not so sweet now as it was before.
O spirit of love! how quick and fresh art thou,
That, notwithstanding thy capacity
Receivest as the sea, slioth’rt enters there,
Of what validity and pitch soever,
But falls into abatement and low price,
Even in a minute: so full of shapes is fancy
That it alone is high fantastical.
Cor. Will you go hunt, my lord?
Duke. What, Curio?
Cor. The hart.
Duke. Why, so I do, the noblest that I have:
O, when mine eyes did see Olivia first,
Methought she purged the air of pestilence!
That instant was I turn’d into a hart;
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E’er since pursue me.

Enter Valentine.

How now! what news from her?
Val. So please my lord, I might not be admitted;
But from her handmaid do return this answer:
The element itself, till seven years’ heat,
Shall not behold her face at simple view;
But, like a cloister, she will revell walk
And water once a day her chamber round
With eye-offending brine: all this to season
A brother’s dead love, which she would have fresh
And lasting in her sad remembrance.

Duke. O, she that hath a heart of that fine frame
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will she love, when the rich golden shaft
 Hath kill’d the flock of all affections else
That live in her: when love, live, brain and heart,
These sovereign thrones, are all supplied, and fill’d
Her sweet perfections with one self king!
Away before me to sweet beds of flowers:

ACT II.—The sea-coast.

Enter Viola, a Captain, and Sailors.

Vio. What country, friends, is this?
Cap. This is Illyria, lady.
Vio. And what should I do in Illyria?
Cap. My brother he is in Elysium.

Vio. Perchance he is not drown’d: what think you, sail’d?
Cap. It is perchance that you yourself were saved.
Vio. O my poor brother! and so perchance may he be.

Cap. True, madam: and, to comfort you with assurance you, after our ship did split,
When you and those poor number saved with you
Hung on our driving boat, I saw your brother,
Most provident in peril, bind himself,
Courage and hope both teaching him the practice,
To a strong mast that lived upon the sea;
Where, like Arian on the dolphin’s back,
I saw him hold acquaintance with the waves.
So long as I could see.

Vio. For saying so, there’s gold;
Mine own escape unfoldeth to my hope,
Whereeto thy speech serves for authority,
The like of him. Know’st thou this country?
Cap. Ay, madam, well; for I was bred and born
Not three hours’ travel from this very place.

Vio. Who governs here?
Cap. A noble duke, in nature as in name.
Vio. What is his name?
Cap. Orsino.

Vio. Orsino! I have heard my father name him:
He was a bachelor then.
Cap. And so is now, or was so very late;
For but a month ago I went from hence,
And then ‘twas fresh in munition;—as, you know,
What great ones do the less will prattle of,—
That he did seek the love of fair Olivia.
Vio. What’s she?
Cap. A virtuous maid, the daughter of a count
That died some twelvemonth since, then leaving her
In the protection of his son, her brother.
Who shortly also died; for whose dear love,
They said, she had adjured the company
And sight of men.

Vio. O that I served that lady
And might not be delivered to the world,
Till I had made mine own occasion mellow,
What my estate is!

Cap.

That were hard to compass;
Because she will admit no kind of suit,
Nor none of her duke's.

Vio. There is a fair behaviour in thee, captain;
And though that nature with a beauteous wall
Doth oft close in pollution, yet of thee
I will believe thou hast a mind that suits
With this thy fair and outward character.
I prithee, and I'll pay thee bounteously,
Consider what I am, and be my aid.
For such disguise as haply shall become
The form of my intent.
I'll serve this duke:
Thou shalt present me as an eunuch to him:
It may be worth thy pains: for I can sing,
And speak to him in many sorts of music.
That will allow me very worth his service.
What else may hap to time I will commit;
Only shape thou thy silence to my wit.

Cap. Be you his eunuch, and your mute I'll be:
When my tongue blabs, then let mine eyes not see.

Vio. I thank thee: lead me on. [Exeunt.*

SCENE III. — Olivia's house.

Enter Sir Toby Belch and Maria.

Sir To. What a plague means my niece, to take the death of her brother thus? I am sure care's and age have

Mar. By my troth, Sir Toby, you must come in earlier o' nights: your cousin, my lady, takes great exceptions to your ill hours.

Sir To. Why, let her except, before excepted.

Mar. Ay, but you must confine yourself within the modest limits of order.

Sir To. Confine! I'll confine myself no finer than I am: these clothes are good enough to drink in; and so be these boots too: an they be not, let them hang themselves in their own straps.

Mar. That quaffing and drinking will undo you: I heard my lady talk of it yesterday: and of a foolish knight that you brought in one night here to be her wooer.

Sir To. Who, Sir Andrew Aguecheek?

Mar. Ay, he.

Sir To. He's as tall a man as any's in Illyria?

Mar. What's that to the purpose?

Sir To. Why, he has three thousand ducats a year.

Mar. Ay, but he'll have but a year in all these ducats: he's a very fool and a prodigal.

Sir To. Fie, that you'll say so! he plays o' the violo-de-gamboys, and speaks three or four languages word for word without book, and hath all the good gifts of nature.

Mar. He hath indeed, almost natural: for besides that he's a fool, he's a great quarreller; and but that he hath the gift of a coward to allay the gust he hath in quarrelling, 'tis thought among the prudent he would quickly have the gift of a grave.

Sir To. By this hand, they are scoundrels and substractors that say so of him. Who are they?

Mar. They that add, moreover, he's drunk nightly in your company.

Sir To. With drinking healths to my niece: I'll drink to her as long as there is a passage in my throat and drink in Illyria: he's a coward and a coystrell that will not drink to my niece till his brains turn o' the toe like a parish-top. What, wench! Castilliano vulgar! for here comes Sir Andrew Aguecheek.

Enter Sir Andrew Aguecheek.

Sir Adu. Sir Toby Belch! how now, Sir Toby

Sir To. Sweet Sir Andrew!

Belch. Bless you, fair shrew.

Sir To. And you too, sir.

Sir To. Accost, Sir Andrew, accost.

Sir Adu. What's that?

Sir To. My niece's chambermaid.

Sir Adu. Good Mistress Accost, I desire better acquaintance.

Mar. My name is Mary, sir.

Sir Adu. Good Mistress Mary Accost. —

Sir To. You mistake, knight; 'accost' is front her, board her, woo her, assail her.

Sir To. By my troth, I would not undertake her in this company. Is that the meaning of 'accost'?

Mar. Fare you well, gentlemen.

Sir To. An thou let part so, Sir Andrew, would thou mightst never draw sword again.

Sir Adu. An you part so, mistress, I would I might never draw sword again. Fair lady, do you think you have fools in hand?

Mar. Sir, I have not you by the hand.

Sir Adu. Mary, but you shall have; and here's my hand.

Mar. Now, sir, 'thought is free.' I pray you, bring your hand to the buttery-bar and let it drink.

Sir Adu. Wherefore, sweet-heart? what's your

Mar. It's dry, sir. [metaphor?]

Sir Adu. Why, I think so: I am not such an ass but I can keep my hand dry. But what's your jest?

Mar. A dry jest, sir.

Sir Adu. Are you full of them?

Mar. Ay, sir, I have them at my fingers' ends: marry, now I let go your hand, I am barren. [Exit.*

Sir To. O knight, thou lackest a cup of canary: when did I see thee so put down?

Sir Adu. Never in your life, I think; unless you see canary put me down. Methinks sometimes I have no more wit than a Christian or an ordinary man has: but I am a great eater of beef, and I believe that does harm to my wit.

Sir To. No question.

Sir Adu. An I thought that, I 'd forswear it. I'll ride home to-morrow, Sir Toby.

Sir To. Pourquoi, my dear knight?

Sir Adu. What is 'pourquoi'? do or not do? I would I had bestowed that time in the tongues that I have in fencing, dancing and bear-baiting: O, had I but followed the arts!

Sir To. Then hadst thou an excellent head of hair.

Sir Adu. Why, would that have mended my hair?

Sir To. Past question; for thou seest it will not curl by nature.

Sir Adu. But it becomes me well enough, doesn't it?

Sir To. Excellent; it hangs like flux on a distaff; and I hope to see a housewife take thee between her legs and spin it off.

Sir Adu. Faith, I 'll home to-morrow, Sir Toby; your niece will not be seen: or if she be, it's four to one she 'll none of me; the count himself here hard by would vide her.

Sir To. She 'll none o' the count; she 'll not match above her degree, neither in estate, years, nor wit; I have heard her swear 't. Tut, there 's life in 't, man.

Sir Adu. I 'll stay a month longer. I am a fellow o' the strangest mind i' the world: I delight in masques and revels sometimes altogether.

Sir To. Art thou good at these kickshawses, knight?

Sir Adu. As any man in Illyria, whatsoever he be, under the degree of my better; and yet I will not compare with an old man.

Sir To. What is thy excellence in a galliard, knight?

Sir Adu. Faith, I can cut a caper.

Sir To. And I can cut the nutton to t.'
Sir And. And I think I have the back-trick simply as strong as any man in Illyria.

Sir To. Wherefore are these things hid? whereas these give these gifts a colour, even? are they like to take dust, like Mistress Mall's picture? why dost thou not go to church in a galliard and come home in a coranto? My very walk should be a jig; I would not so much as make water but in a sink-a-pace. What dost thou mean? Is it a world to hide virtues in? I did think, by the excellent constitution of thy leg, it was formed under the star of a galliard.

Sir And. Ay, 'tis strong, and it does indifferent well in a flame-coloured stock. Shall we set about some music?

Sir To. What shall we do else? were we not born under Taurnus?

Sir And. Taurnus! That's sides and heart.

Sir To. No, sir; it is legs and thighs. Let me see thee caper: ha! higher: ha, ha! excellent! [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Duke's palace.

Enter Valentine, and Viola in man's attire.

Val. If the duke continue these favours towards you, Cesario, you are like to be much advanced: he hath known you but three days, and already you are no stranger.

Vio. You either fear his humour or my negligence, that you call in question the continuance of his love; is he constant, sir, in his favours?

Val. No, believe me.

Vio. I thank you. Here comes the count.

Enter Duke, Curio, and Attendants.

Duke. Who saw Cesario, ho?

Vio. On your attendance, my lord; here.

Duke. Stand you awhile aloof, Cesario, Thou know'st no less but all: I have unclasp'd To thee the book even of my secret soul: Therefore, good youth, address thy gait unto her; Be not denied access, stand at her doors, And tell them, there thy fixed foot shall grow Till thou have audience.

Vio. Sure, my noble lord, if she be so abandon'd to her sorrow As it is spoke, she never will admit me.

Duke. Be clamorous and leap all civil bounds Rather than make unprompted return.

Vio. Say I do speak with her, my lord, what then?

Duke. O, then unfold the passion of my love, Surprise her with discourse of my dear faith: It shall become thee well to act my woes; She will attend it better in thy youth Than in a musician's more grave aspect.

Vio. I think not so, my lord.

Duke. For they shall yet belie thy happy years, That say thou art a man: Diana's lip Is not more smooth and ruddy: thy small pipe Is as the maiden's organ, shrill and sound, And all is semblative a woman's part. I know thy constellations is right apt For this effect. Some four or five attend him; All, if you will; for I myself am best When least in company. Prosper well in this, And thou shalt live as freely as thy lord, To call his fortunes thine.

Vio. I'll do my best To woo your lady: [Aside] yet, a barb'd sirfle! Whoe'er I woo, myself would be his wife. [Exeunt.

SCENE V.—Olivia's house.

Enter Maria and Clown.

Mar. Nay, either tell me where thou hast been, or I will not open my lips so wide as a bristle may enter in way of thy excuse: my lady will hang thee for thy absence.

Clo. Let her hang me: he that is well hanged in this world may with his blood afraid to fear no colours.

Mar. Make that good.

Clo. He shall see none to fear.

Mar. A good lenient answer: I can tell thee where that saying was born, of 'I fear no colours.'

Clo. Where, good Mistress Mary?

Mar. In the wars: and that may you be bold to say in your foolery.

Clo. Well, God give them wisdom that have it; and those that are fools, let them use their talents.

Mar. Yet you will be hanged for being so long absent; or, to be turned away, is not that as good as hanging to you?

Clo. Many a good hanging prevents a bad marriage; and, turning away, let summer bear it out.

Mar. You are resolute, then? [points.

Clo. No, not so; neither: but I am resolved on two Mar. That if one break, the other will hold; or, if both break, your gaskins fall.

Clo. Apt in good faith; very apt. Well, go thy way: if Sir Toby would leave drinking, thou wilt as witty a piece of Eve's flesh as any in Illyria.

Mar. Peace, you rogue, no more of that. Here comes my lady: make your excuse wisely, you were bidden. [Exeunt.

Clo. Wit, ain't he thy will, put me into good fooling! Those wits, that think they have thee, do very oft prove fools; and I, that am sure I lack thee, may pass for a wise man: for what says Quinapalus? 'Better a witty fool than a foolish wit.'

Enter Lady Olivia with Malvolio.

God bless thee, lady!

Oli. Take the fool away.

Clo. Do you not hear, fellows? Take away the fool.

Oli. Go to, you're a dry fool; I'll no more of you: besides, you grow dishonest.

Clo. Two faults, madonna, that drink and good counsel will amend: for give the dry fool drink, then is the fool not dry; bid the dishonest man mend himself; if he mend, he is no longer dishonest; if he cannot, let the better mend him. Anything that is not dishonest and but true, that virtue that transgresses is but patched with sin; and sin that amends is but patched with virtue. It that this simple syllogism will serve, so; if it will not, what remedy? As there is no true cuckold but calamity, so beauty's a flower. The lady lade take away the fool; therefore, I am sorry for his change.

Oli. Sir, I bade them take away you.

Clo. Misprision in the highest degree! Lady, ecuillus non factit monachum; that's as much to say as I wear not motley in my brain. Good madonna, give me leave to prove you a fool.

Oli. Can you do it?

Clo. Dexteroeriously, good madonna.

Oli. Make your proof.

Clo. I must catechize you for it, madonna; good my mouse of virtue, answer me.

Oli. Well, sir, for want of other idleness, I'll bide your word needs you: I will shew you what you are.

Clo. Good madonna, why mourning thou?

Oli. Good fool, for my brother's death.

Clo. I think his soul is in hell, madonna.

Oli. I know his soul is in heaven, fool.

Clo. The more fool, madonna, to mourn for your brother, that excelling in heaven. Take away the fool, gentleman.

Oli. What think you of this fool, Malvolio? doth he not mend?

Mal. Yes, and shall do till the pangs of death shake him: infirmity, that decays the wise, doth even make the greater fool.

Clo. God send you, sir, a speedy infirmity, for the better increasing your folly! Sir Toby will be sworn that I am no fox; but he will not pass his word for two pence that you are no fool.

Oli. How say you to that, Malvolio?

Mal. What kind o’ man is he?

Oli. Why, of mankind.

Oli. What manner of man?

Mal. Of very ill manner; he’ll speak with you, will you or no.

Oli. Of what personage and years is he?

Mal. Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before ’t is a pease-

Oli. What is this squab that you deem cannon-bullets: there is no slander in an allowed fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known discreet man, though he do nothing but reprove.

Clo. Now Mercury enucle thee with leasing, for thou speakest wild of fools!

Re-enter Maria.

Mar. Madam, there is at the gate a young gent-

Mar. I know not, madam: ’tis a fair young man, and well attended.

Oli. Who of my people hold him in delay?

Mar. Sir Toby, madam, your kinsman.

Oli. Fetch him off, I pray you; he speaks nothing but madman: lie on him! [Exit Maria.] Go you, Malvolio; if it be a snitch from the count, I am sick, or not at home; what you will, to dismiss it. [Exit Malvolio.] Now you see, sir, how your fooling grows old, and people dislike it.

Clo. Thou hast spoke for us, madam, as if thy eldest son should be a fool; whose skull Jove crams with brains! for,—here he comes,—of one thy kin has a most weak sta ph matauer.

Enter Sir Toby.

Oli. By mine honour, half drunk. What is he at the gate, cousin?

Sir To. A gentleman.

Oli. A gentleman! what gentleman?

Clo. I see a gentleman here—a plague o’ these mad herring! How now, set! [Exit Toby.]

Mal. Good Sir Toby! Clo.

Oli. Cousin, cousin, how have you come so early by this heltharg?

Sir To. Lecchery! I defy lechery. There’s one at the gate.

Mar. Ay, marry, what is he?

Sir To. Let him be the devil, and he will, I care not: give me faith, say I. Well, it’s all one. [Exit.]

Oli. What’s a drunken man like, fool?

Clo. Like a crowned man, a fool and a mad man: one draught above heat makes him a fool; the sec-

Mar. Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.

Oli. No, good swabber; I am to haul here a little longer. Some mollification for your giant, sweet lady. Tell me your mind. I am a messenger.

Clo. Sure, you have some hideous matter to de-

Clo. He is but mad yet, madonna; and the fool shall look to the madman. [Exit.

Re-enter Malvolio.

Mal. Madam, yond young fellow sweares he will speak with you. I told him you were sick; he takes on him to understand so much, and therefore comes to speak with you. I told him you were asleep; he seems to have a foreknowledge of that too, and therefore comes to speak with you. What is to be said to him, lady? he’s fortified against any denial.

Oli. Tell him he shall not speak with me.

Mal. Has been told so; and he says, he’ll stand at your door like a sheriff’s post, and be the sup-

Oli. What kind o’ man is he?

Mal. Why, of mankind.

Oli. What manner of man?

Mal. Of very ill manner; he’ll speak with you, will you or no.

Oli. Of what personage and years is he?

Mal. Not yet old enough for a man, nor young enough for a boy; as a squash is before ’t is a pease-

Oli. What is this squab that you deem cannon-bullets: there is no slander in an allowed fool, though he do nothing but rail; nor no railing in a known discreet man, though he do nothing but reprove.

Clo. Now Mercury enucle thee with leasing, for thou speakest wild of fools!

Re-enter Maria.

Oli. Give me my veil: come, throw it o’er my face. We’ll once more hear Orsino’s embassy.

Enter Viola, and Attendants.

Vio. The honourable lady of the house, which is she? [will?]

Oli. Speak to me: I shall answer for her. Your Vio. Most radiant, exquisite and unmatchable beauty.—I pray you, tell me if this be the lady of the house, for I never saw her: I would be loath to cast away my speech for beholding that it is excell-

Oli. Whence came you, sir?

Vio. I can say little more than I have studied, and that question’s out of my part. Good gentle-

Vio. No, my profound heart: and yet, by the very fangs of malice I swear, I am not that I play. Are you the lady of the house?

Oli. If I do not usurp myself, I am.

Vio. Most certain, if you are she, you do usurp yourself: for what is yours to bestow is not yours to reserve. But this is from my commission: I will on with my speech in your praise, and then show you the heart of my message.

Oli. Come to what is important in ’t: I forgive you the praise.

Vio. Alas, I took great pains to study it, and ’t is.

Oli. It is the more like to be feigned: I pray you, keep it in. I heard you were saucy at my gates, and allowed your approach rather to wonder at you than to hear you. If you be not mad, be gone; if you have reason, be brief: ’t is not that time of moon with me to make one in so skipping a dialogue.

Mar. Will you hoist sail, sir? here lies your way.

Vio. No, good swabber; I am to haul here a little longer. Some mollification for your giant, sweet lady. Tell me your mind. I am a messenger.

Oli. Sure, you have some hideous matter to de-

Vio. It alone concerns your ear. I bring no over-

Oli. Yet you began rudely. What are you? what would you?

Vio. The rudeness that hath appeared in me have I learned from my entertainment. What I am, and what I would, are as secret as maiden-

Oli. Give us the place alone: we will hear this divinity. [Exit Maria and Attendants.] Now, sir, what is your text?
ACT II.
TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.
SCENE I.

Vio. Most sweet lady,—
Oli. A comfortable doctrine, and much may be said of it.  Where lies your text?
Vio. In Orsino's bosom.
Oli. In his bosom?  What chapter of his bosom?
Vio. To answer by the method, in the first of his heart.
Oli. O, I have read it: it is heresy.  Have you no more to say?
Vio. Good madam, let me see your face.
Oli. Have you any commission from your lord to negotiate with my face?  You are now out of your text; but we will draw the curtain and show you the picture.  Look you, sir, such a one I was present: 'tis not well done.  [Unveiling.
Vio. Excellently done, if God did all.
Oli. 'Tis in grain, sir; 'twill endure wind and weather.
Vio. 'Tis beauty truly bent, whose red and white Nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid on:
Lady, you are the cruellest she alive,
If you will lead these graces to the grave
And leave the world no copy.
Oli. O, sir, I will not be so hard-hearted; I will give out divers schedules of my beauty: it shall be inventoried, and every particle and utensil labelled to my will: as, item, two lips, indissoluble red; item, two grey eyes, with lids to them; item, one neck, one chin, and so forth.  Were you sent hither to praise me?
Vio. I see you what you are, you are too proud:
But, if you were the devil, you are fair.
My lord and master loves you: O, such love
Could be but recompensed, though you were crown'd
The nonpareil of beauty!
Oli. How does he love me?
Vio. With adorations, fervent tears,
With groans that thunder love, with sighs of fire.
Oli. Your lord does know my mind; I cannot love him:
Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth;
In voices well divulged, free, learned, and valiant;
And in dimension and the shape of nature
A gracious person: but yet I cannot love him;
He might have took his answer long ago.
Vio. If I did love you in my master's name,
With such a suffering: a deadly life,
In your denial I would find no sense;
I would not understand it.

Oli. Why, what would you?
Vio. Make me a willow cabin at your gate,
And call upon my soul within the house;
Write loyal cantons of condemned love
And sing the dirge even in the dead of night;
Hallow your name to the reverberate hills
And make the babbling gossip of the air
Cry out 'Olivia!'  O, you should not rest
Between the elements of air and earth,
But you should pity me!
Oli. You might do much.
What is your parentage?
Vio. Above my fortunes, yet my state is well: I am a gentleman.
Oli. Get you to your lord;
I cannot love him: let him send no more;
Unless, perchance, you come to me again,
To tell me how he takes it.  Fare you well;
I thank you for your pains: spend this for me.
Vio. I am no fee'd post, lady: keep your purse;
My master, not myself, lacks recompense.
Love make his heart of flint that you shall love;
And let your fervour, like my master's, be Pied in contempt!  Farewell, fair cruelty.
[Exit.
Oli. 'What is your parentage?'
'Above my fortunes, yet my state is well:
I am a gentleman.'  I'll be sworn thou art;
Thy tongue, thy face, thy limbs, actions and spirit,
Do give thee five-fold blazon: not too fast; soft, soft!
Unless the master were the man.  How now!
Even so quickly may one catch the plague?
Methinks I feel this youth's perfections
With an invisible and subtle stealth
To creep in at mine eyes.  Well, let it be.
What ho, Malvolio!

Re-enter Malvolio.

Mol. Here, madam, at your service.
Oli. Run after that same peevish messenger,
The county's man: he left this ring behind him,
Would I or not: tell him I 'll none of him.
Desire him not to flatter with his lord,
Nor hold him up with hopes: I am not for him:
If that the youth will come this way tomorrow,
I 'll give him reasons for 't: hee thee, Malvolio.
Mol. Madam, I will.
[Exit.
Oli. I do know not what, and fear to find
Mine eyes deceived, but a thought in my mind:
Fate, show thy force: ourselves we do not owe;
What is decreed must be, and be this so.
[Exit.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—The sea-coast.

Enter Antonio and Sebastian.

Ant. Will you stay no longer? nor will you not that I go with you?

Seb. By your patience, no.  My stars shine darkly over me: the malignity of my fate might perhaps distemper yours; therefore I shall crave of you your leave that I may bear my evils alone: it were a bad recompense for your love, to lay any of them on you.

Ant. Let me yet know of you whether you are bound.

Seb. No, sooth, sir: my determinate voyage is mere extravagancy.  But I perceive in you so excellent a touch of modesty, that you will not extort from my bosom: will you to keep it? therefore it charges me in manners the rather to express myself.  You must know of me then, Antonio, my name is Sebastian, which I called Roderigo.  My father was that Sebastian of Messaline, whom I know you have heard of.  He left behind him myself and a sister, both born in an hour; if the heavens had been pleased, would we had so ended! but you, sir, altered that; for some hour before you took me from the breach of the sea was my sister drowned.

Ant. Alas the day!

Seb. A lady, sir, though it was said she much resembled me, was yet of many accounted beautiful: but, though I could not with such estimative wonder overfar believe that, yet thus far I will boldly publish her; she bore a mind that envy could not but call fair.  She is drowned already, sir, with salt water, though I seem to drown her remembrance again with more.

Ant. Pardon me, sir, your bad entertainment.

Seb. O good Antonio, forgive me your trouble.

Ant. If you will not murder me for my love, let me be your servant.

Seb. If you will not undo what you have done, that is, kill him whom you have recovered, desire it not.  Fare ye well at once: my bosom is full of kindness, and I am yet so near the manners of my, mother, that upon the least occasion more mine eyes will tell tales of me. I am bound to the Count Orsino's court: farewell. [Exit.

236

Act II.

Enter Viola, Malvolio following.

Mai. Were not you even now with the Countess Olivia?

Tio. Even now, sir; on a moderate pace I have since arrived but hither.

Mai. She returns this ring to you, sir: you might have saved me my pains, to have taken it away yourself. She adds, moreover, that you should put your lord into a desperate assurance she will none of him: and one thing more, that you be never so hardy to come again in his affairs, unless it be to reject your lord from his presence. Receive it so.

Tio. She took the ring of me: I'll none of it.

Mai. Come, sir, you peevishly throw it to her; and her will is, it should be so returned; if it be worth stooping for, there it lies in your eye: if not, be it his that finds it. [Exit.

Tio. Sir Toby, I'm boring with her: what means this lady? Fortune forbid my outside have not charmed her! She made good view of me; indeed, so much, That sure methought her eyes had lost her tongue, For she did speak in starts distractedly.

She loves me, sure; the cunning of her passion Invites me in this鹧鸪, hen messenger.

None of my lord's ring! why, he sent her none. I am the man: if it be so, as 'tis,

Poor lady, she were better love a dream. Disguise, I see, thou art a wickedness, Wherein the pregnant enemy does much. How easy is it for the proper-false

In women's waxen hearts to set their forms! Alas, our frailty is the cause, not we! For such as we are made of, such we be. How will this fadge? my master loves her dearly; And I, poor monster, fond as much on him; And she, mistaken, stir'st to dote on me. What will become of this? As I am man, My state is desperate for my master's love; As I am woman—now alas the day!— What thriftless sighs shall poor Olivia breathe! O time! thou must untangle this, not I: It is too hard a knot for me to untie! [Exit.

Enter Sir Toby and Sir Andrew.

Sir To. Approach, Sir Andrew; not to be a-bed after midnight is to be up betimes; and 'diluculo surgere,' thou knowest.

Sir And. Nay, by my troth, I know not: but I know, to be up late is to be up late.

Sir To. A false conclusion: I hate it as an unfilled can. To be up after midnight and to go to bed then, is early: so that to go to bed after midnight is to go to bed betimes. Does not our life consist of the four elements?

Sir And. Faith, so they say; but I think it rather consists of eating and drinking.

Sir To. Thou'rt a scholar; let us therefore eat and drink. Marian, I say! a stoup of wine!

Enter Clown.

Sir And. Here comes the fool, I'faith.

Clo. How now, my hearts! did you never see the picture of 'we three'?

Sir To. Welcome, ass. Now let's have a catch.

Sir And. By my troth, the fool has an excellent breast. I had rather than forty shillings I had such a leg, and so sweet a breath to sing, as the fool has. In sooth, thou wast in very gracious fooling last night, when thou spakest of Platonic lusts, of the Vapians passing the equinoctial of Quebuen; 'twas very good, I'faith. I sent thee sixpence for thy leman; hadst it?

Clo. I did inpeticos thy gratification; for Malvolio's nose is no whistlock; my lady has a white hand, and the Myronics are no better messengers.

Sir And. Excellent! why, this is the best fooling, when all is done. Now, a song.

Sir To. Come on; there is sixpence for you: let's have a song.

Sir And. There's a testril of me too; if one knight give a—

Clo. Would you have a love-song, or a song of good life?

Sir To. A love-song, a love-song.

Sir And. Ay, ay: I care not for good life.

Clo. [Sings]

O mistrew mine, where are you roaming?

Sir And. Excellent good, I'faith.

Sir To. Good, good.

Clo. [Sings]

What is love? 'tis not hereafter;

Present mirth hath present laughter;

What's to come is still unsure:

In delay there lies no plenty;

Then come kiss me, sweet and twenty,

Youth's a stuff will not endure.

Sir And. A mellifluous voice, as I am true knight.

Sir To. A contagious breath.

Sir And. Very sweet and contagious, I'faith.

Sir To. To hear by the nose. It is dulcet in contagion. But shall we make the welkin dance indeed? shall we rouse the night-owl in a catch that will draw three souls out of one weaver? shall we do that?

Sir And. An you love me, let's do't: I am dog at a catch.

Clo. By'r lady, sir, and some dogs will catch well.

Sir And. Most certain. Let our catch be, 'Thou know.'

Clo. 'Hold thy peace, thou know,' knight? I shall be constrained in 't to call thee knave, knight.

Sir And. 'Tis not the first time I have constrained one to call me knave. Begin, fool: it begins 'Hold thy peace.'

Clo. I shall never begin if I hold my peace.

Sir And. Good, i'faith. Come, begin.

Enter Maria.

[Catch sung.

Mar. What a caterwauling do you keep here! If my lady have not called up her steward Malvolio and bid him turn you out of doors, never trust me.

Sir To. My lady's a Catalan, we are politicians, Malvolio's a Peg-a-Ramsay, and 'Three merry men be we.' Am not I consanguineous? am I not of her blood? Tillyvally, Lady! [Sings] 'There dwelt a man in Babylon, lady, lady!' [ing.

Clo. Beshrew me, the knight's in admirable fool.

Sir And. Ay, he does well enough if he be disposed, and so do I too: he does it with a better grace, but I do know nature.

Sir To. [Sings] 'O the twelfth day of December,—

Mar. For the love o' God, peace!

Enter Malvolio.

Mai. My masters, are you mad? or what are you? Have you no wit, manners, nor honesty, but to gabbble like tinkers at this time of night? Do ye make an alehouse of my lady's house, that ye squeak out your coziers' catches without any mitigation or remorse of voice? Is there no respect of place, persuadeless of company?"

Sir To. We did keep time, sir, in our catches. Sneak up!

Mad. Sir Toby, I must be round with you. My lady made me tell you, that, though she harbours you as her kinsmen, she's nothing allied to your disorder. If you can separate yourself and your misplayed demeanours, you are welcome to the house; if not, an it would please you to take leave of her, she is very willing to bid you farewell.

Sir To. 'Farewell, dear heart, since I must needs be gone.'

Mar. Nay, good Sir Toby.

Cfo. 'His eyes do show his days are almost done.'

Mad. Is't even so?

Sir To. 'But I will never die.'

Cfo. Sir Toby, there you lie.

Mad. This is much credit to you.

Sir To. 'Shall I bid him go?'

Cfo. 'What an if you do?'

Sir To. 'Shall I bid him go, and spare not?'

Cfo. 'O no, no, no, you dare not.'

Sir To. Out o' tune, sir: ye he. Art any more than a steward? Dost thou think, because thou art a steward, there shall be no more cakes and ale?

Cfo. Yes, by Saint Aine, and ginger shall be hot in the mouth too.

Sir To. Thou'rt i'the right. Go, sir, rub your chain with crumps. A stoup of wine, Maria!

Mad. Mistress Mary, if you prized my lady's favour at any thing more than contempt, you would not give means for this uncivil rule; she shall know of it, by this hand.

[Exit.

Mar. Go shake your ears.

Sir And. 'T were as good a deed as to drink when a man's a-hungry, to challenge him the field, and then to break promise with him and make a fool of him.

Sir To. 'Do'nt, knight: I'll write thee a challenge; or I'll deliver thy indignation to him by word of mouth.

Mar. Sweet Sir Toby, be patient for to-night; since the youth of the country was to-day with my lady, she is much out of quiet. For Monsieur Malvolio, let me alone with him: if I do not pull him into a mayword, and make him a common recreation, do not think I have wit enough to lie straight in my bed: I know I can do it.

Sir To. Possess us, possess us; tell us something of him.

Mar. Marry, sir, sometimes he is a kind of puritan.

Sir And. O, if I thought that, I'd beat him like a dog!

Sir To. What, for being a puritan? thy exquisite reason, dear knight?

Sir And. I have no exquisite reason for 't, but I have reason good enough.

Mar. The devil a puritan that he is, or any thing constantly, but a time-pieceman; an affectioned ass, that cons state without book and utter it by great swarths: the best persuaded of himself, so crammed, as he thinks, with excellencies, that it is his grounds of faith that all that look on him love him; and on that vice in him will my revenge find notable cause

Sir To. What wilt thou do?

Mar. I will drop in his way some obscure epistles of love; wherein, by the colour of his beard, the shape of his leg, the manner of his gait, the expression of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself most feelingly personated. I can write very like my lady your niece; on a forgotten matter we can hardly make distinction of our hands.
ACT II. TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL. SCENE V.

Vio. \( i \) think it well, my lord.
Duke. Then let thy love be younger than thyself, or thy affection cannot hold the bent: For women are as roses, whose fair flower being once displayed, doth fall that very hour. Vio. And so they are: alas, that they are so; To die, even when they to perfection grow!

Re-enter Curio and Clown.
Duke. O, fellow, come, the song we had last night. Mark it, Cesario, it is old and plain: The spinsters and the knitters in the sun And the maidens that weave their thread with Do use to chant it: it is silly sooth. [Bones And dailies with the innocence of love, Like the old age.
Clo. Are you ready, sir?

SONG.
Clo. Come away, come away, death; And in sad cypress let me be laid; Fly away, fly away, death: I am slain by a fair cruel maid. My shroud of white, stuck all with yew, O, prepare it! My part of death, no one so true Did share it.

Not a flower, not a flower sweet, On my black coffin let there be strown; Not a friend, not a friend greet My poor corpse, where my bones shall be thrown.
A thousand and thousand sighs to save, Lay me, O, where SAD TRUE LOVER NEVER FIND MY GRAVE, To weep there!

Duke. There's for thy pains.
Clo. No pains, sir: I take pleasure in singing, sir.
Duke. I'll pay thy pleasure then.
Clo. Truly, sir, and pleasure will be paid, one time or another.

Duke. Give me now leave to leave thee.
Clo. Now, the melancholy god protect thee: and the tailor make thy doublet of changeable stuff. For thy mind is a very o'zid. I would have men of such constancy put to sea, that their business might be every thing and their intent every where; for that's it that always makes a good voyage of nothing. Farewell. [Exit.

Duke. Let all the rest give place. [Curio and Attendants retire. Once more, Cesario.

Get thee to yond same sovereign cruelty: Tell her, my love, more noble than the world, Prizes not quantity of dirty lands: The parts that fortune hath bestow'd upon her, Tell her, I hold as giglidy as fortune: But 'tis that miracle and queen of gems That nature pranks her in attracts my soul.
Vio. But if she cannot love you, sir?
Duke. I cannot be so answer'd.

Vio. Sooth, but you must. Say that some lady, as perhaps there is, Hath for your love as great a pang of heart As you have for Olivia: you cannot love her: You tell her so; must she not then be answer'd?

Duke. There is no woman's sides Can hide the beating of so strong a passion As love doth give my heart; no woman's heart So big, to hold so much; they lack retention. Alas, their love may be call'd appetite, No motion of the liver, but the palate, That suffer surfeit, Clewment and revolt: But mine is all as hungry as the sea, And can digest as much: make no compare Between that love a woman can bear me And that I owe Olivia.

Vio. Ay, but I know —
Duke. What dost thou know?
Vio. Too well what love women to men may owe: In fact, they are as true of heart as we. My father had a daughter loved a man, As it might be, perhaps, were I a woman, I should your lordship.
Duke. And what's her history?
Vio. A blank, my lord. She never told her love, But let concealment, like a worm i' the bud. Feed on her damask cheek; she pined in thought, And with a green and yellow melancholy. She sat like patience on a monument, Smiling at grief. When this love indeed? We men may say more, swear more: but indeed Our shows are more than will: for still we prove Much in our vows, but little in our love.
Duke. But died thy sister of her love, my boy?
Vio. I am all the daughters of my father's house. And all the brothers too; and yet I know not. Sir, shall I to this lady?
Duke. Ay, that's the theme. To her in haste; give her this jewel; say, My love can give no place, hide no denay. [Exit.

SCENE V. — Olivia's garden.

Enter Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Fabian.
Sir To. Come thy ways, Signior Fabian.
Fab. Nay, I'll come: if I lose a scruple of this sport, let me be boiled to death with melancholy.
Sir To. Wouldst thou not be glad to have the niggardly rascally sheep-liter come by some notable shame?
Fab. I would exult, man; you know, he brought me out o' favour with my lady about a bear-baiting here.
Sir To. To anger him we'll have the bear again: and we will fool him black and blue: shall we not, Sir Andrew?
Sir And. An we do not, it is pity of our lives.
Sir To. Here comes the little villain.

Enter Maria.

How now, my metal of India! Mar. Get ye all three into the box-tree: Malvolio's coming down this walk: he has been yonder i' the sun practising behaviour to his own shadow this halfe hour: obverse him, for the love of mockery, for I know this letter will make a contemplative bluff of him. Close, in the name of jesting! Lie thou there [throws down a letter]; for here comes the trout that must be caught with tickling. [Exit.

Enter Malvolio.

Mal. 'Tis but fortune: all is fortune. Maria once told me she did affect me; and I have heard herself come thus near, that, should she fancy, it should be one of my complexion. Besides, she uses me with a more exalted respect than any one else that follows her. What should I think on 't? Sir To. Here's an overweening rogue!
Fab. O, peace! Contemplation, makes a rare turkey-cock of him: how he jets under his advanced phemes!
Sir And. 'Slight, I could so beat the rogue!
Sir To. Peace, I say.
Mal. To be Count Malvolio! Let it; no woman's coat.
Sir And. Pistol him, pistol him.
Sir To. Peace, peace!

Mal. There is example for't: the lady of the Shyly married the yeoman of the wardrobe.
Sir And. Blew on him, Jetebel! 239
ACT II. TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL. SCENE V.

Mal. Having been three months married to her, sitting and doing nothing.

Sir To. O, for a stonebow, to hit him in the eye!

Mal. Calling my officers about me, in my branched velvet gown; having come from a day-bed, where I have left Olivia sleeping.

Sir To. Fire and brimstone!

Mal. O, peace, peace! And then to have the honour of state; and after a demure travel of regard, telling them I know my place as I would they should do theirs, to ask for my kinsman Toby.

Sir To. Bolts and shackles!

Mal. O, peace, peace, peace! now, now, now.

Mal. Seven of my people, with an obedient start, make out for him: I frown the while; and per-chance wind up my watch, or play with—my—some rich jewel. Toby approaches; courtesies there to Sir To. Shall this fellow live?

Fab. Though our silence be drawn from us with cars, yet peace.

Mal. I extend my hand to him thus, quenching my familiar smile with an austere regard of control.

Sir To. And does not Toby take you a blow o' the lip?

Mal. Saying, 'Cousin Toby, my fortunes having cast me on your niece give me this prerogative of Sir To. What, what?

[plot.]

Mal. 'You must amend your drunkenness.'

Sir To. Out, scab!

Fab. Nay, patience, or we break the sinews of ourMal. Besides, you waste the treasure of your time with a foolish knight,'—

Sir And. That's me, I warrant you.

Mal. 'One Sir Andrew,'—

[fool.]

Sir And. I knew 'twas I; for many do call me Mal. What employment have we here?

Fab. Now is the woodcock near the gin.

Sir To. O, peace! and the spirit of humours intimate reading aloud to him!

Mal. By my life, this is my lady's hand: these be her very Cs, her Us and her Ts; and thus makes she Great P's. It is, in contempt of question, her hand.

Sir And. Her Cs, her Us and her Ts: why that?

Mal. [Reads] 'To the unknown beloved, this, and my good wishes;'—her very phrases! By your leave, X. S. I am the impression she Lucrece, with which she uses to seal: 'tis my lady. To whom should this be?

Fab. This wins him, liver and all.

Mal. [Reads] Jove knows I love:

Fab. But who?

Jips, do not move;

No man must know.

'No man must know.' What follows? the numbers altered! 'No man must know.' If this should be thee, Malvolio?

Sir To. Marry, hang thee, brock!

Mal. [Reads] I may command where I advertise:

But silence, like a Lucrece knife,

With bloodless stroke my heart doth gore:

M. O, A, I, doth sway my life.

Fab. A certain ridet!

Sir To. Excellent wench, say I.

Mal. 'M, O, A, I, doth sway my life.' Nay, but first, let me see, let me see, let me see.

Fab. What dish o' poison has she dressed him?

Sir To. And with what the stain chokes at it!

Mal. 'I may command where I advertise.' Why, she may command me: I serve her; she is my lady. Why, this is evident to any formal capacity; there is a distinct excellence in this discourse, and that alphabetical position portent? If I could make that resemble something in me,—Softly! M. O, A, I.

Sir To. O, ay, make up that: he is now at a cold scent.

Fab. Soter will cry upon 't for all this, though it be as rank as a fox.

Mal. M. — Malvolio: M. — why, that begins my Fab. Did not I say he would work it out? the ear is excellent at faults.

Mal. M. — but then there is no consonancy in the sequel; that suffers under probation. A should follow, but O does.

Fab. And O shall end, I hope.

Sir To. Ay, or I'll engulph him, and make him Mal. And then I comes behind.

Fab. Ay, an you had any eye behind you, you might see more detection at your heels than fortunes before your face.

Mal. M. O, A, I; this simulation is not as the former: and yet, to crush this a little, it would bow to me, for every one of these letters are in my name. Soft!' here follows prose.

[Reads] If this fall into thy hand, revolve. In my star I am above thee; but be not afraid of greatness: some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon 'em. Thy Fates open their hands; let thy blood and spirit embrace them; and, to inure thyself to what thou art like to be, cast thy humble slough and appear fresh. Be opposite with a knavish, surly with servants; let thy tongue hang arguments of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity: she thus advises thee that sighs for thee. Remember who commend thy yellow stockings, and wished to see thee ever cross-gartered: I say, remember. Go to, thou art made, if thou desirest to be so; if not, let me see thee a steward still, the fellow of servants, and not worthy to touch Fortune's fingers. Farewell. She that would alter services with thee,

THE FORTUNATE-UNHAPPY.' Daylight and champagne discovers not more; this is old. I will be proud, I will be grand and polished. I will baffle Sir Toby, I will wash off gross acquaintance, I will be point-deviser the very man. I do not now fool myself, to let imagination jape me; for every reason exciteth to this, that my lady loves me. She did commend my yellow stockings of late, she denounced me being cross-gartered; and in this she manifests herself to my love, and with a kind of injunction drives me to these habits of her liking. I thank my stars I am happy. I will be strange, stout, in yellow stockings, and cross-gartered, even with the swiftness of putting on. Jove and my stars be praised! Here is yet a postscript.

[Reads] Thou canst not choose but know who I am. If thou entertainest my love, let it appear in thy smiling; thy smiles become thee well; therefore in my presence still smile, dear my sweet, I prithee. Jove, I thank thee: I will smile; I will do everything that thou wilt have me.

Fab. I will not give my part of this sport for a pension of thousands to be paid from the Soply.

Sir To. I could marry this wench for this device.

Sir And. So could I too.

Sir To. And ask no other dowry with her but such another ridet!

Sir And. Nor I neither.

Fab. Here comes my noble gull-catcher.

Re-enter Maria.

Sir To. Wilth thou set thy foot o' my neck?

Sir And. Or o' mine either?
TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.—Act III., Scene i.
ACT III.  TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.  SCENE I.

SCENE I.—Olivia's garden.

Enter Viola, and Clown with a tabor.

Vio. Save thee, friend, and thy music: dost thou live by thy tabor?

Clo. No, sir, I live by the church.

Vio. Art thou a churchman?

Clo. No such matter, sir: I do live by the church: for I do live at my house, and my house doth stand by the church.

Vio. So thou mayst say, the king lies by a beggar, if a beggar dwell near him: or, the church stands by the tabor, if thy tabor stand by the church.

Clo. You have said, sir. To see this age! A sentence is but a cheverel glove to a good wit: how quickly the wrong side may be turned outward!

Vio. Nay, that's certain: they that daily nicely with words may quickly make them wanton.

Clo. I would, therefore, my sister had had no name, sir.

Vio. Why, man?

Clo. Why, sir, her name's a word: and to daily with that word might make my sister wanton. But indeed words are very rascals since bonds disgraced

Vio. Thy reason, man?

[Clo. yields to his master.]

Vio. Truth, sir, I can yield you none without words; and words are grown so false, I am loath to prove reason with them.

Vio. I warrant thou art a merry fellow and carest for nothing.

Clo. Not so, sir, I do care for something; but in my conscience, sir, I do not care for you: if that be to care for nothing, sir, I would it make you invisible.

Vio. Art not thou the Lady Olivia's fool?

Clo. No, indeed, sir, the Lady Olivia has no folly: she will keep no fool, sir, till she be married; and fools are as like husbands as pilchards are to herrings; the husband's the bigger: I am indeed not her fool, but her corrupter of words.

Vio. I saw thee late at the Count Orsino's.

Clo. Foolery, sir, does walk about the orb like the sun, it shines everywhere. I would be sorry, sir, but the fool should be as oft with your master as with your mistress: I think I saw your wisdom there.

Vio. Nay, an thou pass upon me, I'll no more with thee. Hold, there's expenses for thee.

Clo. Now Jove, in his next commodity of hair, send thee a beard!

Vio. By my troth, I'll tell thee, I am almost sick for one. [Aside] though I would not have it grow on my chin. Is thy lady within?

Clo. Would not a pair of these have bred, sir?

Vio. Yes, being kept together and put to use.

Clo. The matter, I hope, is not great, sir, butting but a beggar; Cressida was a beggar. My lady is within, sir. I will construe to them whence you come; who are and what you would be out of my welkin, I might say 'element,' but the word is over-worn.

[Exit.

Vio. This fellow is wise enough to play the tool: And to do that well craves a kind of wit: He must observe their mood on whom he jests, The quality of persons and the time. And, like the beggar, check at every feather That comes before his eye. This is a practice As full of labour as a wise man's art: For folly that he wisely shows is fit; But wise men, folly-fall'n, quite taint their wit.

Enter Sir Toby and Sir Andrew.

Sir To. Save you, gentleman.

Sir And. And you, sir.

Sir To. Save you, gentleman.

Sir And. Dieu vous garde, monsieur.

Sir To. E't vous aussi; votre serviteur.

Sir And. I hope, sir, you are; and I am yours.

Sir To. Will you encounter the house? my niece is desirous you should enter, if your trade be to her.

Sir And. I am bound to your niece, sir; I mean, she is the list of my voyay.

Sir To. Taste your legs, sir; put them to motion.

Sir And. My legs do better understand me, sir, than I understand what you mean by bidding me taste

Sir To. I mean, to go, sir, to enter. [My legs.]

Sir And. I will answer you with gait and entrance. But we are prevented.

Eater Olivia and Maria.

Most excellent accomplished lady, the heavens rain odours on you! Sir And. That youth's a rare courtier: 'Rain odours,' well.

Vio. My matter hath no voice, lady, but to your own most pregnant and vouchers set car.

Sir And. 'Odours,' 'pregnant,' and 'voucher.'

I'II get 'em all three all ready.

Oli. Let the garden-door be shut, and leave me to my hearing. [Exit Sir Toby, Sir Andrew, and Maria.] Give me your hand, sir.

Vio. My duty, madam, and most humble service.

Oli. What is your name?

Vio. Cesario is your servant's name, fair princess.

Oli. My servant, sir! 'T was never merry world Since lowly feigning was called compliment:

You're servant to the Count Orsino, youth, [youers]

Vio. And he is yours, and his must needs be Your servant's servant is your servant, madam.

Oli. For him. I think not on him: for his thoughts, Would they were blanks, rather than fill'd with me!

Vio. Madam, I come to what your gentle thoughts On his behalf.

Vio. But, would you undertake another suit, I had rather hear you to solicit that

Than music from the spheres.

Vio. Dear lady,—

Oli. Give me leave, beseech you. I did send,
Sir To. And they have been grand-jury men since before Noah was a sailor.

Fab. She did show favour to the youth in your sight; and, if you would expose him to you, to awake your dormant valour, to put fire in your heart, and brimstone in your liver. You should then have accosted her; and with some excellent jests, true-new from the mint, you should have binged the youth into dumness. This was looked for at your hand, and this was baled; the double opportunity you let time wash off, and you are now sailed into the north of my lady's opinion; where you will hang like an icicle on a Dutchman's beard, unless you do redeem it by some laudable attempt either of valour or policy.

Sir And. Ain't he by any way, it must be with valour; for policy I hate: I laid as lief be a Brownist as a politician.

Sir To. Why, then, build me thy fortunes upon the basis of valour. Challenge me the count's youth to fight with him; hurt him in eleven places: my piece shall take noted it; and assure thyself, there is no love-broker in the world can more prevail in man's commendation with woman than report of valour.

Fab. There is no way but this, Sir Andrew.

Sir And. Will either of you bear me a challenge to Sir Toby?

Sir To. Go, write it in a martial hand; be curt and brief; it is no matter how witty, so it be elegant and full of invention: taunt him with the licence of ink: if thou shalt' unmind some thirte, it shall not be amiss; and as many lies as will lie in thy sheet of paper, although the sheet were big enough for the bed of Ware in England, set 'em down: go about it. Let there be gall enough in thy ink, though thou write with a goosepen, no matter: about it.

Sir And. Where shall I find you?

Sir To. We'll call thee at the cubiculo; go.

[Exit Sir Andrew.

Fab. This is a dear manakin to you, Sir Toby.

Sir To. I have been dear to him, lad, some two thousand strong, or so.

Fab. We shall have a rare letter from him: but you'll not deliver it.

Sir To. Never trust me, then; and by all means stir on the youth to an answer. I think oxen and wainropes cannot hale them together. For Andrew, if he were opened, and you find so much blood in his liver as will clog the foot of alea, I'll eat the rest of the anatomy.

Sir To. And his opposite, the youth, bears in his visage no great preface of cruelty.

Enter Maria.

Sir To. Look, where the youngest wren of nine cows.

Mur. If you desire the spleen, and will laugh yourselves into stitches, follow me. Yond gull Malvolio is turned heathen, a very renegade; for there is no Christian, that means to be saved by believing rightly, can ever believe such impossible passages of grossness. He's in yellow stockings.

Sir To. And cross-gartered?

Mur. Most villainously: like a pedant that keeps a school i' the church. I have dogged him, like his murderer. He does obey every point of the letter that I dropped to betray him: he does smile his face into more lines than is in the new map with the augmentation of the Indies; you have not seen such a thing as 'tis. I can hardly forbear hurling things at him. I know my lady will strike him: if she do, he'll smile and take 't for a great favour.

Sir To. Come, bring us, bring us where he is.
ACT III.  TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.  SCENE IV.

Enter Sebastian and Antonio.

Seb. I would not by my will have troubled you; but, since you make your pleasure of your pains, I will no further chide you.

Ant. I could not stay behind you: my desire,
More sharp than filed steel, did spur me forth;
And not all love to see you, though so much
As might have drawn one to a longer voyage,
But jealousy what might befal your travel.
Being skilless in these parts: which to a stranger,
Unguided and unfriend'd, often prove
Rough and unhospitable: my willing love,
The rather by these arguments of fear, set forth in your pursuit.

Seb. My kind Antonio,
I can no other answer make but thanks,
And thanks; and ever . . . oft good turns
Are shuffled off with such uncurrent pay:
But, were my worth as is my conscience firm,
You should find better dealing. What's to do?
Shall we go see the reliques of this town?
Ant. To-morrow, sir: best first go see your lodging.
Seb. I am not weary, and 'tis long to-night.
I pray you, let us satisfy our eyes
With the memorials and the things of fame
That do renown this city.

Ant. Would you 'juld pardon me,
I do not without danger walk these streets:
Once, in a sea-fight, 'gainst the count his galleys
I did some service: of such note indeed,
That were I 't'en here it would scarce be answer'd.
Seb. Behold you know great number of his people.
Ant. The offence is not of such a bloody nature;
Albeit the quality of the time and quarrel
Might well have given us bloody argument,
It might have since been answer'd in repaying
What we took from them: which, for traffic's sake,
Most of our city did: only myself stood out;
For which, if I be lapsed in this place,
I shall pay dear.

Seb. Do not then walk too open.
Ant. It doth not fit me. Hold, sir, here 's my purse.

In the south suburbs, at the Elephant,
Is best to lodge: I will bespeak our diet,
While you may till the time for your knowledge.
With viewing of the town: there shall you have me.

Seb. Why I your purse?

Ant. Haply your eye shall light upon some toy
You have desire to purchase; and your store,
I think, is not for idle market, sir.
Surely, your purse-bearer and leave you
For an hour.

Seb. To the Elephant.
Seb. I do remember. [Exit.

SCENE IV.—Olivia's garden.

Enter Olivia and Maria.

Oli. I have sent after him: he says he'll come:
How shall I feast him? what bestow of him?
For youth is bought more oft than beass'd or bor-speak too loud. [row'd.
Where is Malvolio? he is sad and civil,
And suits well for a servant with my fortunes:
Where is Malvolio?

Mar. He's coming, madam; but in very strange manner. He is, sure, possesed, madam.

Oli. Why, what's the matter? does he rave?

Mar. Madam, he does nothing but smile:
your ladyship were best to have some guard about you, if he come; for, sure, the man is taint'd in 's wits.

Oli. Go call him hither. [Exit Maria.] I am as mad as he,
If sad and merry madness equal be.

Re-enter Maria, with Malvolio.

Mal. Sweet lady, ho, ho.

Oli. Smihest thou?

Mal. I sent for thee upon a sad occasion.

Oli. Mad, sad, lady! I could be sad: this does make some obstruction in the blood, this cross-gartering; but what of that? if it please the eye of one, it is with me as the true very sonnet is: 'Please one,
and please all.'

Oli. Why, how dost thou, man? what is the matter with thee?

Mal. Not black in my mind, though yellow in my legs. It did come to his hands, and commands shall be executed: I think we do know the sweet Roman hand.

Oli. Wilt thou go to bed, Malvolio? [Thee.

Mal. To bed! ay, sweet-heart, and I'll come to Oli. God comfort thee! Why dost thou smile so and kiss thy hand so oft?

Oli. At your request! yes; nightingales answer
Mar. Why appear you with this ridiculous boldness before my lady?

Mal. 'B not afraid of greatness?' 't was well writ.

Oli. What meanest thou by that, Malvolio?

Mal. 'S are born great,—

Oli. Ha!

Mal. 'Some achieve greatness.'

Oli. What sayest thou?

Mal. 'And some have greatness thrust upon them.'

Oli. Heaven re-tore thee! [stockings.

Mal. 'Remember who recommended thy yellow
Oli. Thy yellow stockings?

Mal. 'And wished to see thee cross-gartered.'

Oli. Cross-gartered! [Is so:

Mal. 'Go to, thou art made, if thou desirest to Oli. Am I made?

Mal. 'If not, let me see thee a servant still.'

Oli. Why, this is very midsummer madness.

Enter Servant.

Ser. Madam, the young gentleman of the Count
Orsino's is returned: I could hardly entreat him back: he attends your ladyship's pleasure.

Oli. I shall see him. [Exit Servant.] Good Maria, let this fellow be looked to. Where's my cousin Toby? Let some of my people have a special Care of him: I would not have him miscarry for the half of my dowry. [Exit Olivia and Maria.

Mal. O, ho! do you come near me now? no worse may the ex-Sir Toby to look to me! This concurs directly with the letter: she sends him on purpose, that I may appear stubborn to him; for she incites me to that in the letter. 'Cast thy humble slouch,' says she: 'be opposite with a kinsman, surly
th water with servants; let thy tongue tang with arguments _of state; put thyself into the trick of singularity:
_and consequently sets down the manner how: as,
a sad face, a reverend carriage, a slow tongue, in the habit of some sir of note, and so forth. I have lirmed her; but it is Jove's doing, and Jove make me thankful! And when she went away now, 'Let this fellow be looked to,' 'fellow' not Malvolio, nor after my degree, but fellow. Why every thing ad-hes together, that no dram of a scruple, no scripule _of a scruple, no obstacle, no incredulous or unsafe stance—What can be said? Nothing that can be can come between me and the full prospect _of my hopes. Well, Jove, not I, is the doer of this, and he is to be thanked.

Re-enter Maria, with Sir Toby and Fabian.

Sir To. Which way is he, in the name of sanctity?
If all the devils of hell be drawn in little, and Legion himself possessed him, yet I'll speak to him.
ACT III. TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL. SCENE IV.

_Fab._ Here he is, here is he. How is 't with you, sir? how is 't with you, man?

_Sir._ O, I discard you; let me enjoy my private go.

_Mar._ Lo, how hollow the fiend speaks within him! did not I tell you? _Sir Toby_, thy lady prays you to have a care of him.

_Mal._ Ah, ha! does she so? _Sir Toby_, go to; peace, peace; we must deal gently with him; let me alone. How do you, _Malvolio_? how 's 't with you? What, man! defy the devil: consider, he's an enemy to mankind.

_Mal._ Do you know what you say?

_Mar._ La you, an you speak ill of the devil, how looks he blam'd? Pray God, he be not bewitched!

_Fab._ Carry his water to the wise woman.

_Mar._ Marr'y, and it shall be done to-morrow morning, if 't live. My lady would not lose him for more than I'll say.

_Mal._ How now, mistress! _Lord!_

_Sir To._ Prithieve, hold thy peace; this is not the way: do you not see you move him? let me alone with him.

_Fab._ No way but gentleness; gently, gently: the fiend is rough, and will not be roughly used.

_Sir._ Why, how now, my laycock! how dost thou, clack?

_Mal._ Sir!

_Sir To._ Ay, Biddy, come with me. What, man! 'tis not for gravity to play at cherry-pit with Satan; hang him, foul collier!

_Mar._ Get him to say his prayers, good _Sir Toby_, get him to pray.

_Mal._ My prayers, minx! [Exit.]

_Mar._ No, I warrant you, he will not hear of god;

_Mal._ Go, hang yourselves all! you are idle shallow things: I am not of your element; you shall know more hereafter.

[Exit.]

_Sir To._ Is't possible?

_Fab._ If this were played upon a stage now, I could condemn it as an improbable fiction.

_Sir To._ His very genius hath taken the infection of the device, man.

_Mar._ Nay, pursue him now, lest the device take air and rust.

_Fab._ Why, we shall make him mad indeed.

_Mar._ The house will be the quieter.

_Sir To._ Come, we'll have him in a dark room and bound. My niece is already in the belief that he's mad: we may carry it thus, for our pleasure and his. Amen! till our very pastime, tired out of breath, prompt us to have mercy on him; at which time we will bring the device to the bar and crown thee for a funder of madmen. But see, but see.

_Enter Sir Andrew._

_Fab._ More matter for a May morning.

_Sir And._ Here's the challenge, read it: I warrant there's vinegar and pepper in it.

_Fab._ Is 't so saucy?

_Sir And._ Ay, is 't, I warrant him: do but read. _Sir To._ Give me. [Reads] 'Youth, whatsoever thou art, thou art but a surly fellow.'

_Fab._ Good, and valiant.

_Sir To._ [Reads] 'Wonder not, nor admire not in thy mind, why I do call thee so, for I will shew thee no reason for 't.'

_Fab._ A good note; that keeps you from the blow of the next page.

_Sir To._ [Reads] 'Thou comest to the lady Olivia, and in my sight she uses thee kindly; but thou liest in thy throat; that is not the matter I challenge thee for.' [Less.]

_Fab._ Very brief, and to exceeding good sense.

_Sir To._ [Reads] 'I will waylay thee going home; where if it be thy chance to kill me,'—

_Fab._ Good.

_Sir To._ [Reads] 'Thou killest me like a rogue and a villain.' [good]

_Fab._ Still you keep off! the windy side of the law:

_Sir To._ [Reads] 'Fare thee well; and God have mercy upon one of our souls! He may have mercy upon mine; but my hope is better, and so look to thyself. Thy friend, as thou usest him, and thy sworn enemy _Andrew Aguecheek._' If this letter move him not, his legs cannot: I'll give 't him.

_Mar._ You may have very fit occasion for 't: I is now in some commerce with my lady, and will by and by depart.

_Sir To._ Go, _Sir Andrew_; scout me for him at the corner of the orchard like a ham-baily: so soon as ever thou seest him, draw; and, as thou drawest, swear horrible; for it comes to pass off that a terrible oath, with a swaggering accent sharply twanged off, gives mankind more approbation than even proof itself would have earned him. Away!

_Sir And._ Nay, let me alone for swearing. [Exit.]

_Sir To._ Now will I deliver his letter: for the behaviour of the young gentleman gives him out to be of good capacity and breeding: his employment between his lord and my niece confirms no less: therefore this letter, being so excellently ignorant, will breed no terror in the youth: he will find it comes from a clodpole. But, _Sir_, I will deliver his challenge by word of mouth; set upon _Aguecheek_ a notable report of valour: and drive the gentleman, as I know his youth will aptly receive it, into a most hideous opinion of his rage, skill, fury and impetuousness. This will so fright them both that they will kill one another by the look, like cocktrixes.

_Re-enter Olivia, with Viola._

_Fab._ Here he comes with your niece: give them way till he take leave, and presently after him.

_Sir To._ I will meditate the while upon some horrid message for a challenge.

[Exeunt _Sir Toby, Fabian, and Maria._]

_Oli._ I have said too much into a heart of stone

And laid mine honour too uncharily out:

There's something in me that reproves my fault;

But such a headstrong potent fault it is,

That it but ragely repents;

_Bears Viola._

With the same 'tention that your passion

Goes on my master's grief.

_Oli._ Here, wear this jewel forme, 't is my picture;

Refuse it not; it hath no tongue to vex you;

And I beseech you come again to-morrow.

What shall I say but that I'll deny

That honour saved may upon asking give?

_Vio._ Nothing but this; your true love for my master.

_Oli._ How with mine honour may I give him that

Which I have given to you?

_Vio._ I will acquit you.

_Oli._ Well, come again to-morrow; fare thee well:

A friend like thee might bear my soul to hell. [Exit.]

_Re-enter Sir Toby and Fabian._

_Sir To._ Gentleman, God save thee.

_Vio._ And you, sir.

_Sir To._ That defence thou hast, betake thee to 't:

Of what nature the wrongs are thou hast done him,

I know not; but thy intercepster, full of despite,

Bloody as the hunter, attends thee at the orchard-end;

Disown thy tongue be yare in thy preparation,

Thy words shall not convene with thy meaning, wild and deadly.

_Vio._ You mistake, sir; I am sure no man hath any quarrel to me: my remembrance is very free and clear from any image of offence done to any man.

_Sir To._ You'll find it otherwise, I assure you: therefore, if you hold your life at any price, betake you to your guard; for your opposite hath in him.
what youth, strength, skill and wrath can furnish man withal.

Vio. I pray you, sir, what is he?

Sir To. He is knight, dabbled with unhatched rapier and on carpet consideration; but he is a devil in private brawl; souls and bodies hath he divorced thence; and his incumbrance at this moment is so implaceable, that satisfaction can be none but by pangs of death and sepulture. Hob, nob, is his word; give 't or take 't.

Vio. I will return again into the house and desire some conduct of the lady. I am no fighter, I have heard of some kind of men that put quarrels purposely on others, to taste their valour; belike this is a man of that quirk.

Sir To. Sir, no; his indignation derives itself out of a very competent injury; therefore, get you on and give him his desire. Back you shall not to the house, unless you undertake that with me which with as much safety you might answer him; therefore, on, or strip your sword stark naked; for meddle you must, that's certain, or forswear to wear iron about you.

Vio. This is as uncivil as strange. I beseech you, let this be a private office as to know of the knight what my offence to him is: it is something of my negligence, nothing of my purpose.

Sir To. I will do so. Signior Fabian, stay you by this gentleman till my return. [Exit.

Vio. Pray you, sir, do you know of this matter? Fab. I know the knight is incensed against you, even to a mortal altercation; but nothing of the circumstance more.

Vio. I beseech you, what manner of man is he?

Fab. Nothing of that wonderful promise, to read him by his form, as you are like to find him in the proof of his value. He is, indeed, sir, the most skillful, bloody and fatal oppositer that you could possibly have found in any part of Illyria. Will you walk towards him? I will make your peace with him if I can.

Vio. I shall be much bound to you for 't: I am one that had rather go with sir priest than sir knight: I care not who knows so much of my mettle.

[Enter Re-enter Sir Toby, with Sir Andrew.

Sir To. Why, man, he's a very devil; I have not seen such a frago. I had a pass with him, rapier, scalawag and all, and he gives me the stroke in with such a mortal motion, that it is inevitable; and on the answer, he pays you as surely as your feet hit the ground they step on. They say he has been fencer to the Sophy.

Sir And. Fox on't, I'll not meddle with him.

Sir To. Ay, but he will not now be pacified; Fabian can scarce hold him yonder.

Sir And. Plague on't, an I thought he had been valiant and so cunning in fence, I'd have seen him damned ere I'd have challenged him. Let him let the matter slip, and I'll give him my horse, grey Cane.

Sir To. I'll make the motion; stand here, make a good show on 't; this shall end without the preclusion of souls. [Aside] Marry, I'll ride your horse as well as I ride you.

[Exit Fabian and Viola.

To Fab.] I have his horse to take up the quarrel; I have persuaded him the youth's a devil.

Fab. He is as horribly conceited of him; and pants and looks pale, as if a bear were at his heels.

Sir To. [To Vio.] There's no remedy, sir; he will fight with you for 's oath sake; marry, he had better bethought him of his quarrel, and he finds that now scarce to be worth talking of: therefore draw, for the supportance of his vow; he protests he will not hurt you.

Vio. [Aside] Pray God defend me! A little thing would make me tell them how much I lack of a man.

Fab. Give ground, if you see him furious.

Sir To. Come, Sir Andrew, there's no remedy; the gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you; he cannot by the duello avoid it; but he has promised me, as he is a gentleman and a soldier, he will not hurt you. Come on; to 't.

Sir And. Pray God, he keep his oath!

Vio. I do assure you, 't is against my will.

[They draw.

Enter Antonio.

Ant. Put up your sword. If this young gentleman have done offence, I take the fault on me: [man If you offend him, I will for him defy you.

Sir To. You, sir! why, what are you?

Ant. One, sir, that for his love dares yet do more Than you have heard him brag to you he will.

Sir To. Nay, if you be an undertaker, I am for you.

[They draw.

Enter Officers.

Off. O good Sir Toby, hold! here come the officers. Sir To. I'll be with you anon.

Vio. Pray, sir, put your sword up, if you please.

Sir And. Marry, will I, sir; and, for that I promised you, I will be as good as my word: he will bear you easily and reins well.

First Off. This is the man: do thy office.

Sec. Of Sir Antonio, I arrest thee at the suit of Count Orsino.

Ant. You do mistake me, sir.

First Off. No, sir, no jot; I know your favour Though now you have no sea-cap on your head.

Take him away: he knows I know him well.

Ant. What motive, officer? [To Vio.] This comes with seeking you;

But there's no remedy; I shall answer it,

What will you do, now my necessity

Makes me to ask you for my purse? It grieves me Much more for what I cannot do for you Than what befals myself. You stand amazed;

But be of comfort;

Sec. Off. Come, sir, away.

Ant. I must entreat of you some of that money.

Vio. What money, sir?

For the fair kindness you have show'd me here, And, part, being promised, your present trouble, But of my private ability

I'll lend you something: my having is not much;

I'll make division of my present with you:

Hold, there's half my coffer.

Ant. Will you deny me now? Is't possible that my deserts to you

Can lack persuasion? Do not tempt my misery,

Lest that it make me so unsound a man

As to upbraid you with these kindnesses

That I have done for you.

Vio. I know of none;

Nor know I you by voice or any feature;

I hate ingratitude more in a man

Than lying, vainness, babbling, drunkenness,

Or any taint of vice whose strong corruption

Inhabits our frail blood.

Ant. O heavens themselves!

Sec. Off. Come, sir, I pray you, to. [see here Ant. Let me speak a little. This youth that you snatched'd one half out of the jaws of death,

Relieved him with such sanctity of love,

And to his image, which me thought did promise Most venerable worth, did I devote.

Away! First Off. What's that to us? The time goes by:

Ant. But, I'll have my vengeful soul pay this god! Thou hast, Sebastian, done good service shame.

In nature there's no blemish but the mind;

None can be call'd deform'd but the unkind;
ACT IV.

TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL. SCENE I.

Virtue is beauty, but the beauteous evil Are empty trunks o'erfurnish'd by the devil. First Off. The man grows mad: away with him! Come, come, sir. And. Lead me on. [Exit with Officers. Enter Sebastian and Clown. Let him in whose words do from such passion fly, That he believes himself: so do not I. Prove true, imagination, O, prove true, That I, dear brother, be now ta'en for you! Sir To. Come hither, knight; come hither, Fabian: we'll whisper o'er a couplet or two of most sage says. Fio. He named Sebastian: I my brother know Yet living in my glass; even such and so In favour was my brother, and he went Still in this fashion, colour, ornament, For him I imitate: O, if it prove, Tempests are kind and salt waves fresh in love. [Exit. Sir To. A very dishonest paltry boy, and more a coward than a hare: his dishonesty appears in leaving his friend in the necessity of deying him: and for his cowardship, ask Fabian. Fab. A coward, a most devout coward, religions in it. Sir And. 'Slid, I'll after him again and beat him. Sir To. Do; cut him soundly, but never draw thy sword. Sir And. An I do not.— [Exit. Sir To. I dare lay any money 't will be nothing yet. [Exeunt.

ACT IV.

SCENE I.—Before Olivia's house.

Enter Sebastian and Clown.

Clo. Will you make me believe that I am not sent for you?

Sir. Go to, go to, thou art a foolish fellow: Let me be clear of thee.

Clo. Well hearken'd; wilt thou? No, I do not know you; nor I am not sent to you by my lady, to bid you come speak with her; nor your name is not Master Cesario; nor this is not my nose neither, Nothing that is so is so.

Sir. I, prithee, vent thy folly somewhere else: Thou know'st not me.

Clo. Vent my folly! he has heard that word of some great man and now applies it to a fool. Vent my folly! I am afraid this great, the world, will prove a cockney. I prithee now, unbird thy strangeness and tell me what I shall vent to my lady: shall I vent to her that thou art coming?

Sir. I, prithee, foolish Greek, depart from me: There's money for thee; if you tarry longer, I shall give worse payment.

Clo. By my troth, thou hast an open hand. These wise men that give fools money get themselves a good report—after fourteen years' purchase.

Enter Sir Andrew, Sir Toby, and Fabian.

Sir And. Nay, sir, have I met you again? there's for you.

Sir. Why, there's for thee, and there, and there. Are all the people mad?

Sir To. Hold, sir, or I'll throw thy dagger o'er the house.

Clo. This will I tell my lady straight: I would not be in some of your costs for two pence. [Exit. Sir To. Come on, sir; hold.

Sir And. Nay, let him alone! I'll go another way to work with him: I'll have an action of battery against him, if there be any law in Illyria; though I struck him first, yet it is no matter for that.

Sir. Let go thy hand.

Sir To. Come, sir, I will not let you go. Come, my young soldier, put up your iron: you are well fleshed; come on.

Clo. I will be free from thee. What wouldst thou now?

If thou darest tempt me further, draw thy sword.

Sir To. What, what? Nay, then I must have an ounce or two of this malapert blood from you.

Enter Olivia.

Oli. Hold, Toby; on thy life I charge thee, hold! Sir To. Madam!
ACT IV.
TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL.  SCENE III.

Clo. Out, hyperbolical fiend! how vexest thou this man! talkest thou nothing but of ladies?
Sir To. Well said, master Parson.
Mal. Sir Topas, never was man thus wronged: good Sir Topas, do not think I am mad: they have had me here in hideous darkness.
Clo. Sir, thou hast honest Sir To! I call thee by the most modest terms; for I am one of those gentle ones that will use the devil himself with courtesy: sayest thou that house is dark?
Mal. As hell, Sir Topas.
Clo. Why, it hath hay windows transparent as barricadoes, and the clearstorey toward the south, north are asinstructions as ebony; and yet complainst thou of obstruction?
Mal. I am not mad, Sir Topas: I say to you, this house is dark.
Clo. Madman, thou errest: I say, there is no darkness but ignorance; in which thou art more puzzled than the Egyptians in their fog.
Mal. I say, this house is as dark as ignorance, though ignorance were as dark as hell: and I say, there was never man thus abused. I am no more mad than you are: make the trial of it in any constant question.
Clo. What is the opinion of Pythagoras concerning wild fowl?
Mal. That the soul of our grandam might haply inhabit a bird.
Clo. What thinkst thou of his opinion?
Mal. I think nobly of the soul, and no way approve his opinion.
Clo. Fare thee well. Remain thou still in darkness: thou shalt hold the opinion of Pythagoras ere I will allow of thy wits, and fear to kill a woodcock, lest thou dispossess the soul of thy grandam. Fare thee well.
Mal. Sir Topas, Sir Topas!
Sir To. My most exquisite Sir Topas!
Clo. Nay, I am for all waters.
Mer. Thou mightst have done this without thy beard and gown: he sees thee not.
Sir To. To him in thine own voice, and bring me word how thou bested him: I would we were well rid of this knavery. If he may be conveniently delivered, I would he were, for I am now so far in offence with my niece that I cannot pursue with any safety this sport to the upshot. Come by and by to my chamber. [Exeunt Sir Toby and Maria.
Clo. [Singing] Hey, Robin, jolly Robin,
Tell me how thy lady does,
Mal. Fool!
Clo. 'My lady is unkind, perdy,'
Mal. Fool!
Clo. 'Ahas, why is she so?'
Mal. Fool, I say!
Clo. 'I love another'—Who calls, ha?
Mal. Good fool, as ever thou witt deserve well at my hand, help me to a candle, and pen, ink and paper: as I am a gentleman, I will live to be thankful to thee for it.
Clo. Master Malvolio?
Mal. Ay, good fool.
Clo. Alas, sir, how fell you besides your five wits?
Mal. Fool, there was never man so notoriously abused: I am as well in my wits, fool, as thou art.
Clo. But as well? then you are mad indeed, if you be no better in your wits than a fool.
Mal. They have here propounded me; keep me in darkness, send ministers to me, assas, and do all they can to face me out of my wits.
Clo. Advise you what you say; the minister is here. Malvolio, Malvolio, thy wits the heavens restore! endeavour thyself to sleep, and leave thy vain bubble bubble.
Mal. Sir Topas!
Clo. Maintain no words with him, good fellow.

Mal. Fool, fool, fool, I say!
Clo. Alas, sir, be patient. What say you, sir? I am shent for speaking to you.
Mal. Good fool, help me to some light and some paper: I tell thee, I am as well in my wits as any man in Illyria.
Clo. Well-a-day that you were, sir!
Mal. By this hand, I am. Good fool, some ink, paper and light: and convey what I will set down to my lady: she shall advantage thee more than ever the bearing of letters did.
Clo. I will help you to 't. But tell me true, are you not mad indeed? or do you but counterfeit?
Mal. Believe me, I am not; I tell thee true.
Clo. Nay, I fill not believe a madman till I see his brains. I will fetch you light and paper and ink.
Mal. Fool, I will requite it in the highest degree: I prithee, be gone.
Clo. [Singing] I am gone, sir,
And anon, sir,
I'll be with you again,
In a tree,
Like to the old Vice,
Your need to sustain;
Who, with dagger of lath,
In his rage and his wrath,
Cries, ah, ah! to the devil:
Like a mad lad,
Pore thy nails, dad;
Adien, good man devil. [Exit.

SCENE III.—Olivia’s garden.

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. This is the air; that is the glorious sun; that pearl she gave me, I do feel’t and see’t; and thought I was wonder that enwraps me thus, yet ’tis not madness. Where’s Antonio, then? I could not find him at the Elephant; yet there he was: and there I found this credit, that he did range the town to seek me out. His counsel now might do me golden service; for though my soul disputeth well with my sense, that this may be some error, but no madness, yet doth this accident and flood of fortune so far exceed all instance, all discourse, that I am ready to dispute these And wrangle with my reason that persuades me To any other trust but that I am mad or else the lady’s mad: yet, if ’t were so, flowers she could not sway her house, command her fol-Take and give back affairs and their dispatch With such a smooth, discreet and stable bearing As I perceive she does: there’s something in ’t That is deceivable. But here the lady comes.

Enter Olivia and Priest.

Oli. Blame not this haste of mine. If you mean well, Now go with me and with this holy man Into the chantry by: there, before him, And underneath that consecrated roof, Pray me the full assurance of your faith: That my most jealous and too doubtful soul May live at peace. He shall conceal it. Whiles you are willing it shall come to note, What time we will our celebration keep According to my birth. What do you say?
Seb. I will follow this good man, and go with you: And, having sworn truth, ever will be true.
Oli. Then lead the way, good father; and heavens so shine, That they may fairly note this act of mine! [Exeunt.
ACT V.

SCENE I.— Before Olivia's house.

Enter Clown and Fabian.

Fab. Now, as thou loveth me, let me see his letter.
Clo. Good Master Fabian, grant me another read.

Fab. Any thing. [quest.

Clo. Do not desire to see this letter.

Fab. This is, to give a dog; and in recompense desire my dog again.

Enter Duke, Viola, Curio, and Lords.

Duke. Belong you to the Lady Olivia, friends?
Clo. Ay, sir: we are some of her trappings.
Duke. I know thee well; how dost thou, my good fellow?
Clo. Truly, sir, the better for my foes and the worse for my friends.

Duke. Just the contrary; the better for thy friends.

Clo. No, sir, the worse. [friends.

Duke. How can that be?

Clo. Marry, sir, they praise me and make an ass of me; now my foes tell me plainly I am an ass: so that by my foes, sir, I profit in the knowledge of myself, and by my friends I am abused; so that, conclusions to be as kisses, if your four negatives make your two affirmatives, why, then, the worse for my friends and the better for my foes.

Duke. Why, this is excellent.

Clo. By my troth, sir, no; though it please you to be one of my friends.

Duke. Thou shalt not be the worse for me: thou's a gold.

Clo. But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another.

Duke. O, you give me ill counsel.

Clo. Put your grace in your pocket, sir, for this once, and let your flesh and blood obey it.

Duke. Well, I will be so much a sinner, to be a double-dealer; there's another.

Clo. Primo, secundo, tertio, is a good play: and the old saying is, the third pays for all: the triplex, sir, is a good tripping measure; or the bells of Saint Bennet, sir, may put you in mind: one, two, three.

Duke. You can fool no more money out of me at this throw: if you will let your lady know I am here to speak with her, and bring her with you, it may awake my bounty further.

Clo. Marry, sir, lullaby to your bounty till I come again. I go, sir; but I would not have you to think that my desire of having is the sin of covetousness; but, as you say, sir, let your bounty take a nap: I will awake it anon. [Exit.

Viol. Here comes the man, sir, that did rescue me.

Enter Antonio and Officers.

Duke. That face of his I do remember well; yet, when I saw it last, it was besmirch'd: As black as Vulcan in the smoke of war: A babbling vessel was he captain of, For shallow draught and bulk impracticable; With which such scathful grapple did he make With the most noble bottom of our fleet, That very envy and the tongue of loss [for? Cried fame and honour on him. What's the matter? First Off. Orsino, this is that Antonio That took the Phoenix and her fraught from Candy; And this is he that did the Tiger board, When your young nephew Titus lost his leg: Here he is, in the roads, and the better of shame and state, In private babble did we apprehend him.

Viol. He did me kindness, sir, drew on my side; But in conclusion put strange speech upon me: I know not what 'twas but distraction.

Duke. Notable pirate! thou salt-water thief! What foolish boldness brought thee to their mercies, Whom thou, in terms so bloody and so dear, Hast made thine enemies? Ant. Orsino, noble sir, Be pleased that I shake off these names you give me: Antonio never yet was thief or pirate.

Though I confess, on base and ground enough, Orsino's enemy. A witchcraft did me hither: That most ingratitude boy there by your side, From the rude sea's enraged and Tommy mouth Did I redeem; a wreck past hope he was: His life I gave him and did thereto add My love, without retention or restraint, All his in dedication; for his sake Did I expose myself, pure for his love, Into the danger of this adverse town; Drew to defend him when he was beset; Where being apprehended, his false cunning, Not meaning to partake with me in danger, Taught him to face me out of his acquaintance, And grew to twenty years remorseful hugging, While one would wink; denied me mine own purse, Which I had recommended to his use

Not half an hour before.

Viol. How can this be? Duke. When came he to this town? [for, Ant. To-day, my lord, and for three months before, No intermission; not a minute's vacancy, Both day and night did we keep company.

Enter Olivia and Attendants.

Duke. Here comes the countess: now heaven walks on earth. [mess. But for thee, fellow; fellow, thy words are mad.

Three months this youth hath tended upon me; But more of that anon. Take him aside. [have, Oli. What would my lord, but that he may not Wherein Olivia may seem serviceable? Cesario, you do not keep promise with me.

Oli. If it be ought to the old tune, my lord, It is as fat and false as mine ear

As bowling after music.

Duke. Why should I not, had I the heart to do it, Like to the Egyptian thief at point of death, Kill what I love?—a savage jealousy

That something doth my heart trouble. But hear me this: Since you to non-regardance cast my faith, And that I partly know the instrument That screws me from my true place in your favour. Live you the marble-breasted tyrant still; But this your minion, whom I know you love, And whom, by heaven I swear, I tender dearly, Him will I tear out of that cruel eye, Where he sits crown'd in his master's spite. Come, boy, with me: my thoughts are ripe in mis- I'll sacrifice the lamb that I do love, [chief: To spite a raven's heart within a dove. Viol. And, if I must, I most joyous, apt and willingly, To do you rest, a thousand deaths would die.

Oli. Where goes Cesario?

Viol. After him I love More than I love these eyes, more than my life,
More, by all morses, than e'er I shall love wife.
If I do leign, you witnesses above
Punish my life for tainting of my love!
Oli. Ay me, detested! how am I beguiled!
Vio. Who does beguile you? who does do you wrong?
Oli. Hast thou forgot thyself? is it so long?
Call forth the holy father.
Duke. Come, away!
Duke. Husband!
Oli. Ay, husband: can he that deny?
Duke. Her husband, sirrah!
Oli. No, my lord, not I.
Oli. Alas, it is the baseness of thy fear
That makes thee strange thy propriety:
Fear not, Cesario: take thy fortunes up;
Be that thou know'st thou art, and then thou art
As great as that thou fear'st.

Enter Priest.
O, welcome, father!

Father, I charge thee, by thy reverence,
Here to unfold, though lately we intended
To keep in darkness what occasion now
Reveals before 'tis ripe, what thou dost know
Thath newly pass'd between this youth and me.

Priest. A contract of eternal bond of love,
Confirm'd by mutual joinder of your hands,
Attested by the holy close of lips,
Strengeth'd by interchanging of your rings;
And all the ceremony of this compact
Scarc'd in my function, by my testimony: [grave
Since when, my watch hath told me, toward my
I have travel'd but two hours.
Duke. O thou dissembling cub! what will thou be
When time hath sow'd a grizzle on thy case?
Or will not else thy craft so quickly grow,
That other tribes shall be thine overthrow?
Farewell, and take her: but direct thy feet,
Where thou and I henceforth may never meet.
Vio. My lord, I do protest—
Oli. Hold little faith, though thou hast too much fear.

Enter Sir Andrew.

Sir And. For the love of God, a surgeon
Send one presently to Sir Toby.
Oli. What's the matter?
Sir And. He has broke my head across and has great pain in his head: I am bloody coxcomb, too: for the love of God, your help! I had rather than forty pound I were at home.
Oli. Who has done this, Sir Andrew?
Sir And. The count's gentleman, one Cesario: we took him for a coward, but he's the very devil incarnate.
Duke. My gentleman, Cesario! [Dnaste.
Sir And. 'O! 's life, here he is! You broke my head for nothing; and that that I did, I was set on to do't by Sir Toby.
Vio. Why do you speak to me? I never hurt you:
You drew your sword upon me without cause;
But I bespake you fair, and hurt you not.
Sir And. If a bloody coxcomb be a hurt, you have hurt me: I think you set nothing by a bloody coxcomb.

Enter Sir Toby and Clown.

Here comes Sir Toby halting; you shall hear more:
but if he had not been in drink, he would have tickled you o'th' other side e'er this youth and me.

Duke. How now, gentleman! how's it with you?
Sir To. That's 'all one: has hurt me, and there's the end on't. Sot, didst see Dick surgeon, sot?
Clown. O, he's drunk. Sir Toby, an hour ago; his eyes were set at eight t' the morning.
Sir To. Then he's a rogue, and a passy measures paunch: I hate a drunken rogue.

Oli. Away with him! Who hath made this havoc with them?

Sir And. I'll help you, Sir Toby, because we'll be dressed together.

Sir To. Will you help? an ass-head and a coxcomb and a knave, a thin-faced knave, a gull!
Oli. Get him to bed, and let his hurt be look'd to.

[Exeunt Clown, Fabian, Sir Toby, and Sir Andrew.

Enter Sebastian.

Seb. I am sorry, madam. I have hurt your kinsman:
But, had it been the brother of my blood, [man;
I must have done no less with wit and safety.
You throw strange regard upon that youth, and by that I do perceive it hath offended you:
Pardon me, sweet one, even for the vows
We made each other but so late ago. [persons,
Duke. One face, one voice, one habit, and two
A natural perspective, that is and is not!
Seb. Antonio, O my dear Antonio! How have the hours rack'd and tortured me,
Since I have lost thee?

Ant. Sebastian are you?
Seb. Fear'st thou that, Antonio?
Ant. How have you made division of yourself? An apple, cleft in two, is not more twin Than these two sweet embraces. Which is Sebastian?
Seb. Most wonderful!
Seb. Do I stand there? I never had a brother;
Nor can there be that deity in my nature,
Of here and every where. I had a sister,
Whom the blind waves and surges have devour'd.
Of charity, what kin are you to me?
What countryman am? what name? what parentage?

Vio. Of Messaline: Sebastian was my father;
Such a Sebastian was my brother too,
So went he suited to his watery tomb:
If spirits can assume both form and suit
You come to fright us.

Seb. A spirit I am indeed;
But am in that dimension grossly clad
Which from the womb I did participate.
Were you a woman, as the rest goes even,
I should my tears let fall upon your cheek,
And say 'tis fair-welcome, drowned Viola!
Vio. My father had a male upon his brow,
Seb. And so had mine. [birth
Vio. And died that day when Viola from her
Had number'd thirteen years.
Seb. O, that record is lively in my soul!
He finished indeed his existence.
That day that made my sister thirteen years.
Vio. If nothing lets to make us happy both
But this my masculine usurp'd attire,
Do not embrace me till each circumstance
Of place, time, fortune, do cohere and jump
That I am Viola: which to no man betrays
Whom I bring you to a captain in this town,
Where lie my maiden weeds; by whose gentle help
I was preserved to serve this noble count.
All the occurrence of my fortune since
Hath been between this lady and this lord.

Seb. [To Olivia] So comes it, lady, you have been misused:
But nature to her bias drew in that.
You would have been contracted to a maid;
Nor are you therein, by my life, deceived,
You are betroth'd both to a maid and man.
Duke. Be not amazed: right noble is his blood.
If this be so, as yet the time seems true;
I shall have share in this most happy wreck. [times
[To Viola] Boy, thou hast said to me a thousand
Thou never shouldst love woman like to me.
Vio. And all those sayings will I ever-swear;
And all those swearings keep as true in soul
As doth that orbent continent the fire
That severs day from night.

249
Duke. Give me thy hand; and let me see thee in thy woman's weeds.
Vio. The captain that did bring me first on shore hath my maid's garments: he upon some action is now in durance, at Malvolio's suit, a gentleman, and follower of my lady's.
Ol. He shall enlarge him; fetch Malvolio hither: and were he here, I should have given 't you to-day morning, but as a madman's epistles are no gospels, so it skills not much when they are delivered, and read it.
Clo. Look then to be well edified when the fool delivers the madman. [Re-enter Stage-Right]

ACT V. TWELFTH NIGHT; OR, WHAT YOU WILL. SCENE I.

Duke. Why have you suffer'd me to be imprison'd, kept in a dark house, visited by the priest, and made the most notorious gossec and gull that e'er invention play'd on? tell me why.
Ol. Alas, Malvolio, this is not my writing, though I confess, much like the character: But out of question 't is Maria's hand. And now I do believe me, it was she; [ing, First told me thou wast mad: then came's in snlil; And in such forms which here were presupposed upon thee in the letter. Prithée, be content: This practice hath most shrewdly pass'd upon thee; But when we know the grounds and authors of it, Thou shalt embrace both the plaintiff and the judge of thine own cause.
Fab. Good madam, hear me speak, and let no quarrel nor brawil to come Taint the condition of this present hour, Which I have wonder'd at. In hope it shall not, Most freely I confess, myself and Toby Set this device against Malvolio here, Upon some stubborn and uncomertous parts We had conceived against him: Maria writ to the letter at Sir Toby's great importance; In recompense whereof he hath married her. How with a sportful malice it was follow'd, May rather pluck on laughter than revenge; If that the injuries be justly weigh'd That have on both sides pass'd.
Ol. Alas, poor fool, how have they baffe'd thee! Clo. Why, some are born great, some achieve greatness, and some have greatness thrust upon them. I was one, sir, in this interlude; one Sir Topas, sir: but that's all one. 'By the Lord, fool, I am not mad.' But do you remember? 'Madam, why laugh you at such a barren rascal? an you smile not, he's gagged;' and thus the whirligig of time brings in his revenges.
Mal. I'll be revenged on the whole pack of you.

[Exit.

Duke. Pursue him, and entreat him to a peace: He hath not told us of the captain yet: When that is known and golden time converts, A solemn conjunction shall be made Of our dear souls. Meantime, sweet sister, We will not part from hence. Cesario, come; For so you shall be, while you are a man; But when in other habits you are seen, Orsino's mistress and his fancy's queen.

Clo. [Sings]

When that I was and a little tiny boy,
With hey, ho, the wind and the rain,
A foolish thing was but a toy,
For the rain it raineth every day.

But when I came to man's estate,
With hey, ho, &c.
Gainst knives and thieves men shut their
For the rain, &c.

But when I came, alas! to wife,
With hey, ho, &c.
By swaggering could I never thrive,
For the rain, &c.

But when I came unto my beds,
With hey, ho, &c.
With toss-pots still had drunken heads,
For the rain, &c.

A great while ago the world began,
With hey, ho, &c.
But that's all one, our play is done,
And we'll strive to please you every day.

[Exit.

Time, as Chorus.

SCENE.—Sicilia, and Bohemia.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Antechamber in Leontes’ palace.

Enter Camillo and Archidamus.

Arch. If you shall chance, Camillo, to visit Bohemia, on the like occasion whereon my services are now on foot, you shall see, as I have said, great difference betwixt our Bohemia and your Sicilia.

Camillo. I think, this coming summer, the King of Sicilia means to pay Bohemia the visitation which he justly owes him.

Arch. Wherein our entertainment shall shame us we will be justified in our loves; for indeed —

Camillo. Beseech you.

Arch. Verily, I speak it in the freedom of my knowledge: we cannot with such magnificence—in so rare—I know not what to say. We will give you sleep-y drinks, that your senses, unintelligent of our insufficiency, may, though they cannot praise us, as little accuse us.

Camillo. You pay a great deal too dear for what’s given freely.

Arch. Believe me, I speak as my understanding instructs me and as mine honesty puts it to utterance.

Camillo. Sicilia cannot show himself over-kind to Bohemia. They were trained together in their childhoods; and there rooted betwixt them then such an affection, which cannot choose but branch now. Since their more mature dignities and royal necessities made separation of their society, their encounters, though not personal, have been royally attornied with interchange of gifts, letters, loving embassies: that they have seemed to be together, though absent, shook hands, as over a vast, and embraced, a s it were, from the ends of opposed winds. The heavens continue their loves!

Arch. I think there is not in the world either malice or matter to alter it. You have an unspeakable comfort of your young prince Mamillius: it is a gentleman of the greatest promise that ever came into my note.

Camillo. I very well agree with you in the hopes of him: it is a gallant child; one that indeed physics the subject, makes old hearts fresh: they that went on crutches ere he was born desire yet their life to see him a man.

Arch. Would they else be content to die?

Camillo. No; if there were no other excuse why they should desire to live.

Arch. If the king died, no son, they would desire to live on crutches till he had one.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A room of state in the same.

Enter Leontes, Hermione, Mamillius, Polxenes, Camillo, and Attendants.

Pol. Nine changes of the watery star hath been
The shepherd’s note since we have left our throne
Without a barthen: time as long again
Would be till’d up, my brother, with our thanks;
And yet we should, for perpetuity,
Go hence in debt: and therefore, like a cipher,
Yet standing in rich place, I multiply
With one ‘We thank you’ many thousands more
That go before it.

Leon. Stay your thanks awhile; And pay them when you part.

Pol. Sir, that’s to-morrow.

I am question’d by my fears, of what may chance
Or breed upon our absence: that may blow
No sneaping winds at home, to make us say
‘This is put forth too truly’: besides, I have stay’d
To tire your royalty.

Leon. We are tougher, brother, Than you can put us to.

Pol. No longer stay.

Leon. One seven-night longer.

Pol. Very sooth; to-morrow.

Leon. We’ll part the time between’s then; and in that I’ll no gainsaying.

Pol. Press me not, beseech you, so.
There is no tongue that moves, none, none i’ the world,
So soon as yours could win me: so it should now.
Were there necessity in your request, although
’T were needful I denied it. My affairs
Do even drag me homeward: which to hinder
Were in your love a whip to me; my stay
To you a charge and trouble: to save both,
Farewell, our brother.

251
ACT I.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE II.

Leon. Tongue-tied our queen? speak you, sir?
Her. I had thought, sir, to have held my peace until
You had drawn oaths from him not to stay. You,
Charge him too coldly. Tell him, you are sure
All in Bohemia's well; this satisfaction
The bygone day proclaimed: say this to him,
He beat from his best ward.

Leon. Well said, Hermione. To tell, he longs to see his son, strong:
But let him say so then, and let him go;
But let him swear so, and he shall not stay,
We'll thwack him hence with distress.
Yet of your royal presence I'll adventure
The borrow of a week. When at Bohemia
You take my lord, I'll give him my commission
To let him there a month behind the gest
Prefixed for 'parting; yet, good deed, Leontes,
I love thee not a jot o' the clock behind
What lady-she her lord. You'll stay?

Pol. No, madam.
Her. Nay, but you will? I may not, verily.

Pol. Verily!
You put me off with limber vows; but I, [oaths,
Though you would seek to unsperse the stars with Shod yet say, 'Sir, no going.' Verily, you Shall not go: a lady's 'Verily's As potent as a lord's. Will you go yet?
Force me to keep you as a prisoner.
Not like a guest; so you shall pay your fees [you?
When you depart, and save your thanks. How say
My prisoner? or my guest? by your dree ['Verily,' One of them you shall be.

Pol. Your guest, then, madam:
To be your prisoner should import offending;
Which is for me less easy to commit
Than you to punish.

Her. Not your gaoler, then,
But your kind hostess. Come, I'll question you
Of my lord's tricks and yours when you were boys:
You were pretty lordings then?

Pol. We were, fair queen,
Two hats that thought there was no more behind
But such a day to-morrow as to-day,
And to be boy eternal.

Her. Was not my lord
The verier wag o' the two? [the sun
Pol. We were as twin'd lambs that did frisk i
And bleat the one at the other: what we changed
Was for convenience; we knew not
The doctrine of ill-doing, nor dream'd
That any did. Had we pursued that life,
And our weak spirits ever been higher rear'd
With stronger blood, weshould have answer'd heaven
Boldly; not guilty; the imposition clear'd
Hereditary ours.

Her. By this we gather
You have tripp'd since.
Pol. O my most sacred lady! Temptations have since then been born to 's; for
In those unbridled days was my wife a girl;
Your precious self had then not cross'd the eyes
Of my young play-fellow.

Her. Grace to boot! Of this make no conclusion, lest you say
Your queen and I are devils; yet go on;
The offences we have made you do we'll answer,
If you be satisfied with us and that with us
You did continue faithful and that you slipp'd not
With any but with us.

Leon. Is he won yet?
Her. He'll stay, my lord.

Leon. At my request he would not.
Hermanio, my dearest, thou never spakest
To better purpose.

Her. Never?

Leon. Never, but once.
Her. What! have I twice said well? when was't before?
I prithee tell me; eram's with praise and make's
As fat as tame things; one good deed dying tongue-
Slaughters a thousand waiting upon that. [less
Our praises are our wages: you may ride's
With one soft kiss a thousand fervours are
With spur we heat an acre. But to the goal:
My last good deed was to entreat his stay:
What was my first? it has an elder sister,
Or I mistake you: O, would her name were Grace! But once before I spoke to the purpose: when?
Nay, let me have it; I long.

Leon. Why, that was when
Three crabb'd months had sour'd themselves to death,
Ere I could make thee open thy white hand
And clas thine own love: then didst thou utter
"I am yours forever."

Her. 'Tis grace indeed.
Why, lo you now, I have spoke to the purpose twice:
The one for ever earn'd a royal husband;
The other for some while a friend.

Leon. [aside] Too hot, too hot! To mingle friendship far is mingling bloods.
I have temper cordis on me: my heart dances;
But not for joy: not joy. This entertainment
May a free face put on, derive a liberty
From heartiness, from bounty, fertile bosom,
And well become the agent; I may, I grant;
But to be paddling palms and pinching fingers,
As now they are, and making prattled smiles,
As in a looking-glass, and then to sigh, as 'twere
The mort o' the deer: O, that is entertainment
My bosom likes not, nor my brows! Mamillius,
Art thou my boy?

Mam. Ay, my good lord.

Leon. I fecks.
Why, that's my lawcock. What, hast smutch'd thy nose?
They say it is a copy out of mine. Come, captain,
We must be neat; not neat, but cleanly, captain:
And yet the steer, the heifer and the calf
Are all call'd neat. — Still virginals
Upon his palm! — How now, you wanton calf! Art thou my calf?

Mam. Yes, ir you will, my lord.

Leon. Thou want'st a rough push and the shoots
That I have,
To be full like me: yet they say we are Almost as like as eggs: women say so,
That will say anything: but were they false
As o'er-dyed blacks, as wind, as waters, false
As dice are to be wish'd by one that fixes
No bourn 'twixt his and mine, yet were it true
To say this boy were like me. Come, sir page,
Look on me with your wekelin eye: sweet villain!
Most dearest! my collap! Can thy dam?—may't Affection? thy intention stabs the centre: [be—
Thou dost make possible things not so held,
Communicat with dreams;—how can this be?—
With what's unreal thou causative art,
And fellow's nothing: then 'tis very credent,
Thou mayst co-work with something: and thou dost,
And that beyond commission, and I find it,
And that to the infection of my brains
And hardening of my brows.

Pol. What means Sicilia?

Her. He something seems unsettled.

Pol. How, my lord!

Her. What cheer? how is 't with you, best brother?

Leon. 1 You look
As if you held a brow of much distraction
Are you moved, my lord?

Leon. No, in good earnest,
How sometimes nature will betray its folly,
ACT I.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE II.

Its tenderness, and make itself a pastime
To harder bosoms! Looking on the lines
Of my boy's face, methoughts I did recall
Twenty-three years, and saw myself unshod;
In my green velvet coat, my dagger muzzled;
Lest it should bite its master, and so prove,
As ornaments oft do, too dangerous.
How like, methought, I then was to this kernel,
This squash, this gentleman. Mine honest friend,
Will you take eggs for money? —

Mon. No, my lord, I'll fight.

[Aside] They're here with me already, whispering. —
'Sicilia is so-forth: 'tis far gone, [rounding
When I shall gust it last. How came 't, Camillo,
That he did stay?

Cam. At the good queen's entreaty.

Leon. At the queen's be 't; 'twould have been bad sport,
But, so it is, it is not. Was this taken [tinct:
By any understanding pate but thine?

For thy conceit is soaking, will draw in
More than the common blocks: not noted, 'tis,
But of the finer natures? by some several
Of head-piece out of ordinary flower messes
Perchance are to this business publish'd? say.

Cam. Business, my lord! I think most understand
Bohemia stays here longer.

Leon. Ha!

Cam. Stays here longer.

Leon. Ay, but why?

Cam. To satisfy your highness and the entreaties
Of our most gracious mistress.

Leon. Satisfy!
The entreaties of your mistress! satisfy,
Let that suffice. I have trusted thee, Camillo,
With all the nearest things to my heart, as well
My chamber-councils, wherein, priest-like, thou
Hast cleansed my bosom. I from thee departed Thy penitent reform'd: but we have been Deceived in thy integrity, deceived
In that which seems so.

Cam. Be it forbid, my lord!

Leon. To bide upon't, thou art not honest, or,
If thou inclinest that way, thou art a coward,
Which boxes honestly behind, restraining
From course required; or else thou must be counted
A servant gain'd in my serious trust
And therein negligent; or else a fool
That seest a game play'd home, the rich stake drawn,
And takes it all for jest.

Cam. My gracious lord,
I may be negligent, foolish and fearful;
In every one of these no man is free,
But that his negligence, his folly, tear,
Among the infinite doings of the world,
Some time puts forth. In your affairs, my lord,
If ever I were wilful-negligent,
It was my folly; if industriously
I play'd the fool, it was my negligence.

Not weighing well the end; if ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did prevent.

Against the non-performance, 't was a fear
Which oft infects the wisest: these, my lord,
Are such allow'd infirmities that honesty
Is never free of. But, beseech your grace,
Be plainer with me: let me know my trespass
By its own visage: if I then deny it,
'T is none of mine.

Leon. Ha' not you seen, Camillo,—
But that 's past doubt, you have, or your eye-glass
Is thicker than a cuckold's horn.— or heard, —
For to a vision so apparent rumour
Cannot be mute, —or thought, —or cogitation
Resides not in that man that does not think,—
My wife is slippery? If thou wilt confess,
Or else be impudently negligent.

To have nor eyes nor ears nor thought, then say
My wife's a hobby-horse, deserves a name
As rank as any fox-wench that puts to
Before her troth-plight: say 't and justify 't.

Cam. I would not be a stander-by to hear
My sovereign mistress clouded so, without
My present vengeance taken: 'shrew my heart,
You never spoke what did become you less
Than this: which, to blindest, was sin
As deep as that, though true.

Leon. Is whispering nothing?

Is leaning cheek to cheek? is meeting noses?
Kissing with inside lip? stopping the career
Of laughing with a sigh? —a note infallible

The Winter's Tale

Scene II.

Of breaking honesty—horsing foot on foot?
Skulking in corners? wishing clocks more swift?
Hours, minutes? noon, midnight? and all eyes
Blind with the ph and web but theirs, theirs only,
That would unseen be wicked? is this nothing?
Why then the world and all that's in't is nothing;
The covering sky is nothing: Bohemia nothing;
My wife is nothing; nor nothing have these nothing—
It this be nothing. [Exeunt.

Cam. Good my lord, be cured

Of this disused opinion, and betimes;
For 'tis most dangerous.

Leon. Say it be, 'tis true.

Cam. No, no, my lord.

Leon. It is; you be, you lie: I say thou liest, Camillo, and I hate thee.

Proclaim thee a gross lout, a mindless slave,
Or else a lowering temper to be that
Curs'd with thine eyes at once see good and evil,
Inclining to them both: were my wife's liver
Infected as her life, she would not live
The running of one glass.

Cam. Who does infect her?

Leon. Why, he that wears her like her medal,
About his neck, Bohemia: who, if I
Hid servants true about me, that bare eyes
To see alike mine honour as their profits,
Their own particular thiefs, they would do that
Which should undo more doing: ay, and thou,
His cup-bearer—though at present I from mere form
Have breach'd, and rear'd to worship, who mayst see
Fainly as heaven sees earth and earth sees heaven,
How I am called—might'st bespice a cup,
To give mine enemy a lasting wink;
Which draught to me were cordial.

Cam. Sir, my lord,
I could do this, and that with no rash petition,
But with a lingering dram that should not work
Maliciously like poison; but I cannot Believe this crack to be in my dread mistress,
So sovereignly being honourable.

I have loved thee.

Leon. Make that thy question, and go rot!

Dost think I am so muddy, so unsettled,
To appoint myself in this vexation, sily
The purity and whiteness of my sheets,
Which to preserve is sleep, which being spotted
Is goads, thorns, nettles, tails of wasps,
Give scandal to the blood of the prince my son,
Who I do think is mine and love as mine.
Without rope moving to 't? Would I do this?
Could man so blemish?

Cam. I must believe you, sir; I do; and will fetch off Bohemia for 't;
Provided that, when he's removed, your highness
Will take again your queen as yours at first,
Even for your son's sake: and thereby for sealing
The injury of tongues in courts and kingdoms
Known and allied to yours.

Leon. Thou dost advise me

Even so as I mine own course have set down:
I'll give no blemish to her honour, none.

Cam. My lord,
Go then; and with a countenance as clear
As friendship wears at feasts, keep with Bohemia
And with your queen. I am his cup-bearer:
If from me he have wholesome beverage,
Account me not your servant.

This is all:

Don't and thou hast the one half of my heart;
Don't thou, thou split'st thin mine.

Cam. I'll do't, my lord.

Leon. I will seem friendly, as thou hast advised me.

Cam. O miserable lady! But, for me,
What case stand I in? I must be the poisoner
Of good Polixenes; and my ground to do't

Is the obedience to a master, one
Who in rebellion with himself will have
All that are his so too. To do this deed,
Promotion follows. If I could find example
Of thousands that had struck anointed kings
Who from the world and all that's in't is nothing;
Nor brass nor stone nor parchment bears not one,
Let villany itself foreswear 't. I must Forsake the court; to do 't, or no, is certain
To me a break-heap. Happy star reign now!
Here comes Bohemia.

Enter Polixenes.

Pol. This is strange: methinks
My favour here begins to warp. Not speak?
Good day, Camillo.

Cam. Hail, most royal sir!

Pol. What is the news? the court?

Cam. None rare, my lord.

Pol. The king hath on him such a countenance
As he had lost some province and a region
Loved as he loves himself; even now I met him
With customary compliment; when he, Wishing his eyes to the contrary and falling
A lip of much contempt, speed'st from me and
So leaves me to consider what is breeding
That changeth thus his manners.

Cam. I dare not know, my lord.

Pol. How! dare not! do not. Do you know, and

Be intelligent to me: 'tis thereabouts:
For, to yourself, what you do know, you must,
And cannot say, you dare not. Good Camillo,
Your changed complexions are to me a mirror
Which shows me mine changed too; for I must be
A party in this after-days pending
Myself thus altered with 't.

Cam. There is a sickness
Which puts some of us in distemper, but I cannot name the disease; and it is caught
Of you that yet are well.

Pol. How! caught of me?

Cam. Make me not sighted like the basilisk:[te]
I have looked on thousands, who have sped the bet
By my regard, but kill'd none so. Camillo,—
As you are certainly a gentleman thereto,
Clerk-like experienced, which no less adorns
Our greyt than our parents' noble names,
In whose success we are gentle,—I beseech you,
If you know ought which does behave my know
Thereof to be inform'd, imprisonment 't
In ignorant concealment.

Cam. I may not answer.

Pol. A sickness caught of me, and yet I will!
I must be answer'd. Dost thou hear, Camillo,
I conjure thee, by all the parts of man
Which honour does acknowledge, whereof the least
Is not this suit of mine, that thou declare
What incidency thou dost guess of harm
Is creeping toward me: how far off, how near;
Which way to be prevented, if to be;
If not, how best to bear it.

Sir, I will tell you;

Since I am charged in honour and by him [sel]
That I think honorable: therefore mark my coun-
Which must be even as swiftly follow'd as I mean to utter it, or both yourself and me
Cry lost, and so good night!

Pol. On, good Camillo.

Cam. I am appointed him to murder you.

Pol. By whom, Camillo?

Cam. The king.

Pol. For what?

Cam. He thinks, nay, with all confidence he
As he had seen 't or been an instrument [swears]
To vice you to 't, that you have touched his queen Forbiddenly.
ACT II.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE I.

Pol. O, then my best blood turn
To an infected jelly and my name
Be voked with his that did betray the Best!
Turn then my freshest reputation to
A savour that may strike the dullest nostril
Where I arrive, and my approach be shunn'd,
Nay, hated too, worse than the great'st infection
That e'er was heard or read.

Cam. Swear his thought over
By each particular star in heaven and
By all their influences, you may as well
Forbid the sea for to obey the moon
As or by oath remove or counsel shake
The fabric of his folly, whose foundation
Is pluck'd up by his faith and will continue
The standing of his body.

Pol. How should this grow?
Cam. I know not: but I am sure 'tis safer to Avoid what's grown than question how 'tis born.
It therefore you dare trust my honesty,
That lies enclosed in this trunk which you
Shall bear along impass'd, away to-night!
Your followers I will whisper to the business,
And will by two and threes at several posterns Clear them o' the city. For myself, I'll put My fortunes to your service, which are here
By this discovery lost. Be not uncertain;
For, by the honour of my parent, I
Have utter'd truth: which if you seek to prove,
I dare not stand by: nor shall you be safer
Than one condemn'd by the king's own mouth.
His execution sworn. [thereon
Pol. I do believe thee;
I saw his heart in 's face. Give me thy hand:
Be pilot to me and thy places shall Still neighbour mine. My ships are ready and My people did expect my hence departure
Two days ago. This jealousy
Is for a precious creature: as she's rare,
Must it be great, and as his person's mighty,
Must it be violent, and as his conscience
Is dishonour'd by a man which ever
Profess'd to him, why, his revenues must
In that be made more bitter. Fear o'ershades me:
Good expedition be my friend, and comfort
The gracious queen, part of his theme, but nothing
Of his ill'ten suspicion! Come, Camillo;
I will respect thee as a father if Thou bear'st my life off hence: let us avoid.
Cam. It is in mine authority to command
The keys of all the posterns: please your highness
To take the urgent hour. Come, sir, away. [Exeunt.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—A room in Leontes' palace.

Enter Hermione, Mamillius, and Ladies.

Her. Take the boy to you: he so troubles me,
'Tis past endur'd.

First Lady. Come, my gracious lord,
Shall I be your playfellow?

Man. No, I'll none of you.

First Lady. Why, my sweet lord?

Man. You'll kiss me hard and speak to me as if I were a baby still. I love you better.

Sec. Lady. And why so, my lord?

Man. Not for beauty;
Your brows are blacker: yet black brows; they say,
Become some women best, so that there be not Too much hair there, but in a semicircle,
Or a half-moon made with a pen.

Sec. Lady. Who taught you this?

Man. I heard it out of women's faces. Pray now
What colour are your eyebrows?

First Lady. Blue, my lord.

Man. Nay, that's a mock: I have seen a lady's nose
That has been blue, but not her eyebrows.

First Lady. Hark ye;
The queen your mother rounds apiece: we shall Present our services to a faire new prince
One of these days; and then you'd wanton with us,
If we would have you.

Sec. Lady. She is spread of late
Into a godly bulk; good time encounter her!
Her. What wislom stirs amongst you? Come,
I am for you again: pray you, sit by us, [sir, now
And tell's a tale.

Man. Merry or sad shall 't be?
Her. As merry as you will.

Man. A sad tale's best for winter: I have one
Of spirits and goldilocks,
Her. Let's have that, good sir.
Com'on, sit down: come on, and do your best
To fright me with your sprites; you're powerful

Man. There was a man —
[set it.
Her. Nay, come, sit down: then on.

Man. Dwelt by a churchyard: I will tell it softly;
Yond crickets shall not hear it.

Her. Come on, then,
And give 't me in mine ear.

Enter Leontes, with Antigonus, Lords, and others.

Leon. Was he met there? his train? Camillo
With him? Never
First Lord. Behind the turf of pines I met them;
Saw I men scour so on their way: I eyed them
Even to their ships.

Leon. How blest am I
In my just censure, in my true opinion!
Alack, for lesser knowledge! how accursed
In being so blest! There may be in the cup
A spider steep'd, and one may drink, depart,
And yet partake no venom, for his knowledge
Is not infected: but if one present
The abhor'd ingredient to his eye, make known
How he hath drank, he cracks his gorge, his sides,
With violent belts. I have drunk, and seen the Camillo was his help in this, his pander: [spider.
There's a plot against my life, my crown;
All's true that is mistrusted: that false villain
Whom I employ'd was pre-employ'd by him:
He has discover'd my design, and I
Remain a pinch'd thing: yea, a very trick
For them to play at will. How came the posterns
So easily open?

First Lord. By his great authority;
Which often hath no less prevailed than so
On your command.

Leon. I know 't too well.
Give me the boy: I am glad you did not nurse him:
Though he does bear some signs of me, yet you
Have too much blood in him.

Her. Bear the boy hence; he shall not come
About her;
With that she's big with; for 't is Polixenes
Has made thee swell thus.

Leon. But I'll say he had not,
And I'll be sworn you would believe my saying;
How e'er you lean to the myriad.

You, my lords,
Look on her, warK her well; be but about
To say 'she is a goodly lady,' and
The justice of your hearts will thereto add
"Tis pity she's not honest, honourable;"
Praise her but for this her without-door form,
Which on my faith deserves high speech, and straight
The name of a colour, or ho ha, these petty brands
That catameny doth use—O, I am out—
That mercy does, for catameny will wear
Virtue itself: these shrugs, these hums and ha's.
When you have said 'she's goodly,' come between Ere you can say 'she's honest': but be't known,
From hence forth the least most to give it should be,
She's an adulteress.

Her. Should a villain say so,
The most replenish'd villain in the world,
He were as much more villain: you, my lord,
Do but mistake.

Leon. You have mistook, my lady, Polixenes for Leontes: O thou thing!
Which I'll not call a creature of thy place,
Lest heretmisism, making me the precedent,
Should a like language use to all degrees
And mannerly distinction leave out
Betwixt the prince and beggar: I have said
She's an adulteress; I have said with whom:
More, she's a traitor and Camillo is
A federaly with her, and one that knows
What she should shame to know herself.
But with her most vile principal, that she's
A bed-swerver, even as bad as those
That vaulers give bold st titles, ay, and privy
To this their fate escape.

Her. No, by my life,
Privy to none of this. How will this grieve you,
When you shall come to clearer knowledge, that
You thus have publish'd me! Gentle my lord,
You scarce can right me throughly then to say
You did mistake!

Leon. No: if I mistake
In those foundations which I build upon,
The centre is not big enough to bear
A schoolboy's top. Away with her! to prison!
He who shall speak for her is afar off guilty
But that he speaks.

Her. There's some ill planet reigns:
I must be patient till the heavens look
With an aspect more favourable. Good my lords,
I am not prone to weeping, as our sex
Commonly are: the tear of which vain dew
Perchance shall dry your pities; but I have
That honourable grief lodg'd here which burns
Worse than tears drown'd: beseech you all, my lords,
With thoughts so qualified as your charities
Shall best instruct you, measure me; and so
That suffering's will be perform'd!

Leon. Shall I be heard?

Her. Who is 't that goes with me? Beseech your highness,
My women may be with me; for you see
My plight requires it. Do not weep, good fools;
There is no cause: when you shall know your mistrises
Has deserved prison, then abound in tears
As I come out: this action I now go on
Is for my better grace. Adieu, my lord:
I mean wish'd to see you sorry; now
I trust I shall. My women, come: you have leave.
Leon. Go, do our bidding; hence!
[Exit Queen, guarded; with Ladies.]

First Lord. Beseech your highness, call the queen again.

Ant. Be certain what you do, sir; lest your justice
Provoke Praise: in which three great ones suffer,
Yourself, your queen, your son.

First Lord. For her, my lord,
We are to speak in public; for this business
Will raise us all.

Ant. [Aside] To laughter, as I take it,
If the good truth were known.

[Exeunt.

SCENE II.—A prison.

Enter Paulina, a Gentleman, and Attendants.

Paul. The keeper of the prison, call to him;
Let him have knowledge who I am. [Exit Gent.

Paulina. Good lady,
No court in Europe is too good for thee;
What dost thou then in prison?

Re-enter Gentleman, with the Gaoler.

You know me, do you not?

Paul. For a worthy lady
And one whom much I honour.

Paul. Pray you then,
Conduct me to the queen.

Paul. I may not, madam:
To the contrary I have express commandment.

Paul. Here's ado.

To lock up honesty and honour from
The access of gentle visitors! Is't lawful, pray you, To see her women? any of them? Emilia?

Paul. So please you, madam.

To part these your attendants, I Shall bring Emilia forth.

Paul. I pray now, call her.

Withdraw yourselves. [Exeunt Gentlemen and Attendants.

Paul. And, madam,
I must be present at your conference.

Paul. Well, be 't so, prithee. [Exit Gaoler.

Here's such ado to make no stain a stain
As passes colouring.

Re-enter Gaoler, with Emilia.

Dear gentlewoman,

How fares our gracious lady?

Emil. As well as one so great and so forlorn
May hold together: on her griefs and griefs,
Which never tender lady hath borne greater,
She is something before her time deliver'd.

Paul. A boy?

Emil. A daughter, and a goodly babe,
Lusty and like to live: the queen receives
Much comfort in 't: says 't My poor prisoner, I am innocent as you.'

Paul. I dare be sworn: 'tis a noble:
The dangerous unsafe times I the king, beseech He must be told on 't, and be shall: the office
Becomes a woman best: I'll take 't upon me:
If I prove honey-mouth'd, let my tongue blister
And never to my red-look'd anger be
The trumpet any more. Pray you, Emilia, Command my best obedience to the queen;
If she fears trust me with her little babe, I'll show 't the king and undertake to be
Her advocate to the lord'st. We do not know
How he may soften at the sight o' the child:
The silence often of pure innocence
Persuades when speaking fails.

Emil. Most worthy madam,
Your honour and your goodness is so evident
That your free undertaking cannot miss
A thriving issue: there is no lady living So meet for this great errand. Please your ladyship To visit the next room, I'll presently Acquaint the queen of your noble offer; Who but to-day hammer'd of this design
But durst not tempt a minister of honour, Lest she should be denied.

Paul. Tell her, Emilia,
I'll use that tongue I have: if wit flow from 't
As boldness from my bosom, let 't not be doubted
I shall do good.

Emil. Now be you blest for it!
'I'll to the queen: please you, come something nearer.

Paul. Madam, if 't please the queen to send the
I know not what I shall incur to pass it, [babe,
Having no warrant.

Paul. You need not fear it, sir:
This child was prisoner to the womb and is
By law and process of great nature thence Freed and enfranchised, not a party to
The anger of the king nor guilty of,
If any be, the trespass of the queen.

Paul. Do you not fear: upon mine honour, I
Will stand betwixt you and danger. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—A room in Leontes' palace.

Enter Leontes, Antigonus, Lords, and Servants.

Leon. Nor night nor day nor rest; it is but weakness
To bear the matter thus: more weakness. If
The cause were not in being,—part o' the cause,
She the adulteress; for the harlot king
Is quite beyond mine arm, out of the blank
And level of my brain, plot-proof; but she,
I can hook to me: say that she were gone,
Given to the fire, a moiety of my rest
Might come to me again. Who's there?

First Ser. My lord?

Leon. How does the boy?

First Ser. He took good rest to-night;
'Tis hoped his sickness is discharged.

Leon. To see his nobleness!
Conceiving the dishonour of his mother,
He straight declined, droop'd, took it deeply,
Fasten'd and fix'd the shame on 't in himself,
Threw off his spirit, his appetite, his sleep,
And downright languish'd. Leave me solely: go,
See how he fares. [Exit Ser. Eie, he! no thought of
The very thought of my revenges that way [him:
Recoil upon me: in himself too nightly,
And in his parties, his alliance; let him be Until a time may serve: for present vengeance,
Take it on her. Camillo and Polixenes
Laugh at me, make their pastime at my sorrow:
They should not laugh if I could reach them, nor Shall she within my power.

Enter Paulina, with a child.

First Lord. You must not enter.

Paul. Nay, rather, good my lords; be second To bear you his tyrannous passion more, alas, [mine:
Than the queen's life? a gracious innocent soul,
More free than he is jealous.

That's enough.

Sce. Ser. Madam, he hath not slept to-night;
None should come at him. [commanded

Paul. Not so hot, good sir:
I come to bring him sleep. 'T is such as you,
That creep like shadows by him and do sigh
At each his needless heavings, such as you.
Nourish the cause of his awaking: I
Do come with words as medicinal as true,
Honest as either, to purge him of that humour
That presses him from sleep.

No noise, my lord; but needful conference
About some gossips for your highness.

Leon. How! Away with that audacious lady! Antigonus,
I charged thee that she should not come about me:
I knew she would.

Ant. I told her so, my lord,
On your displeasure's peril and on mine,
She should not visit you.
ACT II.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE III.

Leon. What, canst not rule her? Paul. From all dishonesty he can: in this, Unless he take the course that you have done, Commit me for committing honour, trust it, He shall not rule me. Ant. La you now, you hear: When she will take the rein I let her run; But she'll not stumble.

Paul. Good my liege, I come; And I beseech you, hear me, who profess Myself your loyal servant, your physician, Your last obedient counsellor, yet that dare Less appear in comforting your evils, Than such as most seem yours: I say, I come From your good queen.

Leon. Good queen! Paul. Good queen, my lord,

Good queen: I say good queen;
And would by combat make her good, so were I A man, the worst about you. Leon. Force her hence. Paul. Let him that makes but trifles of his eyes First hand me: on mine own accord I'll off; But first I'll do my errand. The good queen, For she is good, hath brought forth a daughter: Here 'tis, commends it to your blessings. [Laying down the child.

Leon. Out! A manlike witch! Hence with her, out o' door. A most intelligencing band!

Paul. Not so: I am as ignorant in that as you In so entitling me, and no less honest Than you are mad; which is enough, I'll warrant, As this world goes, to pass for honest.

Leon. Why will you not push her out? Give her the bastard. Thou dotard! thou art woman-tired, unroosted By thy dame Partlet here. Take up the bastard; Take 't up, I say; give 't to thy crane.

Paul. For ever Unvenerable be thy hands, if thou Takest up the princess by that forced baseness Which he has put upon 't! He dreads his wife. Paul. So I would you did; then 't were past all You 'ld call your children yours. [doubt.

Leon. A nest of traitors! Ant. I am none, by this good light. Paul. Nor I, nor any But one that 's here, and that 's himself, for he The sacred honour of himself, his queen's, His hopeful son's, his babe's, betrays to slander, Whose sting is sharper than the sword's; and Will for, as the case now stands, it is a curse [not — He cannot be compell'd to 't—once remove The root of his opinion, which is rotten As ever oak or stone was sound.

Leon. A callat Of boundless tongue, who late hath beat her husband And me enmities! This hat is none of mine; It is the issue of Polixenes: Hence with it, and together with the dam Commit them to the fire!

Paul. It is yours: And we may lay the old proverb to your charge, So like you, 't is the worse. Behold, my lords, Although the print be little, the whole matter And copy of the father, eye, nose, lip, The trick of's frown, his forehead, nay, the valley, The pretty dimples of his chin and cheek, His smiles. That very mould and frame of hand, nail, finger: And thou, good goddess Nature, which hast made it So like to him that got it, if thou hast The ordering of the mind too, 'mongst all colours

No yellow in 't, lest she suspect, as he does, Her children not her husband's!

Leon. A gross hag! And, loz ey, thou art worthy to be hang'd, That will not stay her tongue. Hang all the husbands That cannot do that feat, you'll leave yourself Hardly one subject.

Paul. Once more, take her hence. A most unworthy and unnatural lord Can do no more.

Leon. I' ll ha' thee burnt. Paul. I care not: It is an heretic that makes the fire, Not she which burns in 't. I'll not call you tyrant; But this most cruel usage of your queen, Not able to produce more accusation [yours Than your own weak-hinged fancy, something sa— Of tyranny and will ignoble make you, Yea, scandalous to the world.

Leon. On your allegiance, Out of the chamber with her! Were I a tyrant, Where were her life? she durst not call me so, If she did know me one. Away with her! Paul. No, do tenderly offend me: I' ll be gone. Look to your babe, my lord; 'tis yours: Jove send her A better guiding spirit! What needs these hands? You, that are thus so tender o'er his follies, Will never do him good, not one of you. So; so: farewell; we are gone. [Exit.

Leon. Thon, traitor, last act on thy wife to this. My child? away with 't! Even thou, that hast A heart so tender o'er it, take it hence And see it instantly consumed with fire; Even thou and none but thou. Take it up straight: Within this hour bring me word 't is done. And by good testimony, or I' ll seize thy life, With what thou else call'st thine. If thou refuse And wilt encounter with my wrath, say so; The bastard bruis'd with these my proper hands Shall I dash out. Go, take it to the fire; For thou set'st on thy wife.

Ant. I did not, sir; These lords, my noble fellows, if they please, Can clear me in 't.

Lords. We can: my royal liege, He is not guilty of her coming hither.

Leon. On ye're i' grace. [credit: First Lord. Beezech your highness, give us better We have always truly served you, and beezech you So to esteem of us, and on our knees we beg, As recompense of our dear services Fast and to come, that you do change this purpose, Which being so horrible, so bloody, must Lead on to some foul issue; we all kneel.

Leon. I am a feather for each wind that blows: Shall I live on to see this bastard kneel And call me father? better burn it now Than curse it then. But be it; let it live, It shall not neither. You, sir, come you lither; You that have been so tender and so officious With Lady Marzery, your midwife there, To save this bastard's life,—for 't is a bastard, So sure as this heart's grey,—what will you adven—To save this brat's life? [lure Ant. Any thing, my lord, That my ability may undergo And nobleness impose: at least thus much: I'll pawn the little blood which I have left To save the innocent: any thing possible.

Leon. It shall be possible. Sware by this sword Thou wilt perform my bidding.

Ant. I will, my lord.

Leon. Mark and perform it, see'st thou: for the Of any point in 't shall not only be [fail Death to thyself but to thy lewd-tongued wife,
ACT III.

THE WINTER’S TALE.

Scene II.

Leont. No, I’ll not rear
Another’s issue. Enter a Servant.
Serr. Please your highness, posts
From those you sent to the oracle are come
An hour since: Cleomenes and Dion,
Being well arrived from Delphi, are both landed,
Hasting to the court.

First Lord. So please you, sir, their speed
Hath been beyond account.

Leont. Twenty-three days
They have been absent: ’tis good speed; foretells
The great Apollo suddenly shall have
The truth of this appear. Prepare you, lords;
Summon a session, that we may arrive
Our most displeased lady, for, as she hath Been publicly accused, so shall she have
A just and open trial. While she lives
My heart will be a bar in all but me. Leave me,
And think upon my bidding. [Exit.]
ACT III.

THE WINTER’S TALE.

SCENE II.

With whom I am accused, I do confess,
I loved him as in honour he required,
With such a kind of love as might become
A lady like me, with a love even such,
So and no other, as yourself commanded:
Which not to have done I think had been in me
Both disobedience and ingratitude; [spoke]
To your address of your old friend, whose love had Even since it could speak, from an infant, freely
That it was yours. Now, for conspiracy,
I know not how it tastes; though it be dish’d
For me to try how; all I know of it
Is that Camillo was an honest man;
And why he left your court, the chance of it,
Wotting no more than I, are ignorant.
Leon. You knew of his departure, as you know
What you have underta’en to do in’s absence.
Her. Sir,
You speak a language that I understand not:
My life stands in the level of your dreams,
Which I’ll lay down.
Leon. Your actions are my dreams;
You had a bastard by Polixenes,
And I but dream’d it. As you were past all shame,—
Those of your fact are so — so past all truth;
Which to deny concerns more than avails; for as Thy brat hath been cast out, like itself;
No father owning it,— which is, indeed,
More criminal in thee than it,—so thou
Shalt feel our justice, in whose easiest passage
Look for no less than death.
Her. Sir, spare your threats:
To me can life be no commodity:
The crown and comfort of my life, your favour,
I do give lost: for I do feel it gone,
But know not how it went. My second joy
And the fruits of my life are his presence,
I am barr’d, like one infections. My third comfort,
Starr’d most unluckily, is from my breast,
The innocent milk in it most innocent month,
Ialed out to murder: myself on every post
Proclaimed a strumpet: with immodest hatred
The child-bed privilege denied, which longing
To women of all fashion; lastly, hurried
Here to this place, if the open air, before
I have got strength of limit. Now, my liege,
Tell me what blessings I have here alive,
That I should fear to die? Therefore proceed,
But why this life? no life, I prize it not a straw, but for mine honour,
Which I would free, if I shall be condemn’d
Upon surmises, all proofs sleeping else
But what your jealousies awake, I tell you
This is rigour and not law. Your honours all,
I do refer me to the oracle:
Apollo be my judge!
First Lord. This your request
Is altogether just: therefore bring forth,
And in Apollo’s name, his oracle.
[Exeunt certain Officers.
Her. The Emperor of Russia was my father:
O that he were alive, and here beholding
His daughter’s trial! that he did but see
The flatness of my misery, yet with eyes
Of pity, not revenge!
Re-enter Officers, with Cleomenes and Dion.
Off. You here shall swear upon this sword of justice,
That you, Cleomenes and Dion, have Been both at Delphos, and from thence have brought
This seal’d-up oracle, by the hand deliver’d
Of great Apollo’s priest and that since then
You more than dare to break the holy seal
Nor read the secrets in’t.
Cleo. I. All this we swear.
Leon. Break up the seals and read.

Off. [Reads] Hermione is chaste; Polixenes blameless; Camillo a true subject; Leontes a jealous tyrant; his innocent babe truly begotten; and the king shall live without an heir, if that which is lost be not found.
Lords. Now blessed be the great Apollo!
Her. Praise!—Leon. Hast thou read truth?—Off. Ay, my lord; even so
As it is here set down.
Leon. There is no truth at all in the oracle:
The sessions shall proceed: this is mere falsehood.

Enter Servant.
Serv. My lord the king, the king!—Leon. What is the business?—Serv. O sir, I shall be haled to report it!—The prince your son, with mere conceit and fear
Of the queen’s speed, is gone.
Leon. How! gone!—Serv. Is dead.—Leon. Apollo’s angry; and the heavens themselves
Do strike at my injustice. [Hermione swoons.] How Now there!—Paul. This news is mortal to the queen: look
And see what death is doing.—Leon. Take her hence:
Her heart is but o’ercharged: she will recover: I have too much believed mine own suspicion:—Beseech you, tenderly apply to her
Some remedies for life.—[Exeunt Paulina and Ladies, with Hermione.]

Apollo, pardon
My great profaneness gainst thine oracle! I’ll reconcile me to Polixenes,
Now woo my queen, recall the good Camillo,
Whom I proclaim a man of truth, of mercy;—For, being transported by my jealousies
To bloody thoughts and to revenge, I chose
Camillo for the minister to poison
My friend Polixenes: which had been done,
But that the good mind of Camillo tamed
My swift command, though I with death and with Reward did threaten and encourage him,
Not doing ‘t and being done: he, most humane
And full’d with honour, to my kindly guest
Uncas’d my practice, quit his fortines here,
Which you knew great, and to the hazard
Of all incertainties himself commended.
No richer than his honour: how he glisters
Thorough my rust! and how his piety
Does my deeds make the blacker!—Re-enter Paulina.
Pau. Woe the while!—Off. cut my lace, lest my heart, cracking it,
Break too!—First Lord. What fit is this, good lady?
Paul. What studied torments, tyrant, hast for me?
In leads or oils? what old or newer torture
Must I receive, whose every word desires
To taste of thy most worst? Thy tyranny
Together working with thy jealousies,
Fancies too weak for boys, too green and idle
For girls of nine, O, think what they have done
And then run mad indeed, stark mad! for all
Thy by-gone fooleries were my spies of it.
That thou betray’st Polixenes, ’twas nothing;
That did but show thee, of a fool, inconstant
And damnable ingratitude; nor was ’t much,
Thou wouldst have poison’d good Camillo’s honour,
To have him kill a king; poor trespasses,
More meritorious than his honour: how I reckon
The casting forth to crow thy baby-daughter
To be or none or little; though a devil
Would have shed water out of fire ere done ’t:
ACT III.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE III.

Bohemia. A desert country near the sea.

Enter Antigonus with a child, and a Mariner.

Ant. Thou art perfect then, our ship hath touch’d
The deserts of Bohemia? [upon Mar.

Mar. Ay, my lord; and fear
We have landed in ill time: the skies look grimly
And threaten present blusters. In my conscience,
The heavens will that we have in hand are angry
And soon upon’s.

Ant. Their sacred wills be done! Go, get abroad;
Look to thy bark: I’ll not be long before
I call upon thee.

Hut. Make your best haste, and go not
To this die-hand: ’Tis like to be loud weather;
Besides, this place is famous for the creatures
Of prey that keep upon’t.

Ant. Go thou away:
I’ll follow instantly.

Mar. I am glad at heart
To be so rid o’ the business. [Exit.

Ant. Come, poor babe:
I have heard, but not believed, the spirits o’ the dead
May walk again: if such thing be, thy mother
Appeard to me last night, for ne’er was dream
So like a waking. To me comes a creature
Sometimes her head on one side, some another;
I never saw a vessel of like sorrow,
So ill’d and so becoming: in pure white robes,
Like very sanctity, she did approach
My cabin with that sadness and solemn air;
And gasping to begin some speech, her eyes
Become two spouts: the fury spent, anon
Did this break from her: ‘Good Antigonus,
Since fate, against thy better disposition,
Hath made thy person for the thrower-out
Of my poor babe, according to thine oath,
Places remote enough in Bohemia,
There weep and leave it crying; and, for the babe
Is counted lost for ever, Perdita,
I prithee, call ’t. For this ungentle business,
Put on thee by my lord, thou never shalt see
Thy wife Paulina more.’ And so, with shrieks,
She melted into air. Alas, how much,
I did in time collect myself and thought
This was so and no slumber. Dreams are toys:
Yet for this once, yea, superstitiously,
I will be squared by this. I do believe Hermione hath suffer’d death, and that Apollo would, this being the issue
Of King Polixenes, it should here be laid,
Either for life or death, upon the earth
Of its right father. Blossom, speed thee well!
There lie, and there thy character: there these:
Which may, if fortune please, both breed thee,
Be pretty,

And still rest-thine. The storm begins: poor wretch,
That for thy mother’s fault art thus exposed
To loss and what may follow! Weep I cannot,
But my heart bleeds; and most accursed am I
To be by oath enjoind to this. Farewell! I have
The day dawns more and more: thou’rt like to
A lullaby too rough: I never saw
The heavens so dim by day. A savage clannour!
Well may I get abroad! This is the chase:
I am gone for ever. [Exit, pursued by a bear.

Enter a Shepherd.

Shep. I would there were no age between sixteen and three-and-twenty, or that youth would sleep out the rest: for there is nothing in the between but getting wenchers with child, wrangling the ancien ty, stealing, fighting—Hark you now! Would any but these bored brains of nineteen and two-and-twenty hunt this weather? They have scared away two of my best sheep, which I fear the wolf will sooner find than the master: if any where I have them, ’tis by the sea-side, browsing of ivy.

Good luck, an’t be thy will? what have we here?
Mercy on s, a barne; a very pretty barne! A boy or a child, I wonder? A pretty one; a very pretty one: sure, some scape; though I am not bookish, yet I can read waiting-gentlewoman in the scape.

This has been some turkey-work, some trunk-work, some behind-door-work: they were warmer that got this thim the poor thing is here. I’ll take it up for pity; yet I’ll tarry till my son come; be hail ed but even now. When, ho, ho!

Enter Clown.

Clo. Hillo, lo! [Exit.

Shep. What, art so near? If thou’st see a thing to talk on when thou art dead and rotten, come hither. What ales thou, man?

Clo. I have seen two such sights, by sea and by land! but I am not to say it is a sea, for it is now the sky: betwixt the firmament and it you cannot thrust a bolkin’s point.
ACT IV.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE I.

Enter Time, the Chorus.

Time. I, that please Time, try all, both joy and terror
Of good and bad, that makes and unfolds error,
Now take upon me, in the name of Time,
To use my wings. Impose it not a crime
To me or my swift passage, that I slide
O'er sixteen years and leave the growth untired
Of that wide gap, since it is in my power
To o'erthow law and in one self-born hour
To plant and o'erwhelm custom. Let me pass
The times that brought them in; so shall I do
To the freshest things now reigning and make stale
The glistering of this present, as my tale
Now seems to it. Your patience this allowing,
I burn my glass and give my scene such growing
As you had slept between; I leaves leaving,
The effects of his fond jealousies so grieving
That he shuts up himself, imagine me,
Gentle spectators, that I now may be
In fair Bohemia; and remember well,
I mentioned a son o' the king's, which Florizel
I now name to you: and with speed so pace
To speak of Perdita, now grown in grace
Equal with wondering: what of her ensues
I list not prophesy; but let Time's news
Be known when 't is brought forth. A shepherd's daughter
And what to her adheres, which follows after,
Is the argument of Time. Of this allow,
If ever you have spent time worse ere now;
If never, yet that Time himself doth say
He wishes earnestly you never may.  [Exit.

SCENE II.—Bohemia. The palace of Polixenes.

Enter Polixenes and Camillo.

Pol. I pray thee, good Camillo, be no more importunate: 'tis a sickness denying thee any thing; a death to grant this.

Cam. It is fifteen years since I saw my country; though I have for the most part been abroad, I desire to lay my bones there. Besides, the penitent king, my master, hath sent for me; to whose feeling sorrows I might be some allay, or I o'erween to think so, which is another spur to my departure.

Pol. As thou lovest me, Camillo, wipe not out the rest of thy services by leaving me now; the need I have of thee thine own goodness bath made; better not to have had thee than thus to want thee: thou, having made me businesses which none without thee can sufficiently manage, must either stay to execute them thyself or take away with thee an other secretary much hast done; which if I have not enough considered, as too much I cannot, to be more thankful to thee shall be my study, and my profit therein the heaping friendships. Of that fatal country, Sicilia, prithee speak no more; whose very naming punisht me with the remembrance of that penitent, as thou callest him, and reconciled king, my brother; whose loss of his most precious queen and children are even now to be afresh lamented. Say to me, when sawest thou the Prince Florizel, my son? Kings are no less unhappy, their issue not being gracious, than they are in losing them when they have approved their virtues.

Cam. Sir, it is three days since I saw the prince. What his happier affairs may be, are to me unknown: but I have missing noted, he is of late much retired from court and is less frequent to his princely exercises than formerly he hath appeared.

Pol. I have considered so much, Camillo, and with some care; so far that I have eyes under my service which look upon his removal; from whom I have this intelligence, that he is seldom from the house of a most holy shepherd; a man, they say, that from very nothing, and beyond the imagination of his neighbours, is grown into an unspeakable estate.

Cam. I have heard, sir, of such a man, who hath a daughter of most rare note: the report of her is extended more than can be thought to begin from such a cottage.

Pol. That's likewise part of my intelligence; but,
ACT IV.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE IV.

I fear, the angle that plucks our son thither. Thou shalt accompany us to the place; where we will, not appearing what we are, have some question with the shepherd; from whose simplicity I think it not uneasy to get the cause of my son's resort thither. Prithie, be my present partner in this business, and lay aside the thoughts of Sicilia.

Cam. I willingly obey your command.

Pol. My best Camillo! We must disguise ourselves.

[Exeunt.

SCENE III. — A road near the Shepherd's cottage.

Enter Autolycus, singing.

When daffodills begin to peer,
With heigh! the doxy over the dale,
Why, then comes in the sweet o' the year;
For the red blood reigns in the winter's pale.

The white sheet bleaching on the hedge,
With heigh! the sweet birds, O, how they sing!
Doth set my pugling tooth on edge;
For a quart of ale is a dish for a king.

The lark, that tirra-lyra chants,
With heigh! with heigh! the thrush and the jay,
Are summer songs for me and my aunts,
While we lie tumbling in the hay.

I have served Prince Florizel and in my time wore three-pile; but now I am out of service:

But shall I go mourn for that, my dear?
The pale moon shines by night:
And when I wander here and there,
I then do most go right.

If tinkers may have leave to live,
And bear the sow-skin budget,
Then my account I well may give,
And in the stocks avouch it.

My traffic is sheets; when the kite builds, look to lesser linen. My father named me Autolycus; who being, as I am, littered under Mercury, was likewise as a snapper-up of considered tribes. With die and and I purchased this caparison, and my revenue is the silly cheat. Gallows and knock are too powerful on the highway; beating and starving are terrors to me; for the life to come, I sleep out the thought of it.

A prize! a prize!

[Exeunt.

C1o. Let me see: every 'leven wether tods; every toad yields pound and odd shilling; fifteen hundred shorn, what comes the wool to?

Aut. [Aside] If the springeth hold, the cock's mine.

C1o. I cannot do 't without counters. Let me see;
what I am to buy for our sheep-shearing feast?
Three pound of sugar, five pound of currants, rice,
— what will this sister of mine do with rice?
But my father hath made her mistress of the feast, and she lays it on. She hath made me four and twenty nosegays for the shearers, three-man-song-men all,
and very good ones; but they are most of them
means and bastes; but one puritan amongst them, and he sings psalms to horn-pipes. I must have saffron to colour the warden pies; mace; dates; — one, that's out of my note; manners, seven; a race or two of ginger, but that I may bag: four pound of prunes, and as many of raisins o' the sun.

Aut. O that ever I was born!

C1o. 'Tis the name of me.

Grovelling on the ground.

Aut. O, help me, help me! pluck but off these rags; and then, death, death!

C1o. Alack, poor soul! thou hast need of more rags to lay on thee, rather than have these off.

Aut. O sir, the loathsome ness of them offends me more than the stripes I have received, which are mighty ones and millions.

C1o. Alas, poor man! a million of beating may come to a great matter.

Aut. I am, sir, and beaten; my money and apparel ta'en from me, and these detestable things put upon me.

C1o. What, by a horseman, or a footman?

Aut. A footman, sweet sir, a footman.

C1o. Indeed, he should be a footman by the garments he has left with thee; if this be a horseman's coat, it hath seen very hot service. Lend me thy hand, I'll help thee: come, lend me thy hand.

Aut. O, good sir, tenderly, O!

C1o. Alas, poor soul!

Aut. O, good sir, softly, good sir! I fear, sir, my shoulder-blade is out.

C1o. How now! canst stand?

Aut. [Picking his pocket] Softly, dear sir; good sir, softly. You ha' done me a charitable office.

C1o. Dost lack any money? I have a little money for thee.

Aut. No, good sweet sir; no. I beseech you, sir:
I have a kinsman not past three-quarters of a mile hence, unto whom I was going; I shall there have no money, or any thing I want: offer me no money, pray you; that kills my heart.

C1o. What manner of fellow was he that robbed me?

Aut. A fellow, sir, that I have known to go about with troll-my-dames; I knew him once a servant of the prince: I cannot tell, good sir, for which of his virtues it was, but he was certainly whipped out of the court.

C1o. His vices, you would say; there's no virtue whipped out of the court; they cherish it to make it stay there; and yet it will no more but abide.

C1o. Vices, I would say, sir. I know this man well: he hath been since an ape-bearer; then a process-server, a bailiff; then he compassed a motion of the Prodigal Son, and married a tinker's wife within a mile where my land and living lies; and,

A1. More cowardly rogue in all Bohemia:
if you had but looked big and spit at him, he'd have run.

Aut. I must confess to you, sir, I am no fighter:
I am false of heart that way; and that he knew, I

C1o. How do you now?

[Instead]

Aut. Sweet sir, much better than I was: I can stand and walk: I will even take my leave of you, and pace softly towards my kinsman's.

C1o. Shall I bring thee on the way?

Aut. No, good-fac'd sir; no, sweet sir.

C1o. Then fare thee well: I must go buy spicaes for our sheep-shearing.

Aut. Prosper yet, sweet sir! [Exit Clow.] Your purse is not hot enough to purchase your spice. I'll be with you at your sheep-shearing too: if I make not this cheat bring out another and the shearers that prove sheep, let me be unrolled and my name put in the book of virtue!

[Exit]

C1o.

Scene IV. — The Shepherd's cottage.

Enter Florizel and Perdita.

Flo. These your unusual weeds to each part of you
Do give a life: no shepherdess, but Flora

233
Peering in April's front. This your sheep-shearing Is as a meeting of the petty gods, And you the queen on 't.

Per. Sir, my gracious lord, To chide at you extremes it not becomes me: O pardon, that I name them! You high self, The gracious mark o' the land, you have obscured With a swain's wearing, and me, poor lowly maid, Most goddess-like prank'd up; but that our feasts In every mess have folly and the feeders Digest it with a custom, I should blush To see you so attired, sworn, I, think, To show myself a glass.

Flo. I bless the time When my good falcon made her flight across Thy father's ground.

Per. Now Jove afford you cause! To me the difference forges dread; your greatness Hath not been used to fear. Even now I trouble To think of your father, by some accident, Should pass this way as you did: O, the Fates! How would he look, to see his work so noble Vilely bound up? What would he say? Or how Should I, in these my borrowed haunts, behold The sternness of his presence?

Flo. Nothing but jollity, The gods themselves, Humbling their deities to love, have taken The shapes of beasts upon them: Jupiter Became a bull, and bellow'd; the green Neptune A ram, and bleated; and the fire-bred god, Golden Apollo, a poor humble swain, As I seem now. Their transformations Were never for a piece of beauty rarer, Nor in a way so chaste, since my desires Run not before mine honour, nor my lusts Burn hotter than my faith. O, but, sir, Your resolution cannot hold, when 'tis Opposed, as it must be, by the power of the king: One of these two must be necessities, [purpose, Which then will speak, that you must change this Or my life.

Flo. Thon nearest Perdita, With these forced thoughts, I prithee, darken not The mirth o' the feast. Or I'll be thine, my fair, Or not my father's. For I cannot be Mine own, nor any thing to any, if I be not thine. To this I am most constant, Though destiny say no. Be merry, gentle; Strangie such thoughts as these with any thing That you behold the while. Your guests are coming: Lift up your countenance, as it were the day Of celebration of that nuptial which We two have sworn shall come. O lady Fortune, Stand you auspicious!

Flo. See, your guests approach: Address yourself to entertain them sprightlie, And let's be red with mirth.

Enter Shepherd, Clown, Moonshine, Dorcas, and others, with Polixenes and Camillo disguised.

Scho. Fie, daughter! when my wife lived, upon This day she was both painter, butcher, cook, Both dairie and servant: welcomed all, served all; Would sing her song and dance her turn: now here, At upper end o' the table, now it the middle; On his shoulder, and his; her face o' fire With labour and the thing she took to quench it, She would to each one sip. You are retired, As if you were a feasted one and not The master of the meeting: may you, bid These unknown friends to 's welcome; for it Is a way to make us better friends, more known. Come, quench your blushes and present yourself That which you are, mistress o' the feast: come on, And bid us welcome to your sheep-shearing, As your good flock shall prosper.

Per. [To Pol.] Sir, welcome; It is my father's will I should take on me The hostess-ship o' the day. [To Cam.] You're welcome, sir. Give me those flowers there, Dorcas. Reverend sirs, For you there's rosemary and rue; these keep Seeing and savour all the winter long: Grace and remembrance be to you both, And welcome to our shearing!

Pol. Shepherdess,— A fair one are you — well you fit our ages With flowers of winter.

Per. Sir, the year growing ancient, Not yet on summer's death, nor on the birth Of trembling winter, the fairest flowers o' the sea Are our carnations and streak'd gillyvors, [son Which some call nature's bastards: of that kind Our rustic garden's barren; and I care not To get slips of them.

Pol. Wherefore, gentle maiden, Do you neglect them?

Per. For I have heard it said There is an art which in their putred shares With great creating nature.

Pol. Say there be; Yet nature is made better by no mean But nature makes that mean: so, over that art Which you say adds to nature, is an art That nature makes. You see, sweet maid, we marry A gentle secon to the wildest stock, And make conceive a bank of baser kind By bud of nobler race: this is an art Which does mend nature, change it rather, but The art itself is nature.

Per. So it is.

Pol. Then make your garden rich in gillyvors, And do not call them bastards.

Per. I'll not put The dible in earth to set one slip of them; No more than were I painted I would wish [fore This youth should say 'twere well and only there Desire to breed by me. Here's flowers for you; Hot lavender, mints, savoy, marjoram; The marigold, that goes to bed wi' the sun And with him rises weeping; these are flowers Of middle summer, and I think they are given To men of middle age. You're very welcome. Cam. I should leave grazing, were I of your flock, And only live by gazing.

Per. Out, alas! You'd be so lean, that blasts of January Would blow you through and through. Now, my fair'st friend, I would I had some flowers o' the spring that might Become your time of day: and yours, and yours, That wear upon your virgin branches yet Your maidenheads growing: O Proserpina, For the flowers now, that frightened thou let's fall From Dis's wagon! daffodils That come before the swallow dares, and take The winds of March with beauty; violets dim, But sweeter than the lids of Juno's eyes Or Cytherea's breath; pale primroses, That die unmarrried, ere they can behold Bright Phoebus in his strength — a mabie Most incident to maidens: bold oxlips And the crown imperial; illies of all kinds, The flower-de-luce being one! O, these I lack, To make you garlands of, and my sweet friend, To strew him o'er and o'er!

Flo. What, like a cors?

Per. No, like a rank for love to live and play on; Not like a cors; or if, not to be buried, [flowers: But quick and in mine arms. Come, take your Methinks I play as I have seen them do
ACT IV.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE IV.

In Whitsun pastorals: sure this robe of mine
Does change my disposition.

Flo. What you do
Still better's what is done. When you speak, sweet,
I'd have you do it ever: when you sing,
I'd have you buy and sell so, give aims,
Pray so; and, for the ordering your affairs,
To sing them too: when you do, sir, I wish you
A wave o' the sea, that you might ever do
Nothing but that: move still, still so,
And own no other function: each your doing,
So singular in each particular,
Crowns what you are doing in the present deed,
That all your acts are queens.

Ver. O Doricles.

Your praises are too large: but that your youth,
And the true blood which peepeth fairly through't,
Do plainly give you out an unstein'd shepherd,
With wisdom I might fear, my Doricles,
You wou'd me the false way.

Flo. I think you have
As little skill to fear as I have purpose
To put you to 't. But come: our dance, I pray:
Your hand, my Peribita: so turtle pair,
That never mean to part.

Pol. This is the prettiest low-born lass that ever Ran on the green-sward: nothing she does or seems
But snatches of something greater than herself,
Too noble for this place.

He tells her something
That makes her blood look out: good sooth, she is
The queen of curds and cream.

Clo. Come on, strike up!

Mops. Not a word, a word; we stand upon our man,
Come, strike up! [Music. Here a dance of Shepherd's and Shepherdesses.

Pol. Pray, good shepherd, what fair swain is this
Which dances with your daughter?

Shep. They call him Doricles; and boasts himself
To have a worthy thinking: but I have it
Upon his own report and I believe it:
He looks like sooth. He says he loves my daughter:
I think so too; for never gazed the moon
Upon the water as he 'll stand and read
As 't were my daughter's eyes: and, to be plain, I Think she is not her a kiss to choose
Who loves another best.

Pol. She dances feely.

Shep. So she does anything; though I report it,
That should be silent: if young Doricles
Do light upon her, she shall bring him that
Which he not dreams of.

Enter Servant.

Sere. O master, if you did but hear the pedlar at the door, you would never dance again after a tabor and pipe; no, the bagpipe could not move you: he sings several tunes faster than you 'll tell money; he utters them as he had eaten ballads and all men's cars grew to his tunes.

Clo. He could never come better; he shall come in.
I love a ballad but even too well, if it be dole-ful matter merrily set down, or a very pleasant thing indeed and sung benevolently.

Sere. He hath songs for man or woman, of all sizes: no milliner can so fit his customers with gloves: he has the prettiest love-songs for maids; so without bawdry, which is strange: with such delicate ballads he, by his melodies, to jumph her and thump her: and when some stretch-mouthed rascal would, as it were, mean mischief and break a foul gap into the matter, he makes the maid to answer 'Whoop, do me no harm, good man: ' puts him off, slights him, with 'Whoop, do me no harm, good man.'

Pol. This is a brave fellow.

Clo. Believe me, thou talkest of an admirable conceived fellow. Has he any unbraided wares?

Sere. He hath ribbons of all the colours: the rainbow and all. More than all the lawyers in Bed-minister can learnedly handle, though they come to him by the gross: inkles, collars, cambrics, lawns:
why, he sings 'em over as they were gods or goddesses: you would think a smack were a she-angel, he solicits to the sleeve-hand and the work about the square.

Clo. Prithee bring him in; and let him approach singing.

Pol. Forewarn him that he use no scurrilous words in 's tunes. [Exit Servant.

Clo. You have of these pedlars, that have more in them than you 'd think, sister.

Per. Ay, good brother, or go about to think.

Enter Autolycus, singing.

Lawn as white as driven snow;
Cyprus black as e'er was crow;
Gloves as sweet as Eve's rose;
Masks for faces and for noses;
Bangle bracelet, necklace amber;
Perfume for a lady's chamber;
Golden quills and stomachers;
For my lads to give their dears;
Pins and poking-sticks of steel;
What maid's harm from head to heel;
Come buy of me, come; come buy, come buy;
Buy, lad's, or else your lasses cry:
Come buy.

Clo. If I were not in love with Mopsa, thou shouldst take no money of me; but being enthralled as I am, it is also to be the bondage of certain ribbons and gloves.

Mops. I was promised them against the feast; but they come not too late now.

Dor. He hath promised you more than that, or there be liars.

Mops. He hath paid you all he promised you: may be, he has paid you more, which will shame you to give him again.

Clo. Is there no manners left among maid's? will they wear their plackets where they should bear their faces? Is there not milking-time, when you are going to bed, or in the morning, to whistle off these secrets, but you must be little-tattling before all our guests? 'tis well they are whispering: charmer yours-tongues, and not a word more.

Mops. I have done. Come, you promised me a tawdrey-face and a pair of sweet gloves.

Clo. Have I not told thee how I was cozened by the way and lost all my money?

Aut. And indeed, sir, there are cozeners abroad;
therefore it behoves men to be wary. [Here.

Clo. Fear not thou, man, thou shalt lose nothing

Aut. I hope so, sir; for I have about me many parcels of charmed as damask adventures.

Clo. What last here? ballads?

Mops. Pray now, buy some: I love a ballad in print o' life, for then we are sure they are true.

Aut. Here's one to a very doleful tune, how a usurer's wife was brought to bed of twenty money-bags at a banquet, and how she longed to eat adders' heads and loads carbonadoed.

Mops. Is it true, think you?

Aut. Very true, and but a month old.

Dor. Bless me from marrying a usurer!

Aut. Here's the midwife's name to 't, one Mis-tries Tappiter: and five or six honest wives that were present. Why should I carry lies abroad?

Mops. Pray you now, buy it.

ACT IV.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE IV.

Clo. Come on, lay it by; and let's first see more ballads; we'll buy the other things anon.

Aut. Here's another ballad of a fish, that appeared upon the coast on Wednesday the four-score of April, forty thousand fathom above water, and sung this ballad against the hard hearts of maidens: it was thought then whither it went, but turned into a cold fish for she would not exchange flesh with one that loved her: the ballad is very pitiful and as fine as

Dor. Is it true too, think you? [true.

Aut. Five justices' hands at it, and witnesses more than my pack will hold.

Clo. Lay it by for another.

Aut. This is a merry ballad, but a very pretty one.

May. Let's have some merry ones.

Aut. Why, this is a passing merry one and goes to the tune of 'Two maidens wooing a man,' there's scarce a maid westward but she sings it; 'tis in request, I can tell you.

May. We can both sing it: if thou 'lt bear a part, thou shalt hear; 'tis in three parts.

Dor. We had the tune on 't a month ago.

Aut. I can bear my part; you must know 't is my occupation; have at it with you.

SONG.

A. Get you hence, for I must go
Where it fits not you to know.

D. Whither? M. O, whither? D. Whither?
M. It becomes thy oath full well,
Thou to me thy secrets tell.

D. Me too, let me go thither.

M. Or thou goest to the grange or mill.
D. If to either, thou dost ill.

M. Thou hast sworn thy love to be;

D. Thou hast sworn it more to me:
M. That it may do the better serve,

A. Whither goest? say, whither?

Clo. We'll have this song out anon by ourselves; my father and the gentlemen are in sad talk, and we'll not trouble them. Come, bring away thy pack after me. Wenchens, I'll buy for you both. Pedlar, let's have the first choice. Follow me, girls. [Exeunt Dorothea and Mopa.

Aut. And you shall pay well for 'em. [Follows singing.

Will you buy any tape,
Or lace for your cape,
My dainty duck, my dear-a?
Any silk, any thread,
Any toys for your head,
Of the new'st and finest, finest wear-a?
Come to the pedlar,
Money's a medlar,
That doth utter all men's ware-a. [Exit.

Re-enter Servant.

Serv. Master, there is three carters, three shepherds, three neat-herds, three swine-herds, that have made themselves all men of hair, they call themselves Soldiers, and they have a dance which the wenches say is a gallimaufry of gambols, because they are not in 't, but they themselves are o' the mind, if it be not too rough for some that know little but bowling, it will please plentifully.

Serv. Away! we'll none on't; here has been too much homely foolery already. I know, sir, we weary you.

Pol. You weary those that refresh us: pray, let's see these three threes of herdsmen.

Serv. One three of them, by their own report, sir, hath danced before the king; and not the worst of the three but jumps twelve foot and a half by the squire.

Serv. Leave your prating: since these good men are pleased, let them come in; but quickly now.

Serv. Why, they stay at door, sir. [Exit.

Here a dance of twelve Satyrs.

Pol. O, father, you'll know more of that hereafter.

[To Cam.] Is it not too far gone? 'Tis time to part them.

He's simple and tells much. [To Flor.] How now, fair shepherd!

Your heart is full of something that does take Your mind from feasting. Sooth, when I was young
And handed love as you do, I was wont [sack'd
To load my she with knacks: I would have run the pedlar's skilful freemasonry and have paid'd it
To her acceptance; you have let him go
And nothing married with him. If your lass Interpretation should abuse and call this
Your lack of love or bounty, you were straited
For a reply, at least if you make a care
Of happy holding her.

Flo. Old sir, I know
She prizes not such tribles as these are:
The gifts she looks from me are pack'd and lock'd
Up in my heart; which I have given already,
But not deliver'd. O, hear me breathe my life
Before this ancient sir, who, it should seem,
 Hath sometime loved! I take thy hand, this hand,
As soft as dove's down and as white as it. [bolted
Or Ethiopian's tooth, or the fann'd snow's that's
By the northern blasts twice o'er.

Pol. What follows this?
How prettily the young servant seems to wash
The hand was fair before! I have put you out:
But to your protestation; let me hear
What you profess.

Flo. Do, and be witness to 't.

Pol. And this my neighbour too?

Flo. Thrice, and he, and more
Than he, and men, the earth, the heavens, and all;
That, were I crown'd the most imperial monarch, Therof, most worthy, were I the fairest youth
That ever made eye swerve, had force and knowledge
More than was ever man's, I would not prize them
Without her love; for her employ them all;
Commend them and condemn them to her service
Or to their own petition.

Pol. Fairly offer'd.

Cam. This shows a sound affection.

Serv. Say you the like to him?

Per. I cannot speak
So well, nothing so well; no, nor mean better:
By the pattern of mine own thoughts I cut out
The purity of his.

Serv. Take hands, a bargain!

And, friends unknown, you shall bear witness to 't: I give my daughter to him, and will make Her portion equal his.

Flo. O, that must be
I the virtue of your daughter: one being dead,
I shall have more than you can dream of yet;
Enough then for your wonder. But, come on,
Contract us: I'll bear these witnesses.

Serv. Come, your hand;

Pol. Soft, swain, awhile, beseech you;

Have you a father?

Flo. I have: but what of him?

Pol. Knows he of this?

Flo. He neither does nor shall.

Pol. Methinks a father
Is at the nuptial of his son a guest
That best becomes the table. Pray you once more,
Is not your father grown incapable
Of reasonable affairs? 'Is he not stupid
With age and altering rheums? can he speak? hear?
Know man from man? dispute his own estate?
ACT IV.

"THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE IV.

Lies he not bed-rid? and again does nothing
But what he did being childish?
Flo. No, good sir;
He has his health and ampler strength indeed
Than most have of his age.
Pol. By my white beard, You offer him, if this be so, a wrong
Something unfulfil: reason my son
Should choose himself a wife, but as good reason
The father, all whose joy is nothing else
But fair posterity, should hold some counsel
In such a business.
Flo. I yield all this; But for some other reasons, my grave sir,
Which 'tis not fit you know, I not acquaint
My father of this business.
Pol. Let him know 't.
Flo. He shall not.
Flo. No, he must not.
Shep. Let him, my son: he shall not need to grieve
At knowing of thy choice.
Flo. Come, come, he must not.
Mark our contract.
Pol. Mark your divorce, young sir,
[Discovering himself]
Whom son I dare not call: thou art too base
To be acknowledged: thou a sceptor's heir,
That thus affect'st a sheep-hook! Thou old traitor,
I am sorry that by hanging thee I can
But shorten thy life one week. And thou, fresh piece
Of excellent witchcraft, who of force must know
The royal fool thou copest with,
Shep. O, my heart! I'll have thy beauty scratch'd with thorns,
More homely than thy state. For thee, fond boy,
If I may ever know thy name, but sigh
That thou no more shalt see this knack, as never
I mean thou shalt, we'll bar thee from succession;
Not hold thee of our blood, no, nor our kin,
Far than Decalson off: mark thou my words,
Follow us to the court. Thou shalt, for this time,
Though full of our displeasure, yet we free thee
From the dead blow of it. And you, enchantment,— Worthy enough a herdsman; yea, him too,
That makes himself, but for our honour therein,
Unworthy thee,—if ever henceforth thou
These rural hitches to his entrance open,
Or hoop his body more with thy embraces,
I will devise a death as cruel for thee
As thou art tender to.

Per. Even here undone!
I was about to speak and tell him plainly,
The selfsame sun that shines upon his court
Hides not his visage from our cottage
Looks on alike. Will 't please you, sir, be gone?
I told you what would come of this: beseech you,
Of your own state take care: this dream of mine,—
Being now awake, 'll queen it no inuch farther,
But milk my ewes and weep.

Cam. Why, how now, father! Speak ere thou diest.
Shep. I cannot speak, nor think,
Nor dare to know that which I know. O sir!
You have undone a man of fourscore three,
That thought to fill his grave in quiet, yea,
To die upon the bed my father died.
To lie close by his honest bones: but now
Some hangman must put on my shroud and lay me
Where no priest shovel's in dust. O cursed wretch,
That knew'st this was the prince, and wouldst advent
To mingle faith with him! Undone! undone!
If I might die within this hour, I have lived
To die when I desire.

Flo. Why look you so upon me?
I am but sorry, not afeard; delay'd,
But nothing alter'd: what I was, I am;
More straining on for plucking back, not following
My leash unwillingly.
Cam. Gracious my lord, You know your father's temper: at this time
He will allow no speech, which I do guess
You do not purpose to him; and as hardly
Will he endure your sight as yet, I fear:
Then, till the fury of his highness settle,
Come not before him.
Flo. I not purpose it.
I think, Camillo?
Cam. Even he, my lord.
Per. How often have I told you 't would be thus!
How often said, my dignity would last
But till 't were known!
Flo. It cannot fail but by
The violation of my faith: and then
Let nature crush the sides o' the earth together
And mar the seeds within! Lift up thy looks:
From my succession wipe me, father; I
Am heir to my affection.
Cam. Be advised.
Flo. I am, and by my fancy: if my reason
Will thereto be obedient, I have reason;
If not, my senses, better pleased with madness,
Do bid it welcome.
Cam. This is desperate, sir.
Flo. So call it; but it does fulfill my vow;
I needs must think it honesty. Camillo,
Not for Bohemia, nor the pomp that may
Be thereat glean'd, for all the sun sees or
The close earth worms or the profound sea hides
In unknown fathom, will I break my oath
To this my fair beloved; therefore, I pray you,
As you have ever been my father's honour'd friend,
When he shall miss me,—as, in faith, I mean not
To see him any more,—cast your good counsels
Upon his passion: let myself and fortune
Tug for the time to come. This you may know
And so deliver. I am put to sea
With her whom here I cannot hold on shore;
And most opportune to our need I have
A vessel rides fast by, but not prepared
For this design. What course I mean to hold Shall nothing benefit your knowledge, nor Concern me the reporting.
Cam. O my lord! I would your spirit were easier for advice,
Or stronger for your need.
Flo. Mark, Perdita [Drawing her aside]
I'll hear you by and by.
Cam. He's irremovable, Resolved for flight. Now were I happy, if
His going I could frame to serve my turn,
Save him from danger, do him love and honour,
Purchase the sight again of dear Sicilia
And that unhappy king, my master, whom
I so much thurst to see.
Flo. Now, good Camillo;
I am so fraught with curious business that
I leave out ceremony.
Cam. Sir, I think
You have heard of my poor services, i' the love
That I have borne your father?
Flo. Very nobly
Have you deserved: it is my father's music
To speak your deeds, not little of his care
To have them recomposed as thought on.
Cam. Well, my lord,
If you may please to think I love the king
And through him what is nearest to him, which is
Your gracious self, embrace but my direction: If your more ponderous and settled project
May suffer alteration, on mine honour,
I'll point you where you shall have such receiving
As shall become your highness: where you may Enjoy your mistress, from whom I see
There's no disposition to be made, but by—
As heaven forefend!—your ruin: marry her,
And, with my best endeavours in your absence,
Your discontenting father strive to qualify
And bring him up to liking.
Flo. How, Camillo,
May this, almost a miracle, be done?
That I may call thee something more than man
And after that trust to thee.
Cam. Have you thought on
A place whereunto you'll go?
Flo. Not any yet:
But if the unhought-on accident be guilty
To what we wildly do, so we profess;
Ourselves to be the slaves of chance and dies
Of every wind that blows.
Cam. Then list to me:
This follows, if you will not change your purpose
But undergo this plight, make for Sicilia,
And there present yourself and your fair princess,
For so I see she must be, 'fore Leontes:
She shall be habited as it becomes
The partner of your bed. Methinks I see
Leontes opening his free arms and weeping
His welcomes forth: asks for the son forgiveness,
As 't were the father's person; kisses the hands
Of your fresh princess; o'er and o'er divides him
'Twixt his unkindness and his kindness: the one
He chides to hell and bids the other grow
Faster than thought or time.
Flo. Worthy Camillo,
What colour for my visitation shall I
Hold up before him?
Cam. Sent by the king your father
To greet him and to give him comforts. Sir,
The manner of your bearing towards him, with
What you as from your father shall deliver,
Things known betwixt us three, I'll write you down:
The which shall point you forth at every sitting
What you must say; that he shall not perceive
But that you have your father's bosom there
And speak his very heart.
Flo. There is some sap in this.
Cam. A cause more promising
Than a wild dedication of yourselves
To unpath'd waters, undream'd shores, most certain
To miseries enough: no hope to help you,
But as you shake off one to take another;
Nothing so certain as your anchors, who
Do their best office, if they can but stay you
Where you 'll be loath to be: besides you know
Prosperity 's the very bond of love,
Whose fresh complexion and whose heart together
Affliction alters.
Flo. One of these is true:
I think affliction may subdue the check,
But not take in the mind.
Cam. Yea, say you so?
There shall not at your father's house these seven
Be born another such.
Flo. My good Camillo,
She is as forward of her breeding as
She is 't the rear our birth.
Cam. I cannot say 'tis pity
She lacks instructions, for she seems a mistress
To most that teach.
Per. Your pardon, sir; for this
I' ll blush you thanks.
Flo. My prettist Perdita!
But O, the thorns we stand upon! Camillo,
Preserver of my father, now of me.
The medicine of our house, how shall we do?

We are not furnish'd like Bohemia's son,
Nor shall appear in Sicilia.
Cam. My lord,
Fear none of this: I think you know my fortunes
Do all lie there: it shall be so my care
To have you royally appointed as if
The scene you play were mine. For instance, sir,
That you may know you shall not want, one word.
[They talk aside.

Re-enter Autolycus.

Aut. Ha, ha! what a fool I am! and Trust's his sworn brother, a very simple gentleman! I have sold all my trumpery: not a counterfeit stone, not a ribbon, glass, pomander, brooch, table-book, belladonna, taper, glove, shoe-buckle, horn, ring, to keep my pack from fasting: they throng who should buy first, as if my trinkets had been hallowed and brought a benediction to the buyer:
by which means I saw whose purse was best in picture; and what I saw, to my good use I remember'd. My clown, who wants but something to be a reasonable man, grew so in love with the wenches' song, that he would not stir his pettoes till he had both time and words; which so drew the rest of the herd to me that all their other senses stuck in ears:
you might have pinched a placket, it was senseless;
I was nothing to geld a copulice of a purse: I could have filed keys off that hung in chains; no bearing, no feeling, but my sir's song, and admiring the nothing of it. So that in this time of lethargy I picked and cut most of their festival purses; and had not the old man come in with a whoo-baw against his daughter and the king's son and scared my changlings from the cliff, I had not left a purse alive in the whole army.

[Camillo, Florizel, and Perdita come forward.
Cam. Nay, but my letters, by this means being there
So soon as you arrive, shall clear that doubt.
Flo. And these that you'll procure from King
Leontes—
Cam. Shall satisfy your father.
Per. Happy be you!
All that you speak shows fair.
Cam. Who have we here?
[Seeing Autolycus.
We'll make an instrument of this, omit
Nothing may give us aid.
[ing.
Aut. If they have overheard me now, why, hang
Cam. How now, good fellow! why shaketh thou so? Fear not, man: here's no harm intended to Aut. I am a poor fellow, sir.
Cam. Why, be so still; here's nobody will steal that from thee: yet for the outside of thy poverty we must make an exchange; therefore dissemble thee instantly,—thou must think there's a necessity in 't,—and change garments with this gentleman:
though the pennworth on his side be the worst,
yet hold thee, there's some boot.
Aut. I am a poor fellow, sir. [Aside] I know ye well enough.
Cam. Nay, pritchee, dispatch: the gentleman is half layed already.
Flo. Dispatch, I pritchee.
Aut. Indeed, I have had earnest; but I cannot with conscience take it.
Cam. Unbuckle, unbuckle.
[Florizel and Autolycus exchange garments.
Fortunate mistress,—let my prophecy
Come home to ye!—you must retire yourself
Into some covert: take your sweetheart's hat
And pluck it o'er your brows, muzzle your face,
Dismanle you, and, as you can, dislik'en
The truth of your own seeing; that you may—208

THE SCENE

For I do fear eyes over—to shipboard
Get undescribed.

 Pete. I see the play so lies
That I must bear a part.

No remedy.

Have you done there?

Flora. Should I now meet my father,
He would not call me son.

Cam. Nay, you shall have no hat.

[Comingxit to Perdita.]

Come, lady, come. Farewell, my friend.

Alien, sir.

Flora. O Perdita, what have we twain forgot?

Pray you, a word.

Cam. [Aside] What I do next shall be to tell the

Of this escape and whither they are bound;

Where my home is I shall so prevail

To force him after: in whose company

I shall review Sicilia, for whose sight

I have a woman's longing.

Flora. Fortune speed us!

Thus we set on, Camillo, to the sea-side.

Cam. The swifter speed the bolder.

[Except Florizel, Perdita, and Camillo.

Aut. I understand the business, I hear it: to have an open ear, a quick eye, and a nimble hand, is necessary for a cut-purse: a good nose is requisite also, to smell out work for the other senses. I see this is the time that the mighty may do wrong. What an exchange had this been without boot! What a boot is here with this exchange! Sure the gods do this year connive at us, and we may do anything extemporary. The prince himself is about a piece of iniquity, stealing away from his father with his clog at his heels: if I thought it were not beyond of honesty to acquaint the king withal, I would not do 't: I hold it the more knavery to conceal it; and therein am I constant to my profession.

Reenter Clown and Shepherd.

Aside, aside: here is more matter for a hot brain:
every lane's end, every shop, church, session, hanging,
yields a careful man work.

Claro. See, see; what a man you are now! There is no other way but to tell the king she's a changening and none of your flesh and blood.

Shep. Nay, but hear me.

Claro. Nay, but hear me.

Shep. Go to, then.

Claro. She being none of your flesh and blood, your flesh and blood has not offended the king; and so your flesh and blood is not to be punished by him.

Show those things you found about her, those secret things, all but what she lis with here: this being done, let the law go whist: I warrant you.

Shep. I will tell the king all, every word, yea, and his son's pranks too; who, I may say, is no honest man, neither to his father, nor to me, to go about to make me the king's brother-in-law.

Claro. Indeed, brother-in-law was the farthest off you could have been to him and then your blood had been the dearer by I know how much an ounce.

Aut. [Aside] Very wisely, puppies!

Shep. Well, let us to the king; there is that in this fardeI will make him scratch his beard.

Aut. [Aside] I know not what impediment this complaint may be to the flight of my master.

Claro. Pray heartily he be at palace.

Aut. [Aside] Though I am not naturally honest,

I am so sometimes by chance: let me pocket up my pudder's excrement. [Takes off his false beard.] How now, rusties! whither are you bound?

Shep. To the palace, an it like your worship.

Aut. Your affairs there, what, with whom, the condition of that fardeI, the place of your dwelling, your names, your ages, of what having, breeding,

and any thing that is fitting to be known, discover.

Clo. We are but plain fellows, sir.

Aut. A lie; you are rough and hairy. Let me have no lying: it becomes none but tradesmen, and they often give us soldiers the lie: but we pay them for it with our swords. I am no thinking coin: therefore they do not give us the lie.

Clo. Your worship had like to have given us one,
you had not taken yourself with the manner.

Shep. Are you a courtei, an't like you, sir?

Aut. Whether it like me or no, I am a courtei.

Searst us not the air of the court in these churl-ings? hath not my gait in it the measure of the court? receives not thy nose court-colour from me?

reflect I not on thy baseness court-contempt? Thinkest thou, for that I insinuate, or foaze from thee thy business, I am therefore no courtei? I have by and by vengeance bitter me that will either push or pluck back thy business there: whereupon I command thee to open thy affairs.

Shep. My business, sir, is to the king.

Aut. What advocate hast thou to him?

Shep. I know not, an't like you.

Aut. What is the court-word for a pheasant:

say you have none. Then.

Shep. None, sir: I have no pheasant, cock nor hen.

Aut. How blessed are we that are not simple men!

Yet nature might have made me as these are,

Therefore I will not disdain.

Cla. The king cannot be here a great courtei.

Shep. His garments are rich, but he wears them not handsomely.

Clo. He seems to be the more noble in being fantastical: a great man, I'll warrant; I know by the picking on's teeth.

Aut. 'Tis well, which there? what 's t' fardeI? Wherefore that box?

Shep. Sir, there lies such secrets in this fardeI and box, which none must know but the king; and which he shall know within this hour, if I may come to the speech of him.

Aut. Age, thou hast lost thy labour.

Shep. Why, sir?

Aut. The king is not at the palace; he is gone abroad a new ship to purge melancholy and air himself: for, if thou best capable of things serious, thou must know the king is full of grief.

Shep. So 'tis said; sir: about his son, that should have married the shepherd's daughter.

Aut. If that shepherd be not in hand-fast, let him fly: the curses he shall have, the tortures he shall feel, will break the back of man, the heart of monster.

Clo. Think you so, sir?

Aut. Not he alone shall suffer what wit can make heavy and hard: he that speaks to those that are gnorne to him, though removed fifty times, shall all come under the hangman: which though it be great pity, yet it is necessary. An old sheep-whistling rogue, a ram-fender, to offer to have his daughter come into grace! Some say he shall be stoned: but that death is too soft for him, say I: draw our throne into a sheep-cote! all deaths are too few, the sharpest too easy.

Clo. Has the old man e'er a son, sir, do you hear, an't like you, sir?

Aut. He has a son, who shall be flayed alive: then rubbed over with honey, set on the head of a wasp's dead; then stand till he be three-quarters and a bran dead: then recovered again with aquavitae or some other hot infusion; then, raw as he is, and in the hottest day prognostication proclaims, shall be set against a brick-wall, the sun looking with a searching eye on him, where he is to behold him with flies blown to death. But what talk we of these traitorly rascals, whose miseries are to be smiled at, their offences being so capital? Tell me, for you seem to be honest plain men, what you have to the king: being something gently considered, I'll

ACT V.

THE WINTER’S TALE.

SCENE I. — A room in Leontes’ palace.

Enter Leontes, Cleomenes, Dion, Paulina, and Servants.

Cleo. Sir, you have done enough, and have performed.

A saint-like sorrow: no fault could you make.

While you have not redeemed; indeed, paid down
More penitence than done trespass: at the last,
Do as the heavens have done, forget your evil;
With them forgive yourself.

Leon. Whilst I remember her and her virtues, I cannot forget
My blinshies in them, and so still think of
The wrong I did myself; which was so much,
That heiferless hath made my kingdom and Destroy’d the sweet’st companion that e’er man
Bred his hopes out of.

Paul. True, true too, my lord: I, one by one, you wedded all the world,
Or from the all that are took something good,
To make a perfect woman, she you kill’d
Would be unparallel’d.

Leon. I think so. Kill’d! She I kill’d! I did so: but thou striketh me
So sorely, to say I did; it is as bitter
Upon thy tongue as in my thought: now, good now,
Say so but seldom.

Cleo. Not at all, good lady:
You might have spoken a thousand things that would
Have done the time more benefit and graced
Your kindness better.

Paul. You are one of those
Would have him wed again.

Dion. If you would not so,
You pity not the state, nor the remembrance
Of his most sovereign name; consider little
What dangers, by his highness’ fail of issue,
May drop upon his kingdom and devour
Uncertain lookers on.
What were more holy
Than to rejoice the former queen is well? —
What holier than, for royalty’s repair,
For present comfort and for future good,
To bless the bed of majesty again
With a sweet fellow to ‘t?

Paul. There is none worthy,
Respecting her that’s gone. Besides, the gods bring you where he is abroad, tender your persons to his presence, whisper him in your behalfs; and if it be in man besides the king to effect your suits, here is man shall do it.

Cleo. He seems to be of great authority; close with him, give him gold; and though authority be a stubborn heard, yet he is oft led by the nose with gold:
show the inside of your purse to the outside of his hand, and no more ado. Remember ‘stoned,’ and ‘flayed alive.’

Shay. An’t please you, sir, to undertake the business for us, here is that gold I have: I’ll make it as much love, and leave this young man in pawn till
I bring it you.

Aut. After I have done what I promised?

Shay. Ay, sir.

Aut. Well, give me the moiety. Are you a party in this business?

Cleo. In some sort, sir: but though my case be a pitiful one, I hope I shall not be flayed out of it.

Aut. O, that’s the case of the shepherd’s son:
hang him, he’ll be made an example.

Cleo. Comfort, good comfort! We must to the king and show our strange sights: he must know
’tis none of your daughter nor my sister; we are gone else. Sir, I will give you as much as this old man does when the business is performed, and remain, as he says, your pawn till it be brought you.

Aut. I will trust you. I walk before toward the sea-side; go on the right hand: I will but look upon the hedge and follow you.

[Exit Cleo.]

Cleo. We are blest in this man, as I may say, even Shay. Let’s before as he bids us: he was provided to do us good.

[Exeunt Shepherd and Clown.

Aut. If I had a mind to be honest, I see Fortune would not suffer me: she drops booties in my mouth.
I am courted now with a double occasion, gold and a means to do the prince my master good; which who knows how that may turn back to my advancement? I will bring these two moles, these blind ones, aboard him; if he think it fit to shore them again and that the complaint they have to the king concerns him nothing, let him call me rogue for being so far oblivious; for I am proof against that title and what shame else belongs to’t. To him will
I present them: there may be matter in it.

[Exit.

Will have fulfilled their secret purposes;
For has not the divine Apollo said,
Is’t not the tenour of his oracle,
That King Leontes shall not have an heir
Till his lost child be found? which that it shall,
Is all as monstrous to our human reason
As my Antigonus to break his grave,
And come again to me: who, on my life,
Did perish with the infant. ’Tis your counsel
My lord should to the heavens be contrary, Oppose against their wills. [To Leontes.] Care not for issue;
The crown will find an heir: great Alexander
Left his to the worthiest; so his successor
Was like to be the best.

Leon. Good Paulina,
Who hast the memory of Hermione,
I know, in honour, O, that ever I
Had squared me to thy counsel! then, even now,
I might have look’d upon my queen’s full eyes,
Have taken treasure from her lips — and left them
More rich for what they yielded.

Leon. Thou speak’st truth.
No more such wives: therefore, no wife: one worse,
And better used, would make her sacred spirit
Again possess her corpse, and on this stage,
Where we’re offenders now, appear soul-yex’d,
And begin, ‘Why to me?’

Paul. Had she such power,
She had just cause.

Leon. She had; and would incense me
To murder her I married.

Paul. I should so.
Were I the ghost that walk’d, I’d bid you mark
Her eye, and tell me for what dull part in’t
You choose her; then I’d shriek, that even your ears
Should rift to hear me; and the words that follow’d
Should be, ‘Remember mine.’

Leon. Stars, stars,
And all eyes else dead coals! Fear thou no wife;
I’ll have no wife, Paulina.

Paul. Will you swear
Never to marry but by my free leave?

Leon. Never, Paulina; so be blest my spirit!

Paul. Then, good my lords, bear witness to his Cleo. You tempt him over-much.

Paul. Unless another,
ACT V.

THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE I.

As like Hermione as is her picture,
Afront his eye.
Cleom. Good madam,— I have done.
Yet, if my lord will marry,— if you will, sir,
No remedy, but you will,— give me the office
To choose you a queen: she shall not be so young
As was your former; but she shall be such
As all your former's were: her first queen's ghost, it should take joy
To see her in your arms.
Leon. My true Paulina,
We shall not marry till thou bid'st us.
Pau. That
Shall then be when your first queen's again in breath;
Never till then.

Enter a Gentleman.

Gent. One that gives out himself Prince Florizel, Son of Polixenes, with his princess, she
The fairest I have yet beheld, desires access
To your high presence.
Leon. What with him? he comes not
Like to his father's greatness: his approach,
Out of circumstance and sudden, tells us
'Tis not a visitation framed, but forced
By need and accident. What train?
Gent. And those but mean.
Leon. His princes, say you, with him?
Gent. Ay, the most peerless piece of earth, I think,
That e'er the sun shine bright on.
Paul. O Hermione,
As every present time doth boost itself
Above a better gone, so must thy grave
Give way to what's seen now! Sir, you yourself
Have said and writ so, but your writing now
Is colder than that theme, 'She had not been,
Nor was not to be equal'd:'— thus your verse
Flow'd with her beauty once: 'tis shrewdly ebb'd,
To say you have seen a better.
Gent. Pardon, madam: the one I have almost forgot,— your pardon,—
The other, when she has obtain'd your eye,
Will have your tongue too. This is a creature,
Would she begin a sect, might quench the zeal
Of all professors else, make proselytes
Of who she but bid follow.
Paul. How! not women?
Gent. Women will love her, that she is a woman
More worth than any man; men, that she is
The rarest of all women.
Leon. Go, Cleomenes:
Yourself, assisted with your honour'd friends,
Bring them to our embracement. Still, 'tis strange [Exit Cleomenes and others.]
He thus should steal upon us.
Paul. Had our prince,
Jewel of children, seen this hour, he had pair'd
Well both this lord: there was not full a month
Between their births.
Leon. Prithie, no more; cease; thou know'st
He dies to me again when talk'd of: sure,
When I shall see this gentleman, thy speeches
Will bring me to consider that which may Unfurnish me of reason. They are come.

Re-enter Cleomenes and others, with Florizel and Perdita.

Your mother was most true to wedlock, prince;
For she did print your royal father off.
Concerning you: were I but twenty-one,
Your father's image is so hit in you,
His very air, that I should call you brother,
As I did him, and speak of something wildly
By us perform'd before. Most dearly welcome!
And your fair princess,—godness!— O, alas!
I lost a couple, that 'twixt heaven and earth
Might thus have stood begotting wonder as
You, gracious couple, do: and then I lost—
All mine own folly,—the society,
Amity too of your brave father, whom,
Though bearing misery, I desire my life
Once more to look on him.

Flo. By his command
Have I here touch'd Sicilia and from him
Give you all greetings that a king, at friend,
Can send his brother: and, but infirmity
Which waits upon worn times hath something seiz'd
His wish'd ability, he had himself
The lands and waters 'twixt your throne and his Measured to look upon you; whom he loves—
He made me say so—more than all the spects
And those that bear them living.
Leon. O my brother,
Good gentle! the wrongs I have done thee stir
A fresh within me, and these thy offices,
So rarely kind, are as interpreters
Of my behind-hand slackness. Welcome hither,
As is the spring to the earth. And hath he too
Exposed this purgation to the fearful usage,
At least ungentle, of the dreadful Neptune,
To greet a man not worth her pains, much less
The adventure of her person?

Flo. Most royal sir, from thence; from him,
Whose daughter
Her tears proclaim'd his, parting with her: thence,
A prosperous south wind friendly, we have cross'd,
To execute the charge my father gave me
For visiting your highness: my best train
I have from your Sicilian shores dismiss'd;
Who for Bohemia bend, to signify
Not only my success in Libya, sir,
But my arrival and my wife's in safety
Here where we are.
Leon. The blessed gods
Purge all infection from our air whilst you
Do climate here! You have a holy father,
A graceful gentleman; against whose person,
So sacred as it is, I have done sin:
For when the heavens, the best, have an angry note,
Have left me issueless; and your father's best,
As he from heaven merits it, with you
Worthy his goodness. What might I have been,
Might I a son and daughter now have look'd on,
Such goodly things as you!

"Enter a Lord.

Lord. Most noble sir,
That which I shall report will bear no credit,
Were not the proof so nigh. Please you, great sir,
Bohemia greets you from himself by me;
Desires you to attach his son, who has—
His dignity and duty both cast off—
Fled from his father, from his hopes, and with
A shepherd's daughter.
Lord. Here in your city: I now came from him:
I speak amazed: and it becomes
My marvel and my message. To the court
While he was hastening, in the chase, it seems,
Of this fair couple. meets he on the way
The father of this seeming lady and
Her brother, having both their country quitted
With this young prince.

Flo. Camillo has betray'd me;
Whose honour and whose honesty till now
Endured all weathers.

Leon. Lay 't so to his charge:
He's with the king your father.

Cam. Who? Camillo?
Cam. I spake with him: who now

271
HAS THESE POOR MEN IN QUESTION. NEVER SAW I
WITCHES SO WAKEN: THEY KET, THEY KISS THE EARTH;
FORSWEAR THEMSELVES AS OFTEN AS THEY SLEEP;
BOHEMIA STOPS HIS EARS, AND THREATENS THEM WITH DIVERS DEATHS IN DEATH.

PER. O MY POOR FATHER!
THE HEAVEN SETS SPIES UPON US, WILL NOT HAVE
OUR CONTRACT CERTIFIED.
LEN. YOU ARE MARRIED?
FLO. WE ARE NOT, SIR, NOR ARE WE LIKE TO;
THE STARS, I SEE, WILL KISS THE VALLEYS FIRST:
THE ODDS FOR HIGH AND LOW’S A-LIKE.
LEN. IS THIS THE DAUGHTER OF A KING?
FLO. SHE IS.
WHEN ONCE SHE IS MY WIFE. [SPEED
LEN. THAT ‘TIS, I SEE BY YOUR GOOD FATHER’S
WILL COME ON VERY SLOWLY. I AM SORRY.
MOST SORRY, YOU HAVE BROKEN FROM HIS LIVING
WHERE YOU WERE TIED IN DUTY, AND AS SORRY
YOUR CHOICE IS NOT SO RICH IN WORTH AS BEAUTY, THAT YOU MIGHT WELL ENJOY HER.
FLO. DEAR, LOOK UP:
THOUGH FORTUNE, VISIBLE AN ENEMY,
SHOULD CHASE US WITH MY FATHER, POWER NO JOT
HATH SHE TO CHANGE OUR LOVES. BESEECH YOU, SIR, REMEMBER SINCE YOU OWE NO MORE TO TIME
THAN I DO NOW: WITH THOUGHT OF SUCH AFFECTIONS, STEP FORTH MY ADVOCATE; AT YOUR REQUEST
MY FATHER WILL GRANT PRECIOUS THINGS AS TRIBLES.
LEN. WOULD HE BE SO, I’D BEG YOUR PRECIOS
WHICH HE COUNTS BUT A TRIBLE.

FLO. [MISTRESS, PAUL.
SIR, MY HEIRE.
YOUR EYES HATH TOO MUCH YOUTH IN’T: NOT A MONTH
FORE YOUR QUEEN DIED, SHE WAS MORE WORTH THAN WHAT YOU LOOK ON NOW.

LEN. I THOUGHT OF HER,
EVEN IN THESE LOOKS I MADE. [TO FLORIZEL. BUT YOUR PETITION
IS YET UNANSWER’d. I WILL TO YOUR FATHER:
YOUR HONOUR NOT O’ER-THEMED BY YOUR DESIRES,
I AM FRIEND TO THEM AND YOU: UPON WHICH ERRAND
I NOW GO TOWARD HIM; THEREFORE FOLLOW ME
AND MARK WHAT WAY I MAKE: COME, GOOD MY LORD.

[EXIT.

SCENE II.—BEFORE LEONTES’ PALACE.

ACT V.
The Winter’s Tale.

Scene II.

Enter Autolycus and a Gentleman.

AUTO. BESIECH YOU, SIR, WERE YOU PRESENT AT THIS RELATION?

First Gent. I WAS BY AT THE OPENING OF THE FARDEL, HEARD THE OLD SHEPHERD DELIVER THE MANNER HOW HE FOUND IT: WHEREUPON, AFTER A LITTLE AMAZEMENT, WE WERE ALL COMMANDED OUT OF THE CAMP: ONLTY THIS METHOUGHT I HEARD THE SHEPHERD SAY, HE FOUND THE CHILD.

AUTO. I WOULD MOST GLADLY KNOW THE ISSUE OF IT.

First Gent. I MAKE A BROKEN DELIVERY OF THE BUSINESS;
BUT THE CHANGES I PERCEIVED IN THE KING AND CAMILLO WERE VERY NOTES OF ADMIRATION: THEY SEEMED ALMOST, WITH STARING ON ANOTHER, TO BEAR THE CASES OF THEIR EYES; THERE WAS SPEECH IN THEIR DUMBNESS, LANGUAGE IN THEIR VESTIGE; THEY LOOKED AS THOUGH
THEY HAD HEARD OF A WORLD RANSOMED, OR ONE DESTROYED:
A NOTABLE PASSION OF WONDER APPEARED IN THEM;
BUT THE WISEST BEHOLDER, THAT KNEW NO MORE BUT SIGHT,
COULD NOT SAY IF THE IMPORTANCE WERE JOY OR SORROW;
BUT IN THE EXTREMITY OF THE ONE, IT MUST NEEDS BE.

Enter another Gentleman.

Here comes a gentleman that haply knows more.
The news, Rogero?

See. Gent. Nothing but bonfires: the oracle is fulfilled:
The king’s daughter is found: such a deal of wonder is broken out within this hour that ballad makers cannot be able to express it.

Enter a third Gentleman.

Here comes the Lady Paulina’s steward: he can deliver you more. How goes it now, sir? This news which is called true is so like an old tale, that the verity of it is in strong suspicion: has the king found his heir?

Second Gent. Most true, if ever truth were pregnant by circumstance: that which you hear you’ll swear you see, there is such unity in the proofs.
The mantle of Queen Hermione’s, her jewel about the neck of it, the letters of Antonius found with it which they know to be his character, the majesty of the creature in resemblance of the mother, the affection of nobleness which nature shows above her breeding, and many other evidences proclaim her with all certainty to be the king’s daughter. Did you see the meeting of the two kings?

Sec. Gent. No.

Third Gent. Then have you lost a sight, which was to be seen, cannot be spoken of. There might you have beheld one joy crown another, so and in such manner that it seemed sorrow went to take leave of them, for their joy waded in tears. There was casting up of eyes, holding up of hands, with countenances of such distraction that they were to be known by their garment, not by favour. Who was being ready to leap out of himself for joy of his found daughter, as if that joy were now become a loss, cries ‘O, thy mother, thy mother!’ then asks Bohemia forgiveness; then embraces his son-in-law; than again worries he his daughter with clipping her now he thanks the old shepherd, which stands by like a weather-bitten conduit of many kings’ reigns. I never heard of such another encounter, which Itames report to follow it and undone
description to do it.

Sec. Gent. What pray you became of Antonius, that carried her as the child?

Third Gent. Like an old tale still, which will have matter to rehearse, though credit be asleep and not an ear open. He was torn to pieces with a bear:
this avouches the shepherd’s son: who has not only his innocence, which seems much, to justify him, but a handkerchief and rings of his that Paulina knows.

First Gent. What became of his bark and his followers?

Third Gent. WRECKED THE SAME INSTANT OF THEIR MOTHER’S DEATH AND IN THE VIEW OF THE SHEPHERD:
SO THAT ALL THE INSTRUMENTS WHICH AIDED TO EXPOSE
THE CHILD WERE ONCE LOST WHEN IT WAS FOUND. BUT O, THE NOBLE COTAB THAT ’TWIXT THE SHEPHERD AND HER SONS Fought in Paulina! She had one eye declined for the loss of her husband, another elevated that the oracle was fulfilled: she lifted the princes from the earth, and so locks her in embracing, as if she would pin her to her heart that she might no more be in danger of death.

First Gent. The dignity of this act was worth the audience of kings and princes: for by such was it acted.

Third Gent. ONE OF THE PIPETTIEST TOUCHES OF ALL
AND THAT WHICH ANGLED FOR THE EYES, EUHT THE WATER THOUGH NOT THE FISH, WAS WHEN, AT THE ATION OF THE QUEEN’S DEATH, WITH THE MANNER HOW SHE CAME TO ’T BRAVELY CONFESSION AND DEMENTED BY THE KING, HOW ATTENTIVE WOUNDED HIS DAUGHTER: TILL, FROM ONE SIGN OF DOLOUR TO ANOTHER, SHE DID, WITH AN ‘ALAS,’
I COULD FIND SORROWED TEARS, FOR I AM SURE MY HEART
WENT BLOODY, WHOSE BLOOD WAS MOLDED ONCE COLOURED:
SOME SLOWED, ALL SORROWED: IF ALL THE WORLD
COULD HAVE SEEN’T, THE WOE HAD BEEN UNIVERSAL.

First Gent. Are they returned to the court?

Third Gent. NO: THE PRINCESS HEARING OF HER MOTHER’S ESTATE, WHICH HAD BEEN IN THE AGES OF PAVOLINA, IN PIECE MANY YEARS IN DOING AND NOW NEWLY PERFORMED BY THAT RARE ITALIAN MASTER, JULIO ROMANO, WHO, HAD
be himself eternity and could put breath into his work, would beguile Nature of her custom, so perfectly he is her ape: he so near to Hermione hath done Hermione that they say one would speak to her and stand in hope of answer; thither with all grace affection are they gone, and there they intend to sup.

See. Gent. I thought she had some great matter there in hand; for she hath privately twice or thrice a day, ever since the death of Hermione, visited that removed house. Shall we thither and with our company play the rejecting?

First Gent. Who would be thence that has the benefit of access? every wink of an eye some new grace will be born; our absence makes us unthrift to our knowledge. Let's along. | [Exit Gentlemen.

Act. Now, had I not the dash of my former life in me, would a preferment drop on my head. I brought the old man and his son aboard the prince; told him I heard them talk of a farde] and I know not what: but he at that time, overfond 'of the shepherd's daughter, so he then took her to be, who began to be much sea-sick, and himself little better, expecting of weather continuing, this mystery remained undiscovered. But 'tis all one to me: for had I been the finder out of this secret, it would not have relished among my other discords.

Enter Shepherd and Clown.

Shep. Come, boy; I am past moe children, but thy sons and daughters will be all gentlemen born.

Clo. You are well met, sir. You denied to night with me this other day, because I was no gentleman born. See you these clothes, say you see them not and think me still no gentleman born: you were best say these robes are not gentlemen born: give me the lie, do, and try whether I am not now a gentleman born.

Aut. I know you are now, sir, a gentleman born. Clo. Ay, and have been so many time these four hours.

Shep. And so have I, boy.

Clo. So you have; but I was a gentleman born before my father; for the king's son took me by the hand, and called me brother; and then the two kings, my father brother; and then the prince my brother and the princess my sister called my father father; and so we wept, and there was the first gentleman-like tears that ever we shed.

Shep. We may live, son, to shed many more.

Clo. Ay; or else 'twere hard luck, being so prophanto postero estoante as we are.

Aut. I humbly beseech you, sir, to pardon me all the faults I have committed to your worship and to give me your good report to the prince my master.

Shep. Prithee, son, do; for we must be gentle, now we are gentlemen.

Clo. Thou wilt amend thy life? Aut. Ay, an it like your good worship.

Clo. Give me thy hand: I will swear to the prince thou art as honest a true fellow as any is in Bohemia.

Shep. You may say it, but not swear it.

Clo. Not swear it, now I am a gentleman? Let boors and franklins say it, I'll swear it.

Shep. How if it be false, son?

Clo. If it be ne'er so false, a true gentleman may swear it in the behalf of his friend: and I'll swear to the prince thou art a tall fellow of thy hands and that thou wilt not be drunk; but I know thou art no tall fellow of thy hands and that thou wilt be drunk: but I'll swear it, and I would thou wouldest be a tall fellow of thy hands.

Aut. I will prove so, sir, to my power.

Clo. Ay, by any means prove a tall fellow: if I do not wonder how thou dar'st venture to be drunk, not being a tall fellow, trust me not. Hark! the kings and the princes, our kindred, are going to see the queen's picture. Come, follow us: we'll be thy good masters. | [Exit.

Scene III.—A chapel in Paulina's house.

Enter Leontes, Polixenes, Florizel, Perdita, Camillo, Paulina, Lords, and Attendants.

Leon. O grave and good Paulina, the great com- That I have had of thee! [Fort Paul.

Paul. What, sovereign sir, I did not well I meant well. All my services You have paid home: but that you have vouch- safed,

With your crown'd brother and these your con- Heirs of your kindoms, my poor house to visit, It is a surplus of your grace, which never My life may last to answer.

Leon. To the queen, O Paulina, We honour you with trouble: but we came To see the statue of our queen: your gallery Have we pass'd through, not without much content In many singularities; but we saw not That which my daughter came to look upon, The statue of her mother.

Paul. As she lived peerless, So her dead likeness, I do well believe, Exceds whatever yet you look'd upon Or hand of man lath done: therefore I keep it Lonely, apart. But here it is: prepare To see the life as lively mock'd as ever Still sleep mock'd death: behold, and say 'tis well. | [Paulina dawns a picture, and discovers Hermione standing like a statue.

Hermione. I like your silence, it the more shows off Your wonder: but yet speak; first, you, my liege. Comes it not something near?

Leon. Her natural posture! Chide me, dear stone, that I may say indeed Thou art Hermione; or rather, thou art she In thy not chiding, for she was as tender As infancy and grace. But yet, Paulina, Hermione was not so much wrinkled, nothing So aged as this seems. O, not by much.

Paul. So much the more our carver's excellence; Which lets go by some sixteen years and makes her As she lived now.

Leon. As now she might have done, So much to my good comfort, as it is Now piercing to my soul. O, last she stood, Even with such life of majesty, warm life, As now it coldly stands, when first I woo'd her! I am ashamed: does not the stone rebuke me For being more stone than it? O royal piece There's magic in thy majesty, which has My evils conjur'd to remembrance and From thy adoring daughter took the spirits. Standing like stone with thee.

Per. And give me leave, And do not say 'tis superstition, that I kneel and then implore her blessing. Lady, Dear queen, that ended when I but began, Give me that hand of yours to kiss.

Pol. O, patience! The statue is but newly fix'd, the colour's Not dry.

Cei. My lord, your sorrow was so sore laid on, Which sixteen winters cannot blow away, So many summers dry: scarce any joy Did ever so long live: no sorrow But kill'd itself much sooner.

Pol. Dear my brother,
THE WINTER'S TALE.

SCENE III.

Let him that was the cause of this have power
To take off so much grief from you as he
Will piece up in himself.

Paul. Indeed, my lord,
If I had thought the sight of my poor image
Would thus have wrought you,—for the stone is I'd not have show'd it.

Leon. Do not draw the curtain.

Paul. No longer shall you gaze on 't, lest your
May think anon it moves.

Leon. Let be, let be.

Paul. Would I were dead, but that, methinks, already —
What was he that did make it? See, my lord,
Would you not deem it breathed? and that those
Did verily hear blood?

Pol. Masterly done:
The very life seems warm upon her lip.

Leon. The figure of her eye has motion in 't,
As we are mock'd with art.

Paul. I'll draw the curtain:
My lord's almost so far transported that He'll think anon it lives.

Leon. O sweet Paulina,
Make me to think so twenty years together!
No settled senses of the world can match
The pleasure of that madness. Let 't alone.

Paul. I am sorry, sir, I have thus far stirr'd you:
I could afflict you farther.

Leon. Do, Paulina;
For this affliction has a taste as sweet
As any cordial comfort. Still, methinks,
There is an air comes from her: what fine chisel
Could ever yet cut breath? Let no man mock me,
For I will kiss her.

Paul. Good my lord, forbear:
The ruddiness upon her lip is wet;
You'll mar it if you kiss it, stain your own,
With oily painting. Shall I draw the curtain?

Leon. No, not these twenty years.

Per. So long could I Stand by, a looker on.

Paul. Either forbear,
Quit presently the chapel, or resolve you
For more amazement. If you can behold it,
I'll make the statue move indeed, descend
And take you by the hand: but then you'll think—
Which I protest against — I am assisted
By wicked powers.

Leon. What can you make her do,
I am content to look on: what to speak,
I am content to hear; for 'tis as easy
To make her speak as move.

Paul. It is required
You do awake your faith. Then all stand still;
On; those that think it is unlawful business
I am about, let them depart.

Leon. Proceed:

No foot shall stir.

'Tis time; descend; be stone no more; approach;
Strike all that look upon with marvel. Come,
I'll fill your grave up; stir, stay, come away,

ACT I.

SCENE I.—King John's palace.

Enter King John, Queen Elinor, Pembroke, Essex, Salisbury, and others, with Chatillon.

K. John. Now, say, Chatillon, what would France with us? [France

Chat. Thus, after greeting, speaks the King of In my behaviour to the majesty.
The borrow'd majesty, of England here.

Chat. Philip of France, in right and true behalf Of thy deceased brother Geoffrey's son, Arthur Plantagenet, lays most lawful claim To this fair island and the territories, To Ireland, Poictiers, Anjou, Touraine, Maine, Desiring thee to lay aside the sword Which sways unsurpassing these several titles, And put the same into young Arthur's hand, Thy nephew and right royal sovereign.

K. John. What follows if we disallow of this? Chat. The proud control of fierce and bloody war, To enforce these rights so forcibly withheld.

K. John. Here have we war for war and blood for blood.

Controlment for controlment: so answer France. Chat. Then take my king's defence from me The farthest limit of my embassy. [mouth.

K. John. Bear mine to him, and so depart in peace: Be thou as lightning in the eyes of France; For ere thou canst report I will be there. The thunder of my cannon shall be heard: So hence! Be thou the trumpet of our wrath And sudden presage of your own decay.

An honourable conduct let him have; Pembroke, look to 't. Farewell, Chatillon.

[Exeunt Chatillon and Pembroke.

Eli. What now, my son! have I not ever said How that ambitious Constance would not cease Till she had kindled France and all the world, Upon the right and party of her son? This might have been prevented and made whole With very easy arguments of love,
ACT I.

KING JOHN.

SCENE I.

_Beast._ I know not why, except to get the land.
But once he slander'd me with bastardy:
But whether I be as true begot or no,
That still I lay upon my mother's head,
But that I am as well begot, my liege,—
Fair fall the bones that took the pains for me! —
Comparison hides my father's name.
If old sir Robert did beget us both
And were our father and this son like him,
O old sir Robert, father, on my knee
I give heaven thanks I was not like to thee!

K. John. Why, what a madcap hath heaven lent us
Bequenth thy land to him and follow me?
I am a soldier and now bound to France. [chance.

_Beast._ Brother, take you my land, I'll take my
Your face hath got five hundred pound a year,
Yet sell your face for five and 'tis dear.
Madam, I'll follow you unto the death.

_Eli._ Nay, I would have you use me thither.

_Beast._ Our country manners give us better way.

K. John. What is thy name?

_Beast._ Philip, my liege, so is my name begun;
Philip, good old sir Robert's wife's eldest son.

K. John. From henceforth bear his name whose Kned thou down Philip, but rise more great,
_Arise sir Richard and Plantagenet._ [hand;]

_Beast._ Brother by the mother's side, give me your
My father gave me honour, yours gave land,
Now blessed be the hour, by night or day,
When I was got, sir Robert was away.

_Eli._ The very spirit of Plantagenet!
I am thy grandson, Richard; call me so. [though?

_Beast._ Madam, by chance but not by truth; what _Something about, a little from the right,
In at the window, or else o'er the hatch:
Who dare to stir by day or night, and
And have is have, however men do catch;
Near or far off, well won is still well shot,
And I am I, how'ser I was begot. [desire:

K. John. Go, Faulconbridge; now hast thou
An hundred knight makes thee a landed squire.
Came, madam, and come, Richard, we must speed
For France, for France, for it is more than need.

_Beast._ Brother, adieu; good fortune come to thee!
For thou wast got in the way of honesty.

[Exeunt all but Bastard.

A foot of honour better than I was;
But many a wretch was worse than I,
Well now, can I make any Joan a lady.

‘Goodden, sir Richard!’ — God-a-mercy, fellow!’ —

If and his name be George, I'll call him Peter;
For new-made honour doth forget men's names;
'Tis too respectable and too sociable
For your conversion. Now your traveller,
He and his toothpick at my worship's mess,
And when my knightly stomach is sufficed,
Why then I suck my teeth and catechize
My picked man of countries: 'My dear sir,
Thus, leaning on mine elbow, I begin,
'I shall beseech you' — that is quitted now;
And then comes in the Abbey book;
'O sir,' says answer, 'at your best command;
At your employment; at your service, sir:'

'No, sir,' says question, 'I, sweet sir, at yours;
And so, ere answer knows what question would,
Saying in dialogue of compliment,
And talking of the Alps and Apennines,
The Pyrenean and the river Po
It draws toward supper in conclusion so.
But this is worshipful society
And fits the mounting spirit like myself,
For he is but a bastard to the time.
That death not snare of observant truth;
And so am I, whether I smock or no;
And not alone in habit and device,
Exterior form, outward accoutrement,
But from the inward motion to deliver
Sweet, sweet, sweet poison for the age's tooth;
Which, fair sir, I will not have ye deceive,
Yet, to avoid deceit, I mean to learn;
For it shall strew the footsteps of my rising,
But who comes in such haste in riding-robes?
What woman-post is this? hath she no husband
That will take pains to blow a horn before her?

_Enter Lady Faulconbridge and James Gurney._

O me! it is my mother. How now, good lady!
What bring'st thou here to court so hastily?
ACT II.

KING JOHN.

SCENE I. —France. Before Angiers.

Enter Austria and forces, drums, &c., on one side: on the other King Philip of France and his power; Lewis, Arthur, Constance and Attendants.

Lew. Before Angiers well met, brave Austria.
Arthur, that great tormentor of thy blood,
Richard, that robb'd the lion of his heart
And fought the holy wars in Palestine,
By this brave duke came early to his grave:
And for amends to his posterity,
At our importune hasting he came,
To spread his colours, boy, in thy behalf,
And to subdue the usurpation
Of thy unnatural uncle, English John:
Embrace him, love him, give him welcome hither.

Arth. God shall forgive you Cour-d'ion's death.

Then the rather that you give his offsprings life,
Shadowing their right under your wings of war:
I give you welcome with a powerless hand,
But with a heart full of unstained love:
Welcome before the gates of Angiers, duke.

Lew. A noble boy! Who would not do thee right.

Aust. Upon thy cheek lay I this zealous kiss,
As seal to this indenture of my love,
That to my home I will no more return.
Till Angiers and the right then hast in France,
Together with that yoke, that white-faced shore,
Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring tides
And coops from other hands her islanders.
Even till that England, hedged in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes,
Even till that utmost corner of the west,
Salute thee for her king: till then, fair boy.
Will I not think of home, but follow arms.

Const. O, take his mother's thanks, a widow's thanks,
Till your strong hand shall help to give him strength
To make a more requital to your love!

Legitimation, name and all is gone:
Then, good my mother, let me know my father;
Some proper man, I hope: who was it, mother?

Lew. I think it was, my lord, a nosegay
From this fair lady's son.

Aust. The peace of heaven is theirs that lift their
In such a just and charitable war.

K. Phi. Well then, to work; our cannon shall be Against the bows of this resisting town.

Call for our choicest men of discipline,
To cut the pates of best advantages:
We'll lay before this town our royal bones,
Wade to the market-place in Frenchmen's blood,
But we will make it subject to this boy.

Const. Stay for an answer to your embassy.

Lest unadvised you stain your swords with blood:
My Lord Chatillon may from England bring
That right in peace which here we urge in war,
And then we shall repent each drop of blood
That hot rash haste so indirectly shed.

Enter Chatillon.

K. Phi. A wonder, lady! lo, upon thy wish,
Our messenger Chatillon is arrived!
What England says, say briefly, gentle lord:
We coldly pause for thee: Chatillon, speak.

Chat. Then turn your forces from this paltry siege
And stir them up against a mightier task;
England, Assemble them, we'll have them on:
Hath put himself in arms; the adverse winds,
Whose leisure I have stay'd, have given him time
To land his legions all as soon as I;
His marches are expedient to this town,
His forces strong, his soldiers confident.
With him along is come the mother-queen;
An Aye, stirring him to blood and strife;
With her her niece, the Lady Blanch of Spain;
With them a bastard of the king's deceas'd;
And all the unsettled humours of the land,
Rash, inconsiderate, hasty voluntaries,
With ladies' faces and fierce dragons' spleens,
Have sold their fortunes at their native homes,
Bearing their birthrights proudly on their backs,
To make a hazard of new fortunes here:
In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits
Than now the English bottoms have wait o'er

277
Did never float upon the swelling tide.
To do offence and scath in Christendom.
[Drum beats.]
The interruption of their charul drums
Cuts off more circumstance: they are at hand.
To parley or to fight; therefore prepare.
K. Phi. How much unkuck'd for is this expedition?
Aust. By how much unexpected, so much
We must awake ourselves for defence;
For courage munetth with occasion;
Let them be welcome then; we are prepared.

Enter King John, Elinor, Blanch, the Bastard, Lords, and forces.

K. John. Peace be to France, if France in peace
Our just and linéal entrance to our own;
I permit if not, bleed France, and peace ascend to heaven,
While we, God's wrathfull agent, do correct
Their proud contempt that beats His peace to heaven.

K. Phi. Peace to England, it's that war return
From France to England, there to live in peace.
England we love; and for that England's sake
With burden of our armour here we sweat.
This toil of ours should be a work of time;
But thou from loving England art so far,
That thou hast unswornly, or unlawful way,
Cut off the sequence of posterity.
Out-faced infant state and done a rape
Upon the maiden virtue of the crown.
Look here upon thy brother Geoffrey's face;
These eyes, these brows, were moulded out of his:
This little abstract doth contain that large
Which died in Geoffrey, and the hand of time
Shall draw this brief into as huge a volume.
That Geoffrey was thy elder brother born,
And this his son; England was Geoffrey's right
And this is Geoffrey's: in the name of God,
How comest thou then that thou art called a king,
When living blood doth in these temples beat,
Which owe the crown that thou o'errakest?
K. John. From whom hast thou this great commission, France.
To draw my answer from thy articles?
K. Phi. From that supernal judge, that stirs good
In my breast of strong authority:
[thoughts]
To look into the blot's and stains of right:
That judge hath made me guardian to this boy:
Under whose warrant I impeach thy wrong
And by whose help I mean to chastise it.
K. John. Alack, thou dost usurp authority.
K. Phi. Envy! I am not prepared.
Eli. Who is it thou dost call usurper, France?
Const. Let me make answer; thou usurping son.
Eli. Out, insolent! thy bastard shall be king,
That thou mayst be a queen, and check the world!
Const. My bed was ever to thy son as true
As it was to thy husband; and this boy
Like in feature to his father Geoffrey
Than thou and John in manners: being as like
As rain to water, or devil to his dam.
My boy a bastard! By my soul, I think
His father never was so true begot;
If cannot be, an if thou wert his mother.
Eli. There's a good mother, boy, that bleeds thy father.
Const. There's a good grandam, bby, that would Aust. Peace!
K. John. Hear the crier.
K. Phi. What the devil art thou? What the devil art thou?
K. John. One that will play the devil, sir, with you,
An' a may catch thy hide and you alone:
You are the hare of whom the proverb goes,
Whose value plucks dead lions by the beard;
I'll smoke your skin-cost, an I catch you right;
Said not to faith, I will not faith.
Blanch. O, will did he become that lion's robe
That did divide the lion of that robe!

[Trumpet sounds.
Enter certain Citizens upon the walls.

First Cit. Who is it that hath warn'd us to the K. Phi. 'Tis France, for England.
You men of Angiers, and my loving subjects,— K. Phi. You loving men of Angiers, Arthur's subjects.
Our trumpet call'd you to this gentle parle—
K. John. Our advantage; therefore hear us first.

These flags of France, that are advanced here

Bast. It lies as sightly on the back of him
As great Alcides! shows upon an ass:
But, ass, I'll take that hurthen from your back,
Or lay on that shall make your shoulders crack.
Aust. What cracker is this same that deals our ears
With this abundance of superfluous breath?
K. Phi. Lewis, determine what we shall do
straight.
Lea. Women and fools, break off your confer-
King John, this is the very sum of all;
England and Ireland, Aunuy, Touraine, Maine,
In right of Arthur do I claim of thee:
Will thee break then all the toppling arms?
Arthur of Bretagne, yield thee to my hand;
And out of my dear love I'll give thee more.
Than e'er the coward hand of France can win:
Submit thee, boy,

Eli. Come to thy grandam, child.
Const. Do, child, go to it grandam, child;
Give grandam kingdom, and it grandam will Give it a plum, a cherry, and a fig:
There's a good grandam.

Arth. Good my mother, peace!
I would that I were low laid in my grave;
I am not worth this coil that's made for me.
Eli. His mother shines him so, poor boy, he weeps.
[for no!]
Const. Now shame upon you, whether she does
His grandam's wrongs, and not his mother's shames,
Draws these heaven-moving pearls from his poor
Which heaven shall take in nature of a fee; [eyes
Ay, with these crystal beads heaven shall be bribed
To do him justice and revenge on you.
Eli. Thou monstrous slanderer of heaven and earth! [earth!
Const. Thou monstrous injurer of heaven and call not me slanderer; thou and thine usurp
The dominations, royalties and rights
Of this oppressed boy; this is thy elder's son's
Son, Infortunate in nothing but in thee;
Thy sins are visited in this poor child;
The canon of the law is laid on him,
Being but the second step down thy own
Removed from thy sin-concurring womb.
K. John. Bedham, have done.

Const. I have but this to say,
That he is not only plundered for her sin,
But God hath made her sin and her the plague
On this saved issue, plagued for her
And with her plague; her sin his injury,
Her injury the badge to her sin,
All punishing'd in the person of this child,
And all for her: a plague upon her!
Eli. Thou unavised scold, I can produce
A will that bars the title of thy son.
[will;
Const. Ay, who doubts that? a will! a wicked
A woman's will; a cunck'd grandam's will!
K. Phi. Peace, lady! pause; or be more temper-
It ill-becomes this presence to cry ain [aile:
To these ill-tuned repetitions
Some trumpet summons hoiter to the walls
These men of Angiers: let us hear them speak
Whose title they admitt, Arthur's or John's.

278
Before the eye and prospect of your town,
Have batter'd head to your endowment;
The cannon have their hovels full of wrath,
And ready mounted are they to spout forth
Their iron indignation 'gainst your walls;
All preparation for a bloody siege
And merciless proceeding by these French
Confined our citizens, in their sally gates;
And but for our approach those sleeping stones,
That as a waist doth girdle you about,
By the compulsion of their ordinance
By this time from their fixed beds of lime
Had been disribad, and wide havoc made
For bloody power to rush upon your peace,
But in a sight of their sepulchral hill.
Who painfully with much expedient march
Have brought a countercheck before your gates,
To save unscratch'd your city's threatened checks,
Behold, the French amazed vouche sale a parle; And now, instead of bullets wrap'd in fire,
To make a shaking fever in your walls,
They shoot but calm words folded up in smoke,
To make a faultless error in your ears:
Which trust accordingly kind citizens,
And let us in, your king, whose labour'd spirits,
Forwarded in this action of swift speed,
To crave revenge within your city walls.

K. Phil. When I have said, make answer to us both.
Lo, in this right hand, whose protection
Is most divinely vow'd upon the right
Of him it holds, stands young Plantagente,
Son to the elder brother of this man,
And king o'er him and all that he enjoys;
For this down-trodden equity, we tread
In warlike march these green before your town,
Being no further enemy to you
Than the constraint of hospitable zeal
In the relief of this oppressed child
Religious provocation.

Before them, the king:
To pay that duty which you truly owe
To him that owes it, namely this young prince;
And then our arms, like to a muzzled bear,
Save in aspect, hath all offence seal'd up;
Our cannons' muzzle vainly shall be spent
Against the invulnerable clouds of heaven;
And with their muzzled mouths,
With unshack'd swords and helmets all unbruised,
We will bear home that lusty blood again
Which here we came to spout against your town,
And leave your children, wives and you in peace.

But if you fondly pass our proffer'd offer,
This day, in every victim's wall
Can hide you from our messengers of war,
Though all these English and their discipline
Were barb'rd in their rude circumference.
Then tell us, shall your city call us lord,
In that behalf which we have challenged it?
Or shall we give the signal to our rage
And stalk in blood to our possession?

First Cit. In brief, we are the king of England's
For him, and in his right, we hold this town. [in.
K. John. Acknowledge then the king, and let me
First Cit. That can we not; but he that proves
The king will we prove loyal; till that time
Have we ramm'd up our gates against the world.
K. John. Dost not the crown of England prove
And if not that, I bring you witnesses, [the king? the king?
Twice fifteen thousand hearts of England's breed,
Unless this blood, baser far than it,
K. John. To verify our title with their lives.
K. Phil. As many and as well-born bloods as Bast. Some bastards too. [those.
K. Phil. Stand in his face to contradict his claim.
First Cit. Till you compound whose right is
We for the worthiest hold the right from both.

K. John. Then God forgive the sin of all those
That to their everlasting residence. [souls
Before the dew of evening fall, shall fleet,
In dreadful trial of our kingdom's king! [arms!
K. Phil. Amen, amen! Mount, chevaliers! to Bast. Saint George, that swung the dragon,
And e'er since.
Sits on his horse, and at mine hostess' door, [home.
Trach us some fence! [To Just. Sirrah, were I at
At your den, sirrah, with your loneliness,
I would set an ox head to your lion's hide,
And make a monster of you.
Just. Peace! no more.
Bast. O, trouble, for you have the lion roar.
K. John. Up higher to the prince, whether we'll
In best appointment all our regiments. [set forth
Bast. Speed then, to take advantage of the field.
K. Phil. It shall be so; and at the other hill
Command the rest to stand. God and our right! [Exeunt.

Here after excursions, enter the Herald of France, with trumpets, to the gates.

F. Her. You men of Angiers, open wide your
And let young Arthur, Duke of Bretagne, in, [gates,
Who by the land of France this day hath made
Much work for tears in many an English mother.
Whose sons lie scattered on the bleeding ground;
Many a widow's husband grovelling lies,
Coldly embracing the discord'd earth; And victory, with little loss, doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French,
Who are at hand, triumphantly display'd,
To enter conquerors and to proclaim
Arthur of Bretagne England's king and yours.

Enter English Herald, with trumpet.

E. Her. Rejoice, you men of Angiers, ring your bells.
King John, your king and England's, doth approach,
Commander of this hot melanchic day;
Their armours, that march'd hence so silver-bright,
Hithe return all girt with France's blood;
There stuck no plume in any English crest
That is removed by a staff of France;
Our colours do return in those same hands
That did display them when we first march'd forth;
And, like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come
Our lusty English, all with purpled hands,
Dyed in the dying slaughter of their foes;
Open your gates and give the victor way. [behind.
Exeunt. Enter Cit. Herald. Since from our towers we might
From first to last, the onset and retire
Of both your armies; whose equality
By our best eyes cannot be censured;
Blood hath bought blood and blows have answer'd
Bows; [fronted power
Strength match'd with strength, and power con-
Both are alike; and both alike we like,
One must prove greatest; while they weigh so even,
We hold our town for neither, yet for both.

Re-enter the two Kings, with their powers severally.

K. John. France, hast thou yet more blood to Cast away?
Say, shall the current of our right run on?
Whose passage, vex'd with thy impediment,
Shall leave his native channel and o'erswell
With course disturb'd even thy confining shores,
Haggl'er and growler, seizes on thy deep.
A peaceful progress to the ocean.
K. Phi. England, thou hast not saved one drop
In this hot trial, more than we of France;
Rather, lost more. And by this hand I swear,
That sways the earth this climate overlooks.
Before we will lay down our last-born arms, [bear,
We'll put thee down, 'gainst whom these arms we

ACT II.

KING JOHN.

SCENE I.

Or add a royal number to the dead,
Gracing the scroll that tells of this war's loss
With slaughter coupled to the name of kings.

_Beast._ Ha, majesty! how high thy glory towers,
When thousands of thy subjects' heads are blest
So the swords of soldiers are their teeth, their fangs;
And now he feasts, mousing the flesh of men,
In undetermined differences of kings.

Why stand these royal fronts amazed thus?
Cry 'Peace!' kings: back to the staid field,
You equal potens, hie kindled spirits!
Then let confusion of one part confine
The other's peace; till then, blows, blood and death!

_K. John._ Whose party do the towns men yet admit?
_K. Phi._ Speak, citizens, for England; who's your king?

First Cit. The king of England, when we know
_K. Phi._ Know him in us, that here hold up his right.

_K. John._ In us, that are our own great deputy,
And bear possession of this our person here,
Our present presence, Angiers, and of you,

First Cit. A greater instance of your excellency;
And till it be undoubted, we do lock
Our former scroyles in our strong-barr'd gates;
King'd of our fears, until our fears, resolved,
Be by some certain king purged and depos'd.

_Beast._ By heaven, these scroyles of Angiers don't
And stand securely on their battlements,
As in a theatre, whence they gape and point
At your industrious scenes and acts of death.
Your royal presence be ruled by me:

Do like the mutines of Jerusalem,
Be friends with wife and beds continually bend
Your sharpest deeds of malice on this town:
By east and west let France and England mount
Their battering cannon charged to the mouths,
Till their soul-fearing chumours have bravi'd down
The flinty ribs of this contemptuous city:
I'll play incessantly upon these jades,
Even till unfenced desolation
Leave them as naked as the vulgar air.

That done, dissever your united strengths,
And part your mingled colours once again;
Turn face to face and bloody point to point;
Their division shall be in the mouth,
Out of one side her happy munion,
To whom in favour shall she give the day,
And kiss him with a glorious victory.

How like you this wild counsel, mighty states?
Smacks it not something of the policy? [heads,
_K. John._ Now, by the sky that hangs above our
I like it well.
France, shall we knout our powers
And lay this Angiers even with the ground;
Then after fight who shall be king of it?

_Beast._ An if thou hast the mettle of a king,
Being wrong'd as we are by this pescify town,
Turn traitor the month of thy artillery.
As we will ours, against these saucy walls;
And when that we have dash'd them to the ground,
Why then defy each other, and pell-mell
Make work upon ourseves, for heaven or hell.

_K. Phi._ Let it be so.

_Say, where will you assault?

_K. John._ We from the west will send destruction
Into this city's bosom.

_Abst._ I from the north.

_K. Phi._ Our thunder from the south
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town.

_Beast._ Prudent discipline! From north to south;
And so your townsmen, as each other's mouth:
I'll stir them to it. Come, away, away!

First Cit. Hear us, great kings: vouchsafe awhile to stay,
And I shall show you peace and fair-faced league;
Win you this city without stroke or wound;

Rescute those breathing lives to die in beds,
That here come sacrifices for the field;
Persever not, but hear me, mighty kings. [hear.

_K. John._ Speak on with favour; we are bent to

First Cit. This day, and in this hour, this day

_Of Lewis the Dauphin and that lovely maid:
If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch?
If zealous love should go in search of virtue,
Where shall be found purer than in Blanch?
If love ambitious sought a match of birth,
Whose veins bound richer blood than Lady Blanch?
Such as she is, in beauty, virtue, birth,
Is the young Dauphin every way complete:
If not complete of, say he is not she;
And she again wants nothing; to name want,
If want it be not that she is not she:
He is the half part of a blessed man,
Left to be finished by such as she;
And she a fair divided excellence,
Whose fulness of perfection lies in him.

O, two such silver currents, when they join,
Do glorify the spot where they do mix;
And two such shores to two such streams made one,
Two such controlling bounds shall you be, kings,
To these two princes, if you marry them.
This union shall more do than battery can
To our fast-closed gates; for at this match,
With sworn fealty, and that than can enforce,
The mouth of passage shall we fling wide ope,
And give you entrance: but without this match,
The sea enraged is not half so deaf,
Lions more confident, mountains and rocks
More free from motion, no, not Death himself
In mortal now halted by the windy breath,
As we to keep this city.

_Beast._ Here's a stay
That shakes the rotten carcasses of old Death
Out of his rags! Here's a large mouth, indeed,
That spits forth death and mountains, rocks and Talks as familiarly of roaring lions
As maids of thirteen do of puppy-dogs!
What cannoneer begot this lusty blood?
He speaks plain cannon fire, and smoke and brounce;
He gives the bastinado with his tongue;
Our ears are cendell'd, not a word of his
But butt the better the more he doth them in.

Zounds! I was never so betumn'd with words
Since I first call'd my brother father.

_Eli._ Son, list to this conjuction, make this match;
Give with our niece a dowry large enough:
For by this knot then shall so surely tie
Thy now assured assurance to the crown,
That yen green boy shall have no sun to ripe
The bloom that promiseth a mighty fruit.
I see a yielding in the looks of France;
Mark, how they whisper; urge them while their souls
Are capable of this ambition,
Lest zeal, now ballet by the windy breath
Of soft petitions, pity and remorse,
Cool and congeal again to what it was.

First Cit. Why answer not the double majesties
This friendly treaty of our threatened town?

_K. Phi._ Speak England first, that hath been for

To speak unto this city: what say you? [ward first.

_K. John._ If that the Dauphin there, thy princely
Can in this book of beauty read 'I love,'

_Her dowry shall weigh equal with a queen:
For Anjou and fair Touraine, Maine, Poictiers,
And all that we upon this side the sea,
Except this this city: how by the mouth,
Find liable to our crown and dignity,
Shall gild her bridal bed and make her rich
In titles, honours and promotions,
As she in beauty, education, blood,
Holds hand with any princess of the world.
K. Phil. What say'st thou, boy? look in the lady's eye.

Lew. I do, my lord; and in her eye I find a wonder, or a wondrous miracle. The shadow of my form's in her eye:
Which, being but the shadow of your son,
Becomes a sun and makes your son a shadow:
I do protest I never loved myself
Till now infixed I beheld myself
Drawn in the flattering figure of her eye.

[Whispers to Blanche.]

Bast. Drawn in the flattering figure of her eye!
Hang'd in the frowning wrinkle of her brow! And quarter'd in her heart! he doth asay Himself love's traitor: this is pity now, [be That hang'd and drawn and quarter'd, there should In such a love so vile a faut as he.
Became! This is the respect is mine: If he see augit in you that makes him like, That any thing he sees, which moves his liking, I can with ease translate it to my will; Or if you will, to speak more properly, I will enforce it easily to my love.
Further I will not flatter you, my lord, That all I see in you is worthy love.
Than this; that nothing do I see in you,
Though churlish thoughts themselves should be your judge.
That I can find should merit any hate.

K. John. What say these young ones? What say you, my niece? [Blanch.

Blanch. That she is bound in honour still to do What you in wisdom still vouchsafe to say.

K. John. Speak then, prince Dauphin; can you love this lady?

Lew. Nay, ask me if I can refrain from love; For I do love her most unfeignedly. [Maine.

K. John. Then do I give Volgiessen, Tournay, Poictiers and Anjou, these five provinces, With her to thee; and this addition more, Full thirty thousand marks of English coin. Philip of France, if thou be pleased withal, Command thy son and daughter to join hands.

K. Phi. It likes us well; young princes, close your hands.

Anst. And your lips too; for I am well assured That I did so when I was first assured.

K. Phi. Now, citizens of Angiers, open your gates, Let in that liberty which you have made; For at Saint Mary's chapel presently The rites of marriage shall be solemnized.
Is not the Lady Constance in this troop? I know she is not, for this match made up Her presence would have interrupted much:
Where is my mother's soul? tell me, who knows.

Lew. She is sad and passionate at your highness' tent.

K. Phi. And, by my faith, this league that we Will give her sadness very little cure. [have made Brother of England, how may we content This widow lady? in her right we came;
Which we, God knows, have turn'd another way, To our own vantage.

K. John. We will heal up all:
For we'll create young Arthur Duke of Britaigne And Earl of Richmond; and this rich fair town We make him lord of. Call the Lady Constance; Some speedy messenger bid her repair To our solemnity: I trust we shall
If not fill up the measure of her will, Yet in some measure satisfy her so That we shall stop her exclamation.
Go we, as well as haste will suffer us,
To this mirth'd for, until this banquet.

[Exeunt all but the Bastard.

Bast. Mad world! mad kings! mad composition! John, to stop Arthur's title in the whole, Hath willingly departed with a part,
And France, whose armour conscience buckled on, Whom zeal and charity brought to the field As God's own soldier, rounded in the ear With that same purpose-changer, that sly devil, That broker, that still breaks the pate of faith, That daily break-vow, he that wins of all, Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men, maidens, Who, having no external thing to base,
But the word 'maid,' cheats the poor maid of that, That smooth-faced gentleman, tickling Commodity, the bias of the world, The world, who of itself is peised well,
Made to run even upon even ground.
Till this advantage, this vile-drawing bias, This sway of motion, this Commodity, Makes it take head from all indifferency, From all direction, purpose, course, intent: And this same bias, this Commodity,
This bawd, this broker, this all-changing word, Chapp'd on the outward eye ofickle France,
Hath drawn him from his own determined aim, From a resolved and honourable war, To a most base and vile-concluded peace.
And why rail I on this Commodity? But for because he hath not woo'd me yet;
Not that I have the power to clutch my hand, When his fair angel would salute my palm; But for my hand, as unattempted yet.
Like a poor beggar, raleth on the rich,
Well, whiles I am a beggar, I will rail
And say there is no shi but to be rich;
And being rich, my virtue then shall be To say there is no vice but beggary.
Since kings break faith upon commodity,
Gain, be my lord, for I will worship thee. [Exit.]

ACT III.

SCENE I.—The French King's pavilion.

Const. Gone to be married! gone to swear a peace! False blood to false blood join'd! gone to be friends! Shall Lewis have Blanch, and Blanch those provinces?

It is not so; thou hast misspoke, misheard;
Be well advised, tell o'er thy tale again:
I cannot make it out, but say 'tis so:-
I trust I may not trust thee; for thy word Is but the vain breath of a common man:
Believe me, I do not believe thee, man;
I have a king's oath to the contrary,
Thou shalt be punish'd for thus frightening me,

For I am sick and capable of fears,

Oppress'd with wrongs and therefore full of fears, A widow, husbandless, subject to fears, A woman, naturally born to fears;
And though thou now confess thou didst but jest, With thy vex'd spirits I cannot take a true, But they will quake and tremble all this day, What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head? Why dost thou look so sadly on my son? What meanest thou by hiding thine own eyes? Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum, Like a proud river peering over his bounds? Be these sad signs confirmers of thy words? Then speak again; not all thy former tale, But this one word, whether thy tale be true.
KING JOHN.

ACT III.

Constr. You have beguiled me with a counterfeit Resembing majesty, which, being touch'd and tried, Proves valueless: you are forsworn, forsworn; You came in arms to spill mine enemies' blood, But now in arms you strengthen it with yours: The grajiy of our country ne'er was crown of war Is cold in aptitude and painted peace, And our oppression hath made up this league, Arm, arm, you heavens, against these perfurred kings!

A widow cries; be husband to me, heavens! Set not the hours of this unhappy day, Wear out the day in peace; but, ere sunset, Set armed discord 'twixt these perfurred kings! Hear me, O, hear me!

K. Phi. Here comes the holy legate of the pope.

Pand. Hail, you anointed deputies of heaven! To thee, King John, my holy errand is, I Pandulph, of fair Milan cardinal, And from Pope Innocent the legate here, Do in his name religiously demand Why then against the church, the holy mother, So wilfully dost spurn; and force perforce Keep Stephen Langton, chosen archbishop Of Canterbury, from that holy see? This, in ourforesaid holy father's name, Pope Innocent, I do demand of thee.

K. Phi. Canst thou at interrogatories Can task the free breath of a sacred king? Canst not, cardinal, devise a name So slight, unworthy and ridiculous, To charge me to an answer, as the pope. Tell him this tale: and from the mouth of England Shall add this much more, that no Italian priest Shall tithe or toll in our dominions; But as we, under heaven, are supreme head, So under Him that great supremacy, Where do we reign, we will alone uphold, Without the assistance of a mortal hand: So tell the pope, all reverence set apart To him and his usurp'd authority. [this.

K. Phi. Brother of England, you blaspheme in K. John. Though you and all the kings of Christendom Are led so grossly by this meddling priest, Dreading the curse that money may buy out; And by the merit of vile gold, dross, dust, Purchase corrupted pardon of a man, Who in that sale sells pardon from himself, Though you and all the rest so grossly led
This juggling witchcraft with revenue cherish,
Yet I alone, alone do me oppose
Against the pope and count his friends my foes.
Phoebus, then, by the lawful power that I have,
Thou shalt stand cursed and excommunicate:
And blessed shall he be that doth revolt
From his allegiance to an heretic;
And meritorious shall that hand be call'd,
Canonized and worship'd as a saint.
That takes away by any secret course
Thy hateful life.
Const. O, lawful let it be
That I have room with Rome to curse awhile!
Good father cardinal, cry thou amen
To my keen curses; for without my wrong
There is no tongue hath power to curse him right.
Pand. There's his law and warrant, hify, for my curse.
[Exit Pand.]

ACT III.

KING JOHN.

SCENE I.

With slaughter's pencil, where revenge did paint
The fearful difference of incensed kings:
And shall these hands, so lately purged of blood,
So newly joint in love to stedfast each,
Unyoke this seizure and this kind regret?
Play fast and loose with faith? so jest with heaven,
Make such unconstant children of ourselves,
As now again to snatch our palm from palm,
Unswear faith sworn, and on the marriage-bed
Of smilling peace to stifleuity holy host,
And make a riot on the gentle brow
Of true sincerity? O, holy sir,
My reverend father, let it not be so!
Out of your grace, devise, ordain, impose
Some gentle order; and then we shall be blest
To do your pleasure and continue friends.
Pand. All form is formless, order orderless,
Save what is opposite to England's love.
Therefore to arms! be champion of our church,
Or let the church, our mother, breathe her curse,
A mother's curse, on her revolting son.
France, thou mayst hold a serpent by the tongue,
A chafed as by the mortal pricks of
A fasting tiger safer by the tooth,
Thou keep in peace that hand which thou dost hold.
K. Phi. I may disjoin my hand, but not my faith.
Pand. So makest thou faith an enemy to faith;
And like a civil war set it oath to oath,
Thy tongue to tongue, thy hand to hand.
O, let thy vow
First made to heaven, first be to heaven perform'd,
That is, to be the champion of our church!
What since thou sworest is sworn against thyself
And may not be performed by thyself,
For which that thou hast sworn to do amiss
Is amiss when it is truly done,
And being not done, where doing tends to ill,
The truth is then most done not doing it:
The better act of purposes mistook
Is to mistake again; though indirect,
Yet indirection thereby grows direct;
And falsehood falsehood cues, as fire cools fire,
Within the scorched veins of one new-born'd.
It is religion that doth make vows kept:
But thou hast sworn against religion, [swear'st,]
By what thou swear'st against the thing thou
And makest an oath the surety for thy truth
Against a sworn oath; this is the
To swear, swears only not to be forsworn;
Else what a mockery should it be to swear!
But thou dost swear only to be forsworn;
And most forsworn, to keep what thou dost swear.
Therefore thy later vows against thy first
In those rebellion to contrary friends,
And better conquest never canst thou make
Than arm thy constant and thy nobler parts
Against these gib'ling base suggestions:
Upon which better part our prayers come in.
If thou vouchsafe them. But it not, then know
The peril of our curses light on thee.
So heavy thou shalt shake them off,
But in despair die under their black weight.
Aust. Rebellion, flat rebellion!
Bast. Will it not be?
Will not a calf's-skin stop that mouth of time?
Lew. Father, to arms!
Blanch. Upon thy wedding-day?
Against the blood that thou hast married?
What, shall our feast be kept with slaughter'd men?
Shall braying trumpets and loud clarish drums,
Clamours of hell, be measures to our pomp?
O husband, hear me! ay, alack, how new
Is husband in my mouth even for that name,
Which till this time my tongue did ne'er pronounce,
Upon my knee I beg, go not to arms
Against mine uncle.
Const. O, upon my knee,
Made hard with kneeling, I do pray to thee,
ACT III.

KING JOHN.

SCENE III.

Thou virtuous Dauphin, alter not the doom
Forethought by heaven! [may Blanche. Now shall I see thy love: what motive
Be stronger with thee than the name of wife?
Cost. That which upholdeth him that thee upholds,
His honour: O, thine honour, Lewis, thine honour!
Lev. I muse your majesty doth seem so cold,
When such profound respects do pull you on.
Paul. I will denomone a curse upon his head.
K. John. I shall not need. England, I will fall from thee.
Cost. O fair return of knish'd majesty!
Eliz. O foul revolt of French insubstantiacy!
K. John. France, thou shalt rue this hour within this hour,
Bast. Old John, the clock-setter, that bald saxon
Is it as he will? well then, France shall rue.
Blanche. The sun's o'ercast with blood: fair day, a-dien!
Which is the side that I must go withal?
I am with both: each army hath a hand;
And in their rage, I having hold of both,
They whirr asunder and dismember me.
Husband, I cannot pray that thou mayst win;
Uncle, I needs must pray that thou mayst lose;
Father, I may not wish the fortune thine;
Grandam, I will not wish thy wishes thrive:
Whose war's won, on that side shall I lose.
Assured loss before the match be play'd,
Lev. Lady, with me, with me thy fortune lies.
Blanche. There where my fortune lives, there my life dies.
K. John. Cousin, go draw our puissance together.
[Exit Bastard.
France. I am burn'd up with inflaming wrath;
A rage whose heat this condition,
That nothing can allay, nothing but blood,
The blood, and dearest-valued blood, of France.
K. Phil. Thy rage shall burn thee up, and thou shall turn
To ashes, ere our blood shall quench that fire:
Look to thyself, thou art in jeopardy.
K. John. No more than he that threats.
To arms let's lie! [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The same. Plains near Angiers.

Alarums, excursions. Enter the Bastard, with Austria's head.

Bast. Now, by my life, this day grows wondrous
Some airy devil hovers in the sky
[hot
And pours down mischief. Austria's head lie there,
While Philip breathes.

Enter King John, Arthur, and Hubert.
K. John. Hubert, keep this boy. Philip, make up;
My mother is assailed in our tent,
And ta'en, I fear.
Hub. My Lord, I have rescued her;
Her highness is in safety, fear you not;
But on, my liege; for very little pains
Will bring this labour to an happy end. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The same.

Alarums, excursions, retreat. Enter King John, Eli-or, Arthur, the Bastard, Hubert, and Lords.
K. John. [To Elizor] So shall it be; your grace shall stay behind
[sad
So strongly guarded. [To Arthur] Cousin, look not
That grandam loves thee; and thy uncle will
As dear be to thee as thy father was.
Artb. O, this will make my mother die with grief!
K. John. [To the Bastard] Cousin, away for England! haste before;
And, ere we coming, see thou shake the bags
Of hoarding abbots; imprisoned angels
Set at liberty: the fat ribs of peace
Must by the hungry now be fed upon;
Use our commission in his utmost force. [back,
Bast. But book, and candle shall not drive me
When gold and silver beckons me to come on.
I leave your highness, Grandam, I will pray;
If ever I remember to be holy,
For your safe fair; so, I kiss your hand.
Eliz. Farewell, gentle cousin.
Eliz. Come hither, little kinsman; bark, a word.
K. John. Come hither. Hubert. O my gentle Hubert,
We owe thee much! within this wall of flesh
There is a soul counts thee her creditor
And with advantage means to pay thy love;
And, my good friend; thy voluntary oath
Lives in this bosom, dearly cherished.
Give me thy hand. I had a thing to say,
But I will fit it with some better time.
By heaven, Hubert, I am almost ashamed
To say what good request I have of thee.
Hub. I am much bounden to your majesty,
K. John. Good friend, thou hast no cause to say so yet,
But thou shalt have; and creep time ne'er so slow,
Yet it shall come for me to do thee good.
I had a thing to say, but let it go;
The sun is in the heaven, and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton and too full of gayds
To give me audience: if the midnight bell
Died, with his iron tongue and brazen mouth,
Sounding on into the drowsy race of night;
If this same were a churchyard where we stand,
And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs,
Or if that surly spirit, melancholy,
Had bared thy blood and made it heavy-thick,
Which else runs tickling up and down the veins,
Making that idiot, laughter, keep men's eyes
And strain their cheeks to idle merriment,
A passion hateful to my purposes,
Or if that thou couldst see me without eyes,
Hear me without thine ears, and make reply
Without a tongue, using conceit alone,
Without eyes, ears and barmful sound of words;
Then, in despite of brooded watchful day,
I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts:
But, ah, I will not! yet I love thee well;
And, by my truth, I think thou lovest me well,
Hub. So well, that what you bid me undertake,
Though that my death were adjacent to my act
By heaven, I would do it.
K. John. Do not I know thou wouldst?
Good Hubert, Hubert, Hubert, throw thine eye
On young boy: I'll tell thee what, my friend,
He is a very serpent in my way;
Andwereover this foot of mine doth tread,
He lies before me, dost thou understand me?
Thou art his keeper.
Hub. And I'll keep him so,
That he shall not offend your majesty.
Hub. My lord?
Hub. He shall not live.
K. John. Enough. I could be merry now. Hubert, I love thee;
Well, I'll not say what I intend for thee:
Remember, Madam, fare thee well:
I'll send these powers over to your majesty.
Eliz. My blessing go with thee!
K. John. For England, cousin, go;
Hubert shall be your man; attend on you
With all true duty. On towards Calais, ho!
[Exeunt.
SCENE IV.—The same. The French King's tent.

Enter King Philip, Lewis, Pandulp, and Attendants.

K. Phi. So, by a roaring tempest on the flood,
A whole armado of convicted soul
Is scatter'd and disjoin'd from fellowship.

Pand. What he hath won, that all shall yet go well.

K. Phi. What can go well, when we have run so
Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost? [ill]
Arthur ta'en prisoner? divers dear friends slain?
And bloody England into England gone,
Overbearing interruption, spite of France?

Enter Constable, holding the prisoner. Where art thou, sirrah? He's to be forthwith
So hot a speed with such advice disposed,
Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,
Doth want example: who hath read or heard
Of any kindred action like to this? [praise.

K. Phi. Well could I bear that England had this
So we could some pattern of our shame.

Enter Constance.

Constance. Look, who comes here! a grave unto a soul;
Holding the eternal spirit, against her will,
In the vile prison of afflicted breath.
How bravely doth he deliver his spouse!

Const. Lo! now! see the issue of your peace.

K. Phi. Patience, good lady! comfort, gentle
Constance!

Const. No, I defy all counsel, all redress,
But that which ends all counsel, true redress,
Death, death; O amiable lovely death!

K. Phi. Artorious stench! sound rottenness!
Arise forth from the couch of lasting night,
Thou hate and terror to prosperity,
And I will kiss thy detestable bones
And put my eye-balls in thy vanity brows
And ring these fingers with thy household worms.

Pand. And so with this some dust
And be a carrion monster like thyself.

K. Phi. Come, grin on me, and I will think thou smilest
And buss thee as thy wife. Misery's love,
O, come to me!

Pand. O fair affliction, peace!

Const. No, no. I will not, having breath to cry:
O, that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth!
Then with a passion would I shackle the world;
And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy
Which cannot hear a lady's feeble voice,
Which seems a modern invocation.

Pand. If thou art mad, ravish'd, and not sorrow.

Const. Thou art not holy to belie me so;
I am not mad: this hair I tear is mine;
My name is Constance: I was Geoffrey's wife;
Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost:
I am not mad: I would to heaven I were!
For then, 'tis like I should forget myself;
O, if I could, what grief should I forget!
Preach some philosophy to make me mad,
And thou shalt be canoniz'd, cardinal;
For being not mad but sensible of grief,
My reasonable part produces reason.
Now I may be deliver'd of these woes,
And teaches me to kill or hang myself;
If I were mad, I should forget my son,
Or madly think a babe of clouts were he:
I am not mad; too well, too well I feel
The different plague of each calamity.

K. Phi. What care or comfort I had but love I note
In the fair multitude of those her hairs!
Where but by chance a silver drop hath fallen,
Even to that drop ten thousand wry friends
Do glue themselves in socieble grief,
Like true, inseparable, faithful loves,
Sticking together in adversity.

Const. To England, if you will.

K. Phi. Bind up your hairs.

Const. Yes, that I will; and wherefore will I do it?
I tore them from their heads and cried aloud
"O that these hands could so redeem my son,
As they have given these hairs their liberty!"
But now I envy at their liberty,
And will again commit them to their bands,
Because my poor child is a prisoner.

Enter Warden. Sir, I have a cardiathe father
That shall yeall yet go well.

K. Phi. What can go well, when we have run so
Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost? [ill]
Arthur ta'en prisoner? divers dear friends slain?
And bloody England into England gone,

If I were mad, I should forget my son,
Or madly think a babe of clouts were he:
I am not mad; too well, too well I feel
The different plague of each calamity.

K. Phi. What care or comfort I had but love I note
In the fair multitude of those her hairs!
Where but by chance a silver drop hath fallen,
Even to that drop ten thousand wry friends
Do glue themselves in socieble grief,
Like true, inseparable, faithful loves,
Sticking together in adversity.

Const. To England, if you will.

K. Phi. Bind up your hairs.

Const. Yes, that I will; and wherefore will I do it?
I tore them from their heads and cried aloud
"O that these hands could so redeem my son,
As they have given these hairs their liberty!"
But now I envy at their liberty,
And will again commit them to their bands,
Because my poor child is a prisoner.

Enter Warden. Sir, I have a cardiathe father
That shall yeall yet go well.

K. Phi. What can go well, when we have run so
Are we not beaten? Is not Angiers lost? [ill]
Arthur ta'en prisoner? divers dear friends slain?
And bloody England into England gone,
Overbearing interruption, spite of France?

Enter Constable, holding the prisoner. Where art thou, sirrah? He's to be forthwith
So hot a speed with such advice disposed,
Such temperate order in so fierce a cause,
Doth want example: who hath read or heard
Of any kindred action like to this? [praise.

K. Phi. Well could I bear that England had this
So we could some pattern of our shame.

Enter Constance.

Constance. Look, who comes here! a grave unto a soul;
Holding the eternal spirit, against her will,
In the vile prison of afflicted breath.
How bravely doth he deliver his spouse!

Const. Lo! now! see the issue of your peace.

K. Phi. Patience, good lady! comfort, gentle
Constance!

Const. No, I defy all counsel, all redress,
But that which ends all counsel, true redress,
Death, death; O amiable lovely death!

K. Phi. Artorious stench! sound rottenness!
Arise forth from the couch of lasting night,
Thou hate and terror to prosperity,
And I will kiss thy detestable bones
And put my eye-balls in thy vanity brows
And ring these fingers with thy household worms.

Pand. And so with this some dust
And be a carrion monster like thyself.

K. Phi. Come, grin on me, and I will think thou smilest
And buss thee as thy wife. Misery's love,
O, come to me!

Pand. O fair affliction, peace!

Const. No, no. I will not, having breath to cry:
O, that my tongue were in the thunder's mouth!
Then with a passion would I shackle the world;
And rouse from sleep that fell anatomy
Which cannot hear a lady's feeble voice,
Which seems a modern invocation.

Pand. If thou art mad, ravish'd, and not sorrow.

Const. Thou art not holy to belie me so;
I am not mad: this hair I tear is mine;
My name is Constance: I was Geoffrey's wife;
Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost:
I am not mad: I would to heaven I were!
For then, 'tis like I should forget myself;
O, if I could, what grief should I forget!
Preach some philosophy to make me mad,
And thou shalt be canoniz'd, cardinal;
For being not mad but sensible of grief,
My reasonable part produces reason.
Now I may be deliver'd of these woes,
And teaches me to kill or hang myself;
If I were mad, I should forget my son,
Or madly think a babe of clouts were he:
I am not mad; too well, too well I feel
The different plague of each calamity.

K. Phi. What care or comfort I had but love I note
In the fair multitude of those her hairs!
Where but by chance a silver drop hath fallen,
Even to that drop ten thousand wry friends
Do glue themselves in socieble grief,
Like true, inseparable, faithful loves,
Sticking together in adversity.

Const. To England, if you will.

K. Phi. Bind up your hairs.
ACT IV.

KING JOHN.

SCENE I. - A room in a castle.

Enter Hubert and Executioners.

Hub. Heat me these irons hot; and look thou stand Within the arras; when I strike my foot Upon the bosom of the ground, rush forth, And bind the boy which thou shalt find with me Fast to the chair: be heedful: hence, and watch.

[Exit Hubert. I hope your warrant will bear out the deed.]

Hub. Uncleanly scruples! fear not you: look to’t. [Exit Executioners.

Young lad, come forth; I have to say with you.

Enter Arthur.

Arth. Good morrow, Hubert.

Hub. Good morrow, little prince.

Arth. As little prince, having so great a title To be more prince, as may be. You are sad.

Hub. Indeed, I have been merrier.

Arth. Methinks no body should be sad but I: Yet, I remember, when I was in France, Young gentlemen would be as sad as night, Only for wantonness. By my christendom, So I were out of prison and kept sheep, I should be as merry as the day is long: And so I would be here, but that I doubt My uncle practiseth more harm to me; He is afraid of me and I of him: Is it my fault that I was Geoffrey’s son? No, indeed, Is’t not; and I would to heaven I were your son, so you would love me, Hubert.

Hub. [Aside] If I talk to him, with his innocent He will awake my mercy which lies dead: prate Therefore I will be sudden and dispatch. [day.

Arth. Are you sick, Hubert? you look pale to- In sooth, I would you were a little sick, That I might sit all night and watch with you: I warrant I love you more than you do me.

Hub. [Aside] His words do take possession of my bosom. Read here, young Arthur. [Showing a paper.

[Aside] How now, foolish rheum! Turning dispisitute fortunet o’er o’er o’er! I must be brief, lest resolution drop Out at mine eyes in tender womanish tears. Can you not read it? is it not fair writ?

Arth. Too fairly, Hubert, for so foul effect: Must you with hot irons burn out both mine eyes?

Hub. Young boy, I must.

[Exit HUBERT.]

Even at that news he dies; and then the hearts Of all his people shall revolt from him And kiss the lips of unacquainted change And pick strong matter dripp’d with wrath Out of the bloody fingers’ ends of John. Methinks I see this hurly all on foot: And, O, what better matter breeds for you Than I have named! The bastard Fishburne Is now in England, ransacking the church, Offending charity: but a dozen French Were there in arms, they would be as a call To train ten thousand English to their side, Or as a little snow, tumbled about, Anon becomes a mountain. O noble Dauphin, Go with me to the king: ‘tis wonderful What may be wrought out of their discontent, News of their matter of a true innocent. For England go: I will whet on the king. [Exit.

Law. Strong reasons make strong actions: let us If you say ay, the king will not say no. [Exit.
unto the rainbow; or with taper-light.
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.

Penz. But that your royal pleasure must be done,
This act is as an ancient tale new told,
And in the last revisitation,
Being urged at a time unseasonable.

Sal. In this the antique and well-natured tale
Of plain old form is much disfigured;
And, like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to lie about,
Startles and frights considerations.

Penz. Makes sound opinion sick and truth suspected,
For putting on so new a fashion'd role.

Sal. When workmen strive to do better than well,
They do confound their skill in covetousness;
And oftentimes excusing of a fault
Doth make the fault the worse by the excuse,
As patches set upon a little breach
Discredite more in hiding of the fault.

Than did the fault before it was so patch'd.

Sal. To this effect, before you were new crown'd,
We breathed our counsel; but it pleased your highness,
To overbear your peace and pleasure. [n.s.]
Since all and every part of what we would Doth make a stand at what your highness will.

K. John. Some reasons of this double coronation
I have possess'd you with and think them strong;
And more, more strong, then lesser is my fear,
That shall make any great or further ask
What you would have reform'd that is not well,
And well shall you perceive how willingly
I will both hear and grant your requests.

Penz. Then I, as one that am the tongue of these to sound the purposes of all their hearts,
Both for myself and them, but, chief of all,
Your safety, for the which myself and them
Bend their best studies, heartily request
The enfranchisement of Arthur: whose restraint
Doth move the murmuring lips of discontent.
To break into this dangerous argument,—
If what in rest you have in right you hold,
Why then your fears, which, as they say, attend
The steps of wrong, should move you to new up
Your tender kinship and to choke his days
With barbarous ignorance and deny his youth
The rich advantage of good exercise?
That the time's enemies may not have this
To grace occasions, let it be
That you have but us ask his liberty;
Which for our goods we do no further ask
Than whereupon our weal, on you depending,
Counts it your weal he have his liberty.

Enter Hubert.

K. John. Let it be so: I do commit his youth
To your direction. Hubert, what news with you?

[Taking him apart.

Penz. This is the man should do the bloody deed;
He shou'd his warrant to a friend of mine:
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye: that close aspect of his
Does show the mood of a much troubled breast;
And I do fearfully 'tis done,
What we so fear'd he had a charge to do.

Sal. The colour of the king doth come and go
Between his purpose and his conscience.
Like heralds 'twixt two dreadful battles set:
His passion is so ripe, it needs must break.

Penz. And when it breaks, I fear will issue thence
The foul corruption of a sweet child's death.

K. John. We cannot hold mortality's strong hand:
Good lords, although my will to give is living,
The suit with which you demand is dead:
He tells us Arthur is deceased to-night.

Sal. Indeed we fear'd his sickness was past cure.

Penz. Indeed we heard how near his death he was KING JOHN.

SCENE II.

Before the child himself felt he was sick:
This must be answered either here or hence.

K. John. Why do you bend such solemn brows on Think you I hear the shears of destiny? [me?]
Have I commandment on the pulse of life?
Sal. It is apparent foul play; and this is shame
That greatness should so grossly offer it;
So thrive it in your blood! and so farewell.

K. John. They burn in indignation. I repent:
There is no sure foundation set on blood,
No certain life achieved by others' death.

Enter a Messenger.

A fearful eye thou hast: where is that blood
That I have seen inhabit in those cheeks?
So foul a sky clears not without a storm:
Pour down thy weather: how goes all in France?

Mess. From France to England. Never such a
For any foreign preparation [power
Was levied in the body of a land,
The copy of your speed is learnt by them;
For when you should be told they do prepare,
The tidings comes that they are all arrived.

K. John. Where hath our intelligence been drunk?
Where hath it slept? Where is my mother's care,
That such an army could be drawn in France,
And she not hear of it?

Mess. My liege, her ear
Is shut with dust: the first of April died
Your noble mother: and, as I hear, my lord,
The Lady Constance in a frenzy died
Three days before: but this from rumour's tongue
I didly hear: if true or false I know not.

K. John. Withhold thy speed, dreadful occasion!
O, make a league with me, till I have pleased
My discontented peers! What! mother dead!
How wildly then walks my estate in France!
Under whose conduct came those powers of France
That for truth for givest out are landed here?

Mess. Under the Dauphin.

K. John. Thou hast made me giddy
With these ill-tidings.

Enter the Bastard and Peter of Poonfret.

Now, what says the world
To your proceedings? do not seek to stuff
My head with more ill news, for it is full.

Bast. But if you be afraid to hear the worst,
Then let the worst unheard fall on your head.

K. John. Bear with me, cousin; for I was amazed
Under the tide: but now I breathe again
Altof the flood, and can give audience
To any tongue, speak it of what it will.

Bast. How I have sped among the clergymen,
The sums I have collected shall express,
But as I travelled hither through the land,
I find the people strangely fantasied,
Possess'd with rumours, full of idle dreams,
Not knowing what they fear, but full of fear:
And where I am, and so, right with me
From forth the streets of Poonfret, whom I found
With many hundreds treading on his heels:
To whom he sung, in rude harsh-sounding rhymes,
That, ere the next Ascension-day at noon,
Your highness should deliver up your crown.

K. John. Thou idle dreamer, wherefore didst thinke so?

[so.

Peter. Foreknowing that the truth will fall out

K. John. Hubert, away with him: imprison him;
And on that day at noon, whereon he says
I shall yield up my crown, let him be hanged.
Deliver him to safety; and return.
For I must use thee.

[Exit Hubert with Peter.

O my gentle cousin,
Hast' the thou the news abroad, who are arrived?

Bast. The French, my lord; men's mouths are full of it:
Besides, I met Lord Bigot and Lord Salisbury,
With eyes as red as new-ekindled fire,
And others more, going to seek the grave
Of Arthur, whom they say is kill'd to-night
On your suggestion.

K. John. Gentle kinsman, go,
And thrust thyself into their companies:
I have a way to win their loves again;
Bring them before me.

Bast. I will seek them out.

K. John. Nay, but make haste; the better foot
O, let me have no subject enemies,
[before.
When adverse foreigners afford my towns
With dreadful pomp of stout invasion!
Be Mercury, set feathers to thy heels,
And fly like thought from them to me again.

Bast. The spirit of the time shall teach me speed.

[Exit.

Go after him; for he perhaps shall need
Some messenger betwixt me and the peers;
And be thou he.

Mess. With all my heart, my liege. [Exit.

K. John. My mother dead!

Re-enter Hubert.

Hub. My lord, they say five moons were seen to Four fixed, and the fifth did whirl about [night; The other four in wondrous motion.

K. John. Five moons!

Hub. Old men and beldams in the streets
Do prophesy upon it dangerously:
Young Arthur's death is common in their mouths:
And when they talk of him, they shake their heads
And whisper one another in the ear;
And he that speaks doth grate the hearer's wrist,
Whilst he that hears makes fearful action.
With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling eyes.
I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool.
With open mouth swallowing a tailor's news;
Who, with his shearsers and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers, which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet,
Told of a many thousand warlike French
That were embattailed and rank'd in Kent:
Another lean unwhis'd artificer
Cuts off his tale and talks of Arthur's death.

K. John. Why seek'st thou to possess me with these fears?

Why urg' est thou so oft young Arthur's death?
Thy hand hath murder'd him; I had a mighty cause
To wish him dead, but thou hast done to kill him.

Hub. No had, my lord? why, did you not provoke me?

K. John. It is the curse of kings to be attended
By slaves that take their humors for a warrant
To break within the bloody house of life,
And on the winking of authority
To understand a law, to know the meaning
Of dangerous majesty, when perchance it frowns
More upon humor than advised respect.

Hub. Here is your hand and seal for what I did.

K. John. O, when the last account 'twixt heaven
And earth
Is to be made, then shall this hand and seal
Witness against us to damnation!

How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds

ACT IV.

KING JOHN.

SCENE III.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. Once more today well met, distemper'd lords! The king by me requests your presence straight.

Sal. The king hath dispos'd of himself of us: We will not line his thin bestained cloak With our pure honours, nor attend the foot That leaves the print of blood where'er it walks. Return and tell him the worst. [best.

Bast. What! 'est thou think, good words! I think, were Sal. Our griefs, and not our manners, reason now.

Bast. But there is little reason in your grief; Therefore 't were reason you had manners now.

Pen. Sir, sir, impatient hath his privilege.

Bast. 'Tis true, to hurt his master, no man else.

Sal. This is the prison. What be lies here?

[Seeing Arthur.

Pen. O death, made proud with pure and princely The earth had not a hole to hide this deed. [beauty!

Sal. Murder, as hating what himself hath done, Dost lay it open to urge on revenge.

Big. Or, when he doth this beauty to a grave, Found it too precious-princely for a grave.

Sal. Sir Richard, what think you? have you beheld, Or have you read or heard? or could you think? Or do you almost think, although you see, That you do see? 'twas thought, without this object, Form much another? This is the very top, The height, the crest, or crest unto the crest, Of murder's arms: this is the bloodiest shame, The wildest savagery, the vilest stroke, That ever wall-eyed wrath or starving rage Presented to the tears of soft remorse.

Pen. All murders past do stand excused in this: And this, so sole and so unmatchable, Shall give a holiness, a purity, To the yet unbegotten sin of times; And prove a deadly bloodshed but a jest, Exampled by this heinous spectacle.

Bast. It is a damned and a bloody work; The graceless action of a heavy hand, If that it be the work of any hand.

Sal. If that it be the work of any hand! We had a kind of light what would ensure: It is the shameful work of Hubert's hand;

The practice and the purpose of the king: From whose obedience I forbid my soul, Kneeling before this ruin of sweet life, And breathing to his breathless excellence The incense of a vow, a holy vow, Never to taste the pleasures of the world, Never to be infected with delight, nor Nor conversant with ease and idleness, Till I have set a glory to this hand, By giving it the worship of revenge.

Pen. Our souls religiously confirm thy words.

[Enter Hubert.

Hub. Lords, I am hot with haste in seeking you:

Arthur doth live; the king hath sent for you.

Sal. O, he is hold and blushes not at death.

Avant, thou hateful villain, get thee gone!

Hub. I am no villain. Must I rob the law?

[Drawing his sword.

Bast. Your sword is bright, sir; put it up again.

Sal. Not till I sheathe it in a murderer's skin.

Hub. Stand back, Lord Salisbury, stand back, I say it!

By heaven, I think my sword's as sharpe as yours: you Would not have you, lord, forget yourself, Nor tempt the danger of my true defence;

Lest I, by marking of your rage, forget Your worth, your greatness and nobility. [man?

Big. Out, dunghill! darest thou brave a noble-
ACT V.

KING JOHN.

SCENE I.

Enter King John, Pandulph, and Attendants.

K. John. Thus have I yielded up into your hand The circle of my glory. [Giving the crown.

Pandulph. Take again From this my hand, as holding of the pope Your sovereign greatness and authority. [French, K. John. Now keep your holy word: go meet the And from his holiness use all your power To stop their marches 'fore we are inflamed. Our discontented counties do revol; Our people quarrel with obedience, Sweating allegiance and the love of soul To stranger blood, to foreign royalty. This insubordination blinden'd humour Rests by you only to be qualified: Then pause not; for the present time's so sick, That present medicine must be minister'd, Or overthrow inerible ensues. [Divine. Pandulph. It was my breath that blew this tempest Upon your stubborn usage of the pope; But since you are a gentle convert, My tongue shall burst again this storm of war And make fair weather in your blustering land. On this Ascension-day, remember well, Upon your oath of service to the pope, Go I to make the French lay down their arms.

K. John. Is this Ascension-day? Did not the Say that before Ascension-day at noon [prophet My crown I should give off? Even so I have: I did suppose it should be on constraint; But, heaven be thank'd, it is but voluntary.

Enter the Bastard.

Bast. All Kent hath yielded; nothing there holds But Dover castle: London hath received, For like a kind host, the Dauphin and his powers: Your nobles will not hear you, but are gone To offer service to your enemy, And wild amazement hurries up and down. The little number of your doubtful friends. K. John. Would not my lords return to me again, After they had young Arthur was alive? Bast. They fear and him demand and cast into the An empty casket, where the jewel of life, [streets, By some damned hand was rob'd and ta'en away. K. John. That villain Hubert told me he did live. Bast. So, on my soul, he did, for aught he knew. But wherefore do you droop? why look you sad? Be great in act, as you have ever in thought. Let not the world see fear and sad distrust Govern the motion of a kingly eye; Be stirring as the time; be fire with fire; Threaten the threatening and outface the brow Or bragging horror; so shall inferior eyes, That borrow to their behaviours from the, Great grow by your example and put on The dauntless spirit of resolution. Away, and glister like the god of war, When he intendeth to become the field:
Let me wipe off this honourable dew.
That silvery doth progress on thy cheeks:
My heart hath melted at a lady's tears,
Being an ordinary inundation;
But this effusion of such many drops,
This shower, blown up by tempest of the soul,
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amazed
Than had I the fortune of the night seen
Figured quite o'er with burning meteors,
Lift up thy brow, renowned Salisbury,
And with a great heart heave away the storm:
Commend these waters to those baby eyes
That never saw the giant world enraged;
Nor meet with the rich other than at feast;
Full of warm blood, of martial prosperity
Come, come; for thou shalt thrust thy hand as deep
Into the purse of rich prosperity
As Lewis himself: so, nobles, shall you all,
That knit your sinews to the strength of mine.
And even there, me thinks, an angel spake:

Enter Pandulph.

Look, where the holy legate comes apiece,
To give us warrant from the hand of heaven,
And on our actions set the name of right
With holy breath.

Pond. Hail, noble prince of France!
The next is this, King John hath reconciled
Himself to Rome; his spirit is come in,
That so stood out against the holy church,
The great metropolitans and see of Rome:
Therefore thy threatening colours now wind up;
And tame the savage spirit of wild war,
That, like a lion foster'd up at hand,
It may lie gently at the foot of peace,
And be no further harmful than in show.

Lee. Your grace shall pardon me, I will not back:
I am too high-born to be propitious,
To be a secretary at council;
Or useful serving-man and instrument,
To any sovereign state throughout the world.
Your breath first kindled the dead coal of wars
Between this chastis'd kingdom and myself,
And brought in matter that should feed this fire;
And now 'tis far too huge to be blown out
With that same weak wind which enkindled it.
You taught me how to know the face of right,
Acquainted me with interest to this land,
Yea, thrust this enterprise into my heart;
And come ye now to tell me John hath made
His peace with Robert. What is that peace to me?
I, by the honour of my marriage-bed,
After young Arthur, claim this land for mine;
And, now it is half-conqu'rd, must I back
Because that John hath made his peace with Rome?
Am I Rome's slave? What penny hath Rome borne,
What men provided, what munition sent,
To undereign this action? Is't not I
That undergo this charge? who else but I,
And such as to my claim are liable,
Sweat in this business and maintain this war?
Have I not heard these islanders shout out
' Vive le roi!' as I have look'd at their towns?
Have I not here the best cards for the game,
To win this easy match play'd for a crown?
And shall I now give o'er the yielded set?
No, no, on my soul, it never shall be said.

Pond. You look but on the outside of this work.
Lee. One side of Rome's cause.
Till my attempt so much be glorified
As to my ample hope was promised
Before I drew this gallant head of war.
And cul'd these fiery spirits from the world,
To overlook conquest and to win renown
Even in the jaws of danger and of death.

[Trumpet sounds.]

What lusty trumpet thus doth summon us?
ACT V.

KING JOHN.

SCENE IV.

Enter the Bastard, attended.

Bast. According to the fair play of the world, let me have audience; I am sent to speak:
My holy lord of Milan, from the king of France I come, and shall tell you that you have dealt for him;
And, as you answer, I do know the scope
And warrant limited unto my tongue.

Pand. The Dauphin is too wilful-opposite,
And will not temporize with my entreaties;
He flatly says he'll not buy his arms
With all the blood by ever that every lawyer,
The youth says well. Now hear our English king;
For thus his royalty doth speak in me,
He is prepared, and reason too he should:
This apish and unmanly approach,
This harness'd masque and maslinysed sel,
This unhair'd sanchess and bovilsh troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepared
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arm,
From out the circle of his territories.
[Door. That hand which had the strength, even at your
To cudgel you and make you take the hatch,
To drive back buckles and bucklers:
To crouch in litter of your stable planks,
To tie like pawns lock'd up in chests and trunks,
To hang with swine, to seek sweet safety out
In vaults and prisons, and to thrill and shake
Even at the crying of your nation's crow,
Think'st thou, great artificer Edward Bismarch;
Shall that victorious hand be fended here,
That in your chambers gave you chaisement?
No: know the gallant monarch is in arms
And like an eagle o'er his aery towers,
To souse annoyance that comes near his nest.
And you beggarate, you ingrate revolts,
You bloody Xeresos, ripping up the womb
Of your dear mother England, blush for shame;
For your own ladies and pale-visaged maids
Like Amazons come tripping after drums,
Their thimbles into armed gauntletts change,
Their needles to lances, and their gentle hearts
To fierce and bloody inclination.
Peace; leave. There end thy brave, and turn thy face in
We grant thou canst out old us; fare thee well;
We hold our time too precious to be spent
With such a brabiller.

Pand. Give me leave to speak.

Bast. No, I will speak. Peace; leave.

We will attend to neither.
Strike up the drums; and let the tongue of war
Plead for our interest and our being here.

Bast. Indeed, your drums, being beaten, will cry
And so shall you, being beaten: do but start
An echo with the clamour of thy drum,
And even at hand a drum is ready brace
That shall reverberate all as loud as thine;
Sound but another, and another shall
As loud as thine rattle the welkin's ear
And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder: for at hand,
Not trusting to this halting legate here,
Whom he hath used rather for sport than need
Is warlike John; and in his forehead sits
A bare-ribb'd death, whose office is this day
To feast upon whole thousands of the French.

Leve. Strike up your drums, to find this danger out.

Bast. And thou shalt find it, Dauphin, do not doubt. [Exeunt.

SCENE III.—The field of battle.

A council. Enter King John and Hubert.

K. John. How goes the day with us? O, tell me,
Hubert.

Hub. Badly, I fear. How fares thy majesty?

K. John. This fever, that hath troubled me so long,
Lies heavy on me; O, my heart is sick!

MSS. My lord, your valiant kinsman, Faulconbridge desires your majesty to leave the field [bridge, And send back word by me what way you go.

K. John. Tell him, toward Swinsteed, to the abbey there.

MSS. Be of good comfort; for the great supply
That was expected by the Dauphin here,
Are wreck'd three nights ago on Goodwin Sands.
This news was brought to Richard but even now:
The French fight coldly, and retire themselves.

K. John. Ay me! this tyrant fever burns me up,
And will not let me welcome this good news.
Set on toward Swinsteed: to my litter straight;
Weakness possesseth me, and I am faint. [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—Another part of the field.

Enter Salisbury, Pembroke, and Bigot.

Sal. I did not think the king so stored with friends.

Pemb. Up once again; put spirit in the French:
If they fly, we must win them.

Bigot. That misbegotten devil, Faulconbridge,
In spite of spine, alone upholds the day.

Sal. They say King John sore sick hath left the SCENE IV. — Another part of the field.

Enter Melun, wounded.

Mel. Lead me to the revolts of England here.

Sal. When we were happy we had other names.

Pom. It is the Count Melun.

Sal. Wounded to death.

Mel. Fly, noble English, you are bought and sold;
Unthred the rude eye of rebellion
And welcome home again discarded faith.
Seek out King John and fall before his feet:
For if the French be lords of this loud day,
He means to recompense the paines you take
By cutting off your heads: thus hath he sworn
And I with him, and many noes with me,
Upon the altar at Saint Edmundsbury;
Even on that altar where we swore to you
Dear amity and everlasting love.

Sal. May this be possible? may this be true?

Mel. Have I not hideous death within my view,
Retaining but a quantity of life,
Which bleeds away, even as a form of wax
Resolves itself from his figure; hideous fire,
What in the world should make me now deceive,
Since I must lose the use of all deceit?
Why should I then be false, since it is true
That I must die here and live hence by truth?
I say again, if Lewis do win the day,
He is forsworn, if e'er those eyes of yours
Behold another day break in the east:
But even this night, whose black contagious breath
Already smokes about the burning crest
Of the old, feeble and day-wearied sun,
Even this ill night, your breathing shall expire,
Putting the fire of credit to the fire.
Even with a treacherous fire of all your lives,
If Lewis by your assistance win the day.

Pom. Commend me to one Hubert with your king;
The love of him, and this respect besides,
For that my grandsire was an Englishman,
Awakes my conscience to confess all this.
In lien wherof, I pray you, bear me hence
From forth the noise and rumour of the field,
Where I may think the remnant of my thoughts
In peace, and part this body and my soul
With contemplation and devout desires.

Pom. We do believe the Dauphin shall sire my soul
But I do love the favour and the form
Of this most fair occasion, by the which
We will untread the steps of damned flight,
And like a lated and retired flood,
Leaving our rankness and irregular course,
ACT V.

KING JOHN.

SCENE V.—The French camp.

Enter Lewis and his train.

Lev. The sun of heaven methought was loath to set,

But stay'd and made the western welkin blush.

When English measure backward their own ground

In faith retire. O, bravely came we off,

When with a volley of our needless shot,

After such bloody toil, we did good night;

And wound our tattering colours clearly up,

Last in the field, and almost lords of it!

Enter a Messenger.

Mess. Where is my prince, the Dauphin?

Lev. Here: what news?

Mess. The Count Melun is slain; the English lords

By his persuasion are again fall'n off,

And your supply, which you have wish'd so long,

An early day and sun to sail the Sands.

Lev. Ah, foul shrewd news! beshrew thy very

I did not think to be so sad to-night [heart!

As this hath made me. Who was he that said

King John did fly an hour or two before

The stumbling night did part our weary powers?

Mess. Whoever spoke it, it is true, my lord.

Lev. Well: keep good quarter and good care to—

The day shall not be up so soon as I. [night:

To try the fair adventure of to-morrow. [Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—An open place in the neighbourhood of Sichishead Abbey.

Enter the Bastard and Hubert, severally.

Hub. Who's there? speak, ho! speak quickly, or

Hub. Of the part of England.

Bast. Whither dost thou go? [mand

Hub. What's that to thee? why may not I de—

Of thine affairs, as well as thou of mine?

Bast. Hubert, I think?

Hub. Thou hast a perfect thought:

I will upon all hazards well believe

Thou art my friend, that know'st my tongue so well.

Who art thou?

Bast. Who thou wilt: and if thou please,

Thou mayst befriend me so much as to think

I come one way of the Plantagenets. [night

Hub. Unkind remembrance! thou and eyeless

Have done me shame; brave soldier, pardon me,

That any advent breaking on my tongue

Should escape the true acquaintance of mine ear.

Bast. Come, come; sans compliment, what news abroad?

Hub. Why, here walk I in the black brow of night,

To find you out. I am a good shepherd of death,

Brief, then; and what's the news?

Hub. O, my sweet air, news fitting to the night,

Black, fearful, comfortless and horrible.

Bast. Show me the very wound of this ill news:

I am no woman, I'll not swoon at it.

Hub. The king, I fear, is poison'd by a monk:

I left him almost dead; and broke out

To acquaint you with this evil, that you might

The better arm you to the sudden time,

Than if you had at leisure known of this.

Bast. How did he take it? who did taste to him?

Hub. A monk, I tell you; a resolved villain,

Whose bowels suddenly burst out: the king

Yet speaks and peradventure may recover.

Bast. Who didst thou leave to tend his majesty?

Hub. Why, know you not? the lords are all come

And brought Prince Henry in their company:

At whose request the king hath pardon'd them,

And they are all about his majesty.

Bast. Withhold thine indignation, mighty heaven,

And tempt us not to bear above our power!

I'll tell thee, Hubert, half my power this night,

Passing these flats, are taken by the tide:

These Lincoln Washes have devoured them;

Myself, well mounted, hardly have escaped.

Away before; conduct me to the king;

I doubt he will be dead or ere I come. [Exeunt.

SCENE VII.—The orchard in Sichishead Abbey.

Enter Prince Henry, Salisbury, and Bigot.

P. Hen. It is too late: the life of all his blood

Is touch'd corruptibly, and his pure brain,

Which somehow supposeth the soul with dwelling-house,

Doth by the idle comments that it makes

Foretell the ending of mortality.

Enter Pembroke.

Pym. His highness yet doth speak, and holds be—

That being brought into the open air, [brief

It would alloy the burning quality

Of that fell poison which assaileth him.

P. Hen. Let him be brought into the orchard here.

Doth he still rage? [Exit Bigot.

Pemb. He is more patient—

Than when you left him: even now he sung.

P. Hen. O vanity of sickness! fierce extremes

In their continuance will not feel themselves,

Death, having prey'd upon the outward parts,

Leaves them invisible, and his siege is now

Against the mind, the which he pricks and wounds

With many legions of strange fantasies.

Which, in their throng and press to that last hold,

Confound themselves. 'Tis strange that death

Should sing.

I am the cygnet to this pale faint swan,

Who chants a doleful hymn to his own death,

And from the organ-pipe of trutillyy sings

His soul and body to their lasting rest.

Sal. Be of good comfort, prince; for you are born

To set a form upon that indigest

Which he hath left so shapeless and so rude.

Enter Attendants, and Bigot, carrying King John in a chair.

K. John. Ay, marry, now my soul hath elbow—

It would not out at windows nor at doors. [room;

There is so hot a summer in my bosom,

That all my bowels crumble up to dust:

I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen

Upon a parchment, and against this life

Do I shrunk up.

P. Hen. How fares your majesty?

K. John. Poison'd.—ill fare—dead, forsook, cast

And none of you will bid the winter come [off:

To thrust his icy fingers in my man.

Nor let my kingdom's rivers take their course

Through my burn'd bosom, nor entreat the north

To make his bleak winds kiss my parched lips

And comfort me with cold. I do not ask you much,

I beg cold comfort; and you are so strait

And so ingratitude, you deny me that.

P. Hen. O that there were some virtue in my

That might relieve you! [tears,

K. John. The salt in them is hot.

Within me is a hell; and there the poison

Is as a fiend confined to tyrannize

On unirevable condemned blood.
Enter the Bastard.

Bast. O, I am scalded with my violent motion, And spleen of speed to see your Majesty!

K. John. O cousin, thou art come to set mine eye:
The tackle of my heart is crack'd and burn'd, And all the shrouts wherewith my life should sail Are turned to one thread, one little hair; My heart hath one poor string to stay it by, Which holds but till thy news be uttered; And then all this thou seest is but a cloud And moddle of confounded royalty.

Bast. The Dauphin is preparing hitherward, Where heaven He knows how we shall answer him; For in a night the best part of my power, As I upon advantage did remove, Were in the Washes all unlarry Devoured by the unexpected flood. [The king dies.

Sal. You breathe these dead news in as dead an ear.

My liege! my lord! but now a king, now thus.

P. Hen. Even so must I run on, and even so stop,
What surety of the world, what hope, what stay,
When this was now a king, and now is clay?

Bast. Art thou gone so? I do but stay behind
To do the office for thee of revenge,
And then my soul shall wait on thee to heaven,
As it on earth hath been thy servant still.
Now, now, you stars that move in your right spheres,
Where be your powers? show now your mended And instantly return with me again. [Faiths,
To push destruction and perpetual shame
Out of the weak door of our fainting land.
Straight let us seek, or straight we shall be sought;
The Dauphin rages at our very heels.

Sal. It seems you know not, then, so much as we:
The Cardinal Pandulph is within at rest,
Who half an hour since came from the Dauphin,
And brings from him such offers of our peace
As we with honour and respect may take,
With purpose presently to leave this war.

Bast. He will the rather do it when he sees Ourselves well sinewed to our defence.

Sal. Nay, it is in a manner done already;
For many carriages he hath dispatch'd
To the sea-side, and put his cause and quarrel
To the disposing of the cardinal:
With whom yourself, myself and other lords,
If you think meet, this afternoon will post
To consummate this business happily.

Bast. Let it be so; and you, my noble prince,
With other princes that may best be spared,
Shall wait upon your father's funeral.

P. Hen. At Worcester must his body be inter'd;
For so he will'd it.

Bast. Thither shall it then:
And happily may your sweet self put on
The linel state and glory of the land!
To whom, with all submission, on my knee
I do bequeath my faithful services
And true subjection everlasting.

Sal. And the like tender of our love we make,
To rest without a spot for evermore. [Thanks

P. Hen. I have a kind soul that would give you
And knows not how to do it but with tears.

Bast. O, let us pay the time but needful woe,
Since it hath been beforehand with our griefs.
This England never did, nor never shall,
Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror,
But when it first did help to wound itself.
Now these her princes are come home again,
Come the three corners of the world in arms, [rue,
And we shall shock them. Nought shall make us
If England to itself do rest but true. [Exeunt.

SCENE—England and Wales.

ACT I.

Enter King Richard, John of Gaunt, with other Nobles and Attendants.

Gaunt. I have, my liege.

K. Rich. Tell me, moreover, last thou sounded.
If he appeal the duke on ancient malice;
Or worldly, as a good subject should.
Onsome known ground of treachery in him? [ment.

Gaunt. As near as I could sift him on that argu-
On some apparent danger seen in him
Ain'd at your highness, no inveterate malice. [face.

K. Rich. Then call them to our presence, face to
And frowning brow to brow, ourselves will hear
The accuser and the accused freely speak:
High-stomach'd are they both, and full of ire,
In rage deaf as the sea, hasty as fire.

Enter Bolingbroke and Mowbray.

Boling. Many years of happy days becal
My gracious sovereign, my most loving liege!

More. Each day still better other's happiness;
Until the heavens, envying earth's good hap,
Add an immortal title to your crown! [fas.

K. Rich. We thank you both; yet one but flatters
As well appeareth by the cause you come;
Namely, to appeal each other of high treason.
Conspir of Hereford, what dost thou object
Against the Duke of Norfolk, Thomas Mowbray?

Boling. First, heaven be the record to my speech!
In the devotion of a subject's love,
Tendering the precious safety of my prince,
And free from other misbegotten hate, .
In haste whereof, most heartily I pray
Your highness to assign our trial day. [me;]
K. Rich. Wrath-kindled gentlemen, he ruled by Let's purge this choler without letting blood;
This we will do, for this, thou wretched man;
Deep malice makes too deep incision;
Forget, forgive; conclude and be agreed;
Our doctors say this is no month to bleed.
Good uncle, let this end where it began;
We'll call the Duke of Norfolk, you your son.

evt. To be a make-piece shall become my age:
Throw down, my son, the Duke of Norfolk's gage.
K. Rich. And, Norfolk, throw down his.

Groat. When, Harry, when?
Obedience bids I should not bid again. [jno book.

K. Rich. Norfolk, throw down, we bid; there is Now, Mowbray, the Duke's gage, to him. My Life thou shalt command, but not my shame:
The one my duty owes; but my fair name,
Despite of death that lives upon my grave,
To dark dishonour's use thou shalt not have.
I am disgraced, impeach'd and baffled here,
Perfed to the soul with slander's venom's spear,
The which no balm can cure but his heart-blood
Which breathed this poison.

K. Rich. Rage must be withstood.
Give me his gage: Lions make leopards tame.

Mo. Yea, but not change his spots: take but my
And I will make my gage. My

K. Rich. For whom?
Mowbray, weal hath consummated, to his soul.

K. Rich. What doth our cousin lay to Mowbray's
It must be great that can inherit us.
So much as of a thought of ill in him, fit true;

Boling. Look, what I speak, my life shall prove That Mowbray hath received eight thousand nobles
Three parts of that receipt I had for Cabins,
The which he hath detain'd for low employments,
Like a false traitor and injurious villain.
Besides I say and well in battle prove,
Or here or elsewhere to the farthest verge
That ever was survey'd by English eye,
That all the treasons for these eighteen years
Complotted and contrived in this land, [spring, Fetch from false Mowbray their first head and Further I say and further will maintain
Upon his bad life to make all this good,
That he did plot the Duke of Gloucester's death,
Sungkeing which he did tell for it in these states.
And consequently, like a traitor coward. [blood,
Sluiced out his innocent soul through streams of
Which blood, like sacrificing Abel's cires,
Even from the tongueless caverns of the earth,
To me for justice and rough chastisement;
And his glorious worth of my descent,
This arms shall do it, or this life be spent.

K. Rich. How high a pitch his resolution soars!
Thomas of Norfolk, what say'st thou to this?

Mo. O, let my sovereign turn away his face
And bid his ears a little while be deaf.
Till I have told this slander of his blood,
How God and good men hate so foul a liar. fears:

K. Rich. Mowbray, impartial are our eyes and
Were he my brother, nay, my kingdom's heir,
As he is but my father's brother's son,
Now, by my sceptre's awe, I make a vow,
Such neighbour nearness to our sacred blood
Should bring to the highest station,
The unstooping firmness of my upright soul:
He is my subject, Mowbray; so att thou;
Free speech and fearless I to thee allow.

Mo. Then, Bolingbroke, as low as to thy heart,
Through the false passage of thy throat, thou liest.
Till I have told this slander of his blood,
Disbur'd I duty to his highness' soldiers;
The other part reserved I by consent,
For that my sovereign liege was in my debt
Upon remainder of a dear account.
Since last I went to France to fetch his queen;
Now, by the soul of my father's death, I,
Slew him not; but to my own disgrace
Neglected my sworn duty in that case;
For you, my noble Lord of Lancaster,
The honourable father to my foe.
Once did I lay an ambush for your life,
A treason that doth vex my grave soul;
But ere I last received the sacrament
I did confess it, and exactly begg'd
Your grace's pardon, and I hope I had it.
This is my fault: as for the rest appeal'd,
It issues from the rancou of a villain,
A revenge, we say, on my dear lord;
Which in myself I boldly will defend;
And interchangeably hurl down my gage
Upon this overweening traitor's foot,
To prove myself a loyal gentleman
Even in the best blood chamber'd in his bosom,
SCENE III. — The Lists at Coventry.

Enter the Lord Marshal and the Duke of Aumerle.

Mar. My Lord Aumerle, is Harry Hereford arm'd?

Aum. Yea, at all points; and longs to enter.

Mar. The Duke of Norfolk, sprightfully and bold,

Stays but the summons of the appellant's trumpet.

Aum. Why, then, the champions are prepared,

And for nothing but his majesty's approach.

K. Rich. Marshall, demand of yonder champion

The cause of his arrival here in arms:

Ask him his name and orderly proceed

To swear him in the justice of his cause.

Therefore, asCoventry, here, I do demand

Against what man thou comest, and what thy quarrel,

Speak truly, on thy knighthood and thy oath;

As so defend thee heaven and thy valour!

Mor. My name is Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk,

Who hither come engaged by my oath —

Thus placed in habiliments of war,

And formally, according to our law,

Dost thou here in the justice of his cause.

Mor. What is thy name and wherefore comest

Before King Richard in his royal lists?

Mor. Against whom comest thou? and what's thy quarrel,

Speak like a true knight, so defend thee heaven!

Boling. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster and Derby

Am I, who ready here do stand in arms,

To prove, by God's grace and my body's valour,

In lists, on Thomas Mowbray, Duke of Norfolk,

That he is a traitor, foul and dangerous,

To God of heaven, King Richard and to me;

And as I truly fight, defend me heaven!

Mor. On pain of death, no person be so bold

Or daring-hardly as to touch the lists,

Except the marshal and such officers

Appointed to favour and the vanishing troops.

Boling. Lord marshal, let me kiss my sovereign's

And bow my knee before his majesty:

For Mowbray and myself are like two men

That vow a long and weary pilgrimage;

Then let us take a ceremonious leave

And loving farewell to all my friends.

Mor. The appellant in all duty greets your highness;

And craves to kiss your hand and take his leave.

K. Rich. We will descend and fold him in our arms,

Cousin of Hereford, as thy cause is right,

So be thy fortune in this royal fight!

Farewell, my blood, which if to-day thou shed,

Lament we may, but not revenge thee deat.

Boling. O, let no noble eye profane the

For me, if I be gored with Mowbray's spear:

As confident as is the falcon's flight.

Against a bird, do I with Mowbray fight.

My loving lord, I take my leave of you;

Of you, my noble cousin, Lord Aumerle:

Not sick, although I have to do with death,

But lusty, young, and cheerly drawing breath.

Lo, as at English feasts, so I regret

The daintiest last, to make the end most sweet:

O thou, the worthy author and head,

Whose youthful spirit, in me regenerate,

Doth with a twofold vigour lift me up

To reach at victory above my head.

Add proof unto mine armour with thy prayers;

And with thy blessings steel my lance's point,

That it may enter Mowbray's waxen coat,
And furnish new the name of John a Gaunt,
Even in the lusty havour of his son.
Percy! Cursed in thy good cause make thee pros.
Be swift like lightning in the execution;
And let thy blows, doubly redoubled,
Fall like amazing thunder on the casque
Of thy adverse pernicious enemy:
Rouse up thy youthful blood, be valiant and live.

Boling. Mine innocence and Saint George to thrive!

More. However God or fortune cast my lot.
There lives or dies, true to King Richard's throne,
A loyal, just and upright gentleman:
Never did captive with a freer heart
Cast off his bonds of bondage and embrace
His golden uncontrou'ld enfranchisement,
More than my dancing soul doth celebrate
This feast of battle with mine adversary,
Most mighty liege, and my companion peers,
Take from my mouth the wish of happy years:
As gentle and as jovial as to jest.

Go I to fight: truth hath a quiet breast.
K. Rich. Farewell, my lord: securely I esp'y
Virtue with value couched in thine eye.
Order the trial, marshal, and begin.

Mar. Harry of Hereford, Lancaster and Derby,
Redeem the Duke of Norfolk, in the right!

Boling. Strong as a tower in hope. I cry amen.

More. Go bear this lance to Thomas, Duke of Norfolk.

K. Rich. Return again, and take an oath with thee.

Lay on our royal sword your banishment's hand;
Swear by the duty that you owe to God—
Our part therein we banish with yourselves—
To keep the oath that we administer:
You never shall, so help you truth and God!
Embrace each other's love in banishment;
Nor seek look upon each other's face;
Nor write, regret, nor reconcile
This louring tempest of your home-bred hate;
Nor never by advised purpose meet
To plot, contrive, or compot any ill
Gainst our state, our subjects, or our land.

Boling. I swear.

More. And I, to keep all this.

Boling, Norfolk, so far as to mine enemy—
By this time, had the king permitted us,
One of our souls had wander'd in the air,
Banished this traitor's soul to all our flesh.
As now our flesh is banish'd from this land:
Confess thy treasons ere thou dly the realm;
Since thou hast far to go, bear not along
The clogging barthen of a guilty soul.

More. No, Bolingbroke: if ever I were traitor,
My name rolls blunder'd from the book of life,
And I from heaven banish'd as from hence!
But what thou art, God, thou, and I do know;
And all too soon, I fear, the king shall rue.
Farewell, my liege. Now no way can I stay;
Save back to England, all the world's my way.

Boling. How long a time lies in one little word!
Four lagging winters and four wanton springs
End in a word: such is the breath of kings.

K. Rich. Uncle, even in the glasses of thine eyes
I see thy grievèd heart: thy sad aspect
 Hath from the number of his banish'd years
Phleg'd four away. [To Boling.] Six frozen winters spent.

Return we hence home from banishment.

ACT I.

KING RICHARD II.

SCENE IV.

Can change their moons and bring their times about,
My oil-dried lamp and time-bewasted light
Shall be extinct with age and endless night;
My inch of taper will be burnt and done,
And black dead night shall set upon my son.
[Exit.

K. Rich. Why, uncle, thou hast many years to Gaunt. But not a minute, king, that thou canst give;
Shorten my days thou canst with sullen sorrow,
And pluck nights from me, but not lend a morrow;
Then hast thou somet with me of my age,
But stop no wrinkle in his pilgrimage,
Thy word is current with him for my death,
But dead, thy kingdom cannot buy my breath.
K. Rich. Thy son is banish'd upon good advice,
Whereunto tongue a party-verbose gave:
Why at our justice seem'st thou then to hark?
Gaunt. Things sweet to taste prove in digestion
You urged me as a judge; but I had rather [sour.
You would have bid me argue like a father.
O, had it been a stranger, not my child,
To smooth his fault I should have been more mild:
A partial slander sought I to avoid,
And in the sentence my own life destroy'd.
Alas, I look'd when some of you should say,
I was too strict to make mine own away;
But you gave leave to my unwilling tongue
Against my will to do myself this wrong.
K. Rich. Cousin, farewell; and, uncle, bid him
Six years banish him, and he shall go.
[Flourish.
Exeunt King Richard and Gaunt.

Aum. Cousin, farewell; what presence must not know,
From where you do remain let paper show.
Mar. My lord, no leave take I; for I will ride.
As far as land will let me, by your side.
[words,
Gaunt. O, to what purpose dost thou hear thy
That thou return'st no greeting to thy friends?
Boling. I have too few to take my leave of you,
When the tongue's office should be prodigal
To breathe the abundant dolor of the heart.
Gaunt. Thy grief is but thy absence for a time.
Boling. Joy absent, grief is present for that time.
Gaunt. What is six winters? they are quickly gone.
[ten.
Boling. To men in joy; but grief makes one hour
Gaunt. Call it a travel that thou takest for pleas-

Boling. My heart will sigh when I misconic it so,
Which finds it an inforced pilgrimage.
Gaunt. The sullen passage of thy weary steps
Esteem as foil wherein thou art to set
The precious jewel of thy home return.
Boling. Nay, rather, every tedious stride I make
Will disable me of what a deal of world
I wander from the jewels that I love.
Must I not serve a long apprenticeship
To foreign passages, and in the end,
Having my freedom, boast of nothing else
But that I was a journeyman to grief?
Gaunt. But remember me of heaven visits
Are to a wise man ports and happy heavens,
Teach thy necessity to reason thus;
There is no virtue like necessity,
Think not the king did banish thee.
But thou the king. Woe doth the heavier sit,
Where it perceive its but faintly borne.
Go, say I sent thee forth to purchase honour
And not the king exiled thee; or suppose
Devouring pestilence hangs in our air
And thou art flying to a fresher clime:
Look, what thy soul holds dear, imagine it
To lie that which thou rost, were none then comest—
Suppose the singing birds musicians, [strewed,
The grass whereon thou tread'st the presence
The flowers fair ladies, and thy steps no more
Than a delightful measure or a dance;
For gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it and sets it light.
Boling. O, who can hold a fire in his hand
By thinking on the frosty Caecusus?
Or clowly death get any comfort
By bare imagination of a feast?
Or wallow naked in December snow
By thinking on fantastic summer's heat?
O, no! the apprehension of the good
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse;
Fell sorrow's strong clout it never rack'd more
Than when he bides, but late to take the sore.
Gaunt. Come, come, my son, I'll bring thee on thy way:
Had I thy youth and cause, I would not stay.
Boling. Then England's ground, farewell; sweet sweet soil, adieu.
My mother, and my nurse, that bears me yet!
Where'er I wander, boast of this I can,
Though banish'd, yet a trueborn Englishman.
[Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The court.

Enter the King, with Bagot and Green at one door;
and the Duke of Aumerle at another.
K. Rich. We did observe. Cousin Aumerle,
How far brought you high Hereford on his way?
Aum. I brought high Hereford, if you call him so,
But to the next highway, and there I left him.
K. Rich. But, say, what store of parting tears were shed?
[wind.
Aum. Faith, none for me; except the northeast
Which then blew bitterly against our faces,
Awaked the sleeping rheum, and so by chance
Did grace our hollow parting with a tear.
K. Rich. What said our cousin when you parted
with him?
Aum. Farewell.'
And, for my heart disdained that my tongue
Should so profane the word, that taught me craft
To counterfeit oppression of such grief,
That words seem'd buried in my sorrow's grave.
Marry, would the word 'farewell' have lengthen'd
And added years to his short banishment, [hours
He should have had a volume of farewell's;
But since it would not, he had none of me.
K. Rich. He is our cousin, cousin; but 'tis doubt,
When time shall call him home from banishment,
Whether our dismission come from his friends,
Ourself and Bushy, Bagot here and Green
Observed his courtship to the common people;
How he did seem to dive into their hearts
With humble and familiar courtesy,
What reverence he did throw away on slaves,
Wooing poor craftmen with the craft of smiles
And patient underbearing of his fortune,
As 't were to banish their affects with him.
Off goes his bonnet to an oyster-wench;
A brace of draymen bid God speed him well
And had the tribute of his supple knee,
With 'This places, my countryman, my loving friends;'
As were our England in reversion his,
And he our subjects' next degree in hope.
Green. Well, he is gone; and with him go these

Now for the rebels which stand out in Ireland,
Expeditious management must be made, my liege.
Ere further leisure yield them further means
For their advantage and your highness' loss.
K. Rich. We will ourselves in person to this war:
And, for our cofferies, with too great a court
And liberal largess, are grown somewhat light,
We are intent to farm our royal realm;
The revenue whereof shall furnish us
For our affairs in hand: if that come short,
Our substitutes at home shall have blank charters;
Wereto, when they shall know what men are rich,
ACT II.

KING RICHARD II.

SCENE I.  Ely House.

Enter John of Gaunt sick, with the Duke of York, &c.

Gaunt. Will the king come, that I may breathe my soul?

Enter Bushy.  [Exit.]

Bushy, what news?  [Exit.]

Gaunt, Old John of Gaunt is grievous sick, my lord.

Bushy. Suddenly taken; and sent post haste to entreat your majesty to visit him.

Gaunt. O, but they say the tongues of dying men enforce attention like deep harmony:—

Where words are scarce, they are seldom spent in vain.  For they breathe truth that breathe their words in vain.

He that no more must say is listened more than they whom youth and ease have taught to close;

More are men's ends marked than their lives before:

The setting sun, and music at the close,

As the last taste of sweets, is sweetest last,

Writ in remembrance more than things long past:—

Though Richard my life's counsel would not hear,

My death's sad tale may yet unmake his ear.

York. No; it is stopp'd with other flattering sounds,

As praises, of whose taste the wise are fond,

Lascivious metres, to whose venom sound

The open ear of youth doth always listen;

Report of fashions in proud Italy,

Whose manners still our tardy apish nation

Limbs after in base imitation.

Where doth the world thrust forth a vanity—

So it be new, there's no respect how vile—

That is not quickly buzz'd into its ears?

Then all too late comes counsel to be heard,

Where will doth mutiny with wit's regard.

Direct not him whose way himself will choose:—

'Tis breath thou lack'st, and that breath wilt thou have.

Gaunt. Methinks I am a prophet new inspired

And thus expiring do foretell of him:

His rash fierce blaze of riot cannot last,

For violent fires soon burn out themselves;

Small showers last long, but sudden storms are short;

He tires betimes that spurs too fast betimes;

With cager feeding food doth choke the feeder:

Light vanity, insatiate coromant,

Consuming means, soon prey to his own self,

This royal throne of kings, this scepter'd isle,

This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars,

This other Eden, demi-paradise.

This fortress built by Nature for herself

Against infection and the hand of war,

This happy breed of men, this little world,

This precious stone set in the silver sea,

Which serves it in the office of a wall

Or as a moat defensive to a house,

Against the envy of less happier lands.

This blessed plot, this earth, this realm, this Eng.

This nurse, this teeming womb of royal kings,

Fear'd by their breed and famous by their birth,

Renowned for their deeds as far from home,

For Christian service and true chivalry,

As is the sepulchre in stubborn Jewry

Of the world's ransom, blessed Mary's son,

This land of such dear souls, this dear dear land,

Dear for their reputation through the world,

Is now lease out, I die pronouncing it,

Like to a tenement or pelted farm:

England, bound in with the triumphant sea,

Whose rocky shore beats back the envious siege

Of watery Neptune, is now bound in with shame,

With lofty broken and rotted parchment bonds:

That England, that was wont to conquer others,

Hath made a shameful conquest of itself.

Ah, would the scandal vanish with my life,

How happy then were my ensuing death!

Eater King Richard and Queen, Anmerle, Bushy, Green, Bagot, Ross, and Willoughby.

York. The king is come: deal mildly with his youth;

For young hot colts being raged do rage the more.

Queen. How fars our noble uncle, Lancaster?

K. Rich. What comfort, man?  how's t'with aged Gaunt?

Gaunt. O, how that name belth my composition!

Old Gaunt indeed, and gaunt in being old:

Within me grief hath kept a tedious fast;

And who abstains from meat that is not gaunt?

For sleeping England long time have I watch'd;

Watching breeds leanness, leanness is all gaunt:

The pleasure that some fathers feed upon,

Is my strict fast; I mean, my children's looks;

And therein fasting, hast thou made me gaunt:

Gaunt am I for the grave, gaunt as a grave,

Whose hollow womb inherits bought but bones.

K. Rich. Can sick men play so nicely with their names?

Gaunt. No, misery makes sport to mock itself:

Since thou dost seek to kill my name in me,

I mock my name, great king, to flatter thee.  [live?]

K. Rich. Should dying men flatter those that die?

Gaunt. No, no, men living flatter those that die.

K. Rich. Thou, now a dying, say'st thou flatterest me.

Gaunt. O, no! thou diest, though I the sicker be.

K. Rich. I am in health, I breathe, and see thee ill.

Gaunt. Now He that made me know'st I see thee ill;

I'll in myself to see, and in thee seeing ill.

Thy death-bed is no lesser than thy land

Wherein thou liest in reputation sick;

And thou, too careless patient as thou art,

Commit'st thy anointed body to the care

Of those physicians that first wounded thee:

A thousand flatterers sit within thy crown,

Whose compass is no bigger than thy head;

And yet, incaged in so small a verge,

The waste is no whit lesser than thy land.

O, had thy grandsire with a prophet's eye

Seen how his son's son should destroy his sons,

From forth thy reach he would have laid thy shame,

Depositing thee before thou wert possess'd,

Which art possess'd now to depose thyself.

Why, cousin, wert thou regent of the world,

It were a shame to let this land by lease;

But for thy world enjoying but this land,

Is it not more than shame to shame it so?

K. Rich. Where lies he?

Bushy. At Ely House.

K. Rich. Now put it, God, in the physician's mind

To help him to his grave immediately!

The lining of his brain offers itself to hope;

To deck our soldiers for these Irish wars.

Cane, gentlemen, let 's all go visit him:

Pray God we may make haste, and come too late!

All. Amen.  [Exit.
Landlord of England art thou now, not king: Thy state of law is bondslave to the law; And thou, K. Rich., A lunatic, witted fool, Presuming on an ague's privilege, Darest with thy frozen admonition Dote on thy check, chasing the royal blood With fury from his native residence. Now, by my seat's right royal majesty, Wilt thou not brother to great Edward's son, This line must run so roundly in thy head Should run thy head from thy univerent shoulders. Gaunt. Of spare me not, my brother Edward's son, For that I was his father Edward's son; That blood already, like the pelican, Haste thou tapp'd out and drunkenly carroused; My brother Gloucester, plain being soul, Whom fair befall in heaven 'mongst happy souls! May be a precedent and witness good That thou respect'st not spilling Edward's blood: Join with the present sickness that I have; And thy unkindness be like crooked age, To crop at once a too long withered flower. Live in thy shame, but die not shame with thee: These words hereafter thy tormentors be! Convey me to my bed, then to my grave: Love they to live that love and honour have. [Exit, borne off by his Attendants. K. Rich. And let them die that age and solens have; For both hast thou, and both become the grave. York. I do beseech your majesty, impite his words To wayward sickness and age in him: He loves you, on my life, and holds you dear At the true rate of Hereford, were they here. K. Rich. Right, as truly as Hereford's love, As theirs, so mine; and all be as it is. [solo Enter Northumberland.] North. My liege, old Gaunt commends him to your K. Rich. What says be? [majesty. North. Nay, nothing: all is said: His tongue is now a stringless instrument; Words, life and all, old Lancaster hath spent. [so! York. Be York the next that must be bankrupt Though death be poor, it ends a mortal woe. [he: K. Rich. The ripest fruit first falls, and so doth His line; for his thoughts were in the flower. So much for that. Now for our Irish wars; We must supplant those rough rug-headed kerns, Which live like venom where no venom else But only they have privilege to live. And for these great affairs do ask some charge, Toward our assistance plain seize to us The plate, coin, revenues and moveables, Whereof our uncle Gaunt did stand possess'd. York. How long shall I be patient? ah, how long Shall tender duty make me suffer wrong? Not Gloucester's death, nor Hereford's banishment, Nor Gaunt's rebukes, nor England's private wrongs, Nor the prevention of poor Bolingbroke About his marriage, nor my own disgrace, Have ever made me sour my patient check, Or bend one wrinkle on my sovereign face. I am the last of noble Edward's sons, Of whom thy father, Prince of Wales, was first: In war was never lion raged more fierce, In peace was never gentle lamb more mild, Than was that young and princely gentleman. His face thou hast, for even so look'd he, Accomplish'd with the number of thy hours; But when he frowned, it was against the French And not against his friends; his noble hand Did win what he did spend and spent not That which his triumphant father's hand had won; His hands were guilty of no kindred blood, But bloody with the enemies of his kin. O Richard! York is too far gone with grief, Or else he never would compare between, K. Rich. Why, uncle, what's the matter? York. Pardon me, if you please: if not, I, pleased Not to be pardon'd, am content withal, Seek you to seize and gripe into your hands The royalties and rights of banish'd Hereford? Is not Gaunt dead, and doth not Hereford live? Was not Gaunt just, and is not Harry true? Did not the devil have an heir? Is not his heir a well-deserving son? Take Hereford's rights away, and take from Time His charters and his customary rights; Let not to-morrow then ensue to-day; Be not thyself; for how art thou a king But by fair sequence and succession? Now, afore God—God forbid I say true!— If you do wrongfully seize Hereford's rights, Call in the letters-patent that he hath By his attorneys-general to sue His livery, and deny his offer'd homage, To pluck a thousand thousand dargers on your head, You lose a thousand well-disposed hearts And prick my tender patience to those thoughts Which honour and allegiance cannot think. K. Rich. Think what you will, we seize into our hand His plate, his goods, his money and his lands. York. I'll not be by the while: my liege, farewell: What will ensue hereof, there's none can tell; But by had courses may be understood That their events can never fall out good. [Exit. K. Rich. God save Bushy, to the Earl of Wiltshire Bid him return to us to Ely House [straight: To see this business. To-morrow next We will for Ireland; and 'tis time, I trow; And we create, in absence of ourself, Our uncle York lord governor of England; For he is just and always loved us well. Come on, our queen: to-morrow must we part; Be merry, for our time of stay is short. [Flourish. E'en now, King, Queen, Aumerle, Bushy, Green, and Lord. North. Well, lords, the Duke of Lancaster is dead. Ross. And living too: for now his son is duke. Willo. Heaven in that. And now, North. Richly in both, if justice had her right. Ross. My heart is great; but it must break with silence, Ere 't be disburden'd with a liberal tongue. North. Nay; speak thy mind, and let him ne'er That speaks thy words again to do thee harm! Willo. Tends that thou wouldst speak to the Duke of Hereford? If it be so, out with it boldly, man; Quick is mine ear to hear of good towards him. Ross. No, Sir; for all the world I do for him; Unless you call it good to pity him, Bereft and gelded of his patrimony. [are borne North. Now, afore God, 'tis shame such wrongs In him, a royal prince, and many mee Of noble blood in this declining land. The king is not himself, but basely led By flatterers: and what they will inform, Merely in hate, 'gainst any of us all, That will the king severely prosecute 'Gainst us, our lives, our children, and our heirs. Ross. The commons hath he pill'd with grievous taxes And quite lost their hearts: the nobles hath he For ancient quarrels, and quite lost their hearts. Willo. And daily new exactions are devised, As blanks, benevolences, and I wot not what; But what, o' God's name, doth become of this? 301
North. Wars have not wasted it, for war's he hath not,
But basely yielded upon compromise
That we have nobles' ancestors achieved with blows:
More hath he spent in peace than they in war.
Ross. The Earl of Wiltshire hath the realm in North. [Man.]
Wil. The king's grown bankrupt, like a broken
North. Reproach and dissolution hang over
Ross. He hath not money for these Irish wars,
His burthenous taxations notwithstanding,
But by the robbing of the banish'd duke.
North. His noble kinsman; most degenerate king!
But, lords, we hear this fearful tempest sing,
Yet we'll be shelter'd; to avoid the storm;
We see the wind sit sore upon our sails,
And yet we strike not, but securely perish.
Ross. We see the very wreck that we must suffer;
And unavowed is the danger now,
For suffering so the causes of our wreck. [death
North. Not so; even through the hollow eyes of
I spy life peering; but I dare not say
How near the tidings of our comfort is.
Wil. Nay, let us share thy thoughts, as thou dost ours.
Ross. Be confident to speak, Northumberland:
We three are but thyself, and, speaking so,
Thy words are but as thoughts: therefore, be bold.
North. Then thus: I have from Port le Blanc, a
In Brittany, received intelligence
That Harry Duke of Hereford, Raimond Lord Cobham,
That late broke from the Duke of Exeter,
His brother, Archbishop late of Canterbury,
Sir Thomas Erpingham, Sir John Ramston,
Sir John Norbury, Sir Robert Waterton and Francis Quoint,
All these well furnished by the Duke of Bretagne
With eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,
Are making bither with all due expediency
And shortly mean to touch our northern shore:
Perhaps they had ere this, but that they stay
The first departing of the king for Ireland.
If then we shall shake off our slavish yoke,
Inpout our country's broken wing,
Redeem from breaking planes the blemish'd crown,
Wipe off the dust that hides our sceptre's gilt
And make high majesty look like itself,
Away with me in post to Ravenspurch;
But if you faint, as fearing to do so,
Stay and we will follow, and myself I go. [That fear.
Ross. To horse, to horse! urge doubts to them
Wil. Hold out my horse, and I will first be there.
[Exit.

SCENE II. — The palace.

Enter Queen, Bushy, and Bagot.

Bushi. Madam, your majesty is too much sad:
You promised, when you parted with the king,
To lay aside life-harming heaviness
And entertain a cheerful disposition.
Queen. To please the king I did; to please myself
I cannot do it; yet I know no cause
Why I should welcome such a guest as grief,
Save bidding farewell to so sweet a guest
As my sweet Richard! yet again, methinks,
Some unborn sorrow, ripe in fortune's womb,
Is coming towards me, and my inward soul
With nothing trembles: at some thing it grieves,
More than with parting from my lord the king.
Bushy. Each substance of a grief hath twenty shadows,
Which shows like grief itself, but is not so;
For sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects;
Like perspectives, which rightly gazed upon
Show nothing but confusion, eyed awry.
Disturb this form of sorrow, and my sweet majesty,
Looking awry upon your lord's departure,
Find shades of grief, more than himself, to wall;
Which, look'd on as it is, is, is nought but shades
Of what it is not. Then, thrice-gracious queen,
More than your lord's departure weep not; more's
Or if be, 'tis with false sorrow's eye, [not seen]
Which for things true weeps things imaginary.
Queen. It may be so; but yet my inward soul
Persuades me it is otherwise: howe'er it be,
I cannot but be sad; so heavy sad
As, though on thinking on no thought I think,
Makes me with heavy nothing faint and shrill.
Bushy. 'Tis nothing but conceit, my gracious lady.
Queen. 'T is nothing less: conceit is still derived
From some forefather grief: mine is not so,
For nothing hath begot my something grief;
Or something hath the nothing that I grieve:
'T is in reversion that I do possess:
But what it is, that is not yet known: what
I cannot name; 't is nameless woe, I wot.

Enter Green.

Green. God save your majesty! and well met, gentlemen:
I hope the king is not yet shipp'd for Ireland. [is;
Queen. Why hope thou so? 't is better hope he
For his designs crave haste, his haste good hope;
Then wherefore dost thou hope he is not shipp'd?
Green. That he, our hope, might have retired his power,
And driven into despair an enemy's hope,
Who strongly hath set footing in this land:
The banish'd Bolingbroke repeats himself;
And with uplifted arms is safe arrived
At Ravenspurch.
Queen. Now God in heaven forbid!
Green. Ah, madam, 't is too true: and that is worse,
[Percy,
The Lord Northumberland, his son young Henry
The Lords of Ross, Beaumont, and Willoughby, Wiltshire, Bretagne, and all the powerful friends are fled to him.
Bushy. Why have you not proclaim'd Northumberland
And all the rest revolted faction traitors? [feeter
Green. We have: whereupon the Earl of Wor-hath broke his staff, resign'd his stewardship
And all the household servants list with him
To Bolingbroke.
Bushi. Now, Green, thou art the midwife to my
And Bolingbroke my sorrow's dismal heir;
Now hath my soul brought forth her prodigy,
And I, a gasping new-deliver'd mother,
Have woe to woe, sorrow to sorrow join'd.
Bushy. Despair not, madam.
Queen. Who shall hinder me?
I will despair, and be at enmity
With cozening hope: he is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper back of death,
Whose soul would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hope lingers in extremity.

Enter York.

Queen. With signs of war about his aged neck;
O, full of life! business is his inward soul;
Uncle, for God's sake, speak comfortable words.
York. Should I do so. I should belie my thoughts:
Comfort's in heaven; and we are on the earth,
Where nothing lives but crosses, cares and grief.
Your husband, he is gone to save far off,
Whilst others come to make him lose at home;
Here am I left to underprop his land.
Who, weak with age, cannot support myself; Now comes the sick hour that his surfeit made; Now shall be try his friends thatatter'd him.

Enter a Servant.
Serv. My lord, your son was gone before I came.
York. He was? Why, so! go all which way it will!

The nobles they are fled, the commons they are And will, I fear, revolt on Hereford's side.
Sirrah, get thee to Flashy, to my sister Gloucester; Bid her send me presently a thousand pound; Hold, take my ring.
Serv. My lord, I had forgot to tell your lordship.
To-day, as I came by, I called there; But I shall grieve you to report the rest.
York. What is 't, knave?
Serv. An hour before I came, the duchess died.
York. God for his mercy! what a tide of woes Comes rushing on this woeful land at once! I know not what to do; I would to God, So my untruth had not provoked him to it. The king of England was my kinsman with my brother's. What, are there no posts dispatch'd for Ireland? How shall we do for money for these wars? [me. Come, come, sister,—cousin, I would say,—pray, pardon Go, fellow, get thee home, provide some carts And bring away the armour that is there. Gentlemen, will you go mustier men? If I know or how which way to order these affairs Thus thrust disorderly into my hands, Never believe me. Both are my kinsmen: The one is my sovereign, whom both my oath And duty bids defend; the other again Is my kinsman, whom the king hath wrong'd. Whom conscience and my kindred bids to right. Well, somewhat we must do. Come, cousin, I'll Dispose of you. Gentlemen, go, muster up your men, And meet me presently at Berkeley. I should to Flashy thus; But time will not permit: all is uneven, And every thing is left at six and seven.

[Exeunt York and Queen.

Busby. The wind sits fair for news to go to Ireland, But none returns. For or to levy power Proportional to the enemy Is all impossible.

Green. Besides, our nearness to the king in love Is near the hate of those love not the king.
Boling. And that's the wavering commons: for Their love lies in their purses, and whose empties them By so much fills their hearts with deadly hate.
Busby. Wherewith the king stands generally condemn'd.
Boling. If judgment lie in them, then so do we, Because we ever have been near the king. [castle; Green. Well, I will for refuge straight to Bristol The Earl of Wiltshire is already there. Busby. Thither will I with you; for little office The hateful commons will perform for us, Except like curs to tear us all to pieces. Will you go along with us?
Boling. No: I will to Ireland to his majesty. Farewell: if heart's presages be not vain, We three here part that ne'er shall meet again.
Busby. That's as York strives to beat back Bolingbroke.
Green. Alas, poor duke! the task he undertakes Is numbing to the lands and drinking oceans dry: Where one on his side fights, thousands will fly. Farewell at once, for once, for all, and ever.
Busby. Well, we may meet again.
Boling. I fear me, never.

[Exeunt, ACT II. KING RICHARD II. SCENE III.

Enter Bolingbroke and Northumberland, with Forces.

Boling. How far is it, my lord, to Berkeley now? North. Believe me, noble lord, I am a stranger here in Gloucestershire: These high wild hills and rough uneven ways Draws out our niles, and makes them wearable; And yet you have a clear acquaintance with sugar, Making the hard way sweet and delectable. But I bethink me what a weary way From Ravenspurgh to Cotswold will be found In Ross and Willoughby, wanting your company, Which, I protest, hath very much beguiled The tediousness and press of my travel: But theirs is sweetened with the hope to have The present benefit which I possess; And hope to joy is little less in joy Than hope enjoy'd: by this the weary lords Shall make their wars seem short; as mine hath done By sight of what I have, your noble company.

North. Of such good words. But who comes here?

Enter Henry Percy.

North. It is my son, young Harry Percy, Sent from my brother Worcester, whencesoever.
Harry, how fares your noble brother?
Percy. I had thought, my lord, to have learn'd his health of you.
North. Why, is he not with the queen? [court, Percy. No, my good lord; he hath forsook the Broken his staff of office and dispersed The household of the king.
North. What was his reason? He was not so resolved when last we spake together.
Percy. Because your lordship was proclaimed traitor, But he, my lord, is gone to Ravenspurgh, [tor. To offer service to the Duke of Hereford, And sent me over by Berkeley, to discover What power the Duke of York had leived there; Then with directions to repair to Ravenspurgh.
North. Have you forgot the Duke of Hereford, boy? Percy. No, my good lord, for that is not forgot Which ne'er I did remember: to my knowledge I never in my life and look on him. [buke.
North. Then learn to know him now: this is the Percy. My gracious lord, I tend you my service. Such as it is, being tender, raw and young; Which elder days shall ripen and confirm To more approved service and desert.
Percy. I thank thee, gentle Percy; and be sure I count myself in nothing else so happy As in a soul remembering my good friends; And, as my fortune ripens with thy love, It shall be still thy true love's recompense: My heart this covenant makes, my hand thus seals it. North. How far is it to Berkeley? and what stir Keeps good old York there with his men of war? Percy. There stands the castle, by yon tuft of trees, Mann'd with three hundred men, as I have heard: And in it are the Lords of York, Berkeley, and Sey PHONE else of name and noble estimate. [mou;

Enter Ross and Willoughby.

North. Here come the Lords of Ross and Willoughby, Gloomy with spurring, fiery-red with haste. [ly, Boling. Welcome, my lords. I wot your love pure; A banish'd traitor: all my treasury, [sue Is yet but unfelt thanks, which more enrich'd Shall be your love and labour's recompense. [lord. Ross. Your presence makes us rich, most noble Will. And far surrounds our labour to attain it. Boling. Evermore thanks, the exchequer of the poor;
Which, till my infant fortune comes to years,
Stands for my bounty. But who comes here?

Enter Berkeley.

North. It is my Lord of Berkeley, as I guess.
Ber. My Lord of Hereford, my message is to you.
Boling. My lord, my answer is:—to Lancaster;
And I am come to seek that name in England;
And I must find that title in your tongue,
Before I make return of thy errant.
Ber. Mistake me not, my lord; 'tis not my meaning
To raise one title of your honour out:
To you, my lord, I come, what lord you will,
From the most gracious reign of this land,
The Duke of York, to know what pricks you on
To take advantage of the absent time
And fright our native peace with self-born arms.

Enter York, attended.

Boling. I shall not need transport my words by Here comes his grace in person: [sighs;]
My noble uncle! [Kneels.
York. Show me thy humble heart, and not thy Whose duty is deceived and false. [kneels.
Boling. My gracious uncle—
York. Tut, tut.
Granta the grace, nor uncle me no uncle:
I am no traitor's uncle; and that word 'grace'
In an ungracious mouth is but profane.
Why have those banish'd and forbidden legs
Dared once to touch a dust of England's ground?
But then more 'why' 'why'? have they dared to
So many miles upon her peaceful bosom,
Frighting her pale-faced villages with war
And ostentation of despised arms?
Comest thou because the anointed king is hence?
Why, foolish boy, the king is left behind,
And in my loyal bosom lies his power.
Were I but now the lord of such hot youth
As when brave Gaunt, thy father, and myself
Rescued the Black Prince, that young Mars of men,
From forth the ranks of many thousand French,
O, then how quickly should this arm of mine,
Now prisoner to the palp'ry, chastise thee
And minister correction in thy state?
Boling. My gracious uncle, let me know my fault:
On what condition stands it and wherein?
York. Even in condition of the worst degree,
In gross rebellion and detested treason:
Thou art a banish'd man, and here art come
Before the expiration of thy time.
Boling. To braving arms against thy sovereign.
York. As I was banish'd, I was banish'd here.
But as I come, I come for Lancaster.
And, noble uncle, I beseech your grace
Look on my wrongs with an indifferent eye:
You are my father, for me think in you
I see old Gaunt alive: O, then, my father,
Will you permit that I shall stand condemm'd
A wandering vagabond; my rights and royalties
Pluck'd from my arms perforce and given away
To upstart unthrifts? Wherefore was I born?
If that my cousin king be King of England,
It must be granted I am Duke of Lancaster.
You have a son, Anmerle, my noble cousin;
Had you first died, and he been thus trod down,
He should have found his uncle Gaunt a father,
To write his wrongs and chase them to the bay.
I am denied to sue my livery here,
And yet my letters-patents give me leave:
My father's goods are all distress'd and sold,
And these and all are all amiss employ'd.
What would you have me do? I am a subject,
And I can now have none: I offer no endeavours
And therefore personally I lay my claim
To my inheritance of free descent.
North. The noble duke hath been too much abused.
Ross. It stands your grace upon to do him right.
Wills. Base men by his endowments are made gay.
York. My lords of England, let me tell you this:
I have had feeling of my cousin's wrongs
And labour'd all I could to do him right;
But in this kind to come, in braving arms,
Be his own carver and cut out his way,
To find out right with wrong, it may not be;
And you that do abet him in this kind
Cherish rebellion and are rebels all.
North. The noble duke hath sworn his coming is
But for his own; and for the right of that
We all have strangely sworn to give him aid;
And let him ne'er see joy that breaks that oath!
York. Well, well, I see the issue of these arms:
I cannot meddle, I must needs confess,
Because my power is weak and all ill left:
But if I could, by Him that gave me life,
I would attach you all and make you stopp
Unto the sovereign mercy of the king;
But since I cannot, be it known to you
I do remain as neuter. So, fare you well;
Unless you please to enter in the castle
And there repose you for this night.
Boling. An offer, uncle, that we will accept:
But we must win your grace to go with us
To Bristol castle, which they say is held
By Basny, Bagot and their complices,
The catapillars of the commonwealth,
Which I have sworn to weed and pluck away.
York. It may be I will go with you: but yet I'll pause;
For I am both to break our country's laws.
Nor friends nor foes, to me welcome you are;
Things past redress are now with me past care.

SCENE IV.—A camp in Wales.

Enter Salisbury and a Welsh Captain.

Cop. My Lord of Salisbury, we have stay'd ten
And handily sent our countrymen together, [days,
And yet we hear no tidings from the king;
Therefore we shall disperse ourselves: farewell.
Sal. Stay yet another day, thou trusty Welshman:
The king reposeth all his confidence in thee.
Cop. 'Tis thought the king is dead; we will not stay.
The bay-trees in our country are all wither'd
And meteores fright the fixed stars of heaven;
The pale-faced moon looks bloody on the earth
And lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change;
Rich men look sad and rumfants dance and leap,
The one in fear to lose what they enjoy,
The other to enjoy by rage and war:
These signs forerun the death or fall of kings.
Farewell: our countrymen are gone and fled,
As well assured Richard their king is dead. [Exit.
Sal. Ah, Richard, with the eyes of heavy mind
I see thy glory like a shooting star
Fall to the base earth from the firmament.
Thy sun sets weeping in the lowly west,
Witnessing storms to come, woes and mists:
Thy friends are fled to wait upon thy foes,
And crossly to thy good all fortune goes. [Exit.
Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies; And when they from thy bosom pluck a flower, Guard it, I pray you, with as much care, With much more vigil than your precocious flies, For 'tis more to charity; yet, to wash your blood From off my hands, here in the view of men I will unroll some causes of your deaths, You have misled a prince, a royal king, A happy gentleman in blood and lineaments, By you unhappied and disfigured clean: You have in manner with your sinful hours Made a divorce betwixt his queen and him, Broke the possession of a royal bed And stain'd the beauty of a fair queen's cheeks With tears drawn from her eyes by your foul wrongs. Myself, a prince by fortune of my birth, Near to the king in blood, and near in love Till you did make him misinterpret me, Have stoupt my neck under your injuries, And sigh'd my English breath in foreign clouds, Eating the bitter bread of banishment; Whilst you have fed upon my wealth, Dispark'd my parks and fell'd my forest woods, From my own windows torn my household coat, Razed out my imprese, leaving me no sign, Save men's opinions and my living blood, To show the world I am a gentleman. This and much more, more much more twice this, Condemns you to the death. See them deliver'd over To execution and the hand of death. Green. More welcome is the stroke of death to me Than Bolingbroke to England. Lords, farewell. Uncle, you say the queen is at your house; For God's sake, fairly let her be entreated: Tell her I sent to her my kind commendations, Take special care my greetings be deliver'd. Boling. A gentleman of mine have I dispatch'd With letters of your love to her at large. Uncle, come, lords, away; To fight with glendower and his complices: Awhile to work, and after holiday. Uncle. Welcome, my lord: how far off lies your power? Sal. Nor near nor farther off, my gracious lord, Than this weak arm: discomfort guides my tongue And bids me speak of nothing but despair. One day too late, I fear me, lord, Hath clouded all thy happy days on earth; O, call back yesterday, bid time return, And thou shalt have twelve thousand fighting men! To-day, to-day, unhappy day, too late, Overthrow's thy joys, friends, torture and thy state: For all the Welshmen, hearing this so wert dead, Are gone to Bolingbroke, dispersed and fled. A gentleman. Comfort, my liege: why looks your grace so pale? Sal. But now the blood of twenty thousand Did triumph in my face, and they are fled; And, till so much blood thither come again, Have I not reason to look pale and dead? All souls that will be safe fly from my side, For time hath set a blot upon my pride. Comfort, my liege: remember who you are. K. Rich. Is not the king's name twenty thousand names? Arm, arm, my name: a puny subject strikes At thy great glory. Look not to the ground, Ye favourites of a king: are we not high?
KING RICHARD III.

ACT III. SCENE III.

BOLINGBROKE.

Enter Scroop.

SCROOP. More health and happiness betide my liege Than can my care-tuned tongue deliver him! K. RICH. Mine ear is open, and my heart prepared: The more I hear, the less I know to unfold.

Say, is my kingdom lost? why, 'tis my care; And what loss is it to be rid of care?

STRIVES BOLINGBROKE to be as great as we? Greater he shall not be: if he serve God, We'll serve him too, and be his fellow so: Revolve but subjects that we cannot lend; They break their faith to God as well as us:

Cry woe, destruction, ruin and decay; The worst is death, and death will have his day.

SCROOP. Glad am I that your highness is so prompt To bear the tidings of calamity,

Like an unseasonable stormy day, Which makes the silver rivers drown their shores, As if the world were all dissolved to tears, So high above his limits swells the rage Of Bolingbroke, covering your fearful land With hard bright steel and hearts harder than steel. White-beards have arm'd their thin and hairless soul.

Against thy majesty: boys, with women's voices, Strive to speak big and clap their female joints In stiff unwieldy arms against thy crown: Thy very headsmen learn to bend their bows Of double-fatal yew against thy state: Yet, distract, women manage rusty bills Against thy seat: both young and old rebel, And all goes worse than I have power to tell. [Ill.

K. RICH. Too well, too well thou tell'st a tale so bitter Where is the Earl of Wiltshire? where is Bagot? What is become of Busby? where is Green? That they have let the dangerous enemy Measure our confines with such peaceful steps? If we prevail, their heads shall pay for it: I warrant they have made peace with Bolingbroke.

SCROOP. Peace have they made with him indeed, my lord.

K. RICH. O villains, vipers, damn'd without reason, Dogs, easily won to fawn on any man! Heart! Snakes, in my heart-blood warm'd, that sting my Three Judases, each one thrice worse than Judas! Would they make peace? terrible hell make war Upon their spotted souls for this offence! SCROOP. Sweet love, I see, changeing his property. Turns to the sorest and most deadly hate: Again uncurse their souls; their peace is made With heads, and not with hands: those whom you curse Have felt the worst of death's destroying wound And dog, the low, graven in the hollow ground.

Ann. Is Bushy, Green, and the Earl of Wiltshire dead?

SCROOP. Ay, all of them at Bristol lost their heads.

Ann. Where is the duke my father with his power? [Speak.

K. RICH. No matter where: of comfort no man Let's talk of graves, of worms and epitaphs; Make dust our paper and with rainy eyes Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth, Let's choose executors and talk of wills; And yet not so, for what can we bequeath Save for disposed shares to the commons? Our lands, our lives and all are Bolingbroke's, and nothing can we call our own but death And that small model of the barren earth Which serves as paste and cover to our bones. For God's sake, let us sit upon the ground And let the winds rake us. How some have been deposed; some slain in war; Some haunted by the ghosts they have deposed; Some poison'd by their wives; some sleeping kill'd; All murder'd: for within the hollow crown That royal coat of many mortal heads it keeps Death his court and there the antic sits, Scolling his state and grinning at his pomp, Allowing him a breath, a little scene, To monopolize, be fear'd and kill with looks, Insinuing him with self and vain conceit, As if this flesh which walks about our life Were brass impregnable, and humour'd thus Comes at the last and with a little pin Bore's through his castle wall, and farewell king! Cover your heads and mock not flesh and blood With solemn reverence: throw away respect, Tradition and ceremony hung about the brow. For you have but mistook me all this while: I live with bread like you, feel want, Taste grief, need friends: subjected thus, How can you say to me, I am a king? For. My lord, wise men ne'er sit and wait their but presently prevent the ways to wait. [woes. To fear the foe, since fear oppresseth strength, Gives in your weakness strength unto your foe, And so your follies fight against yourself. Fear, and be slain; no worse can come to fight: And fight and die is death destroying death; Where fearing dying pays death servile breath; And to the last. Amur. My father hath a power; inquire of him, And learn to make a body of a limb.

K. RICH. Thou chidest me well: proud Bolingbroke, I come To change blows with thee for thy day of doom. This age's fit of fear is over-blown; An easy task it is to win our own. Say, Scroop, where lies our uncle with his power? Speak sweetly, man, although thy looks be sour. SCROOP. Men judge by the complexion of the sky The state and inclination of the day; So may you by my dull and heavy eye. My tongue hath but a heavier tale to say. I play the torturer, by small and small To lengthen out the worst that must be spoken: Your uncle York is joined with Bolingbroke, And all your northern castles yielded up, And all the southern gentlemen in arms Upon his party.

K. RICH. Thou hast said enough. Beshrew thee, cousin, which didst lead me forth To Amnéville.

Of that sweet way I was in to despair! What say you now? what comfort have we now? By heaven, I'll hate him everlastingly That bids me be of comfort any more. Go to Flint castle: there I'll pine away; A king, woe'se slave, shall kingly woe obey. That power I have, discharge: and let them go To ear the land that hath some hope to grow, For I have none: let no man speak again To alter this, for counsel is but vain.

Ann. My liege, one word.

K. RICH. He does me double wrong That wounds me with the tatteries of his tongue. Discharge my followers; let them hence away. From Richard's night to Bolingbroke's fair day.
York. It would beseech the Lord Northumberland
To say ' King Richard? : alack the heavy day!
When such a sacred king should hide his head.
My poor mistake mistakes; only to be brief,
Left I his title out.
York. The time hath been,
Would you have been so brief with him, he would Have been so brief with you, to shorten you,
For taking so the head, your whole head's length.
Boling. Why take not, uncle, further than you
Lest you mistake the heavens are o'er our heads.
Boling. I know it, uncle, and oppose not myself Against their will. But who comes here?

Enter Percy.

Welcome, Harry: what will not this castle yield?
Percy. The castle royally is manned, my lord,
Against thine entrance.
Boling. Royally! Why, if it contains no king?
Percy. Yes, my good lord, it doth contain a king: King Richard lies Within the limits of you line and stone;
And with him are the Lord Aumerle, Lord Salisbury,
Sir Stephen Scroop, besides a clergyman
Of the reverence: when, I cannot learn.
North. O, belike it is the Bishop of Carlisle.
Boling. Noble lords,
Go to the rude ribs of that ancient castle;
Through brazzen trumpet send the breath of parley
Into his rain'd ears, and thus deliver:
Henry Bolingbroke.
On both his knees doth kiss King Richard's hand
And sends allegiance and true faith of heart
To his most royal person, hither come
Even at his feet to lay my arms and power,
Provided that my banishment repeal'd
And lands restored again be freely granted:
If not, I'll use the advantage of my power
And lay the summer's dust with showers of blood
Ruin'd from the wounds of slaughter'd Englishmen:
The which, how far from the mind of Bolingbroke
It is, such crimson tempest should bedrench
The fair green lap of Bolingbroke's land,
My stoop'd duty tenderly shall show
Go, signify as much, while here we march
Upon the grassy carpet of this plain.
Let's march without the noise of threatening drum,
That from this castle's tower'd battlements
Our fair appointments may be well perceived.
Methinks King Richard himself should meet
With no less terror than the elements
Of fire and water, when their thundering shock
At meeting tears the cloudy checks of heaven.
Be he the fire, I'll be the yielding water;
The rage be his, whilst on the earth I rain
My waters: on the earth, and not on him.
March on, and mark King Richard how he looks.

Parle without, and answer within. Then a flourish. Enter the Duke, the Earl of Northumberland, the Bishop of Carlisle, Aumerle, Scroop, and Salisbury.

See, see, King Richard doth himself appear,
As doth the blushing discontented sun
From out the fiery portal of the east.
When he perceives the envious clouds are bent
To dim his glory and to stain the track
Of his bright passage to the skies of heaven
It looks like a king: behold his eye,
As bright as is the eagle's, lightens forth
Controlling majesty; alack, alack, for woe,
That any harm should stain so fair a show! [stood
K. Rich. We are amazed; and thus long have we
To watch the fearful bending of thy knee. [To North.
Because we thought on'th rough lawful king:
And if we be, how dare thy joints forget
To pay their awful duty to our presence?
If we be not, show us the hand of God.
That hath dispossessed us of our inheritance;
For we well know, no hand of blood and bone
Can gripe the sacred handle of our sceptre,
Unless he do profane, steal, or usurp.
And though you think that all, as you have done,
Have torn their souls by turning them from us,
And we were barren and bear no issue;
Yet know, my master, God omnipotent,
Is muster'd in his clouds on our behalf
Armies of pestilence; and they shall strike
Your children yet unborn and unbegot,
That lift your vassal hands against my head
And thrust the glory of my precious crown
Till Bolingbroke—for void methinks he stands—
That every stride he makes upon my land
Is dangerous treason: he is come to open
The purple testament of bleeding war;
But ere the crown he looks for live in peace.
Ten thousand bloody crowned of mothers' sons
Shall ill become the flower of England's face.
Change the complexion of her maid-pale peace
To scarlet indignation and bedew
Her pastures' grass with faithful English blood.
North. The king of heaven forbid our lord the king
Should so much as live in this land.
Be rush'd upon! Thy thrice noble cousin,
Harry Bolingbroke doth humbly kiss thy hand;
And by the honourable tomb he swears,
That stands upon your royal grand sire's bones,
And by the royalties of both your bloods,
Currents that spring from one most gracious head,
And by the buried hand of warlike Gaunt,
And by the worth and honour of himself,
Comprising all that may be sworn or said,
His coming hither hath no further scope
Than for his lineal royalties and to beg
Enfranchisement immediate on his knees:
Which on thy royal party granted once,
His glittering arms he will command to rust,
His barred steeds to stables, and his heart
To faithful service of your majesty.
This swears he, as he is a prince, is just;
And, as I am a gentleman, I credit him.
[burns:

K. Rich. Northumberland doth honor the king.
His noble cousin is right welcome hither;
And all the number of his fair demands
Shall be accomplish'd without contradiction:
With all the gracious utterance thou hast
Speak to his gentle hearing kind commands.
We do debase ourselves, cousin, do we not.

[To Aumerle.

To look so poorly and to speak so fair?
Shall we call back Northumberland, and send Defiance to the traitor, and so die?

[words
Amer. No, good my lord: let's fight with gentle Till time lend friends and friends their helpful words
[june.

K. Rich. O God, O God! that e'er this tongue of
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On you proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! ' O that I were as great
As is my grief, or lesser than my name!
Or that I could forget what I have been,
Or not remember what I must be now!
[lest.
Swell'st thou, proud heart? ' I'll give thee scope to Shake foes have scope to beat both thee and me.

Amer. Northumberland comes back from Boling-broke:

[ submits

K. Rich. What must the king do now? must he
The king shall do it: must he be deposed?
The king shall be contented: must he lose
The name of king? o' God's name, let it go:
I'll give my jewels for a set of beads,
My gorgeous palace for a hermitage,
ACT III. KING RICHARD II. SCENE IV.

My gay apparel for an almsman's gown,
My figured gobslets for a dish of wood,
My sceptre for a palmer's walking-staff,
My subjects for a pair of carved saints
And my large kingdom for a little grave;
A little little grave, an obscure grave:
Or I'll be buried in the king's highway,
Some way of common trade, where subjects' feet
May hourly trample on their sovereign's head;
For on my heart they tread now whilst I live;
And buried once, why not upon my head?
Aumerle, thou weep'st, my tender-hearted cousin! We'll make foul weather with despised tears;
Our sighs and they shall lodge the summer corn,
And make a dearth in this revolting land.
Or shall we play the wantons with our woes,
And make some sport with shedding tears?
As thus, to drop them still upon one place,
Till they have fetched us a pair of graves
Within the earth; and, therein laid,—there lies
Two kinsmen digg'd their graves with weeping eyes.
Would not this ill do well?—Well, well, I see
I talk boldly, and you haggle boldly.
Most mighty prince, my Lord Northumberland,
What says King Bolingbroke? will his majesty
Give Richard leave to live till Richard die?
You make a leg, and Bolingbroke says ay.
North. My lord, in the base court he doth attend
To call his rank; that is pass'd away.
K. Rich. Down, down, I come; like glistening Phaethon, Wanting the manage of unruly jades. [base.
In the base court?—Base court, where kings grow
To come at traitors' calls and do them grace.
In the base court?—Come down! Down, court! down, king!
For night-owls shriek where mounting larks should sing. [Exit from above.

North. Sorrow and grief of heart
Makes him speak fondly, like a frantic man:
Yet he is come.

Enter King Richard and his Attendants below.

Boling. Stand all apart,
And show fair duty to his majesty. [He kneels down.

My gracious lord,—[kneel
K. Rich. Fair cousin, you debase your princely
To make the base earth proud with kissing it:
Me rather had my heart might feel your love
Than my unpleased eye see your courtesy.
Up, cousin, up; your heart is up, I know.
This high estate, although your knee be low.
Boling. My gracious lord, I come but for mine own,
[and all.
K. Rich. Your own is yours, and I am yours.
Boling. So far be mine, my most redoubted lord,
As my true service shall deserve your love. [have,
K. Rich. Well you deserve: they well deserve
To that know the strong'st and surest way to get.
Uncle, give me your hands: now, dry your eyes;
Tears show their love, but want their remedies.
Cousin, I am too young to be your father,
Though you are old enough to be my heir.
What you will have, I'll give, and willing too;
For do we must what force will have us do.
Set on towards London, cousin, is it so?
Boling. Yea, my good lord.

Enter the Queen and two Ladies.

Queen. What sport shall we devise here in this garden?
To drive away the heavy thought of care? [den,
Lady. Madam, we'll play at bowls. [rubs,
Queen. 'Twill make me think the world is full of
And that my fortune runs against the bias.
Lady. Madam, we'll dance.
Queen. Mousetrap can keep no measure in delight,
When my poor heart no measure keeps in grief:
Therefore, no dancing, girl; some other sport.
Lady. Madam, we'll tell tales.
Queen. Of sorrow or of joy?
Lady. Of either, madam.
Queen. Of neither, girl:
For it of joy, being altogether wanting,
It doth remember me the more of sorrow;
Or if of grief, being altogether had,
It adds more sorrow to my want of joy:
For what I have I need not to repeat;
And what I want it bodes not to complain.
Lady. Madam, I'll sing.
Queen. 'Tis well that thou hast cause;
But thou shouldst please me better, wouldst thou sing?
Lady. I could weep, madam, would it do you joy?
Queen. And I could sing, would weeping move me
And never borrow any tear of thee. [good,

Enter a Gardener, and two Servants.

But stay, here come the gardeners:
Let's step into the shadow of these trees.
Queen and Ladies retire.

Gard. Go, bind thou up yon dapping angriocks,
Which, like unruly children, make their sighs
Stoop with oppression of their prodigious weight.
Give some supportance to the bending twigs,
To them, and like an executioner,
Cut off the heads of too fast growing sprays,
That look too fusty in our commonwealth;
All must be even in our government.
You thus employ'd, I will go root away
The noisome weeds, which without profit suck
The soil's fertility from wholesome flowers.
Serr. Why should we in the compass of a pale
Keep law and form and due proportion,
Showing, as in a model, our firm estate,
When our sea-walled garden, the whole land,
Is full of weeds, her fairest flowers choked up,
Her fruit-trees all unpruned, her hedges ruin'd,
Her knots disorder'd and her wholesome herbs
Swarming with caterpillars?
Gard. Hold thy peace:
He that hath suffer'd this disorder'd spring
Hath now himself met with the fall of leaf:
The weeds which his broad-spread leaves did shelter,
That second in eating him to hold him up,
Are pluck'd up root and all by Bolingbroke.
I mean the Earl of Wiltshire, Bushy, Green.
Serr. What, are they dead?

Gard. They are; and Bolingbroke
Hath seiz'd the wasteful king. O, what pity is it
That he had not so trimm'd and dress'd his land
As we this garden? We at time of year
Do wound the bark, the skin of our fruit-trees,
Lest, being over-prond in sap and blood,
With too much riches it confound itself;
Had he done so to great and growing men,
They might have lived to bear and he to taste
Their fruits of duty: superfluous branches
We lop away, that the bearing buds may live:
Had he done so, himself had borne the crown,
Which waste of idle hours hath quite thrown down.
Serr. What, think you then the king shall be dispose Gard. Depress'd he is already, and deposed:

'Tis doubtful he will be: letters came last night.
To a dear friend of the good Duke of York's,
That tell black tidings.

Queen. O, I am press'd to death through want of speaking!

Thou old harlot's likeness, set to dress this garden,
How dares thy harsh rude tongue sound this unpleasing news?

What Eve, what serpent, hast suggested thee
To make a second fall of cursed man?

Why dost thou say King Richard is depos'd?
Darest thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfall? Say, where, when, and how,
Canst thou by this ill tidings? speak, thou wretch.

Gard. Pardon me, madam; little joy have I
To breathe this news; yet what I say is true.

King Richard, he is in the mighty hold
Of Bolingbroke: their fortunes both are weigh'd:
in your lord's scale is nothing but himself,
And some few vanities that make him light;
But in the balance of great Bolingbroke,
Besides himself, are all the English peers,
And with that odds he weighs King Richard down.

Post you to London, and you will find it so;
I speak no more than every one doth know.

Queen. Nimble mischiefe, that art so light of foot,
Doth not the engine of the garden grow?

And am I last that knows it? O, thou think'st
To serve me last, that I may longest keep Thy sorrow in my breast. Come, ladies, go,
To meet at London London's king in woe.

What, was I born to this, that my sad look
Should grace the triumph of great Bolingbroke?

Gardener, for telling me these news of woe,
Pray God the plants thou graft'st may never grow.

[Exeunt Queen and Ladies.

Gard. Poor queen! so that thy state might be no worse,
I would my skill were subject to thy curse.
Here did she fall a tear; here in this place
I'll set a bank of rue, sour herb of grace;
Rue, even for ruth, here shortly shall be seen,
In the remembrance of a weeping queen. [Exeunt.
To all his lands and signories: when he’s returned,
Against Ambroole we will enforce his trial.

Car. That honourable day shall ne’er be seen.
Many a time hath banish’d Norfolk fought
For true Christian Christ,
Streaming the ensign of the Christian cross
Against black pagans, Turks, and Saracens;
And toil’d with works of war, retired himself
To Italy; and there at Venice gave
His body to that pleasant country’s earth,
And his pure soul unto his captain Christ,
Under whose colours he had fought so long.

Boling. Why, bishop, is Norfolk dead?

Car. As surely as I live, my lord.

Boling. Sweet peace conduct his sweet soul to the bosom
Of good old Abraham! Lords appellauds,
Your differences shall all rest under gage
Till we assign you to your days of trial.

Enter York, attended.

York. Great Duke of Lancaster, I come to thee
From plume-pluck’d Richard; with a willing soul
Adopts thee heir, and his high sceptre yields
To the possession of thy royal hand:
Ascend his throne, descending now from him;
And long live Henry, fourth of that name!

Boling. In God’s name, I’ll ascend the regal
Chair, but of the royal title, I’tis thou.

York. I’ll speak the truth.

Boling. And to best becom inge me to speak the truth.
Would God that any in this noble presence
Were en out to be upright judge
Of noble Richard: then true noblesse would Learn him forbearance from so false a wrong.
What subject can give sentence on his king?
And who sits here that is not Richard’s subject?
Thieves are not judged but they are to hear,
Although apparent guilt be seen in them;
And shall the figure of God’s majesty,
His captain, steward, deputy-elect,
Anointed, crowned, planted many years,
Be judged by subject and inferior breath,
And he himself not present? O, for end it, God,
That in a Christian climate souls refined
Should shew so heinous, black, obscene a deed!
I speak to subjects and a subject acts,
Still’d up by God, thus boldly for his king.
My Lord of Hereford here, whom you call king,
Is a foul traitor to proud Hereford’s king:
And if you crown him, let me prophesy;
The blood of English shall mantle the ground,
And subduing groan for this foul act;
Peace shall go sleep with Turks and mandrels,
And in this seat of peace tumultuous wars
Shall kin with kin and kind with kind confound,
Disorder, horror, tear and mutiny
Shall here inhabit, and this land be call’d
The bloody of Gotha and dead men’s skulls.
O, if you raise this house against this house,
It will the weakest division prove
That ever fell upon this cursed earth.
Prevent it, resist it, let it not be so,
Lest child, child’s children, cry against you ‘woe!’

North. Well have you argued, sir; and, for your
Of capital treason, the arrest you hear.

York. If thy Lord of Westminster, be it your charge
To keep him safely till his day of trial.
May it please you, lords, to grant the commons’ suit.

Boling. Fetch litter Richard, that in common
Is for his surrender; so we shall proceed
Without suspicion.

York. I will be his conduct. [Exit.]

Boling. Lords, you that here are under our arrest,
Procure your sueurities for your days of answer.
Little are we beholding to your love,
And little look’d for at your helping hands.

Re-enter York, with Richard, and Officers bearing the regalia.

K. Rich. Alack, why and I sent for to a king,
Before I have shook off the regal thoughts
Wherewith I reign’d? I hardly yet have learn’d
To insinuate, flatter, bow, and bend my limbs:
Give sorrow leave awhile to tutor me
To this submission. Yet I will remember
The favours of these men: were they not mine?
Did they not solemnly swear faithfully to me?
So Judas did to Christ: but he, in twelve, [none.
Found truth in all but one; I, in twelve thousand,
God save the king! Will no man say amen?
Am I both priest and clerk? well then, amen.
God save the king! although I be not he;
And yet, when, if heaven doth help him me.
To do what service am I sent for hither?
York. To do that office of thine own good will
Which tired majesty did make thee offer,
The resignation of thy state and crown
To Henry Bolingbroke.

K. Rich. Heah me the crown. Here, cousin, seize Here cousin: [Seizes crown]
On this side your hand, and on that side yours.
Now is this golden crown like a deep well
That owes two buckets, filling one another,
The emptier ever dancing in the air.

Boling. Of your care set up do not pluck my cares
My care is loss of care, by old care done;
Your care is gain of care, by new care won:
The cares I give I have, though given away;
They tend the crown, yet still with me they stay.

K. Rich. Ay, no; no, ay; for I must nothing be;
Therefore no no, for I resign to thee.
Now mark me, how I will undo myself:
I give this heavy weight from off my head
And this unwisely sceptre from my hand,
The price of worldly swelling heart;
With mine own tears I wash away my balm,
With mine own hands I give away my crown,
With mine own tongue I deny my sacred state,
With mine own breath release all duty’s rites:
All pomp and majesty I do forswear;
My manners, realm, revenue I forgo;
My acts, decrees, and statutes I deny:
God pardon all oaths that are broke to me!
God keep all vows unbroke that swear to thee!
Make me, that nothing have, with nothing grieved,
And thou with all pleased, that hast all achieved!
Long may your cares of care, of care, live to sit,
And soon lie Richard in an earthly pit!
God save King Harry, unking’d Richard says,
And send him many years of sunshine days!

York. No more, but that you read
These accusations and these grievous crimes
Committed by your person and your followers
Against the state and profit of this land;
That, by confessing them, the souls of men
May deem that you are worthily depos’d.

K. Rich. Must I do so? and must I ravel out
My weens to folly? Get thee to Cumberland,
If thy offences were upon record.
Would it not shame thee in so fair a troop
To read a lecture of them? If thou wouldst,
There shouldst thou find one heinous article,
Containing the deposing of a king

310
And cracking the strong warrant of an oath,
Mark'd with a blot, damn'd in the book of heaven:
Nay, all of you that stand and look upon,
Whist! that my wretchedness doth halt myself,
Though some of you with Pilate wash your hands
Showing an outward ply: yet you Pilates
Have here deliver'd me to my sour cross,
And water cannot wash away your sin.

North. My lord, dispatch: read o'er these articles.
K. Rich. Mine eyes are full of tears, I cannot see:
And yet salt water blinds them not so much
But they can see a sort of traitors here.
Nay, if I turn mine eyes upon myself,
I find myself a traitor with the rest;
For I have given here my soul's consent
To undeck the pompous body of a king;
Made glory base and sovereignty a slave,
Proud majesty a subject, state a peasant.

North. My lord,—[man, No lord of thine, thou haught insulting
Nor no man's lord: I have no name, no title,
No, not that name was given me at the font;
But 'tis usurp'd: strike the heavy day,
That I have worn so many winters out,
And know not now what name to call myself!
O that I were a mockery king of snow,
Standing before the sun of Bolingbroke,
To melt myself away in water-drops!
Good king, great king, and yet not greatly good,
An if my word be stierling yet in England,
Let it command a mirror hither straight,
That it may show me what a face I have,
Since it is bankrupt of his majesty.

Boling. Go some of you and fetch a looking-glass.

North. Read o'er this paper while the glass doth come.
K. Rich. Fiend, thou torment'st me ere I come to hell!
Boling. Urge it no more, my Lord Northumber-land.
North. The commons will not then be satisfied.
K. Rich. They shall be satisfied: I'll read enough,
When I do see the very book indeed
Where all my sins are writ, and that's myself.

Re-enter Attendant, with a glass.

Give me the glass, and therein will I read,
No deeper wrinkles yet? hath sorrow struck
So many blows upon this face of mine,
And made no deeper wounds? O flattering glass,
Like to my followers in prosperity,
Thou dost beguile me: Was this face the face
That every day under his household roof
Did keep ten thousand men? was this the face
That, like the sun, did make beholders wink?

Was this the face that faced so many follies,
And was at last out-faced by Bolingbroke?
A brittle glory shineth in this face:
As brittle as the glory is the face;
That swells the glass against the ground.
For there it is, crack'd in a hundred shivers.
Mark, silent king, the moral of this sport,
How soon my sorrow hath destroy'd my face.
Boling. The shadow of my sorrow hath destroy'd
The shadow of your face.
K. Rich. Say that again.
The shadow of my sorrow! ah! let's see:
'Tis very true, my grief lies all within;
And these external manners of laments
Are merely shadows to the unseen grief.
That swells with silence in the tortured soul:
There lies the sorrow, and in that I think thee, king,
For thy great bounty, that not only givest
Me cause to wait but teachest me the way
How to lament the cause. I'll beg one boon,
And then be gone and trouble you no more.
Shall I obtain it?
Boling. Name it, fair cousin.
K. Rich. I am greater than a king:
For when I was a king, my flatterers
Were then but subjects; being now a subject,
I have a king here to my flatterer.
Being so great, I have no need to beg.
Boling. Yet ask.
K. Rich. And shall I have?
Boling. You shall.
K. Rich. Then give me leave to go.
Boling. Whiter?
K. Rich. Whither you will, so I were from your Boling. Go, some of you convey him to the Tower.
K. Rich. O, good! convey? conveyers are you all,
That rise thus him by a true king's fall.
[Exit King Richard, some Lords, and a Guard.
Boling. On Wednesday next we solemnly set down
Our coronation: lords, prepare yourselves.
[Exeunt all except the Bishop of Carlisle, the Abbot of Westminster, and Amner.
Abbot. A woeful pageant have we here beheld.
Car. The woe's to come; the children yet unbom
Shall feel this day as sharp to them as thorn.
Ayea. You holy clergy-men, is there no plot
To rid the realm of this pernicious blot?
Abbot. My lord,
Before I freely speak my mind herein,
You shall not only take the sacrament
To curb mine intents, but also to effect
Whatever I shall happen to devise.
I see your brows are full of discontent.
Your hearts of sorrow and you eyes of tears:
Come home with me to supper; and I'll lay
A plot shall show us all a merry day.
[Exeunt.

ACT V.

SCENE I.—London. A street leading to the Tower.

Enter Queen and Ladies.

Queen. This way the king will come; this is the
To Julius Caesar's ill-erected tower,
[way
To whose flint bosom my condemned lord
Is doom'd a prisoner by proud Bolingbroke:
Hear let us rest, if this rebellious earth
Have any resting for her true king's queen.

Enter Richard and Guard.

But soft, but see, or rather do not see,
My fair rose wither: yet look up, behold,
That you in pity may dissolve to dwell,
And wash him fresh again with true-love tears.

Ah, thou, the model where old Troy did stand,
Thou map of honour, thou King Richard's tomb,
And not King Richard; thou most beauteous inn,
Why should hard-favour'd grief be lodged in thee,
When triumph is become an allehouse guest?
[so
K. Rich. Join not with grief, fair woman, do not
To make my end too sudden: learn, good soul,
To think our former state a happy dream;
From which awaked, the truth of what we are
Shows us but this: I am sworn brother, sweet,
To grim Necessity, and he and I
Will keep a league till death. If thee to France
And cloister thee in some religious house:
Our holy lives must win a new world's crown,
Which our profane hours here have stricken down.

331
ACT V.  KING RICHARD II.  SCENE II.

Queen. What, is my Richard both in shape and mind [posed]
Transfixed? Dull and weaken't? hath Bolingbroke de-
The love intellect? hath he been in thy heart? The lion dying thrusteth forth his paw, And wounds the earth, if nothing else, with rage To be o'erpowers'd; and wilt thou, pupil-like, Take thy correction mildly, kiss the rod, And fawn on rage with base humility, Which art a lion and a king of beasts? [Beasts, K. Rich. A king of beasts, indeed; if angh but I had been still a happy king of men. [France:] Good sometime queen, prepare thee hence for Think I am dead and that even here thou bestowest, As from the deathbed, as from the grave, I leave. In winter's tedious nights sit by the fire With good old folks and let them tell thee tales Of woeful ages long ago betid; And ere thou bid good night, to quit their griefs, Tell them the lamentable tale of me And send the hearers weeping to their beds: For why, the senseless brats will sympathize The heavy accent of thy moving tongue And in compassion weep the fire out; And some will mourn in ashes, some coal-black, For the deposing of a rightful king.

Enter Northumberland and others.

North. My lord, the mind of Bolingbroke is changed;
You must to Pomfret, not unto the Tower.
And madam, therein is order taken for: With all swift speed you must away to France.

K. Rich. Northumberland, thou ladder where-withal The mounting Bolingbroke ascends my throne, The time shall not be many hours of age More than it is ere foul sin gathering head Shall break into corruption: thou shalt think, Though he divide the realm and give thee half, It is too little, helping him to all: And he shall think that thou, which know'st the way To plant unrightful kings, wilt know again, Being ne'er so little urged, another way To pluck him headlong from the usurped throne, The love of wicked men converts to fear; That fear to hate, and hate turns one or both To worthy danger and deserved death.

North. My guilt be on my head, and there an end. Take leave and part; for you must part forthwith.

K. Rich. Doubly divorced! Bad men, you violate A tyrant's page, 'twixt my crown and me, And then betwixt me and my married wife. Let me un kiss the oath 'twixt thee and me; And yet not so, for with a kiss 't was made. Part us, Northumberland; I towards the north, Where shivering cold and sickness plies the chine; My wife to Pomfret: from whence she set forth in pomp, She came adorned hither like sweet May, Sent back like Hallowmas or short'st of day. Queen. And must we be divided? must we part?

K. Rich. Ay, hand from hand, my love, and heart from heart. Queen. Banish us both and send the king with me. North. That were some love but little policy. Queen. Then whither he goes, thether let me go. K. Rich. So two, together weeping, make one woe. Weep thou for me in France, I for thee here; Better far off than near, be ne'er the near. Go, come weeping with sighs; I mine with groans. Queen. So longest way shall have the longest means.

K. Rich. Twice for one step I'll groan, the way being short, And pour the way out with a heavy heart. Come, come, the wrong sorrow let's be brief, Since, wedding it, there is such length in grief. One kiss shall stop our mouths, and dully part; Thus give I mine, and thus take I thy heart. Queen. Give me mine own again; 'twere no good To take on me to keep and kill thy heart. [part So, now I have mine own again, be gone, That I may strive to kill it with a groan. [delay: K. Rich. We make wow wanton with this fool Once more, adieu; the rest let sorrow say. [Exit. SCENE II. — The Duke of York's palace. Enter York and his Duchess.

York. My lord, you told me you would tell the rest, When weeping made you break the story off, Our fair queen, before she was come into London. York. Where did I leave? Duchess. At that sad stop, my lord, Where rude misgovern'd hands from windows' tops Shrew dust and rubbish on King Richard's head. York. Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke, Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed Which his aspiring rider seem'd to know, With slow but stately pace kept on his course, Whilst all tongues cried 'God save thee, Bolingbroke!' You would have thought the very windows spake, So many greedy looks of you and old Through those many windows started their desiring eyes Upon his visage, and that all the walls With pointed imagery had said at once 'Jesu preserve thee! welcome, Bolingbroke!' Whilst he, from the one side to the other turning, Bareheaded, lower than his proud steed's neck, Bless'd them thus: 'I thank you, countrymen.' And thus still doing, thus he pass'd along.

Duchess. Alack, poor Richard! where rode the whist? York. As in a theatre, the eyes of men, After a well-graced actor leaves the stage, Are idly bent on him that enters next, Thinking his prattle to be tedious; Even so, or with much more contempt, men's eyes Did scowl on gentle Richard; no man cried 'God save him!' No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home: But dust was thrown upon his sacred head; Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off. His face still combats with tears and smiles, The ladviges of his grief and patience, That had not God, for some strong purpose, steel'd The hearts of men, they must perforce have melt-ed And barb'd them with desire, with rage, with snow. But heaven hath a hand in these events, To whose high will we bound our calm contents. To Bolingbroke are we sworn subjects now, Whose state and honour I for aye allow. Duchess. Here comes my son Aumerle.

York. Amer. Aumerle that was; But that is lost for being Richard's friend. And madam, you must call him Rutland now: I am in parliament pledge for his truth And lasting fealty to the new made king.

Enter Aumerle.

Duchess. Welcome, my son; who are the violets now That strew the green lap of the new come spring? Aum. Madam, I know not, nor I greatly care not; God knows I had as he be none as one. [time, York. Well, hear you well in this new spring of Lest you be cropp'd before you come to prime. What news from Oxford? hold those justs and tri- umphs? Aum. For aught I know, my lord, they do. York. You will be there, I know. Aum. If God prevent not, I purpose so. [poses York. What seal is that? that sealed things without thy seal? Look'st thou pale? let me see the writing.
Enter Bolingbroke, Percy, and other Lords.

Boling. Can no man tell me of my unladylike son? Is it full three months since I did see him last? If any plague hang over us, 'tis he. I would to God, my lords, he might be found! Inquire at London, amongst the taverns there, for there, by the daily report of frequent, With unrestrained loose companions, Even such, they say, as stand in narrow lanes, And eat our watch, and rob our passengers, Which he, young Wanpton and effeminate boy, Takes on the point of honour to support So dissolve a crew.

Prince. Percy. My lord, some two days since I saw the And told him of those triumphs held at Oxford, Boling. And what said the gallant? Percy. His answer was, he would unto the stews, And from the commonest creature pluck a glove, And wear it as a favour; and with that He would unhorse the busiest challenger. Both Boling. As dissolve as desperate; yet through I see some sparks of better hope, which elder years May happily bring forth. But who comes here?

Enter Aumerle.

Aum. Where is the king? Boling. What means our cousin, that he stares and So wildly? Aum. God save your grace! I do beseech your To have some conference with your grace alone. Boling. Withdraw yourselves, and leave us here alone.

What is the matter with our cousin now? Aum. For ever may my knees grow to the earth, My tongue cleave to my roof within my mouth, Unless a pardon ere I rise or speak. Boling. Intended or committed was this fault? If on the first, how Heinously 'er it be To win thy atter-love I pardon thee. Key, Aum. Then give me leave that I may turn the That no man enter till my tale be done. Boling. Have thy desire. York. [Within] My liege, beware: look to thyself; Thou hast by traitor's hand thy peace. Boling. Villain, I'll make thee safe. [Drawing.] Stay thy revengeful hand; thou last no cause to fear. [King: York. [Within] Open the door, secure, fool-hardy Shall I for love speak treason to thy face? Open the door, or I will break it open.

Enter York.

Boling. What is the matter, uncle? speak; Recover breath; tell us how near is danger, That we may arm us to encounter it. Know York. Peruse this writing here, and thou shalt The treason that my haste forsaught me show. Aum. Remember, as thou read'st, thy promise I do repent me; read not my name there; [pass'd] My heart is not confederate with my hand. York. It was, villain, ere thy hand did set it down. I tore it from the traitor's bosom, king; Fear, and not love, beasts his persistence; Forget to pity him, lest thy pity prove A serpent that will sting thee to the heart. Boling. O heinous, strong and bold conspiracy! O loyal father of a treacherous son! Thou she'rc, immaculate and silver fountain, From whence this stream through muddy passages Hath held his current and defiled himself! Thy overflow of good converts to bad, And thy abundant goodness shall excuse This deadly blot in thy digressing son. York. So shall my virtue be his view's bawl; And he shall spend mine honour with his shame,
ACT V.

KING RICHARD II.

SCENE V.

As thriftless sons their scraping fathers' gold.
Mine honour lives when his dishonour dies,
Or my shamed life in his dishonour lies;
Thus kill'st me in his life; giving him breath,
The traitor lives, the true man's put to death.
Duchess. That doth not but do, my liege! for God's sake, let me in.
Boling. What shrill-voiced supplicant makes this eager cry?
Duch. A woman, and thy aunt, great king; 'tis I.
Speak with me, pity me, open the door.
A beggar's legs that never begg'd before.
Boling. Our scene is alter'd from a serious thing,
And now changed to 'The Beggar and the King,'
My dangerous cousin, let your mother in:
I know she is come to pray for your soul sin.
York. If thou do pardon, whosoever pray,
More sins for this forgiveness prosper may.
This fester'd joint cut off, the rest rest sound;
This let alone will all the rest confound.

Enter Duchess.
Duch. O king, believe not this hard-hearted man!
Love loving not itself none other can.

Anna. Unto my mother's prayers I bend my knee.
Duch. Against them both my true joints bend'd
I'll mayst thou thrive, if thou grant my grace! [Bows.

Pleas he in earnest? look upon his face:
His eyes do drop no tears, his prayers are in jest;
His words come from his mouth, ours from our breast.
He prays but faintly and would be denied:
We pray with heart and soul and all beside:
His weary joints would gladly rise, I know;
Our knees shall kneel till to the ground they grow:
His prayers are full of false hypocrisy;
Ours of true zeal and deep integrity.
Our prayer doth like him let them have
That mercy which true prayer ought to have.
Boling. Good aunt, stand up.
Duch. Nay, do not say, 'stand up';
Say 'pardon' first, and afterwards 'stand up.'
May I were thy nurse, thy tongue to teach,
Pardon should be the first word of thy speech.
I never long'd to hear a word till now;
Say 'pardon,' king; let pity teach thee how:
The word is short, but not so short as sweet;
No word like 'pardon' for kings months most meet.
York. Speak it in French, king; say, 'pardon me.
Duch. Dost thou teach pardon pardon to destroy?
Ah, my sour husband, my hard-hearted lord,
That set'st the word itself against the word!
Speak 'pardon' as it's current in our land;
The chopping French we do not understand.
Thine eye begins to speak; set thy tongue there;
Or in thy piteous heart plant thy thought there;
That hearing how our plaints and prayers do pierce,
Pity may move thee 'pardon' to rehearse.
Boling. Good aunt, stand up.
Duch. I do not see to stand;
Pardon is all the suit I have to hand.
Boling. I pardon him, as God shall pardon me.
Duch. O happy vantage of a kneeling knee!
Yet am I sick for fear; speak it again;
Twice saying 'pardon' doth not pardon twain,
But makes one pardon strong.
So is it in the music of men's lives.
And here have I the daintiness of ear
To check time broke in a disorder'd string;
But for the concord-keen ear
Had not an ear to hear my true time broke.
I wasted time, and now doth time waste me;
For now hath time made me his numbering clock:
My thoughts are minutes; and with sighs they jar
Their watches on unto mine eyes, the outward
Whereeto my finger, like a dial's point,
Is pointing, and doth make them clock and time.
Now sir, the sound that tells what hour it is
Are clamorous groans, which strike upon my heart,
Which is the bell: so sighs and tears and groans
Show minutes, times, and hours: but my time
Runs posting on in Bolingbroke's proud joy,
While it lieth, his Jace o' the clock.
This music made me; let it sound no more:
For though it have help madmen to their wits,
In me it seems it will make wise men mad.
Yet blessing on his heart that gives it me
For 'tis a sign of love; and love to Richard
Is a strange brooch in this all-blotting world.

Enter a Groom of the Stable.

Groom. Hall, royal prince!
K. Rich. Thanks, noble peer;
The cheapest of us is ten groats too dear.
What is this? and how came you hither,
Where no man never comes but that sad dog
That brings me food to make misfortune live?
Groom. I was a poor groom of thy stable, king,
When thou wast king; who, travelling towards
With much ado at length have got leave [York,
To have upon my sometimes royal master's face.
O, how it yearn'd my heart when I beheld
In London streets, that coronation-day,
When Bolingbroke rode on rein Barbary,
That horse that thou so often hast bestrid,
That horse that I so carefully have dress'd!
K. Rich. Roden he on Barbary? Tell me, gentle
How went he under him? [friend,
Groom. So proudly as if he disdain'd the ground
That but hath eat bread from my royal hand;
This hand hath made him proud with flattering him:
Would be such my present as thee, and he not fall down,
Since pride must have a fall, and break the neck
Of that proud man that did usurp his back?
Forsworn, horse! why do I rail on thee,
Since thou, created to be adored by man,
Wast born to bear? I was not made a horse;
And yet I had so fair a charger as Spurr'd, gald'd and tired by jouncing Bolingbroke.

Enter Keeper, with a dish.

Keyp. Fellow, give place; here is no longer stay.

K. Rich. If thou love me, 'tis time thouwert away.

Keeper. What my tongue dares not, that my heart shall say.

Exeunt.

K. Rich. How now! what means death in this rude assault?

Enter Exton and Servants, armed.

K. Rich. How now! what means death in this rude assault?
Villain, thy own hand yields thy death's instrument.

[Snatching an axe from a Servant and killing him.

Go thou, and fill another room in hell.
He kills another. Then Exton strikes him down.
That hand shall burn in never-quenching fire
That stagers thus my person. Exton, thy fierce hand [land.
Hath with the king's blood stain'd the king's own
Mound, mount, my soul! thy seat is upon high;
Whilst my gross flesh stinks downward, here to die.

[Dies.

Exton. As full of valour as of royal blood:
Both have I spil'd; O would the deed were good!
For now the devil, that told me I did well,
Doth say that this deed is clear, and in hell.
This dead king to the living king I'll bear:
Take hence the rest, and give them burial here.

[Exeunt.

SCENE VI.—Windsor castle.

Flourish. Enter Bolingbroke, York, with other Lords, and Attendants.

Boling. Kind uncle York, the latest news we hear
Is that the rebels have consumed with fire
Our town of Ciceter in Gloucestershire;
But whether they be taken or slain we hear not.

Enter Northumberland.

Welcome, my lord: what is the news?

North. First, to thy sacred state wish I all hap.
The next news is, I have to London sent [phens,
The heads of Oxford, Salisbury, Blunt, and Kent;
The manner of their taking may appear
At large diisses they shall.

Boling. We thank thee, gentle Percy, for thy pains;
And to thy worth will add right worthy gains.

Enter Fitzwater.

Fitz. My lord, I have from Oxford sent to London
The heads of Brocas and Sir Bennet neely,
Two of the dangerous consort-traitors
That sought at Oxford thy dire overthrow.

Boling. Thy pains, Fitzwater, shall not be forgot;
Right noble is thy merit, well I wot.

Enter Percy, and the Bishop of Carlisle.

Percy. The grand conspirator, Abbot of Westminster,

With clog of conscience and sour melancholy
Hath yielded up his body to the grave;
But here is Carlisle living, to ablaze
Thy knyghtly domes and sanctify his pride.

Boling. Carlisle, this is your doom:
Choose out some secret place, some reverend room,
More than thou hast, and with it joy thy life;
So as thou livest in peace, die free from strife;
For though mine enemy thou hast ever been,
High sparks of honour in thee have I seen.

Enter Exton, with persons bearing a coffin.

Exton. Great king, within this coffin I present
Thy buried tear: herein all breathless lies
The mightiest of thy greatest enemies,
Richard of Bordeaux, by me hither brought.

Boling. Exton, I thank thee not: for thou hast
A deed of slaughter with thy fatal hand
Wrought Upon my head and all this famous land.

Exton. From your own mouth, my lord, did I this Boling. They love not poison that do poison need,
Nor do I thee: though I did wish him dead,
I hate the murderer, love him Murdered.
The guilt of conscience take thou for thy labour,
But neither my good word nor princely favour:
With Cain go wander through shades of night,
And never show thy head by day nor light.

Lords. I pass not by thy sorrow for a while,
That blood should sprinkle me to make me grow.

Exton. Come, mourn with me for that I do lament,
And put on sullen black incontinent:
I'll make a voyage to the Holy Land,
To wash this blood off from my guilty hand:
March sadly after: grace my mourning here;
In weeping after this 무nume biel.

[Exeunt.

SCENE——England.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—London. The palace.

Enter King Henry, Lord John of Lancaster, the Earl of Wesmoreland, Sir Walter Blunt, and others.

King. So shaken as we are, so wan with care,
Find we a time for frightened peace to pant;
And breathe the short-winged accents of new broils
To be commenced in stronds afar remote.
No more the thirsty entrance of this soil
Shall daub her lips with her own children's blood;
No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowerets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces; those opposed eyes,
Which, like the meteors of a troubled heaven,
All of one nature, of one substance bred,
Did lately meet in the intestine shock
And furious close of civil butchery.
Shall now, in mutual well-descending ranks,
March all one way and be no more opposed
Against acquaintance, kindred and allies:
The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Therefore, friends,
As far as to the sepulchre of Christ;
Whose soldier now, under whose blessed cross
We are impressed and engaged to fight,
Forthwith a power of English shall we levy;
Whose arms were moulded in their mothers' womb
To chase these pagans in those holy fields
Over whose acres walk'd those blessed feet
Which fourteen hundred years ago were nail'd
For our advantage on the bitter cress;
But this our purpose now is twelve month old,
And bootless 'tis to tell you we will go:
Therefore we meet not now. Then let me hear
Of you, my gentle cousin Westmoreland,
What yesternight our council did decree
In forwarding this deare experience.

West. My liege, this haste was not in question,
And many limits of the charge set down
But yesternight; when all athwart there came

A post from Wales laden with heavy news;
Whose worst was, that the noble Mortimer,
Leading the men of Herefordshire to fight
Against the irregular and wild Glendower,
Was by the rude hands of that Welshman taken,
A thousand of his people butchered;
Upon whose dead corpse there was such misuse,
Such beastly shameless transformation,
By those Welshwomen done as may not be Without much shame retold or spoken of.

King. It seems then that the tidings of this broil
Brake off our business for the Holy Land. [lord; West. This match'd with other did, my gracious
For more uneven and unwelcome news
Came from the north and thus it did import:
On Holy-rood day, the gallant Hotspur there,
Young Harry Percy and brave Archibald,
That ever-valliant and approved Scot,
At Holmedon met,
Where they did spend a sad and bloody hour;
As by discharge of their artillery,
And shape of likelihood, the news was told;
For he that brought them, in the very heat
And pride of their contention did take horse,
Uncertain of the issue any way.

King. Here is a dear, a true industrious friend,
Sir Walter Blunt, new lighted from his horse,
Stain'd with the variation of each soil
Betwixt that Holmedon and this seat of ours;
And he hath brought us smooth and welcome news.
The Earl of Douglas is discomfited:
Ten thousand bold Scots, two and twenty knights,
Balk'd in their own blood did Sir Walter see
On Holmedon's plains. Of prisoners, Hotspur took Mordake the Earl of Fife, and eldest son
To better Douglas; and the Earl of Athol,
Of Murray, Angus, and Menteith;
And is not this an honourable spoil?
A gallant prize? Ha, cousin, is it not?

West. In faith,
It is a conquest for a prince to boast of.
King. Yea, there thou makest me sad and makes me in envy that my Lord Northumberland [he sin should be the father to so blest a son, a son who is the theme of honour's tongue; an apple whose sweetest and whitest part is sweet Fortune's minion and her pride: whilst I, by looking on the praise of him, see riot and dishonour stain the brow of my young Harry. O that it could be proved that some night-tripping fairy had exchanged in evil-chfits our chosen wisest plant who is sweet Fortune's minion and her pride! And call'd mine Percy, his Plantagenet! Then would I have his Harry, and he mine, [coz, but let him from my thoughts. What think you, of this young Percy's pride the prisoners, which he in this adventure hath surprised. Prince. Yea, and so used it that, were it not here apparent that thou art their apparent—but, I prithee, sweet wag, shall there be gallows standing in England when thou art king? and resolution thus tossed as it is with the ruddy curb of old father, the law? Do not thou, when thou art king, bring a tart? Prince. No; thou shalt. [judg. Fal. Shall I? O rare! By the Lord, I'll be a brave man. Prince. Thou judgest false already: I mean, thou shalt have the hanging of the thieves and so become a rare hangman. Fal. Well, well, Hal, well; and in some sort it jumps with my humour as well as waiting in the court, I can tell you. Prince. For obtaining of suits? Fal. Yea, for obtaining of suits, whereof the hangman hath no lean wardrobe. Schooled, I am as melancholy a wretch as a legged bear. Prince. Or an old lion, or a lover's lute. Fal. Yea, or the drone of a Lincolnshire bagpipe. Prince. What sayest thou to a hare, or the melancholy of Moor-ditch? Fal. Thou hast the most unsavoury similes and art indeed the most comparative, rascellicst, sweet young prince. But, Hal, I prithee, trouble me no more with vanity. I would to God thou and I knew where a commodity of good names were to be bought. An old lord of the council rated me the other day in the street about you, sir, but I answered him mine own, and yet he talked very wisely, but I regarded him not; and yet he talked wisely, and in the street too. Prince. Thou didst well; for wisdom cries out in the streets, and no man regards it. Fal. O, thou hast damnable iteration and art indeed able to corrupt a saint. Thou hast done much harm upon me, Hal; God forgive thee for it! Before I knew thee, Hal, I knew nothing; and now am I, if a man should speak truly, little better than one of the wicked. I must give over this life, and I will give it over; by the Lord, and I do not. I am a villain; I'll be damned for never a king's son in Christendom. [Jack. Prince. Where shall we take a purse to-morrow, Fal. 'Zounds, where thou wilt, lad; I'll make one; and I do not, call me villain and baffle me. Prince. I see a good amendment of life in thee; from praying to purse-taking. Fal. Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal; 'tis no sin for a man to labour in his vocation. Enter Poiis. Poiis. Now shall we know if Gadshill have set a match. O, if men were to be saved by merit, what hole in hell was lost for him? This is the most omnipotent villain that ever cried 'Stand to' a Prince. Good morrow, Ned. [true man. Poiis. Good morrow, sweet Hal. What say Monsieur Remorse? what says Sir John Sack and sugar? Jack! how agrees the devil and thee about... thy soul, that thou soldest him on Good-Friday last for a cup of Madeira and a cold capon's leg?"

Prince. Sir John stands to his word, the devil shall have his bargain; for he was never yet a breaker of proverbs: he will give the devil his due.

Poins. Then art thou damned for keeping thy word with the devil.

Prince. Else he had been damned for cozening the devil.

Poins. But, my lads, my lads, to-morrow morning, by four o'clock, early at Godshill! there are pilgrims going to Canterbury with rich offerings, and traders riding to London with fat purveyors: I have vizards for you all; you have horses for yourselves: Godshill lies to-night in Rochester: I have been beseeching the moon to be full in Eastcheap: we may do it as secure as sleep. If you will go, I will stuff your purses full of crowns; if you will not, tarry at home and be hanged.

Fal. Hear ye, Yedward; if I tarry at home and go not, I'll hang you for going.

Poins. You will, chaos?

Fal. Hal, will thou make one?

Fal. There's neither honesty, manhood, nor good fellowship in thee, nor thou canst not of the blood royal, if thouarest not for ten shillings.

Prince. Farewell! In my days I'll be a mad.

Fal. Why, that's well said.

[Exit.

Poins. Sir John, I prithee, leave the prince and me alone: I will lay him down such reasons for this adventure that he shall go.

Fal. Well, God give thee the spirit of persuasion and him the ears of profiting, that what thou speakest may move and what he hears may be believed, that the true prince may, for recreation sake, prove a false thief; for the poor lasses of the time want countenance. Farewell; you shall find me in Eastcheap.

Prince. Farewell, thou latter spring! farewell, All-hallows summer! [Exit Falstaff.

Poins. Now, my good sweet honey lord, ride with us to-morrow: I have a jest to execute that I cannot. And, Falesill, Bardolph, Peto and Godshill shall rob those men that we have already waylaid; yourself and I will not be there; and when they have the booty, if you and I do not rob them, cut this head off from my shoulders. [Exit.

Prince. How shall we part with them in setting forth? I will set forth before or after them, and appoint them a place of meeting, wherein it is at our pleasure to fail, and then will they adventure upon the exploit themselves; which they shall have no sooner achieved, but we'll set upon them.

Prince. Yea, but 'tis like that they will know us by our horses, by our habits and by every other appointment, to be ourselves.

Poins. Tut! our horses they shall not see: I'll tie them in the wood; our vizards we will change after we leave them; and, sirrah, I have cases of buckram for the nonce, to immanse our noted outward garments.

Prince. Yea, but I doubt they will be too hard

Poins. Well, for two of them, I know them to be as true-bred cowards as ever turned back; and for the third, if he fight longer than he sees reason, I'll forswear arms. The virtue of this jest will be, the murder the which will be the best road we will tell us when we meet at supper: how thirty, at least, he fought with; what wards, what blows, what extremities he endured; and in the reproof of this lies the jest.

Prince. Well, I'll go with thee: provide us all the necessaries and meet me to-morrow night in Eastcheap; there I'll sup. Farewell.
ACT I.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV. SCENE III.

He question'd me; amongst the rest, demanded My prisoners in your majesty's behalf. I then, all smarting with my wounds being cold, To be so pester'd with a popinjay, Out of my way and the impatient, Answer'd negligently I know not what. He should, or he should not: for he made me mad To see him shine so brisk and smelt so sweet And talk so like a waiting-gentlewoman Of guns and drums and wounds.—God save the mark! And telling me the sovereign's thing on earth Was parcamente for an inward bruise: And that it was great pity, so it was, This villainous salt-petre should be digg'd Out of the bowels of the harmless earth, Which many a good traitor's fellow had destroy'd So cowardly; and but for these vile guns, He would himself have been a soldier. This bald unjointed chat of his, my lord, I answer'd indirectly, as I said; And I beseech you, let not his report Come current for an accusation Between my love and your high majesty.

Blunt. The circumstance consider'd, good my lord, Whate'er Lord Harry Percy then had said To such a person and in such a place, At such a time, with all the rest retold, May reasonably die and never rise To do a man in such a manner much What then he said, so he misus it now.

King. Why, yet he doth deny his prisoners, But with proviso and exception, That we at our own charge shall ransom straight His brother-in-law, the foolish Mortimer; Who, on my soul, hath truly betray'd The lives of those that he did lead to light Against that great magician, damn'd Glendower, Whose daughter, as we hear, the Earl of March Hath lately married. Shall our coffers, then, Be empliit to redeem a traitor home? Shall we buy treason? and indent with fears, When they have lost and forfeited themselves? No, on the barren mountains let him starve; For I shall never hold that man my friend Whose tongue shall ask me for one penny cost To ransom home revolted Mortimer.

Henry, Earl of Northumberland. He never did fall off, my sovereign liege, But by the chance of war: to prove that true Needs no more but one tongue for all those wounds, Those mouthed wounds, which valiantly he took, When on the gentle Severn's sedgy bank, In single coposition, hard and clear, he did confound the best part of an hour In changing hardlineit with great Glendower: Three times they breathed and three times did they Upon agreement, of swift Severn's flood: [drink, Who then, affrighted with their bloody looks, Ran fearfully among the trebling reeds, And hid his crisp head in the hollow bank Bloodstained with these valiant combatants. Never did base and rotten policy Colour her working with such deadly wounds; Nor never could the noble Mortimer Receive so many, and all willingly: Then let not him be slander'd with revolt. [him; King. Thou dost beliie the Percy, Percy, thou dost beliie He never did encounter with Glendower: I tell thee, He durst as well have met the devil alone As the Glendower for his base conceit. Art thou not ashamed? But, sirrah, henceforth Let me not hear you speak of Mortimer: Send me your prisoners with the speediest means, Or you shall hear in such a kind from me As will displease you. My Lord Northumberland, We license your departure with your son. Send us your prisoners, or you will hear of it. [Exit King Henry. Blunt, and train.

Hot. An if the devil come and roar for them, I will not send them home. And tell him so; for I will ease my heart, Albeit I make a hazard of my head. [awhile North. What, drunk with choler? stay and pause Here comes your uncle.

Re-enter Worcester.

Hot. Speak of Mortimer! 'Zounds, I will speak of him; and let my soul Want mercy, if I do not join with him: Yea, on his part I'll empty all these veins, And shed my dear blood drop by drop in the dust, But I will lift the chronicles of dead Mortimer As high in the air as this unthankful king, As this ingrate and canker'd Bolingbroke. [mad. North. Brother, the king hath made your nephew Wor. Who struck this heat up after I was gone? Hot. He will, forsooth, have all my prisoners; And when I urged the ransom once again Of my wife's brother, then his check look'd pale, And on my face he turn'd an eye of death, Trembling even at the name of Mortimer. Wor. I cannot blame him: was not he proclaim'd By Richard that dead is the next of blood? North. He was. I heard the proclamation: And then it was as wrong as it was true — Whose wrongs in us God pardon! —did act forth Upon his Irish expedition; From whence he intercepted did return To be deposited and shortly murdered. [mouth North. And how whose death we in the world's wide Live scandaliz'd and fully spoken of. Hot. But, soft, I pray you; did King Richard then Proclaim my brother Edmund Mortimer Heir to the crown? North. He did; myself did hear it. Hot. Nay, then I cannot blame his cousin king, That wish'd him on the barren mountains starve. But shall it be, that you, that set the crown Upon the head of this forgetful man And for his sake wear the detested blot Of murderous subornation, shall it be, That you a world of curses undergo? Being of the several places issues, The cords, the ladder, or the hangman rather? O, pardon me that I descend so low, To show the line and the predicament Wherein you range under this subtle king; Shall it for shame be spoken in these days, Or fill up this repetition in time to come, That men of your nobility and power Did gage them both in an unjust behalf, As both of you — God pardon it! —have done, To put down Richard, that sweet lovely rose, And plant this thorn, this canker, Bolingbroke? And shall it in this last speech be spoken, That you are fool'd, discarded and shook off By him for whom these shame's ye underwent? No; yet time serves wherein you may redeem Your banish'd honours and restore yourselves Into the good thoughts of the world again, Revenge the jeering and disdain'd contempt Of this proud king, who studies day and night To answer all the debt he owes to you Even with the bloody payment of your deaths: Therefore, I say,—

War. Peace, cousin, say no more:
And to your quick-conceiving discents
I'll read you matter deep and dangerous,
As full of peril and adventurous spirit
As to o'er-walk a current roaring loud
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.
ACT II.

First Part of King Henry IV.  Scene i.

Hot. If he fall in, good night! or shk or swim:
Send danger from the east into the west,
So honour cross it from the north to south,
And let them grapple: O, the blood more stirs
To raise a lion than to start a hare!
North. Imagination of some great exploit
Drives men beyond the bounds of patience.
Hot. By heaven, I'll tell them:—I can an easy leap,
To pluck bright honour from the pale-faced moon,
Or dive into the bottom of the deep,
Where fathome-line could never touch the ground,
And pluck up drowned honour by the locks;
So he that doth redeem her thence might wear
Withal over all the other dignities.
But out upon this half-fellowship!
Wor. He apprehends a world of figures here,
But not the form of what he should attend.
Good cousin, give me audience for a while.
Hot. I cry you mercy.

Wor. Those same noble Scots
That are your prisoners,—

Hot. I'll keep them all;
By God, he shall not have a Scot of them;
No, if a Scot would save his soul, he shall not:
I'll keep them, by this hand.
Wor. You start away
And lend no ear unto my purpose.
Those prisoners you shall keep.

Hot. Nay, I will; that's flat:
He said he would not ransom Mortimer;
Forbad his tongue to speak of Mortimer;
But I will find him when he lies asleep,
And in his ear I'll holla 'Mortimer!'
Nay, I'll have a staring shall be taught to speak
Nothing but 'Mortimer,' and give it him,
To keep his anger still in motion.
Wor. Hear you, cousin; a word.

Hot. All studies here I solemnly defy,
Save how to gall and pinch this Bolingbroke:
And that same sword-and-buckler Prince of Wales,
But that I think his father loves him not.
And would be glad he meet with some mishance,
I would have him poisoned with a pot of ale.
Wor. Farewell, kinsman: I'll talk to you
When you are better temper'd to attend.

Hot. North. Why, what a wasp-stung and impatient
Art thou to break into this woman's mood,
Tying thine ear to no tongue but thine own!
Hot. Why, look you, I am whipp'd and scourged
With rods:
Nettlest and stingst with pismires, when I hear
Of this vile politician, Bolingbroke.
In Richard's time,—what do you call the place?
A plague upon it, it is in Gloucestershire:
'I was where the madcap duke his uncle kept,
His uncle York; where I first box'd my knee
Unto this king of smiles, this Bolingbroke,—
'Schoo!'—
When you and he came back from Ravenspurg.

North. At Berkley castle.

Hot. You say true:
Why, what a candy deal of courtesy
This favning greyhound then did proffer me!
Look, 'when his infant fortune came to age,'
And 'gentle Harry Percy, and 'kind cousin!'
O, the devil take such cozeners! God forgive me!
Good uncle, tell thine tale: I have done
Wor. Nay, if you have not, to it again;
We will stay your leisure.

Hot. I have done, I faith.
Wor. Then once more to your Scottish prisoners.
Deliver them up without their ransom straight,
And make the Douglas' son your only man.
For powers in Scotland: which, for divers reasons
Which I shall send you written, be assured,
Will easily be granted. You, my lord,

[To Northumberland.

Your son in Scotland being thus employ'd,
Shall secretly into the bosom creep
Of that same noble prelate, well beloved,
The archbishop.

Wor. Of York, is it not?
Wor. True; who bears hard
His brother's death at Bristol, the Lord Scroop.
I speak not this in estimation.
As what I think might be, but what I know
Is ruminated, plotted and set down,
And only stays but to behold the face
Of that occasion that shall bring it on.

Hot. I smell it: upon my life, it will do well.

North. Before the game is afoot, thou still let's slip.

Wor. Hot, Why, it cannot choose but be a noble plot:
And then the power of Scotland and of York,
To join with Mortimer, ha?
Wor. And so they shall.
Wor. In faith, it is exceedingly well aim'd.
Wor. And Tis no little reason bids us speed,
To save our heads by raising of a head;
And think we think ourselves unsatisfied,
Till he hath found a time to pay us home!
And see already how he doth begin
To make us strangers to his looks of love.

Hot. He does, he does: we'll be revenged on him.
Wor. Cousin, farewell: no further go in this
Than I by letters shall direct your course.
When time is ripe, which will be suddenly,
I'll steal to Glendower and Lord Mortimer:
Where you and Douglas and our powers at once,
As I will fashion it, shall happily meet,
To bear our fortunes in our own strong arms,
Which now we hold at much uncertainty.

North. Farewell, good brother: we shall thrive, I trust.

Hot. Uncle, adieu: O, let the hours be short Till fields and blows and groans applaud our sport!
[Exeunt.

ACT II.

Scene I.—Rochester. An inn yard.

Enter a Carrier with a lantern in his hand.

First Car. Heigh-lo! an it be not four by the day, I'll be hanged! Charles' wain is over the new chimney, and yet our horse not packed. What, oster?

Ost. [Within] Anon, anon.

First Car. I prithee, Tom, beat Cut's saddle, put a few flocks in the point; poor jade, is wrung in the withers out of all cress.

Enter another Carrier.

Sec. Car. Peas and beans are as dank here as a dog, and that is the next way to give poor jades the bots: this house is turned upside down since Robin Ostler died.

First Car. Poor fellow, never loved since the first of October; it was the death of him.

Sec. Car. I think this be the most villainous house in all London road for feasts: I am stung like a tetch.

First Car. Like a tetch! by the mass, there is ne'er a king christen could be better bit than I have been since the first cock.

Sec. Cur. Why, they will allow us no' er a jordan, and then we leak in your chimney; and your chamber, hang a clozen with a hand so.

First Cur. What, ostler! come away and be hanged! come away.

Sec. Cur. I have a gammon of bacon and two rizes of ginger, to be delivered as far as Charingcross.

First Cur. God's body! the turkeys in my paunier are quite out, ostler! A plague on thee! hast thou never a eye in thy head? canst not hear? An't were not as good deed as drink, to break the pate on thee, I am a very villain, Come, and be hanged! hast no faith in thee?

Enter Gadshill.

Gads. Good morrow, carriers. What's o'clock?

First Cur. I think it be two o'clock.

Gads. I pritch, lend me thy lantern, to see my gelding in the stable.

First Cur. Nay, by God soft; I know a trick with two of that. I'll get thee, sir, a lantern.

Gads. I pray thee lend me thine.

Sec. Cur. Ay, when? canst tell? Lend me thy lantern, quoth he? marry, I'll see thee hanged first.

Gads. Sirrah, carrier, what time do you mean to come to London?

Sec. Cur. Time enough to go to bed with a candle. I come, neighbor Mugs, we'll call up the gentlemen: they will along with company, for they have great charge. [Exeunt Carriers.]

Gads. What, ho! chamberlain!

Cham. [Within] At hand, quoth pick-purse.

Gads. That's even as fair as—at hand, quoth the chamberlain: for than variest no more from picking of purses than giving direction doth from labouuring; thou layest the plot low.

Enter Chamberlain.

Cham. Good morrow, Master Gadshill. It holds current that I told you yesternight: 'there's a franklin in the wild of Kent hath brought three hundred marks with him in gold: I heard him tell it to one of his company last night at supper; a kind of auditor; one that hath abundance of charge too, God knows what. They are up already, and call for wine; what they will do, they will away presently.

Gads. Sirrah, if they meet not with Saint Nicholas's clerks, I'll give thee this neck.

Cham. No, I'll none of it: I pritch thee keep that for the hangman: for I know thou worshippest Saint Nicholas as truly as a man of falsehood may.

Gads. What talkest thou to me of the hangman? if I hang, I'll make a fat pair of gallows; for if I hang, old Sir John hangs with me, and thou knowest he is no starveling. Tut! there are other Trojans that thou dreamest not of, the which for sport sake are content to do the profession some grace: that would, if matters should be looked into, for their own credit make all whole. I am joined with no foot-lad rangers, no long-staff sixpenny strikers, none of these mad mustachio purple-hued malt-worms: but with nobility and tranquility, bargamons and great oncers, such as can hold in, such as will strike sooner than speak, and speak sooner than pray: and yet, 'zounds, I lie; for they pray continually to their saint, the commonwealth: or rather, not pray to her, but pray on her, for they ride up and down on her and make her their boots.

Cham. What, the commonwealth their boots? will she hold out water in foul way?

Gads. She will, she will; justice hath liquored her. We steal as in a castle, cock-sure; we have the receipt of fern-seed, we walk invisible.

Cham. Nay, by my faith, I think you are more beholding to the night than to fern-seed for your walking invisible.

Gads. Give me thy hand; thou shalt have a share in our purchase, as I am a true man.

Cham. Nay, rather let me have it, as you are a false thief.

Gads. Go to: 'homo' is a common name to all men. Bid the ostler bring my gelding out of the stable.

Cham. Wait till you have it. [Exeunt.

SCENE II.—The highway, near Gadshill.

Enter Prince Henry and Poids. Poids. Come, shelter, shelter: I have removed Falstaff's horse, and he frets like a damned velvet.

Prince. Stand close.

Enter Falstaff.

Fal. Who's Poids, Hal?

Prince. He's walked up to the top of the hill: I'll go seek him.

Fal. I am accuscd to rob in that thief's company: the rascal hath removed my horse, and tied him I know not where. If I travel but four foot by the squer further afoot, I shall break my wind. Well, I doubt not but to die a fair death for all things if I escape hanging for killing that rogue. I have forsworn his company hourly any time this two and twenty years, and yet I am bewitched with the rogue's company. If the rascal have not given me medicines to make me love him, I'll be hanged; it could not be else: I have drunk medicines. Poids! Hal! a plague upon you both! Bardolph, Peto! I'll stare ere I'll rob a foot further. An't were not as good a deed as drink, to turn true man and to leave these rogues, I am the veriest varlet that ever chewed with a tooth. Eight yards of uneven ground is threescore and ten miles afoot with me; and the stone-hearted villains know it well enough: a plague upon it when thieves cannot be true one to another! [They whistle.] Whew! A plague upon you all! Give me my horse, you rogues; give me my horse, and be hanged!

Prince. Peace, ye fat-guts! lie down; lay thine ear close to the ground and list thou canst hear the tread of travellers.

Fal. Have you any levers to lift me up again, being down? 'Blood, I'll not bear mine own flesh so far afoot again for all the coin in thy father's exchequer. What a plague mean ye to collt me thus?

Prince. Thou liest; thou art not collt, thou art uncolted.

Fal. I pritch, good Prince Hal, help me to my horse, good king's son.

Prince. Out, ye rogue! shall I be your ostler?

Fal. Go, hang thyself on line over the apparent garners! If I be taken, I'll peach for this. An I have not ballads made on you all and sung to fifty tunes, let a cup of sack be my poison: when a jest is so forward, and afoot too! I hate it.

Enter Gadshill, Bardolph, and Peto with him.

Gads. Stand.

Fal. So I do, against my will.

Poids. O, 'tis our setter: I know his voice. Bardolph, what news?

Bard. Case ye, case ye; on with your wizards: there's money of the king's coming down the hill; it is going to the king's exchequer.

Fal. You lie, ye rogue; it is going to the king's tavern.

Gads. There's enough to make us all.

Fal. To be hanged.
ACT II.  FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.  SCENE III.

Prince. Sirs, you four shall front them in the narrow lane; Ned Poins and I will walk lower: if they escape from your encounter, then they light on us.

Fal. How many be there of them?  Poins. Some dozen, sir; thy horse stands behind the hedge: when thou needest him, there thou shalt find him.

Prince. Well, we leave that to the proof.

Fal. Zounds, will they not rob us?  Prince. What, a coward, Sir John Falstaff?  Fal. Indeed, I am not John of Gaunt, your grandfather; but yet no coward, Hal.  Prince. Well, we leave that to the proof.

Fal. Now cannot I strike him, if I should be hanged.

Prince. Ned, where are our disguises?

Poins. Here, hard by: stand close.

Fal. Nay, now my masters, happy man be his, say I: every man to his business.

---

Enter the Travellers.

First Trav. Come, neighbour: the boy shall lead our horses down the hill; we' ll walk afoot awhile, and ease our legs.

Thieves. Stand!  Travellers. Jesus bless us!  Fal. Strike; down with them; cut the villains' throats!  Prince. Where's caterpillars! bacon-fed knaves! they hate us youth; down with them: fiece them.

Travellers. O, we are undone, both we and ours for ever!

Fal. Hang ye, gorbellied knaves, are ye undone?  Prince. No; some right I would your store were here! Oh, bacons, on! What, ye knaves! young men must live. You are grandjurers, are ye? we'll jure ye, 'faith.

[Exeunt Prince and Poins.]

Re-enter Prince Henry and Poins.

Prince. The thieves have bound the true men. Now could thou and I rob the thieves and go merrily to London, it would be argument for a week, laughter for a month and a good jest for ever.

Poins. Stand close; I hear them coming.

---

Enter the Thieves again.

Fal. Come, my masters, let us share, and then to horse before day. An the Prince and Poins be not two arrant cowards, there's no equity stirring: there's no more value in that Poins than in a [wild duck.]

Poins. Villains!  [As they are sharing, the Prince and Poins set upon them; they all run away; and Falstaff, after a blow or two, runs away too, leaving the body behind them.]

Prince. Got with much ease. Now merrily to horse: the thieves are all scatter'd and possess'd with fear. So strongly that they dare not meet each other. Each takes his fellow for an officer. Away, good Ned. Falstaff sweats to death. And lands the lean earth as he walks along: We're not for laughing, I should pity him.

Poins. How the rogue roared!  [Exeunt.]

---

SCENE III. — Buckworth castle.

Enter Hotspur, solus, reading a letter.

Hot. But, for mine own part, my lord, I could be well contented to be there, in respect of the love I bear your house. He could be contented: why is he not, then? In respect of the love he bears our house; he shows in this, he loves his own barn better than he loves our house. Let me see some more. 'The purpose you undertake is dangerous; —why, that's certain: 'tis dangerous to take a cold, to sleep; to drink; but I tell you, my lord, out of this muddle, danger, we pluck this flower, safety. 'The purpose you undertake is dangerous: the friends you have named uncertain; the time itself unsorted; and your whole plot too light for the counterpoise of so great an opposition.' Say you so, say you so? I say unto you again, you are a shallow coward, and you lie. What a rack- ing! By the Lord, our plot is a good plot as ever was laid; our friends true and constant; a good plot, good friends, and full of expectation: an excellent plot, very good friends. What a frosty-spirited rogue is this! Why, my lord of York comes on the plot and the general course of the action. And that villain thou hast now so ill, I could banish him with his lady's fan. Is there not my father, my uncle and myself? lord Edmund Mortimer, my lord of York and Owen Glendower? Is there not besides the Douglas? have I not all their letters to meet me in arms by the Ninth of the next month? and are they not some of them set forward already? What a pagan rascal is this! an infidel! Hal! you shall see now in very sincerity of fear and cold heart, will he to the king and lay open all our proceedings. O, I could divide myself and go to buffets, for moving such a dish of skin milk with so honourable an action! Hang him; let him tell the king: we are prepared. I will set forward to-night.

Enter Lady Percy.

Lady. How now, Kate! I must leave you within these two hours. Lord, O, my good lord, why are you thus alone? For what offence have I this fortnight been! A banish'd woman from my Harry's bed? Tell me, sweet lord, what is 't that takes from thee Thy stomach, pleasure and thy golden sleep? Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth, and start so often when thou art alone? Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks; And given my treasures and my rights of thee To thick-eyed missing and cursed melancholy! In thy faint sleepers I by thee have watch'd. And heard thee murmur takes of iron wars! Speak tender homage to thy bounding steed: Cry ' Courage! to the field!' And thou must take Of sallies and retiries, of treach's, tents, Of palisadoes, frontiers, parapets, Of basilisks, of canons, culverin, Of prisoners' ransom and of soldiers slain, And all the currents of a heady light. Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war And thus hath so bestir'd thee in thy sleep, That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow, Like bubbles in a late-disturbed stream; And in thy face strange motions have appeared, Such as we see when men restrain their breath On some great sudden hurt. O, what portents are these? Some heavy business hath my lord in hand, And I must know it, else he loves me not.

Hot. What, ho!  Enter Servant.

Serv. Is Gillsian with the packet gone?  Hot. He is, my lord, an hour ago, [shriek!]

Hot. Hath Butler brought those horses from the [Sir. One horse, my lord, he brought even now.

Hot. What horse? a roan, a crock-spear, is it not? [shriek!]

Serv. It is, my lord.  Hot. That roan shall be my throne. Well, I will back him straight: O espérance! Bid Butler lead him forth into the park.  [Exit Servant.

Lady. But hear you, my lord.

Hot. What say'st thou, my lady?
ACT II.  FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV.  SCENE IV.

Lady.  What is it carries you away?
Hot.  Why, my horse, my love, my horse.
Lady.  Out, you mad-headed ape!
A weariness both in the body and a deal of spleen
As you are to be with, in faith.  I'll know your business, Harry, that I will.
I fear my brother Mortimer doth stir
About his title, and hath sent for you.
To line his enterprise: but if you go,—
Hot.  So far afoot, I shall be weary, love.
Lady.  Come, pray you parley, and answer me,
Directly unto this question that I ask:
In faith, I'll break thy little finger, Harry, if thou wilt not tell me all things true.
Hot.  Away, Away, you triver! Love! I love thee not,
Leave me for thee, Kate; this is no world
To play with mammonets and to tilt with lips:
We must have bloody noses and crack'd crowns,
And pass them current too.  God's me, my horse!
What say'st thou, Kate? what wouldst thou have with me?
Lady.  Do you not love me? do you not? indeed?
Well, do not then: for since you love me not,
I will not love myself. Do you not love me?
Nay, tell me if you speak in jest or no.
Hot.  Come, wilt thou see me ride?
And when I am o' horse-back, I will swear
I love thee not, me, me, me, me, Kate;
I must not have you henceforth question me
Whither I go, nor reason whereabout:
Whither I must. I must; and, to conclude,
This evenning must I leave you, gentle Kate.
I know you wise, but yet no further wise
Than my Pery, so evident you are,
But yet a woman: and for secrecy,
No lady closer; for who I believe.
The will not utter what thou dost not know;
And so far will I trust thee, gentle Kate.
Lady.  How! how so far?
Hot.  Not an inch further. But hark you, Kate:
Whither I go, thither shall you go too;
To-day will I set forth, to-morrow you.
Will this content you, Kate?
Lady.  It must of force.  [Exeunt.

SCENE IV.—The Boar's-Head Tavern, Eastcheap.

Enter the Prince and Pains.
Prince.  Ned, prithee, come out of that fat room,
End me thy hand to laugh a little.
Pains.  Where hast been, Hal?
Prince.  With three or four log-headers amongst Three or four score hogsheads, I have sounded
The very base-string of humility.
Sirrah, I am sworn brother to a leach of drawers; and can call them all
By their christen names, as Tom, Dick, and Francis.
They take it already upon their salvation, that Though I be but Prince of Wales, yet I am the king of good company; and tell me nasty I am no powder
Like Falstaff, but a Cornishman, a lad of mettle, a good boy, by the Lord, so they call me, and when I am king of England, I shall command all the good
Hats in Eastcheap.  They call drinking deep, dyeing
Scarlet; and when you breathe in your watering,
They cry 'hem!' and bid you play it off.  To conclude,
I am so good a proficient in one quarter of
An hour, that I can drink with any tinker in his Own language during my life.  I tell thee, Ned,
Thou hast lost much honour, that thou wert not with me
In this action.  But, sweet Ned,—to sweeten
What is said, I give thee this pennyworth of sugar,
Clapped even now into my hand by an under Skinner, one that never spake other English in his Life than 'Eight shilling and sixpence,' and 'You are welcome,' with this shrill addition, 'Anon, Anon, sir! Score a pint of bastard in the Half-moon,' or so.  But, Ned, to drive away the time Till Falstaff come, I prithee, do thou stand in some
By-room, while I question my pungy drawer to what
One gave me the sugar: and do thou never leave calling 'Francis,' that his tale to me may be nothing
But 'Anon.'  Step aside, and I will show thee a Pains.  Francis!  [Pains.  [Exit Pains.
Prince.  Thou art perfect.
Pains.  Francis!  [Exit Pains.

Enter Francis.
Fran.  Anon, anon, anon, sir.  Look down into the Pomgarret, Ralph.
Prince.  Come hither, Francis.
Fran.  My lord?
Prince.  How long hast thou to serve, Francis?
Fran.  Five years, and five years, and as much as to—
Pains.  [Within] Francis!
Fran.  Anon, anon, anon, sir.
Prince.  Five year!  In r'y lady, a long lease for the Clinking of pewter.  But, Francis, darest thou be
So valiant as to play the coward with thy indument
And show it a fair pair of heels and run from it?
Fran.  O Lord, sir, I'll be sworn upon all the Looks in England, I could find in my heart.
Pains.  [Within] Francis!
Fran.  Anon, anon, sir.
Prince.  How old art thou, Francis?
Fran.  I am five and twenty.  What about Michaelmas next I shall Fran.  Anon, anon, sir.  Pray stay a little, my lord.
Prince.  Nay, but hark you, Francis: for the sugar
Thou gavest me, I was a penn'worth, wasn't not?
Fran.  O Lord, I would it had been two!
Prince.  I will give thee for it a thousand pound:
Ask me when thou wilt, and thou shalt have it.
Pains.  [Within] Francis!
Fran.  Anon, anon, anon.
Prince.  Anon, Francis?  No, Francis: but to-morrow, Francis; or Francis, o' Thursday: or indeed, Francis, when thou wilt. But, Francis!
Fran.  My lord?
Prince.  Witt thou rob this leathern jerkin, crystal
Button, not-pated, agate-ring, pane-stocking, caddis
Garter, smooth-tongue, Spanish-pouch.
Fran.  O Lord, sir, who do you mean?
Prince.  Why, then, your brown bastard is your Only drink; for look you, sir, your white canvas doubt will sully: in Barbary, sir, it cannot come to Fran.  What, sir?  [So much.
Pains.  [Within] Francis!
Prince.  Away, you rogue! dost thou not hear Them call?  Here they both call him; the draca stands awaiz, not knowing which way to go.

Enter Vintner.
Vint.  What, standest thou still, and hearest such a calling?  Look to the guests within.  [Exit Fran.
Prince.  My lord, old Sir John, with half-a-dozen more,
Are at the door: shall I let them in?
Prince.  Let them alone awhile, and then open
The door.  [Exit Vintner.  Pains!

Re-enter Pains.
Pains.  Anon, anon, anon, sir.
Prince.  Sirrah, Falstaff and the rest of the thieves
Are at the door: shall we be merry?
Pains.  As merry as crickets, my lad.  But hark
You: what cunning match have you made with this Jest of the drawer?  Come, what's the issue?
Prince.  I am now of all humours that have showed Themselves, but these old days of good man
Adam to the pupil age of this present twelve o'Clock
At midnight.

Re-enter Francis.
What's o'clock, Francis?
Fran.  Anon, anon, sir.  [Exit.
Prince. That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman! His industry is up-stairs and down-stairs; his eloquence the parcel of a reckoning. I am not yet of your mind. Some honest man of the north; he that kills me some six or seven dozen of Scots at a breakfast, washes his hands, and says to his wife "Fie upon this quiet life! I want work." "O my sweet Harry," says she, "how many hast thou killed to-day?" "Give my ron horse a drench," says he; and answers "Some more, man! am I hour after; 'a trick, a while.' I prithee, call in Falstaff: I'll play Percy, and that damned brawn shall play Dame Mortimer his wife, "Rivo," says the drunkard. Call in ribs, call in tallow.

Enter Falstaff, Gadshill, Bardolph, and Peto;
Francis following with wine.

Poins. Welcome, Jack: where hast thou been?
Fal. A plaque of all cowards, I say, and a vengeance too! marry, and amen! Give me a cup of sack, boy. Ere I had this life long, I'll sew neither stocks and mend them and foot them too. A plaque of all cowards! Give me a cup of sack, rogues; and there no virtue extant but He drinks.

Prince. Didst thou never see Titian kiss a dish of butter? pitiful-hearted Titian, that melted at the sweet tale of the suns! if thou didst, then beheld that compound.

Fal. Thy name, here's line in this sack too: there is nothing but rogerry to be found in villainous man: yet a coward is worse than a cup of sack with lime in it. A villainous coward! Go thy ways, old Jack; die when thou wilt, if manhood, good manhood, be not forgot upon the face of the earth, then am I shot down. There live not three good unhanged in England; and one of them is fat and grows old: God help the while! a bad world, I say. I would I were a weaver; I could sing psalms or anything. A plaque of all cowards, I say still.

Prince. Why, thou whoreson round man, what matter you?
Fal. A king's son! If I do not beat thee out of thy kingdom with a dagger of lath; and drive all thy subjects afore thee like a flock of wild-geese, I'll never wear hair on my face more. You Prince of Wales!

Prince. Why, thou whoreson round man, what's the matter?
Fal. Are not you a coward? answer me to that: and Poins there?

Poins. 'Zounds, ye fat paunch, an ye call me coward, by the Lord, I'll stab thee.
Fal. I call thee coward! I'll see thee damned ere I call thee coward; but I would give a thousand pound I could run as fast as thou canst. You are straight enough in the shoulders, you care not who sees your back: call you that backing of your friends? A plaque upon such backing! give me them that will face me. Give me a cup of sack: I am a rogue, if it-rogue is spoken.

Prince. O villain! thy lips are scarce wiped since thou drunkest last.
Fal. All's one for that. [He drinks.] A plaque of all cowards, still say I.

Prince. What's the matter?
Fal. What the matter! there be four of us here have taken a thousand pound this day morning.

Prince. Where is it, Jack? where is it?
Fal. Where is it! taken from us it is: a hundred upon poor four of us.

Prince. What, a hundred, man?
Fal. I am a rogue, if I were not at half-sword with a dozen of them two hours together. I have 'seued by miracle. I am eight times thrust through the doublet, four through the hose; my buckler cut through and through; my sword hacked like a hand-saw—ecce signum! I never dealt better since I was a man: all would not do. A plague of all cowards! Let them speak; if they speak more or less than truth, they are villains and the sons of dark-

Prince. Speak on.

Fal. 'Sblood, you starveling, you elf-skin, you dried neas's tongue, you bull's pizzle, you stock-ash! O for breath to utter what is like thee! you tailor'syard, you sheath, you bow-case, you vile standing-tuck.

Prince. Well, breathe awhile, and then to it again; and when thou hast tawd thyself in base comparisions, hear me speak but this.

Poins. Mark, Jack.

Prince. We two saw you four set on four and bound them, and you masters of their wealth. Mark now, how a plain tale shall put you down. Then did we two set on you; and, with a word, out-faced you from your prize, and have it; yea, and can show it you here in the house: and, Falstaff, you carried your guts away as nimibly, with as quick dexterity, and roared for mercy and still run and bear away as ever I heard babble. What a slave art thou, to back thy sword as thou hast done, and then say it was in fight? What trick, what device, what starting-hole, canst thou now find out to hide thee from this open and apparent shame?

Poins. Come, let's hear, Jack; what trick hast thou now?

Fal. By the Lord, I knew ye as well as he made me. Why, hear you, my masters: was it for me to kill the heir-apparent? should I turn upon the true prince? why, thou knowest I am as valiant as Hercules: but beware instinct: the lion will not touch the true prince. Instinct is a great matter; I was now a coward on instinct. I shall think the better of myself and thee during my life; I for a valiant lion, and thou for a true prince. But, by the Lord, lads, I am glad you have the money. Hostess, clap to the doors: watch to-night, pray to-morrow. Gallants, lads, boys, hearts of gold, all the titles of good fellowship come to you! What, shall we be merry? shall we have a play extempore?

Prince. Content; and the argument shall be thy play

Fal. Ah, no more of that, Hal, an thou lovest me!

Enter Hostess.

Host. O Jesu, my lord the prince!

Prince. How now, my lady the hostess! what sayest thou to me?

Host. Marry, my lord, there is a nobleman of the court at door would speak with you: he says he comes from your fathers.

Prince. Give him as much as will make him a royal man, and send him back again to my mother.

Host. What manner of man is he?

Host. An old man.

Host. What doth gravity out of his bed at midnight, and thus ask his answer?

Prince. Priftee, do, Jack.

Host. Faith, and I'll send him packing. [Exit.]

Prince. Now, sirs: by your lady, you fought fair; so did you, Peto; so did you, Bardolph: you are lions too, you ran away upon instinct, you will not touch the true prince: no, fie!

Bard. Faith, I ran when I saw others run.

Prince. Faith. Tell me now in earnest, how came Falstaff's sword so hacked?

Peto. Why, he hacked it with his dagger, and said he would swear truth out of England but he would make you believe it was done in fight, and persuaded us to do the like.

Bard. Yea, and to tickle our noses with spear-grass to make them bleed, and then to besmear our garments with it and swear it was the blood of true men. I did that I did not this seven years before, I blushed at it.

Prince. O villain, thou stol'st a cup of sack eighteen years ago, and wert taken with the manner, and ever since thou hast blushed extempore. Thou hast fire and sword on thy side, and yet thou rannest away: what instinct hast thou for it?

Bard. My lord, do you see these meateers? do you behold these exhumations?

Prince. I do.

Bard. What think you they pretend?

Prince. Hot liverers and cold purses.

Bard. Choler, my lord, if rightly taken.

Prince. No, if rightly taken, halter.

Re-enter Falstaff.

Here comes lean Jack, here comes bone-hare. How now, my sweet creature of boubast! How long is't ago, Jack, since thou sawest thine own knee?

Fal. My own knee! when I was about thy years, Hal, I was not an eagle's talon in the waist; I could have crept into any alderman's thumb-ring: a plague of sighing and grief! It blows a man up and roars a black-pudding. There's villainous news abroad, here was Sir John Brayce from your father: you must to the court in the morning. That same mad rellow of the north, Percy, and he of Wales, that gave Amonmu the bastinado and made Lucifer cuckold and swore the devil his true liegevoun upon the cross of a Welsh hook — what a plague call you him?

Poins. O, Glendower.

Fal. Owen, Owen, the same; and his son-in-law Mortimer, and old Northumberland, and that sprightly Scot of Scots, Douglas, that runs o' horseback up a hill perpendicular.

Prince. He that rides at high speed and with his pistol kills a sparrow flying.

Fal. You have hit it.

Prince. So did he never the sparrow.

Fal. Well, that rascal hath good mettle in him; he will not run.

Prince. Why, what a rascal art thou then, to raise him so for running!

Fal. O' horseback, ye cuckoo; but afoot he will not budge a foot.

Prince. Yes, Jack, upon instinct.

Fal. I grant ye, upon instinct. Well, he is there too, and one Mordake, and a thousand bluecaps more: Worcester is stolen away to-night; thy father's beard is turned white with the news: you may buy land now as cheap as stinking mackerel.

Prince. Why, then, it is like, if there come a hot June and this civil buffeting hold, we shall be, withal, handier; they buy bonds by the hundreds.

Fal. By the mass, lad, thou sayest true; it is like we shall have good trading that way. But tell me, Hal, art not thou horrible afraid? thou being heir-apparent, could the world pick thee out three such enemies again as that fiend Douglas, that spirit Percy, and that mad Glendower? Art thou not horribly afraid? doth not thy blood thrill at it?

Prince. Not a wit, I'faith; I lack some of thy instinct.

Fal. Well, thou wilt be horribly child to-morrow when thou comest to thy father: if thou love me, hence an answer.

Prince. Do thou stand for my father, and examine me upon the particulars of my life.

Fal. Shall I? content: this chair shall be my state, this dagger my sceptre, and this cushion my crown.

Prince. Thy state is taken for a joined-stool, thy golden sceptre for a leaden dagger, and thy precious rich crown for a pitiful bald crown!

Fal. Well, an the fire of grace be not quite out of thee, now slay thou be moved. Give me a cup of sack to make my eyes look red, that it may be thought I must speak in passion, and I will do it in King Cymbeline's vein.

Prince. Well, here is my leg.

Fal. And here is my speech: Stand aside, nobility. Host. O Jesu, this is excellent sport, I'faith!

Fal. Weep not, sweet queen; for trickling tears are we.

Host. O, the father, how he holds his countenance!
Fal. For God's sake, lords, convey my trustful queen; for 'tis to stop the flood-gates of her eyes.

Host. O, then, he doth it as like one of these harlotry players as ever I see!

Fal. Peace, good pint-pot; peace, good tickenbrain. Harry, I do not only marvel where thou spendest thy time, but also how thou art accomplished; for although the more it is troubled on the faster it grows, yet youth, the more it is wasted the sooner it wears. Thou hast art my son, I have partly thy mother's word, partly my own opinion, but chiefly a villainous trick of thine eye and a foolish hanging of thy nether lip, that doth warrant me. If then thou be artless to me, here lies the reason why, being true to art, art so pointed at? Shall the blessed sun of heaven prove a mitcher and eat blackberries? a question not to be asked. Shall the son of England prove a thief and take purses? a question to be asked. There is a thing, Harry, which thou hast often heard of and it is known to many in our land by the name of pitch: this pitch, as ancient writers do report, doth deile; so doth the company thou keepest: for, Harry, now I do not speak to thee in drink but in tears, not in pleasure but in passion, not in words only, but in woes also: and yet there is a virtuous man whom: I have often noted in thy company, but I know not his name.

Prince. What manner of man, an it like your majesty?

Fal. A goodly portly man, i' faith, and a comely; of a cheerful look, a pleasing eye and a most noble carriage: and, as I think, his age some fifty, or, by 'tredy, including to three score; and now I remember me, his name is Falstaff: if that man should be dually given, he deceiveth me; for, Harry, I see virtue in his looks. If then the tree may be known by the fruit, as the fruit by the tree, then, peremptorily I speak it, there is virtue in that Falstaff: him keep with, the rest banish. And tell me now, thou naughty varlet, tell me, where hast thou been this month?

Prince. Dost thou speak like a king? Do thou stand for me, and I'll play my father.

Fal. Hal, hal, hal, so gravely, so majestically, both in word and matter, hang me up by the heels for a rabbit-sucker or a poacher's fool. Well, here I am set: [here.

Fal. And here I stand: judge, my masters.

Prince. Now, Harry, whence come you?

Fal. My lord, from hence, [aus.

Prince. The complaints I hear of thee are grievous.

Fal. Shroud, my lord, they are false: may, I'll tickle ye for a young prince, i' faith.

Prince. Swearest thou, magistrates boy? henceforth ne'er look on me. Thou art violently carried away from grace: there is a devil haunts thee in the likeness of an old fat man: a man of man is thy companion. Why dost thou converse with that trash of humours, that bolting-hutch of beastliness, that sowner parcel of droppings, that huge bombard of sack, that stuffed cloak-bag of guts, that roasted Manningtree, that with the pudding in his belly, that notorious vice, that great iniquity, that father Thanet, that vanity in years? Wherein is he good, but to taste sack and drink it? wherein neat and cleanly, but to carve a capon and eat it? wherein cunning, but in craft? wherein crafty, but in villainy? wherein villainous in all things? wherein way? Nothing.

Fal. I would your grace would take me with you: whom means your grace?

Prince. That villainous abominable miscreant of youth, Falstaff, that old white-bearded Satan.

Fal. My lord, the man I know.

Prince. I know thou dost.

Fal. But to say I know more harm in him than in myself, were to say more than I know. That he had, the other day, his white hairs do witness it; but that he is, saving your reverence, a whore-master, that I utterly deny. If sack and sugar be a fault, God help the wicked! if to be old and marry be a sin, then many an old hest that I know is damned! If to be fat be to be hated, then Pharaoh's sons be fat. If to be rich be a sin, No, my good lord; banish Peto, banish Bardolph, banish Poins: but for sweet Jack Falstaff, kind Jack Falstaff, true Jack Falstaff, valiant Jack Falstaff, and therefore more valiant, being, as he is, old Jack Falstaff, banish not him thy Harry's company, banish not him thy Harry's company: banish plump Jack, and banish all the world.

Prince. I do, I will. [A knocking heard.

[Exeunt Hostes, Francis, and Bardolph.

Re-enter Bardolph, running.

Bord. O, my lord, my lord! the sheriff with a most monstrous watch is at the door.

Fal. Out, ye rogue! Play out the play: I have much to say in the behalf of that Falstaff.

Re-enter the Hosteses.

Host. O Jesu, my lord, my lord! Prince. Heigh, heigh! the devil rides upon a faldistick: what's the matter?

Host. The sheriff and all the watch are at the door: they are come to search the house. Shall I let them in?

Fal. Dost thou hear, Hal? never call a true piece of gold a counterfeit: thou art essentially mad, without seeming so. [Exit.

Prince. And thou a natural coward, without in:

Fal. I deny thy major: if you will deny the sheriff, so; if not, let him enter: if I become not a cart as well as another man, a plague on my bringing up! I hope it shall as soon be strangled with a halter as another.

Prince. Go, hide thee behind the arras: the rest walk up above. Now, my masters, for a true face and good conscience.

Fal. Both which I have had: but their date is out; and therefore I'll hide me.

Prince. Call in the sheriff.

[Exeunt all except the Prince and Peto.

Enter Sheriff and the Carrier.

Now, master sheriff, what is your will with me?

Sher. First, pardon me, my lord. A hue and cry Hath follow'd certain men unto this house.

Prince. What men?

Sher. One of them is well known, my gracious A gross fat man.

Cur. As fat as butter.

Prince. The man, I do assure you, is not here; For I myself at this time have employ'd him. And, sheriff, I will engage my word to thee That I will, by to-morrow dinner-time, send him to answer thee, or any man, For any thing he shall be charged withal: And so let me entreat you leave the house.

Sher. I will, my lord. There are two gentlemen Have in this robbery lost three hundred marks, Prince. It may be so: if he have robbed these men, He shall be answerable; and so far well.

Sher. Good night, my noble lord.

Prince. I think it is not so: what, is it not? Sher. Indeed, my lord, I think it be two o'clock.

[Exeunt Sheriff and Carrier.

Prince. This oily rascal is known as well as Paul's. Go, call him forth.

Peto. Falstaff!—Fast asleep behind the arras, and mouth like a horse.

Prince. Hak, how hard he fetches breath. Search of bread to this intolerable deal of sack! What there is else, keep close; we'll read it at more advantage; there let him sleep till day. I'll to the court in the night. With most all to the wars, and thy place shall be honourable. I'll procure this fat rogue a charge of foot; and I know his death will be a march of twelve-score. The money shall be paid back again with advantage. Be with me betimes in the morning; and so, good morrow, Peto. Good morrow, good my lord.

Upon the beauty of all parts besides,
Beguiling them of commendation. [speed]
Hot Well, I am school'd: good manners be thy Here come our wives, and let us take our leave.

Re-enter Glendower with the ladies.
Mort. This is the deadly spite that angers me;
My wife can speak no English, I no Welsh.
Glend. My daughter weeps: she will not part with She'll be a soldier too, she'll to the wars. [Percy
Mort. Good father, tell her that she and my amit
Shall follow in your conduct speedily.
[Glendower speaks to her in Welsh, and she answers him in the same.
Glend. She is desperate here; a peevish self-willed harloty, one that no persuasion can do good upon.
[The lady speaks again in Welsh.
I understand thy kisses and thou mine,
And that's a feeling disposition:
But I will never be a traitor, love,
Till I have learn'd th' language; for thy tongue
Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly penned,
Sing by a fair queen in a summer's bower,
With ravishing division, to her lute.
Glend. Nay, if you melt, then will she run mad.
[The lady speaks again in Welsh.
Mort. O, I am ignorance itself in this! [down
Glend. She bids you on the wanton rushes lay you
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you
And on your eyelids crown the god of sleep,
Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness,
Making such difference 'twixt wake and sleep
As is the difference between day and night
The hour before the heavenly-harnessed'f team
Begins his golden progress in the east.
Mort. With all my heart I'll sit and hear her sing:
By that time will our book, I think, be drawn.
Glend. Do so;
And those musicians that shall play to you
With our fair lady's band, how long leagues from hence,
And straight they shall be here: sit, and attend.
Hot. Come, Kate, thou art perfect in lying down:
come, quick, quick, that I may lay my head in thy Lady P. Go, ye giddy goose. [clap
[The music plays.
Hot. Now I perceive the devil understands Welsh;
And 'tis no marvel he is so humorous.
By'r lady, he is a good musician.
Lady P. Then should you be nothing but musical, for you are altogether governed by humors. Lie still; ye thief, and hear the lady sing in Welsh. [Irish Hot. I had rather hear Lady, my brach, howl in Lady P. Wouldst thou have thy head broken?
No.
Lady P. Then be still.
Hot. Neither; 'tis a woman's fault.
Lady P. Now God help thee!
Hot. To the Welsh lady's bed.
Lady P. What's that?
Hot. Peace! she sings.
[He the lady sings a Welsh song.
Hot. Come, Kate, I'll have your song too.
Lady P. Not mine, in good sooth.
Hot. Not mine, in good sooth! Heart! you swear lke a foolish seller's wife. 'Not you, in good sooth,' and 'as true as I live,' and 'as God shall mend me,'
and 'as sure as day,'
And givest such sarcenet surety for thy oaths,
as if thou never walk'st further than Finsbury.
Sware me, Kate, like a lady as thou art,
A good month-filling oath, and leave 'in sooth,'
And such protest of pepper-gingerbread;
ToVelvet-guards and Sunday-citizens.

Come, come, Lord Merver; you are as hot
As hot Lord Percy is on fire to go.
[Exit.]

SCENE II. — London. The palace.

Enter the King, Prince of Wales, and others.

King. Lords, give us leave; the Prince of Wales and I [hand,
Must have some private conference; but be hear at
For we shall presently have need of you.

[Exeunt Lords.]

I know not whether God will have it so,
For some displeasing service I have done,
That, in his secret doom, out of my blood
He'll breed revengement and a scourge for me;
And that the least of his enemies
Make me believe that thou art only mark'd
For the hot vengeance and the rod of Heaven
To punish my mistradesties. Tell me else,
Could such inordinate and low desires,
Such poor, such bare, such lewd, such mean attempts,
Such barren pleasures, rude society,
As thou art melted with, from heart to heart,
Accompany the greatness of thy blood
And hold their level with thy princely heart?

Prince. So please your majesty, I would I could Quiet all offences with as clear excuse
As well as I am doubtless I can purge
Myself of many I am charged withal:
Yet such extenuation let me beg.
As, in reproof of many tales devised,
Which off the ear of greatness needs must hear,
By swelling pick-thanks and base newmongers,
I may, for some things true, wherein my youth
Hath been infect'd.

Find pardon on my true submission.

King. God pardon thee! yet let me wonder, Harry,
At thy affections, which do hold a wing
Quite from the flight of all thy ancestors.
Thy place in council thou hast rudely lost,
Which by thy younger brother is supplied,
And art almost an alien to the hearts
Of all the court and princes of my blood:
The hope and expectation of thy time
Is ruin'd, and the soul of every man
Prophetically doth forthink thy fall.
Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common-hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheap to vulgar company,
Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession
And left me in reputation banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood.
By being seldom seen I could not stir
But like a comet I was wonder'd at:
That men would tell their children 'This is he:'
Others would say 'Where, which is Bolingbroke?'
And then I stole all courtesy from heaven,
And dress'd myself in such humility.
That in the eyes of nations, heart's
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king,
Thus did I keep my person fresh and new;
My presence, like a robe pontificial,
Never seen but wonder'd at: and so my state,
Seldom but sumptuous, showed like a feast
And won by rareness such solemnity.
The skipping king, he ambled up and down
With shail'd jesters and Rashkin wits.
Soon kindled and soon burnt; carded his state,
Mingled his royalty with capering fools,
Had his great name profaned with their scorns
And gave his countenance, against his name,
To laugh at glibing boys and stand the push
Of every base and vanitory companion.
Grew a companion to the common streets,
Ente'd himself to popularity:
That, being daily swallow'd by men's eyes,
They surfeited with honey and began
To bothe the taste of sweetness, whereof a little More than a little by much too much.
So when he had occasion to be seen,
He was but as the cuckoo is in June,
Heard, not regarded; seen, but with such eyes
As, sick and blunted with community,
Afford no extraordinary gaze,
Such as is bent on sun-like majesty
When it shines seldom in admiring eyes:
But rather drowz'd and hung their eyelids down,
Slept in his face and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries,
Being with his presence glutted, gorged and full.
And in that very line, Harry, standest thou;
For thou hast lost the Christian credit
With vile participation: not an eye
But is a weary of thy common sight,
Save mine, which hath desired to see thee more;
Which now doth that I would not have it do,
Make blind itself with foolish tenderness.

Prince. I shall hereafter, my thrice gracious lord,
Be more myself.

King. For all the world
As thou art to this hour was Richard then
When I from France set foot at Ravenspurgh,
And even as I was then is Percy now.
Now, by my sceptre and my soul to boot,
He hath more worthy interest to the state
Than thou the shadow of succession;
For of no right, nor colour like to right,
He doth fill fields with harness in the realm,
Turns head against the lion's armed jaws,
And, being marked man, means thou,
Ages ancient lords and reverend bishops on
To bloody battles and to bruising arms,
What never-dying honour hath he got
Against renowned Douglas! whose high deeds,
Whose hot incursions and great name in arms
Holds from all realms chief majority
And military title capital.
Through all the kingdoms that acknowledge Christ;
Thrice hath this Hotspur, Mars in swathling clothes,
This infant warrior, in his enterprises
Discontented great Douglas, taken him once,
Enlarged him and made a friend of him,
To fill the hand with deep clad up
And shake the peace and safety of our throne,
And what say you to this? Percy, Northumberland,

The Archbishop's grace of York, Douglas, Mortimer
Capitulate against us and are up.

Wherefore do I tell these news to thee?
Why, Harry, do I tell thee of my foes,
Which art my near'st and dearest enemy?
Thou that art like enough, through vassal fear,
Base inclination and the start of spleen,
To fight against me under Percy's pay.

To dog his heels and curst at his troves,
To show how much thou art degenerate.

Prince. Do not think so; you shall not find it so;
And God forgive them that so much have sward
Your majesty's good thoughts away from me;
I will redeem all this on Percy's head.
And in the closing of some glorious day
I hold to tell the story of your son;
When I shall wear a garment all of blood
And amid flings and javelins, the brow of Heaven
Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame with it;
And that shall be the day, when'er it lights,
That this same child of honour and renown,
This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight,
And your unthought-of Harry chance to meet.
For every honour sitting on his limb,
Would they were multiplied, and on my head
My shames redoubled! for the time will come,
That I shall make this northern youth exchange
His glorious deeds for my indignities.
Percy is but my father, good my lord,
To engross up glorious deeds on my behalf;
And I will call him to so strict account,
That he shall render every glory up,
Yea, even the slightest worship of his time,
Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart.
This, in the name of God, I promise here:
The which if he be pleased I shall perform,
I do beseech your majesty may save
The long-grown wounds of my intemperate:
If not, the end of life cancels all bands;
And I will die a thousand thousand deaths
Ere break the smallest parcel of this vow.
King. A hundred thousand rebels die in this:
Then shall have charge and sovereign trust herein.

Enter Blunt.

How now, good Blunt? thy looks are full of speed.
Blunt. So hath the business that I come to speak
Lord Mortimer of Scotland hath sent word [of.
That Douglas and the English rebels met
The eleventh of this month at Shrewsbury:
A mighty and a fearful head they are,
It promises he keep on every hand,
As ever offer'd foul play in a state.
King, The Earl of Westmoreland set forth to-day;
With him my son, Lord John of Lancaster;
For this advertisement is five days old:
On Wednesday next, Harry, you shall set forward:
On Thursday we ourselves will march; our meeting
Is Bridgenorth, and, Harry, you shall march
Through Gloucestershire, by which account,
Our hands are valued, who3says hence,
Our general forces at Bridgenorth shall meet,
Our hands are full of business: let's away;
Advantage feeds him fat, while men delay.

SCENE III.—Bostock's. The Door's Head Tavern.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, am I not fallen away visibly since this last action? do I not hate? do I not dwindle? Why, my skin hangs about me like an old lady's loose gown; I am withered like an old apple-john. Well, I'll repent, and that suddenly, while I am in some liking; I shall be out of heart shortly, and then I shall have no strength to repent. An I have not forgotten what the inside of a church is made of, I am a peppercorn, a brewer's horse: the inside of a church! Company, villainous company, hath been the spoil of me.

Bard. Sir John, you are so fretful, you cannot live long.

Fal. Why, there is it: come sing me a bawdy song; make me merry. I was as virtuously given as a young man was to be a masquer; sworn little; died not above seven times a week; went to a bawdy-house not above once in a quarter — of an hour; paid money that I borrowed, three or four times; lived well and in good compass; and now I live out of all order, out of all compass.

Bard. Why, you are so fat, Sir John, that you must needs be out of all compass, out of all reasonable compass, Sir John.

Fal. Do thou amend thy face, and I'll amend my life. The sooner we are behind, the more secure you think upon hell-fire and Dives that lived in purple; for there he is in his robes, burning, burning. If thou wert any way given to virtue, I would swear by thy face: my oath should be 'By this fire, that's God's angel;' but then art altogether given over; and wert indeed, but for the light in thy face, the son of utter darkness. When thou runnest up Gasdhill in the night to catch my horse, if I did not think thou hadst been an ignis fatuus or a wildfire, there's no purchase in money. O, thou art a perpetual triumph, an everlasting bonfire! Thou hast saved me a thousand marks in links and touches, and now with these to the night betwixt tavern and tavern: but the skell that thou hast drunk me would have bought lights as good cheap at the dearer Chandler's in Europe. I have maintained that samdamder of yours with fire any time this two and thirty years; God reward me for it!

Bard. 'Sblood, I would my face were in your belly! [burned.

Fal. God-a-mercy! so should I be sure to be heart-

Enter Hostess.

How now, Dame Partlet the hen! have you inquired yet who picked my pocket?

Host. Why, Sir John, what do you think, Sir John? do you think I keep thieves in my house? I have searched, I have inquired, so has my husband, man by man, boy by boy, servant by servant: the title of a hair was never lost in my house before.

Fal. Ye lie, hostess: Bardolph was shaved and lost many a hair; and I'll be sworn my pocket was picked. Go to, you are a woman, go.

Host. Who is it? no; I defy thee: God's light, I was never called so in mine own house before.

Fal. Aye, true, hostess: I have been a sirren, and shut my ears against a man's speaking.

Host. No, Sir John; you do not know me, Sir John. I know you, Sir John; you owe me money, Sir John; and now you pick a quarrel to beguile me of it: I bought you a dozen of shirts to your back.

Fal. Dowlas, filthy dowlas: I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made pocketing of them.

Host. Now, as I am a true woman, hollond of eight shillings an ell. You owe money here besides, Sir John, for your diet and by-drinkings, and money lent you, four and twenty pound.

Fal. He had his part of it; let him pay.

Host. He? alas, he is poor: he hath nothing.

Fal. How! poor? look upon his face: what call you rich? let them coin his nose, let them coin his cheeks; I'll not pay a denier. What, will you make a younger of one? shall I not take mine own in mine inn but I shall have my pocket picked? I have lost a seal-ring of my grandfather's worth forty mark.

Host. O Jean, I have heard the prince tell him, I know not how off, that that ring was copper.

Fal. How! the prince is a jack, a sneak-cup; 's blood, I would cudgel him like a dog, if he would so say.

Enter the Prince and Peto, marching, and Falstaff meets them playing on his trombone like a jife.

How now, lad! is the wind in that door, 't faith? must we all march?
ACT IV.

FIRST PART OF KING HENRY IV. SCENE I.

Bard. Yea, two and two, Newgate fashion.
Host. My lord, I pray you, hear me.
Prince. What sayest thou, Mistress Quickly?
How dost thy husband? I love him well; he is an honest man.
Host. Good my lord, hear me.
Fal. Prif thee, let her alone, and list to me.
Prince. What sayest thou, Jack?
Fal. The other night I fell asleep here behind the arras, but my pocket picked; this house is turned bawdy-house: they pick pockets.
Prince. What dost thou lose, Jack?
Fal. Wilt thou believe me, Hal? three or four bonds of forty pound a-piece, and a seal-ring of my grandfather's.
Prince. A trifle, some eight-penny matter.
Host. So I told him, my lord; and I said I heard your grace say so: and, by my lord, he speaks most vilely of you, like a foul-mouthed man as he is; and said he would cudgel you.
Prince. What! he did not?
Host. There's neither faith, truth, nor womanhood in men else.
Fal. There's no more faith in thee than in a stewed prunes; nor no more truth in thee than in a drawn fox; and for womanhood, Maid Marian may be the deputy's wife of the ward to thee. Go talk thing, go.
Host. Say, what thing? what thing?
Fal. What thing? why, a thing to thank God on.
Host. I am no thing to thank God on, I would thou shouldst know it; I am an honest man's wife: and, setting thy knighthood aside, thou art a knave to call me so.
Fal. Setting thy womanhood aside, thou art a beast to say otherwise.
Host. Say, what beast, thou knave, thou?
Fal. What beast! why, an otter.
Prince. An otter, Sir John! why an otter?
Fal. Why, she's neither fish nor flesh; a man knows not where to have her.
Host. Thou art an unjust man in saying so; thou or any man knows where to have me, thou knave, thou!
Prince. Thou sayest true, hostess; and he shan't see me most grossly.
Host. Do as my lord, and said this other day you ought him a thousand pound.
Prince. Sirrah, do I owe you a thousand pound?
Fal. A thousand pound. Hal! a million! thy love is worth a million; thou owest me thy love.
Host. Nay, my lord, he called you Jack, and said he would cudgel you.
Fal. Did I, Bardolph?
Bard. Indeed, Sir John, you said so.
Fal. Yea, if he said my ring was copper.
Prince. I say 'tis copper: dares thou be as good as thy word now?
Fal. Why, Hal, thou knowest, as thou art but not much duller; but as thou art prince, I fear thee as I fear the roaring of the lion's whelp.
Prince. And why not as the lion?
Fal. The king himself is to be feared as the lion:
dost thou think I'll fear thee as I fear thy father? nay, an I do, I pray God my girdle break.
Prince. O, it it should, how would thy guts fall about thy knees! But, sirrah, there's no room for faith, truth, nor honesty in this bosom of thine; it is all filled up with guts and murther. Charge an honest woman with picking thy pocket! why, thou whoreson, impudent, embossed rascal, if there were anything in thy pocket but tavern-reckonings, and a house of bawdy-houses, and one poor penny-worth of sugar-candy to make thee long-winded, if thy pocket were encrusted with any other injuries but these, I am a villain: and yet you will stand to it; you will not pocket up wrong: art thou not ashamed?
Fal. Dest thou hear, Hal? thou knowest in the state of innocence Adam fell; and what should poor Jack Falstaff do in the days of villany? Thou seest I have more flesh than another man, and therefore more frailty. You confess then, you picked my pocket?
Prince. It appears so by the story.
Fal. Hostess, I forgive thee; go, make ready breakfast; love thy husband, look to thy servants, cherish thy guests: thou shalt find me tractable to any honest reason: thou seest I am pacified still. Nay, prif thee, be gone. [Exit Hostess.] Now, Hal, to the news at court: for the robbery, lad, how is that answered?
Prince. O, my sweet beef, I must still be good angel to thee: the money is paid back again.
Fal. O, I do not like that paying back; 'tis a double labour.
Prince. I am good friends with my father and may do nothing.
Fal. Rob me the exchequer the first thing thou dost, and do it with unwashed hands too.
Bard. Do, my lord.
Prince. I have procured thee, Jack, a charge of foot.
Fal. I would it had been of horse. Where shall I find one that can steal well? O for a fine thief, of the age of two and twenty or thereabouts! I am heinously unprovided. Well, God be thanked for these rebels, they offend none but the virtuous: I land them, I praise them.
Bard. Bardolph!
Fal. My lord, my lord.
Prince. Go bear this letter to Lord John of Lancaster, to my brother John: this to my Lord of Westmoreland. [Exit Bardolph.] Go, Peto, to horse; for thou and I have thirty miles to ride yet ere dinner-time. [Exit Peto.] Jack, meet me to-morrow in the temple hall at two o'clock in the afternoon.
There shalt thou know thy charge; and there receive Money and order for their furniture.
The land is burning; Percy stands on high.
And either we or they must lower lie. [Exit.]
Fal. Rare words! brave words! Hostess, my breakfast, come!
O, I could wish this tavern were my drum! [Exit.
Enter a Messenger with letters.

What letters hast thou there? — I can but thank you.

Mess. These letters come from your father.

Hot. Letters from him! why comes he not himself?

Mess. He cannot come, my lord; he is grievous sick.

Hot. What news! how has he the leisure to be sick
In such a justling time? Who leads his power?
Under whose government come they along?
Mess. His letters bear his mind, not I, my lord.

Wor. I prithee, tell me, doth he keep his bed?

Mess. He did, my lord, four days ere I set forth;
And at the time of my departure thence
He was much fear'd by his physicians.

Wor. If I should the state of time had first been whole
Even by sickness had been visited:
His health was never better worth than now.

Hot. Sick now! droop now! this sickness doth in
The very life-blood of our enterprise:
'Tis catching hither, even to our camp,
He writes me here, that inward sickness —
And that his friends by reputation could not
So soon be drawn, nor did he think it meet
To lay so dangerous and dear a trust
On any soul removed but on his own.
Yet doth he give us bold advertisement,
That with our small conjunction we should on,
To chase the weather from our wings.
For, as he writes, there is no quailing now,
Because the king is certainly possess'd
Of all our purposes.

What say you to it?

Wor. Your father's sickness is a main to us,

Hot. A perilous gash, a very hamb lopp'd o'it:
And yet, in faith, it is not; his present want
Seems more than we shall find it; were it good
To set the exact wealth of all our states
All at one cast? to set so rich a main
On the nice hazard of one doubtful hour?
It were not good; for therein should we read •
The very bottom and the soul of hope,
The very list, the very utmost bound
Of all our fortunes,

Doug. 'Faith, and so we should;
Where now remains a sweet reversion;
We may boldly spend upon the hope of what
Is to come in:
A comfort of retirement lives in this.

Hot. A rendezvous, a home to fly unto,
If that the devil and mischance look big
Upon the maidenhead of our affairs.

Wor. But yet I would your father had been here.
The quality and hair of our attempt
Brooks so division; it will be missed sight
By some, that know not why he is away,
That wisdom, loyalty and more dislike
Of our proceedings kept the earl from hence;
And think how such an apprehension
May turn the tide of fearful action
And breed a kind of question in our cause;
For well you know we of the offering side
Must keep aloof from strict arbritment,
And stop all sight-holes, every loop from whence
The eye of reason may pry in upon us:
This absence of your father's draws a curtain,
That shows the ignorant a kind of fear
Before not dreamt of.

Hot.

I rather of his absence make this use;
It leads a lustre and more great opinion,
A larger dare to our great enterprise.

Thank God we were here, for men must think,
If we without his help can make a head
To push against a kingdom, with his help
We shall o'erturn it topsy-turvy down.
Yet all goes well, yet all our junctures are whole.

Doug. As heart can think: there is not such a word
Spoke of in Scotland as this term of fear.

Enter Sir Richard Vernon.

Hot. My cousin Vernon! welcome, by my soul.

Vern. Pr'ythee God my news be worth a welcome, lord.
The Earl of Westmoreland, seven thousand strong,
Is marching hitherwards: with him Prince John.

Hot. No harm: what more?

Vern. And further, I have learn'd,
The king himself in person is set forth,
Or hitherwards intended speedily.

Hot. With strong and mighty preparation.

Vern. He shall be welcome too. Where is his son,
The nimble-footed madcap Prince of Wales,
And his companions, that daff'd the world aside,
And bid it pass?

Hot. All furnish'd, all in arms;

Doug. All plumed like ostriches that with the wind
Baited like eagles having lately bathed;
Glittering in golden coats, like images;
As full of spirit as the month of May,
And gorgeous as the sun at midsummer;
Wanton as youthful goats, wild as young bulls.
I saw young Harry, with his beaver on,
His cuisses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd,
Rise from the ground like feather'd Mercury,
And vault'd with such case into his seat,
As if an angel dropp'd down from the clouds,
To turn the world into a temple

Dong. And with the world a noble horsemanship.

Hot. No more, no more: worse than the sun in March,

This praise doth nourish agues. Let them come;

They come like sacrifices in their train,

And to the fire-eyed maid of smoky war

Doug. That's the worst tidings that I hear of yet.

Hot. Ay, by my faith, that bears a frosty sonnet.

Doug. What may the king's whole battle reach unto?

Vern. To thirty thousand.

Hot. Forty let it be:

Doug. My father and Glendower being both away,
The powers of us may serve so great a day.
Come, let us take a master speedily:

Dong. Doomsday is near: die all, die merrily.

Doug. Talk not of dying: I am out of fear

Dong. Of death or death's hand for this one-half year.

Enter Falstaff and Bardolph.

Fal. Bardolph, get thee before to Coventry;

Doug. Let me a bottle of sack; our soldiers shall march through;

Fal. We'll to Sutton Co'll to-night.

Doug. Will you give me money, captain?

Fal. Lay out, lay out.

Doug. This bottle makes an angel.

Fal. An if I do, take it for my labour; and if it make above twenty, take them all: I'll answer the coinage.

Doug. Bid my lieutenant Peto meet me at town's end.

Fal. I will, captain: farewell.

[Exit.

Doug. If I be not ashamed of my soldiers, I am a soused garnet. I have misused the king's press damnable. I have got, in exchange of a hundred and fifty soldiers, three hundred and odd pounds, I press me none but good householders, yeoman's sons: inquire me out contracted bachelors, such as are used to see the lasting commodity of warm slaves, as had as lieve hear the devil as a drum: such as fear the report of a caliver worse than a struck fowle or a hurl wild-luck. I pressed me none but such toasts-and-butter, with hearts in their bellies no bigger than pins' heads, and not for service: my fingers, such as my whole charge consists of ancients, corporals, lieutenants, gentlemen of companies, slaves as ragged as Lazarus in the painted cloth, where the gluton's dogs licked his sores: and such as indeed were never soldiers, but discarded unjust serving-men, younger sons to younger brothers, revoked tapstiers and ostlers trade-fallen, the cankers of a calm world and a long peace, ten times more dishonourable ragged than an old faced ancient: and such have I, to fill up the rooms of them that have bought out their services, that you would think that I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals lately come from swine-keeping, from eating druff and hauds. A mad fellow met me on the way and told me I had unloaded all the gibbets and pressed the dead bodies. No eye hath seen such scarecrows. I'll not march through Coventry with them, 'tis that day I flushed them to betwixt the legs, as if they had gyves on: for indeed I had the most of them out of prison. There's but a shirt and a half in all my company: and the half shirt is two napkins tacked together and throwed over the shoulders like an herald's coat without sleeves; and the shirt, to say the truth, stolen from my host at Scaut Allon's, or the red-nose tankneyer of Daventry. But that all one; they'll find linen enough on every hedge.

Enter the Prince and Westmoreland.

Prince. How now, blown Jack! how now, quit!

Fat. What! Hal! how now, mad wag! what a devil dost thou in Warwickshire? My good Lord of Westmoreland, I cry thee mercy: I thought your honour had already been at Shrewsbury.

West. Faith, Sir John, 'tis more than time that I were there, and you too; but my powers are there already. The king, I can tell you, looks far as all: we must make haste.

Fat. Tut, never fear me: I am as vigilant as a cat to steal cream.

Prince. I think, to steal cream indeed, for thy theft hath already made thee butter. But tell me, Jack, whose fellows are these that come after?

Fat. Hal, mine.

Prince. I did never see such pitiful rascals.

Fat. Tut, tut; good enough to toss; food for powder, food for powder: they'll fill a pit as well as better: tush, man, mortal men, mortal men.

West. Ay, but, Sir John, methinks they are exceeding poor and bare, too leggery.

Fat. Faith, for their poverty, I know not where they had that; and for their bareness, I am sure they never learned that of me.

Prince. No, I'll be sworn; unless you call three fingers on the ribs bare. But, sirrah, make haste: Percy is already in the field.

Fat. What, is the king encamped?

West. He is, Sir John: I fear we shall stay too

Fat. Well, [long.

To the latter end of a fray and the beginning of a feast Fills a dull Lighter and a keen guest. [Exeunt.

SCENE III. — The rebel camp near Shrewsbury.

Hot. We'll fight with him to-night.

Wor. It may not be.

Doug. You give him then advantage.

Ver. [Not a whit.

Hot. A'is his certain, ours is doubtful.

Wor. Good cousin, be advised; stir not to-night. Ver. Do not, my lord.

Doug. You do not counsel well: You speak it out of fear and cold heart.

Ver. Do me no slander, Douglas: by my life, and I dare well maintain it with my life, if well-respected honour bid me on, I hold as little counsel with weak fear As you, my lord, or any Scot that this day lives: Let it be seen to-morrow in the battle Which of us fears.

Doug. Yea, or to-night.

Ver. Content.

Hot. To-night, say I.

Ver. Come, come, it may not be. I wonder much, Being men of such great leading as you are, That you foresee not what impediments

Drum back our expedition: certain horse Of my cousin Vernon's are not yet come up: Your uncle Worcester's horse came but to-day; And now their pride and mettle is asleep, Their courage with hard labour tame and dull, That not a horse buteleys up itself.

Hot. So are the horses of the enemy In general, journey-bated and brought low; The better part of ours are full of rest.

Wor. The number of the king exceedeth ours: For God's sake, cousin, stay till all come in.

[The trumpet sounds a parley.

Enter Sir Walter Blunt.

Blunt. I come with gracious offers from the king, If you vouchsafe me hearing and respect.

Hot. Welcome, Sir Walter Blunt; and would to God some of us love you well; and even those some Envy your great deservings and good name, Because you are not of our quality, But stand against us like an enemy.

Blunt. And God defend but still I should stand so, So long as out of limit and true rule You stand against us.

But to my charge. The king hath sent to know The nature of your griefs, and whereupon You conjure from the breast of civil peace Such bold hostility, teaching his duteous land Andaudacious cruelty. If that the king Have any way your good deserts forgot, Which he confesseth to be manifold, He bids you name your griefs; and with all speed You shall have your desires with interest And pardon absolute for yourself and these Herein misled by your suggestion.

Hot. The king is kind: and well we know the king Knows at what time to promise, when to pay. My father and my uncle and myself Did give him that same royalty he wears; And when he was not six and twenty strong, Sick in the world's regard, wretched and low, A poor unmanned outlaw sneaking home, My father gave him welcome to the shore: And when he heard him swear and vow to God He came but to be Duke of Lancaster, To sue his livery and beg his peace, With tears of innocency and terms of zeal, My father, in kind heart and pity marked; Swore him assistance and performance of it too. Now when the lords and barons of the realm Perceived Northumberland did lean to him, The more and less came in with cap and knee; Met him in boroughs, cities, villages, Attended him on bridges, stood in lanes,
Laid gifts before him, proffer'd him their oaths,
Gave him their heirs, as pages follow'd him
Even at the heels in golden multitudes.
He presently, as greatness knows itself,
Stepped nea a little higher than his yow
Made to his father, while his blood was poor,
Upon the naked shore at Ravenspurgh;
And now, forsooth, takes on him to reform
Some certain edicts and some strait decrees
That he too heavy on the commonwealth,
Cries out upon abuses, seems to weep
Over his country's wrongs; and by this face,
This seeming brow of justice, did he win
The hearts of all that he did angle for;
Proceeded further; cut me off the heads
Of all the favourites that the absent king
In deputation left behind him here,
When he was personal in the Irish war.
Blunt. Tut, I came not to hear this.
Hot. Then to the point.
In short time after, he deposed the king;
Soon after that, deprived him of his life;
And in the neck of that, task'd the whole state;
To make that worse, suffer'd his kinsman March,
Who is, if every owner were well placed,
Indeed his king, to be engaged in Wales,
There without ransom to lie forfeited;
Disgraced me in my happy victories,
Sought to entrap me by Intelligence,
Rated mine uncle from the council-board;
In rage dismiss'd my father from the court;
Broke oath on oath, committed wrong on wrong,
And in conclusion drove us to seek out
This head of safety; and withal to pay
Into his title, the which we find
Too indirect for long continuance.
Blunt. Shall I return this answer to the king?
Hot. Not so, Sir Walter: we'll withdraw awhile.
Go to the king; and let there be impav'd
Some surely for a safe return again,
And in the morning early shall my uncle
Bring him our purposes: and so farewell.
Blunt. I would you would accept of grace and love.
Hot. And may be so we shall.
Blunt. Pray God you do.
[Exeunt.]

Enter the Archbishop of York and Sir Michael.
Arch. He, good Sir Michael; hear this sealed brief
With winning players to the haste
This to my cousin Scroop, and all the rest
To whom they are directed. If you knew
How much they do import, you would make haste.
Sir M. My good lord,
I guess their tenant.
Arch. Like enough you do,
To-morrow, good Sir Michael, is a day
Wherein the fortune of ten thousand men
Must hide the touch: for, sir, at Shrewsbury,
As I am truly given to understand,
The king with mighty and quick-raised power
Meets with Lord Harry: and, I fear, Sir Michael,
What with the sickness of Northumberland,
Whose power was in the first proportion,
And what with Owen Glendower's absence thence,
Who with them was a rated sinue too
And comes not in, o'er-rul'd by prophecies,
I fear the power of Percy is too weak
To wage an instant trial with the king.
Sir M. Why, my good lord, you need not fear;
There is Douglas and Lord Mortimer.
Arch. No, Mortimer is not there,
Sir M. But there is Mordake, Vernon, Lord Harry Percy,
And there is my Lord of Worcester and a head
Of gallant warriors, noble gentlemen.
[Drawn Arch.
And so there is: but yet the king hath
The special head of all the band together:
The Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster,
The noble Westmoreland and warlike Blunt;
And many more will come and clear men
Of estimation and command in arms.
Opposed.
Sir M. Doubt not, my lord, they shall be well
Arch. I hope no less, yet needful 'tis to fear;
And, to prevent the worst, Sir Michael, speed;
For if Lord Percy thrive not, ere the king
Dismiss his power, he means to visit us,
For he hath heard of our contemperary,
And 'tis but wisdom to make strong against him:
Therefore make haste. I must go write again
To other friends; and so farewell, Sir Michael.
[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

SCENE I.—The King's camp near Shrewsbury.
Enter the King, Prince of Wales, Lord John of Lancaster, Earl of Westmorland, Sir Walter Blunt, and Falstaff.
King. How bloody the sun begins to peer
Above your busy hill? the day looks pale
At his highest temperature.
Prince. The southern wind
Doth play the trumpet to his purposes,
And by his hollow whistling in the leaves
Foretells a tempest and a blastering day.
King. Then with the losers let it sympathize,
For nothing can seem foul to those that win.
[The trumpet sounds.
Enter Worcester and Vernon.
How now, my Lord of Worcester! 'tis not well
That you and I should meet upon such terms
As how we meet. You have deceived our trust,
And made us doff our easy robes of peace,
To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel:
This is not well, my lord, this is not well.
